It is too early, of course, to evaluate the training they offer. Obviously, however, a determined effort is being made to give pupils a sound basic education.

EACH HAS fundamental courses in mathematics, English, social studies, science and business subjects. In addition, Baptist High offers some language instruction.

Both suffer from lack of adequate library and laboratory facilities. Neither can offer much in the way of extracurricular activities.

Staff and faculty members had to be recruited outside the state's public school ranks.

Both Brashears and Supt. W. E. Middleton of Baptist High are veteran school administrators who were called out of retirement.

Each school received many applications from prospective teachers, and the faculties appear to be reasonably well qualified.

Middleton expects Baptist High to be accredited soon by the state department of education. Brashears is hopeful on this score, too.

Both superintendents contend their schools are adequately preparing pupils for college. It remains to be seen if they are right.

PERHAPS the major long-range problem of the private schools is financing.

Baptist High charges $20 a month per pupil tuition and is still a deficit operation.

The corporation, which charges no tuition, reportedly has received over $200,000 in contributions from all over the world, enough to operate at the current level for a good while.

But its chief fund-raiser, Gov. Faubus, said in a recent speech that it would be impossible to operate private schools indefinitely on a basis of voluntary contributions.

He still hopes to find a way to use public funds in private, segregated schools.

Nobody knows what lies ahead in Little Rock, legally or otherwise. With all their problems, the city's private schools are projecting plans to operate next year if necessary.

COURT'S INTEGRATION ROLE CLOUDED BY LITTLE ROCK

Critical Year of Litigation Ends With Arkansas Case Still Undecided

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 5—Two Supreme Court decisions this week brought to an end a critical year of litigation over the unyielding problems of racial segregation.

In its last decision Monday the high court declined to grant emergency review of District Judge Harry J. Lemley's order suspending school integration in Little Rock until 1961. But it implied that the United States Court of Appeals in St. Louis should call a special session to hear the case promptly.

In another decision, one of its major opinions of the year, the Supreme Court held that Alabama could not constitutionally compel the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to disclose its members' names in a state court proceeding. The decision set aside a $100,000 fine imposed on the association for contempt of the Alabama disclosure order.

Court terms run about the same as school years, from fall to June. In the history of the battle over segregation, the 1957-58 judicial year will surely be linked to the 1957-58 sessions of Central High School in Little Rock.

Court v. Faubus

The school opened on Sept. 3, 1957. By the end of that day the Federal court in Little Rock—and through it the Government of the United States—was locked in combat with Governor Orval Faubus of Arkansas.

The facts of that struggle are familiar. The Governor called out the National Guard to preserve peace, as he put it, by keeping nine Negro children out of Central High School. Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies refused to withdraw the court order directing the admission of the nine children.

At Judge Davies' invitation, the Justice Department entered the case, sought and won a court order directing that Governor Faubus stop barring the entry of the nine children. A mob took over the area around the school until President Eisenhower dispatched Federal troops to assure compliance with the integration order.

Legally speaking, at least, the lessons of the Little Rock episode seemed clear until two weeks ago. The Court of Appeals had rejected a claim by Governor Faubus that President Eisenhower acted unconstitutionally in sending troops. The moral seemed to be that physical resistance to an integration order, even by the Governor of a state, would not be tolerated by the Federal courts.

Then Judge Lemley handed down his order removing Negro children from Central High School because of "intolerable" conditions of tension in the school, and calling for a "peaceful interlude" until January, 1961. And so the year ended as it began, on the question: must court integration orders give way in the face of strong local resistance?

Other Decisions

In New Orleans parks, buses and streetcars were ordered desegregated. The Federal courts struck down Louisiana statutes requiring applicants for state colleges and universities to produce certificates of character from local school officials and subjecting the school officials to removal if they advance racial integration in any way.

The N. A. A. C. P. was the target of restrictive legislation and court orders in seven Southern states. Because of the association's prominent role in bringing suits to force compliance with the Supreme Court school decisions, the attack upon it was of special signficance.

Last January a three-judge Federal district court in Richmond held unconstitutional Virginia statutes designed to make the N. A. A. C. P. disclose its membership lists and keep it from aiding litigation. The Supreme Court's decision this week was in apparent accord with the Richmond ruling and should help the N. A. A. C. P. to defend itself throughout the South.

Focus on Virginia

As for schools, Virginia was a major focus of litigation during the year. Final orders to admit Negro children are now ready to take effect at the start of the next school term in four areas—Arlington County, Charlottesville, Norfolk and Newport News.

The Supreme Court has refused to review those cases. It also rejected this year an urgent request by the State of Virginia to upset an order requiring some date to be set for the start of integration in the most bitterly resistant part of the state, Prince Edward County, whose residents have plainly indicated they will abandon the schools rather than mix the races.

Two questions must be answered. One is legal—the correctness of Judge Lemley's ruling. The other follows if Judge Lemley is reversed: Who is going to maintain order in Little Rock schools, or schools in Virginia or elsewhere, if the admission of a handful of Negro children to white classrooms does provoke conditions of violence and tension?

On the one side is Judge Lemley's view that the courts must call a "moratorium" if their orders to end segregation bring on "impairment of educational standards and demoralization of the faculty and student body." Under such circumstances, he said, a "breathing spell" is in "the interest of both white and Negro students."

Another Philosophy

On the other side is a philosophy expressed by the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit this year in ordering that some date be set to start public school integration in Prince Edward County, Va., in spite of deep-seated and emotional public opposition.

"The fact that the schools might be closed if the order were enforced is no reason for not enforcing it," the Fourth Circuit Court said. "A person may not be denied enforcement of rights to which he is entitled under the Constitution of the United States because of action taken or threatened in defiance of such rights."

If the Fourth Circuit Court's view prevails and Judge Lemley is overruled, the problem of enforcement will undoubtedly have to be faced once more by a reluctant Eisenhower Administration.

JUDGE CHA 'NGED IN LITTLE ROCK CASE

ST. LOUIS, July 19—The suspension of racial integration at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., contended today that community opposition provided no legal basis for overturning a court-approved plan in the field.

This argument was offered in brief filed in the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals here by Thurgood Marshall of New York, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., another attorney for the association.

The court will hear the apepal Aug. 4 from a June 20 order by United States District Judge Harry J. Lemley at Hope, Ark., suspending integration at the high school until 1961.

The brief, received by mail declares that Judge Lemley lacked constitutional power to suspend the Court of Appeals mandate approving the integration plan. It asserts that the sole purpose of the Lemley order was to obtain a "cooling-off period because of community opposition to whites and Negroes attending classes together."

Peace and order canont be restored by sacrificing law, it says.

CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL

LITTLE ROCK GIRL WANTS TO RETURN

Negro Student Here Says She Hopes to Help End Segregation There

Minnijean Brown, a 16-year-old Negro student who was expelled last February from Little Rock's Central High School, said yesterday that she would like to return to the Arkansas school in September.

Miss Brown was one of the nine Negro students who entered the all-white school last fall, touching off the bitter dispute that resulted in the assignment of Federal troops to the area. Since her expulsion, which followed a series of incidents with white students, she has been here, attending on a scholarship, the New Lincoln School at 31 West 110th Street.

In an interview at New Lincoln yesterday, Miss Brown said that she had originally wanted to go to Central High School because it was better than the segregated Negro school in the city. Now, she said, she wants to go back for other reasons.

"Negro kids don't have to break down segregation in the New Lincoln—it's a wonderful school and there is none here," she said. "It is more important that they do so in Little Rock."

In Little Rock yesterday, Jess Mathews, principal of Central High School, said that if Miss Brown applied for readmittance he presumed it would be handled the same as any other suspension case. He noted that her suspension had been for the duration of the 1957-58 school year.

Depends on Superintendent

"Mr. Blossom [Virgil Blossom, Little Rock Superintendent of Schools] would have to make disposition of her application for reinstatement, if she files one," Mr. Mathews said. Mr. Blossom was out of town and could not be reached for comment.

The Little Rock Board of Education recently asked the Federal District Court there for permission to suspend integration for two and a half years. A hearing on the issue was held last week.

Miss Brown, who was articulate and poised during the interview, said she was very happy at New Lincoln. Classes at the school ended on Friday, and she intends to return to her own family in Little Rock next Monday. During her stay here she has been living in Hastings-on-Hudson with the family of Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, a trustee of the school and an associate professor at City College.

Miss Brown said she intended to go to summer school to take courses in French and mathematics, her weak subjects, to do better in her schoolwork next fall.

Her ambition is to be a psychologist. Asked why, she replied:

"After Central I wanted to do something to help other people. I thought at first that I would be a social worker, but then after living with Dr. and Mrs. Clark—they're both psychologists and wonderful people—I decided I wanted to be psychologist."

LITTLE ROCK BOY FREED

Youth Accused of Spitting on Negro Girl Is Acquitted

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 12 (UPI)—An 18-year-old Central High School graduate was found innocent today of disturbing the peace.

Municipal Judge Robert Laster handed down the verdict for Curtis Stover, who had been accused of spitting on Thelma Johnson, a Negro as a crowd filed out of a stadium where commencement exercises were held. The Stover boy was one of the 602 graduates, which included Ernest Green, the first Negro to graduate from the school.

"It's a very unfortunate thing," Judge Laster told the boy's mother, Mrs. Curtis Stover Sr., "but it's all over now, so let's forget it."

Judge Laster commended the police for arresting the youth. He said that their action might have forestalled a more serious incident.

LITTLE ROCK NINE WIN PRAISE HERE

Wagner, U. N. Leaders and Lena Horne Greet Negro Pupil Group on Visit

By MILTON BRACKER

The nine Negro pupils from Central High School, Little Rock, Ark., were greeted yesterday by Mayor Wagner in the morning, by Dag Hammarskjold and Dr. Ralph J. Bunche in the afternoon, and by Lena Horne at night.

"In a real sense," Dr. Bunche, Under Secretary of the United Nations, told them in the presence of Mr. Hammarskjold, the Secretary General, "what you've been doing is what the United Nations effort is in the international community—to meet provocation with reason and restraint but to be firm in our determination to stand for right and justice.

Before and between appointments, the visitors did some casual strolling and sight-seeing. They took nearly as many photographs themselves as were made of them by professionals during their second day as a group here.

Hailed by Mayor

At City Hall, Mayor Wagner told the three boys and six girls that New York was "very proud" to welcome them. The Mayor said that although things remained to be done in combating discrimination here, the city stood in the forefront of the battle for equal rights.

"Everybody here will take you to their hearts," the Mayor continued, "and you will be one in spirit with us in our continuing fight to do away with the last vestiges of discrimination."

After eight months of "very unkind treatment," responded Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas leader of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, "I think the children needed just the kind of reception they received in the city."

Mrs. Bates, who arrived with the pupils Thursday, said that Minnijean Brown, one of the girls, had encountered a "lot more harassment" than most of the others. Minnijean, 16 years old, was expelled for the term at Central High in February. She came here and resumed her studies at the New Lincoln School.

Mrs. Bates said she thought New York had restored Minnijean's faith in democracy. The girl had been chosen as a particular target by the extremists, the N. A. A. C. P. leader added.

Group Visits U. N.

The Hotel and Club Employes Union, Local 6, which brought the pupils to New York for an award presentation Thursday night, had arranged the United Nations visit because of word from Little Rock that Dr. Bunche was the man the youngsters most wanted to see here.

Similarly Lena Horne was their "favorite" woman. So at 8:15 P. M. the group went backstage at the Imperial Theatre. After a welcome that wineded the children's eyes, they went out front to enjoy the musical "Jamaica," in which Miss Horne stars.

FEAR DESCRIBED AT CENTRAL HIGH

Vice Principal Testifies for School Board's Petition to Suspend Integration Plan

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 3 (AP)—The vice principal of Central High School testified today that she was constantly concerned about violence during the first year of integration, which ended last week.

Mrs. Elizabeth Huckaby, the school official, was the first witness in Federal District Court, where a petition by the city school board for a two-and-a-half-year suspension of integration was being heard.

Describing the atmosphere at the school, Mrs. Huckaby said "teachers came to me atremble; some had observed violence for the first time, some were weeping."

"I have no reason to think there will be any change" next year if integration continues, she declared.

The board formerly supported superintendent Virgil Blossoms' plan for gradual integration on the basis that compliance with the Supreme Court integration order was the only legal approach. It now contends that a year's experience with the plan has disrupted the educational process.

Opposes Testimony

Thurgood Marshall, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is opposing the petition, asked that Mrs. Huckaby's testimony be stricken. Judge Harry D. Lemley said he would reserve ruling until all testimony had been heard.

Mr. Marshall asked the witness to identify white ringleaders of racial incidents in the school.

"Sammie Dean Parker was the leader," Mrs. Huckaby answered. Sammie Dean was expelled last winter for having displayed a card that read, "One Down, Eight to Go," a reference to the expulsion of Minnie Jean Brown, one of nine Negroes enrolled at Central.

The Negro girl accepted a scholarship to an integrated private school in New York. Sammie Dean was allowed to return to Central on her promise that she would not become involved in racial incidents.

Mr. Marshall asked Mrs. Huckaby if "you think firm action by school officials would have removed" the threat of violence.

"I don't think that is the key to the problem," she replied.

"Do you think removal of the Negro children would solve the problem?" he asked.

"I would say ringleaders of the school seemed to me to be under directions from the outside," she said. "I think the problem can be solved by their [the outsiders] identification and control by the courts."

The school board has charged in the petition that the Federal Court, by order, insisted on integration and then did nothing to help control violence.

GOVERNOR ASSAILS PRESIDENT ON BIAS

Making an unscheduled appearance at a meeting of the State Commission Against Discrimination, the Governor declared that the recent Federal District Court decision postponing school integration in Little Rock, Ark., was "a travesty on justice."

Mr. Harriman told some 300 persons attending the commission's luncheon session at the Biltmore Hotel that the Supreme Court's decision of 1954 barring racial segregation in public schools had in effect been nullified "by those who were determined to set it aside by force."

Mr. Harriman referred to the ruling last Saturday of Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley in Little Rock that granted the school board of that city a two-and-a-half-year suspension of its plan for gradual school integration.

Harriman Is 'Incensed'

Without naming the judge, the Governor said that he had been "deeply moved and, I may say, incensed by this court action." He continued:

"But we must be blunt. The President of the United States has said nothing but that the law must be obeyed. I think we have the right to ask the President to say that this is a moral issue on which we must all stand together."

The speeches at the luncheon session, which was attended by business and civic leaders, were interrupted midway when Governor Harriman made his appearance. He was applauded warmly when he said that he was obligated to speak out on the question of segregation as the Governor of New York, "or I haven't the right to ask the President to do so."

"And so," he asserted, "I ask the President to speak out and say to the nation that there is a moral issue involved."

The Governor said that he had a right to speak on segregation because of what he described as the activities taken in New York State and this city to eliminate racial discrimination in employment and housing.

Charles Abrams, chairman of the commission, told the meeting that a recent study by his organization had found that "private builders have braved local biases in a number of communities and successfully admitted Negroes to their houses."

School Video Stirs Praise In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Students and educators have voiced acclaim for the hastily organized Little Rock television school program to give idle students a semblance of education.

"It's wonderful," said Don Smith, Hall High student body president.

The instructors were "terrific," said Supt. Virgil Blossom.

The school system nibbled at the idea of television after four city high schools, scheduled to open Sept. 15, remained closed on orders of Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

The six hours of daily TV instruction possessed a professional polish. First classes went on the air Monday.

How did the educators move so swiftly to adopt a teaching system new to them?

"The teachers met with television personnel and discussed the (director's) signals," said Louis Henderson, head of the school system's secondary education department.

"They were told to do exactly as they would in the classroom," he said, "and to be as natural as possible."

Henderson added: "We've had a number of telephone calls, and as far as I know they all were favorable."

Spokesmen for all three Little Rock television stations called the response excellent and said telephone calls poured in after the first classes.

One station representative told Blossom the coverage was near the saturation point — over 90 per cent.

Each station has been assigned one school grade. The station televises lessons for that grade for two hours each day.

"It's a service for the youngsters who don't have any school," explained Doug Romaine, manager of station KARK-TV.

Romaine said the added personnel necessary to televise the program costs his station $100 daily. And the stations lose two hours of advertising revenue daily.

Fifteen regular high school teachers instruct in English, mathematics, history and science.

All Little Rock teachers have been paid on a regular basis since Aug. 27 as provided in their contract, although the high school staff has had no one to teach.

Students are on the honor system to view and follow the assignments for their class, including some homework. Textbook assignments are made. About 98 per cent of students have their books.

Students Want Classes Even If Negroes Admitted

Faubus Asks Smashing Vote Opposing Integration In Little Rock Referendum

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 19 (AP)—A group of students at one of Little Rock's closed high schools Friday adopted a resolution saying they want to return to school, "even if qualified Negro students" are admitted.

About 65 Hall High School students met at a church Friday afternoon.

Chris Barrier, 16, a Hall junior, said only two students voiced opposition to the resolution.

"It was just for Hall students," he said, "but a few from Central High showed up, too."

Barrier said copies of the resolution will be mailed to Governor Orval E. Faubus, Little Rock City officials, and the School Board.

Meanwhile, the battle for votes in Little Rock's impending referendum on school integration stepped up rapidly following Faubus' appeal for a smashing public ballot against admitting Negro students.

Faubus said this would clear the way for him to reopen the high schools as segregated private institutions.

A committee of 50 women, opposing the governor, was set to launch an intensive campaign.

The referendum is scheduled for September 27.

On the ballot are two propositions — "for" or "against racial integration of all schools in the Little Rock School District."

'Leaves No Alternative'

The "women's emergency committee to open our schools" is campaigning for a "yes" vote in the referendum.

Mrs. Joseph R. Brewer, the chairman, said the group is "neither for nor against integration." But she said the wording of the ballot leaves no alternative but to vote "for integration." The women are interested in getting the schools open, she said.

"We have grown beyond all expectations," Mrs. Brewer said.

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, head of the segregationist Capital Citizens Council, said this was "the scheme of a small group of women . . . to hoodwink Little Rock mothers into voting for integration in the same plan used by integrationists in Texas."

Arkansas moderates on the integration issue have been "trampled to death" in the school crisis, Courier-Journal staffer Ben Reeves writes from Little Rock in Sunday's Passing Show.

Little Rock Schools To Teach by TV

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept 18 (AP)—The school board decided today to televise six hours of lessons a day for the 3460 Little Rock High School students who cannot attend regular classes because Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed their schools in the desegregation crisis.

Three commercial television stations, which will donate the time, may get some classes started by Saturday. The full television instruction program will begin Monday.

The day-old Little Rock Private Schools Corporation, which plans to lease the four high schools and reopen them as private, segregated institutions, decided at its first meeting not to make any move until after a special integration election Sept. 27.

The new corporation elected Dr. T. J. Raney, a physician, as its president. He said he was "willing and ready" to go to jail if necessary to test the right to operate private schools to avoid desegregation.

School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom said students would be on the honor system to look at the televised lessons. He had not decided yet whether they would get academic credit for them.

Each of the three stations gave the school board two hours of time a day.

Regular high school teachers, using film for illustration, will teach 30-minute classes in English, mathematics, history and science.

Dr. Raney said he thought the Private Schools Corporation could give the students a normal year of schooling.

Furthermore, he said, he thought the schools will be accredited, so graduates would not have any difficulty getting into out-of-state colleges.

"We assume that if the schools were to open with the same facilities, the same teachers and the same curriculum, the question of accreditation he said. "We would be dependent upon the election."

He referred to the special election which Faubus has called for Sept. 27 so the voters of the Little Rock school district can decide whether they want the schools reopened on a segregated or integrated basis.

If they were opened on a desegregated basis, there would be no need of a corporation to turn them into private schools, since all the Supreme Court has ordered them to do as public schools is accept Negroes.

Faubus said today in a television interview (NBC) that the only way to keep the Little Rock schools crisis from turning into racial conflict was to fight it out in the courts.

He said he would call out the National Guard, if necessary, to protect life and property if racial fighting started.

"But I am not going to send troops to the high school (Central) to enforce integration and that's that," he said. "That's up to the Federal courts and the Federal marshals."

A hundred and fifty U. S. deputy marshals, imported for integration duty, still are training in the Federal Building. There is nothing for them to do until the schools open.

Faubus said that unless he changed his mind, he would not send the Guard to enforce integration even if a majority of the voters asked for it Sept. 27.

He refused to say whether the Private Schools Corporation was his idea, but members of it said he had nothing to do with it. Dr. Raney said the corporation could go to Faubus for counsel whenever it wanted, however.

He said that if any of the other Southern Governors asked him he would say that in closing schools to avoid integration, Arkansas and Virginia were not in conflict with the Supreme Court.

Faubus said he was leaving Friday for the Southern Governor's Conference in Lexington, Ky.

He said he also would tell them that so far the Federal Government had not defied the state because "each is acting within its own constitutional orbit."

Private Schools Ruling Is Asked

Little Rock Board Requests U.S. Court to Decide If Lease Legal

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 23 (AP) — The Little Rock School Board asked U.S. District Court today to say whether it can legally lease four closed high school buildings to a corporation for use as private segregated schools.

The board said it is willing to lease the schools if the federal court will assure the board that it will not be held in contempt for doing it.

Amis Guthridge, segregationist attorney and Citizens Council leader, immediately declared that the action showed the board "is more interested in seeing the mixing of the races in our schools than seeing them operate."

He called the action "absolutely unnecessary."

Gov. Orval E. Faubus has claimed that his private school plan could legally circumvent the U.S. Supreme Court's integration order.

Faubus closed the schools before they actually opened to avert integration.

The board voted 4 to 1 to ask the federal court for instructions in the integration case. If the court answered that the board may not legally lease the schools, it could snarl Faubus' plans to get the four high schools reopened next week.

The people of the school district vote Saturday on the question of whether they want integrated schools. Faubus precluded that the voters' answer would be "no" and announced a plan for reopening them on a private segregated basis sometime next week.

In its petition to federal court, the board also noted the conflict in federal rulings that the schools must integrate and the so-called Faubus package providing for continued segregation under private school operations.

The school board's action may cause a postponement of the impending showdown.

Cry to Reopen Schools Echoing in Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — Groups demanding reopening of Little Rock's four high schools on an integrated basis are rising rapidly in Little Rock.

The Little Rock School Board, which contends that it is caught between Gov. Orval E. Faubus and the Justice Department in a tug-of-war, opens six hours of lessons by television today for the city's 3,680 high school students.

mercial television stations will carry two hours of instruction in mathematics, history, biology, science, English and chemistry. Fifteen teachers will teach the lessons with the aid of [illegible].

At Van Buren, Ark., 12 Negro students [illegible] from the high school because of a white students' [illegible] integration strike the first week in September will try to return today. A federal judge suggested that the School Board see that they are protected.

But one of the startling factors in the integration crisis in Little Rock was the rise of groups who want the schools to open, even if it means that Negroes attend with whites.

Most influential group includes 62 lawyers, who signed a statement saying that Faubus cannot legally open the schools as private institutions and urging the people to vote next Saturday in a special election for an integrated reopening of the schools.

Steele Hays, 32, son of Congressman Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) and one of the signers, said he expects other signatures before the statement is run today, in newspapers as an advertisement.

"This action on the part of Little Rock attorneys represents a serious crack in the foundation of this atmosphere of resistance at any cost," a respected lawyer, who asked not to be named, said.

"The public has the right to know how this city's lawyers feel about the legality of the use of public funds in private schools. It could lead them to vote against segregation Saturday."

The segregationist States Rights Council of Arkansas, a splinter group of the equally segregationist Capital Citizens Council, denounced the lawyers' statement as "preposterous."

"The people of Arkansas will long remember their names and in the future shun them like poison," a States Rights Council statement said.

Mrs. Joe R. Brewer and Mrs. D. D. Terry, both prominent women, organized the "Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools." They opened an office and will have a committee telephoning voters and uging them to vote for an integrated reopening.

Sixty-three students of Hall High School signed a petition demanding reopening of their school with Negro students, if that is necessary.

Don A. Smith, a senior and president of the Hall High student body, announced that he and a committee of 30 polled 501 Hall students by telephone and discovered that 71 per cent want the school reopened, even if it means integration.

The Central High School Mothers' League, one of the strongest segregationist orgahizations in Little Rock, is circulating a petition for an election to recall four members of the School Board it accuses of being integrationists.

The Capital Citizens Council scheduled a segregation rally tonight. Main speaker will be William Gerber, chief legal counsel for the congressional subcommittee that investigated integration in Washington.

ARGUMENTS POLITE, LEGAL

Bitterness On Integration Missing At Court Hearing

By ARTHUR EDSON

WASHINGTON (AP)—No issue of our times has been as bitter and as violent as public school integration. Harsh, unforgiving, unprintable words have been shouted. Children have been spit upon. Heads have been bloodied.

And so Thursday, once again, the issue came before the Supreme Court: What should be done about integration in Little Rock? Once again one was struck by the wonderful contrast of democracy in action.

For any Rip Van Winkle, stumbling into court after a 20-year nap, never would have guessed how explosive the issue was that fetched us together.

Voices remained calm, lawyerly.

Thurgood Marshall, arguing the case for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, leaned, relaxed, against the lectern. Occasionally he whipped his heavy glasses off and gestured with them.

His words usually were lawyer words, like "you can see by the citation," or "the merits of this case," or "this justifiable issue."

Only near the end did he drop a hint that this case involved human beings as well as law books.

Dropping into the vernacular, he told the justices: we must think of "the rights of these kids involved." That is, the Negro youngsters who would be removed from Little Rock Central High and sent back to a segregated school.

Or take the Little Rock School Board's lawyer, Richard Butler. He hasn't had the experience Marshall has had before the Suprme Court—the NAACP legal captain has won 12 of 14 cases argued there—but you'd never guess it from his manner.

The drawl got him in trouble once. He said something and Chief Court Justice Warren asked: "They have now?"

"I said, 'they have not,'" Butler said.

He got around to the human beings caught in turmoil sooner than Marshall did. For he drew a picture of an unfortunate, tormented, unpaid school board, trying to run a school with the federal government saying one thing and the state government saying something else. The board members and the school superintendent, he said, had had a bitter experience, and he hoped a delay was granted so that things could be worked out "in a climate of calm rather than in a climate of hysteria."

And the justices, the men who have to decide the whole thing, what about them?

It seemed to this reporter that they were gentler than usual with the attorneys.

LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

ST.LOUIS, MO. NOVEMBER 10, 1958
U.S. 8th COURT OF APPEALS DIRECTED THE FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT FOR ARKANSAS TO ISSUE AN INJUNCTION SPELLING OUT WHAT THE LITTLE ROCK SCHOOL BOARD MUST DO TO OBEY THE SUPREME COURT (INTEGRATION ORDER)

14k 1958

APPEALS COURT RULES

Little Rock Given Integration Order

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 10 (UPI)—A federal court today ordered Little Rock to proceed with school integration, but Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus declared he is sure that new white, private high schools will continue.

The U.S. 8th Court of Appeals here directed the federal district court for Arkansas to issue an injunction spelling out what the Little Rock school board must do to obey the Supreme Court's stand against racial segregation of public schools.

Leasing Forbidden

The injunction will forbid the school board to lease school buildings for private, segregated operation and from doing anything to "thwart or frustrate the execution of the integration plan," the court said.

Faubus, in New Orleans to address a mass White Citizens' Council rally, told a news conference he is "sure that the private schools in Little Rock will continue."

The private schools were set up after Faubus closed Little Rock's four public high schools rather than let them operate on a racially integrated basis.

Basic American Right

Faubus commented, "I do not think it is anticipated by anyone that the federal courts will close all private schools in the nation, thus denying a basic American right that has been exercised even before the founding of the republic."

He said the court order presents "no obstacles that had not already been anticipated, such as facilities and funds, and these have been—and are being—met."

In Little Rock, five of the six members of the school board said they would decide within the next 24 to 36 hours whether to quit their posts and let a new board tangle with the impending injunction. The five members have been under fire ever since they permitted nine Negro students to enter Little Rock's Central High School under the protection of paratroopers last year.

Blossom on Way Out?

It was also reported that the board would buy up the remaining 18 months of the contract of School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom. Blossom is the author of the gradual integration plan which Faubus is fighting.

The appeals courts left open an avenue of appeal for the Little Rock Private School Corp. It said the corporation could intervene in the case within 10 days after the injunction is issued if it believes it is "possessed of legal rights."

Little Rock Leasing Law Knocked Out

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (AP) — The Little Rock School Board was directed by a federal appeals court Monday to take positive steps to achieve integration in its district, where the four public high schools have been closed.

The court did not establish a timetable for reopening the schools. Nor did it spell out just how the integration order should be carried out. These matters were left up to U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller of Arkansas and the board itself.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas indicated the Little Rock Private School Corp. will continue operating a senior high school for white pupils in a private building with private funds.

EASING PLAN

The three-judge division of the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals, in its unanimous opinion, also outlawed a plan for leasing the public high school buildings to the private school group.

The court directed Judge Miller to order the board and Virgil T. Blossom, Little Rock school superintendent, to "take such affirmative steps as the District Court may hereafter direct to facilitate and accomplish" integration.

Under previous court orders, the court said, the board and Blossom have an obligation to act on their own initiative to accomplish integration. It is not enough, the court said, that they merely follow the [illegible] of the district court.

The appellate court criticized Gov. Faubus for closing the public high schools, and the Arkansas State Legislature for approving the emergency measures under which Faubus acted.

NEUTRALITY CLAIM

The three judges said they recognized the board members and Blossom previously had acted in good faith. But in leasing the buildings to the private corporation, the court said, they yielded to local clamor.

Faubus, in New Orleans to address a Citizens Council rally, noted that he had anticipated the court's ruling. Faubus had said a week ago that he had information the court would "attempt to force reopening of the public schools on an integrated basis."

Monday's opinion represented another legal victory for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. The appellate court held that Judge Miller erred in refusing to grant the NAACP's request for an injunction against the school leasing plan.

Appellate Court Orders 'Positive' Integration Steps

Writ Fails To Excite Little Rock Leaders

General feeling was that the decision by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis would have no immediate effect on the situation.

The court ordered the Little Rock School Board to take positive steps toward integration but did not say how this should be done since schools under integration orders have been closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

APRIL 18, 1958—Judge Harry Lemley was assigned to hear the school board's petition.

Motion May Start Case To High Court

Federal Judge In Arkansas Ends Central Integration

FROM PRESS REPORTS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 22 — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will ask a Federal judge tomorrow to set aside his order returning Central High School to segregated classrooms.

Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley, 74, of Texarkana, Ark., granted the Little Rock School Board's "prayer for relief" yesterday by ordering a suspension of integration at the embattled school until the middle of the 1960-61 school term.

The NAACP's motion of supersedeas is scheduled to be heard by Judge Lemley at 11:30 a.m.

In Washington, a Justice Dept. spokesman said the most the government could do would be to join in the appeal by filing a brief as a "friend of the court." The department could not file a direct appeal because the U. S. government is not a party in the case.

Assistant Atty. Gen. A. Wilson White said earlier that consideration was being given to filing of a Justice Dept. brief. But he emphasized that no decision had been made.

If Judge Lemley refuses to set aside his order, the NAACP can take the case to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, Mo., then to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

The decision by Lemly, who has often stated that he wanted no part of the limelight, was the most spectacular of his 19 years as Federal judge for the Western District of Arkansas.

Lemley, grandson of a Confederate soldier, said the Central High School education system has been impaired by integration.

He said that if integration is maintained next term "the board will have to have military assistance or its equivalent and it is financially unable to bear the expense of hiring" guards.

In his 35-page opinion, he said that while troops can check vandalism and violence, "they cannot reduce or eliminate racial tensions or create a climate that is conducive to education."

In his 35-page opinion Lemley agreed with the school board that the time for Negroes to enjoy their rights was not quite at hand.

This does not mean the court is yielding to unlawful force or violence, Lemley added. He said the delay could be a breathing spell in which a change in personalities and easing of racial tensions might help smooth integration at mid-term, 1961.

The reaction of Lemley's ruling in this city, which has almost become accustomed to the ebb and flow of racial bitterness, was fairly predictable.

Integration spokesmen were grimly silent or openly indignant. Segregationists were pleased but subdued. Both sides agreed one round was over but not the tortuous fight.

Wiley Branton, attorney who made the appeal, said that if Lemley granted his request for a stay the situation would remain as it was until yesterday —which means the Negroes still are enrolled at Central while the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals handles Branton's appeal.

If Lemley rejects the stay Branton said, "we could present the motion to the Eighth Circuit Court at St. Louis whether or not it is in recess, and they could act on it separately from the appeal."

Branton said the Supreme Court would be the next—and last—stop if the appellate court also rejected the request for a stay.

The ruling set NAACP leaders back on their heels.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas president of the NAACP, said she was "knocked for a loop."

"The last vestige of democracy has taken a holiday in Arkansas."

Mrs. Louise Patillo, mother of one of the nine Negroes who began attending classes at the school last September 25 under the bayonets of Federal National Guardsmen and 101st Division paratroopers, said her daughter had no plans as yet for next Fall.

Minnijean Brown, another of the nine Negroes who was expelled when she got into a racial incident after the school was integrated, was not immediately available for comment. She returned recently from New York where she attended an integrated high school after her expulsion.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who used National Guardsmen to keep Negroes out of Central High until the Guardsmen were federalized to help force integration, was "most gratified" by Judge Lemley's decision.

"This is not a final settlement of this problem, but it can prove to be a peaceful interlude," Faubus said.

It appeared doubtful that the appeal from Lemley's order could reach the Supreme Court before Central High School reopens next September. The court hopes to recess June 30 until next Oct. 6.

This would seem to mean that the only way the high tribunal could upset Lemley's decision in time to assure readmission of the school's seven Negro students next term would be to accept a direct appeal before June 30.

The Supreme Court has been disinclined to bypass lower appeals court jurisdiction. However, legal experts said that the circuit court could, if it chose, stay execution of Lemley's decision until the Supreme Court ruled.

On the other hand, the appeals court could declare Lemley's ruling in effect pending action by the Supreme Court.

Faubus Asks Huge Anti-Mixing Vote

By RELMAN MORIN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The battle for votes in Little Rock's impending referendum on school integration stepped up rapidly Friday following Gov. Orval E. Faubus' announcement of a smashing public ballot against admitting Negro students.

Faubus said this would clear the way for him to reopen the high schools as segregated private institutions.

Other developments were:

A group of white students adopted a resolution declaring they want their high school reopened even if it means admitting Negroes;

A report is circulating that Gov. Faubus is studying the possibility of reopening Horace Mann High School for Negroes as an integrated school; and Reliable source stated that the Little Rock School Board probably would resist handing over the city's high schools to private operation.

A committee of 50 women, opposing the governor, was set to launch an intensive campaign. "We have grown beyond all expectations," the chairman said.

VOTE SCHEDULED

The referendum is scheduled for Sept. 27.

On the ballot are two propositions: "... for the admission of all schools in the Little Rock school district."

In two related developments elsewhere:

Terrance Roberts, one of the Negro students who went to Central High last year under guard by paratroops, entered Los Angeles High School four days ago, his mother said.

REFUSES PETITION

U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller refused a petition commanding the school board of Van Buren, Ark., to restore integration at two schools.

Miller indicated he felt the order is unnecessary. The schools integrated voluntarily but Negro students have stayed away since a strike by white students.

Clarence A. Laws, regional secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negroes would return to both Van Buren schools Monday.

Faubus left for the Southern Governors' Conference in Lexington, Ky. George Douthit, of the Arkansas Democrat who is accompanying the governor, said Faubus is studying a proposal to set up private corporations and private boards for each of the four Little Rock high schools.

Faubus, who has closed Little Rock High schools to block integration, blamed the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People for the conflict now existing in that city. He said the NAACP selected Little Rock as a "guinea pig" to further integration.

He said city authorities would not cooperate with federal marshals to forcibly bring about integration.

Faubus answered remarks made by Theodore R. McKeldin, prointegration governor of Maryland.

McKeldin, who faced newsmen immediately preceding Faubus' appearance, condemned the Arkansas overnor yesterday for "political expedience" and called upon the Dixie governors to assert leadership toward desegration.

Faubus said each state has the right to voice its own power under the Constitution, and added, "I think its improper for them (other states) to express opinions on our affairs in Arkansas."

Faubus said he has no objection to a McKeldin suggestion that the Southern Governors Conference should go on record as favoring desegregation in public classrooms.

"If the resolution passed," said McKeldin, "it would show that we of the South recognize the Constitution as the supreme law of the land." He said it would have a good effect on the South and the nation.

Faubus Says Use Of Force Stalled Mixing

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas said today school integration in his state would have proceeded peacefully and more rapidly where there has been no force or threat of force.

Faubus, here for the Southern Governors Conference, observed some areas in Arkansas would have mixed races in classrooms with an eye towards bolstering their economy.

This is so, he added, because Negroes in these areas own their property and generally are self supporting.

But, he told a news conference, the use of federal troops at Little Rock last year to force integration has made strong segregationists out of some who could have been classified as moderates.

Faubus May Reopen Negro High School With Mixed Classes

BY PRESTON McGRAW
United Press International

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 19—Gov. Orval E. Faubus is thinking about letting one of Little Rock's four high schools reopen integrated if pressure for an immediate reopening gets too high, it was learned today.

The school he is considering for integration is Horace Mann, a Negro school. It has about 700 students.

"If pressure develops as has been rumored and white students continue in their protests, saying they want to go to school, even if it is integrated — if it really gets serious — we are urging the governor to open one of the schools on an integrated basis," a close adviser said.

"The school is Horace Mann, the Negro school. We are serious about this. The school would be in the Little Rock district and would be a high school. It would enable the students who are really serious about going to school —even if it is integrated—to continue their education."

Faubus is on his way to the Southern Governors Conference in Lexington, Ky., in a three-automobile caravan. He expects to return to Little Rock next Wednesday night.

The Little Rock School Board will begin a pilot program of educational television tomorrow in preparation for a full-scale attempt Monday to begin instructing 3480 high school students by television until their schools reopen.

Tomorrow's program will be film and will last an hour. A daily schedule of TV instruction, with regular high school teachers and film, will start Monday morning on the city's three commercial television stations.

Each station will donate two hours of time a day to TV schooling. Each of the three stations will carry four 30-minute lessons for each of the three high school grades.

In answer to questions about whether the students will get credit for TV lessons, School Supt. Virgil Blossom said:

"Too often we have confused credits and grades with the real function of American education. The inducement to view these televised lessons is the same inducement as to attend school or get an education.

"Credit has not been ruled in; it has not been ruled out. Students and parents alike have the opportunity to supplement their education and have an opportunity to profit."

The TV lessons will be based upon textbooks, because Blossom estimated that 98 per cent of the students already have their texts.

He said there will not be any homework "because we have not reached that point in our thinking . . . We're putting on educational TV in a few days while it has taken some educational programs years to be worked out before they are offered."

Blossom said about 10 per cent of the students don't have TV receivers in their homes and he hoped that churches, boys' clubs and similar organizations will set up receivers so students without TV at home can learn.

A special election will be held Sept. 27, so the voters can decide whether they want the schools to open integrated or

DR. DALE ALFORD

Write-In Ballots Dump Rep. Hays

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A Little Rock eye doctor who made a week's campaign as a write-in candidate won Arkansas' 5th District congressional seat from Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) on racial issues.

So close was the vote in Tuesday's general election that the decision was in doubt until early Wednesday. Hays conceded about 12:30 p.m. after it was apparent that Dr. Dale Alford's 2,000-vote lead could not be overcome by the nine small boxes unreported.

Alford, a political freshman who had never sought an office except the local school board, attacked Hays' moderate stand on the integration issue. The congressman, who had served 16 years from the 5th (Little Rock) District, is a prominent Baptist layman and president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

TECHNICAL BID

The doctor, who will enter Congress as a Democrat despite his technical bid for the office as an independent, seemed to have the unspoken support of Gov. Orval E. Faubus. Faubus' close associate, Claude Carpenter Jr., managed the whirlwind seven-day campaign.

Hays, 60, said his role as a mediator between Faubus and President Eisenhower in September 1957, when the Little Rock integration crisis was at its peak, apparently was his political downfall.

"Some of my friends tell me this was a mistake," Hays said.

SUPPORTED FAUBUS

Alford is the only outspoken segregationist on the Little Rock School Board and supported Faubus' militant stand against federal integration orders.

The doctor, a black-haired man with piercing eyes under bushy brows, made effective use of a television appearance to hammer at Hays' moderation, the Supreme Court and what he termed federal usurpation of power.

LITTLE ROCK
GOVERNOR FAUBUS
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE
ERROR ACKNOWLEDGED

Probe Into Faubus' Taxes Will Reopen

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service is sending one of its top regional officials to Little Rock, Ark., to investigate an acknowledged error in an examination of Gov. Orval E. Faubus' tax returns.

B. Frank White, the service's regional director at Dallas, is expected to arrive in Little Rock Thursday to take charge of the inquiry, it was learned Wednesday.

White is boss of federal tax collectors in five states and is responsible only to Washington headquarters.

Faubus told newsmen at Little Rock Tuesday that the federal government had questioned his taxes for 1954 through 1956. He charged that this was an effort to punish him for his battle against public school integration.

DELK'S COMMENTS

O. Gordon Delk, acting revenue service commissioner, denied the government was seeking vengeance or retribution. He conceded a tax agent at Little Rock had blundered in sending Faubus a letter which claimed the governor should pay taxes on the upkeep and rental value of his state-owned mansion. No claim of this sort was ever made against a governor before, Delk said.

Delk said "the government's case is still open for proper handling for whatever result it may have."

The acting revenue chief was asked whether the Faubus tax investigation had been initiated because of the governor's prominence in battling against public school integration.

"We do not select returns for examinations based on prominence," he replied. Delk added that returns usually are selected for checking "on the basis of probability of error."

Delk indicated he was not surprised that he had not been informed sooner of the Faubus tax case. In fact, he said, he would not expect a tax agent to discuss such a case with district revenue directors.

Delk said the district directors have a lot more to do than just examine returns and their offices are "equipped with supervisory personnel who normally can take care of all matters arising in an examination and should do so."

TAX NOTICE

The rescinded notice which revenue agents at Little Rock had sent Faubus was an informal one notifying the governor that certain tax questions hadn't been cleared up. Officials in Washington said it was not a bill for taxes which the government might have claimed were due.

Technical experts at IRS headquarters said there is no mention in the tax law of the wages of servants furnished an employe or allowances for maintenance of free lodgings.

However, if a person is given a maintenance allowance and does not spend the full amount for that purpose, the unspent balance would be taxable.

The tax provision involving free means and lodgings was intended primarily to apply to hospital workers, servants, farm hands and others who customarily live in quarters provided by their employers.

The 1954 Tax Code says meals or lodgings furnished to an employee for the convenience of the employer are tax free if:

1. Meals are furnished on the business premises of the employer.

2. The employee is required to accept lodgings on the business premises of his employer as a condition of employment.

The provision requiring that acceptance of lodgings be a condition of employment has been interpreted to mean "required in order for the employee to perform properly the duties of his employment."

IRS officials would not specify the error made in the case on the grounds it would involve discussion of the governor's taxes.

Delk was called out of a meeting at the Budget Bureau yesterday after reports of Faubus' news conference reached Washington. He went into conference with Fred C. Scribner Jr., acting secretary of the Treasury. It was several hours before he made a public statement.

Officials report they are puzzled about many facets of the case. White's trip to Little Rock is aimed at speeding an inquiry into all the circumstances.

L. R. Schools May Face Loss Of Accreditation

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Sept. 15 (UPI)—Little Rock's four public high schools would have to be fully reaccredited educationally if they became private, the former head of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools said last night.

The educator, L. B. Fisher, said even if the schools stayed public, they still might need re-examination because of the integration crisis.

"It always is detroimental to children when adults use the schools as pawns for their own controversies," he said.

High school accreditation is considered vital to students wishing college entrance.

"Colleges and universities can do as they wish about accepting students who come from unaccredited high schools," Fisher said. "However, most of them regard our decision as very important."

"If Little Rock's schools became private, they would, for our purposes, be considered 'new schools' and as such would require reaccreditation," Fisher told United Press International.

Accreditation is obtained through this procedure:

—A group from a state commission, in Little Rock's case the Arkansas State Commission of Education, visits the school in question. It decides whether the school matches standards of educational program, administration, supervision, technical quality of teachers and attendance time.

—The State Commission then submits its verdict to the parent North Central Assn. In instances, the association has been known to reverse a commision's recommendation.

"The Arkansas Commission is composed of five persons, as I recall," Fishers aid. "Representatives from the state university and state department of education and three administrators from Arkansas schools accredited by the association."

"Only acts of nature seem to be reason for less than 172 days so far as we're concerned," Fisher said.

The association does not meet until next April, when it is scheduled to gather in Chicago. Thus, if Little Rock's schools turned private they would have to be unaccerdited until April.

"At that time we'd decide on the state's recommendation," Fisher said.

Students Granted Football Reprieve

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 17.—The Little Rock School Board Wednesday decided to resume football and other student extracurricular activities here despite that schools are closed.

The action followed an exchange of telegrams between the board and Gov. Orval Faubus, who had been asked by the board to state exactly what he felt should be closed under the present situation. The board Monday had ordered a complete closing based on the Governor's school closing proclamation.

The Governor said Wednesday it was strictly the board's responsibility to decide whether to resume outside activities. Board President Wayne Upton then authorized an immediate return to the football and other extracurricular programs.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom denied the Governor had forced school officials into its recall action. He also revealed that no Negro pupils are involved in the football, band or musical practice work being resumed.

Little Rock Warned on Accrediting

URBANA, Ill., Sept. 23 (AP).—Although Gov. Orval S. Faubus views outside accrediting of schools in Arkansas as unimportant, a North Central Association official yesterday indicated loss of accreditation could be serious.

Gov. Faubus told reporters Sunday in Lexington, Ky., the Arkansas State Board of Education, not the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, is the primary accrediting agency for Arkansas high schools.

Dr. L. B. Fisher of Urbana, a member of the association's accreditation commission for secondary schools, said loss of North Central approval would be a serious blow to Arkansas youngsters seeking a college education.

Arkansas State Board of Accreditation, Dr. Fisher said, would carry little weight with colleges and universities outside the borders of the State. Such is true of any State accreditation program, although some States come nearer to NCA standards than do others, Dr. Fisher explained.

Earlier this month Dr. Fisher, a professor of education at the University of Illinois, declared North Central would ask for a check of Little Rock High schools whether they reopened as private schools, as they may under Arkansas" recently adopted laws, or public schools.

Little Rock voters will decide in a referendum Saturday whether schools shall be integrated.

Key to the Little Rock accrediting problem, Dr. Fisher said, is the North Central criteria calling for evaluation of the "philosophy of the school . . . to the extent of its formulating principles of democracy." Reopening schools in Little Rock on a public, segregated basis probably would bring about an N. C. A. survey, Dr. Fisher declared. If the schools open on a private basis, an N. C. A. study would be a certainty.

Dr. Fisher said he would vigorously oppose accrediting Little Rock high schools as private schools on the basis of the "sheer immorality" of the move.

Faubus Prepared To Close Central

GOVERNOR URGES U.S. SUPREME COURT TO GRANT DELAY

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus Monday urged the U. S. Supreme Court to show patience and grant time in the Central High School integration crisis. He also said he has prepared legislation to close the school entirely.

"The time for decision has arrived," the Democratic governor declared. He added that it is up to the high tribunal whether the decision is reached in an atmosphere of calm or one of conflict.

The Arkansas Legislature meets in emergency session Tuesday to consider—and almost certainly to adopt—a school-closing measure against further classroom integration at Central.

During the day, the U. S. Supreme Court was summoned into its own special session on Thursday. It can either grant Central a breathing spell, or hasten integration to a new, crucial climax on the school's cooly-green, landscaped campus.

The school, scene of last year's segregationist riots, is scheduled to reopen Sept. 2 on an all-white basis. Negroes entered its classrooms for the first time last year under the protective bayonets of federal paratroopers dispatched to Little Rock by President Eisenhower.

"I hope that the U. S Supreme Court will be better informed on the situation than was the President and his advisers," Faubus said.

"At that time the President did not know transportation had been integrated in Arkansas, as well as institutions of higher learning, and more public school districts than seven other Southern states combined. Nor did he know that Negroes were serving in party posts and public offices, both elective and appointive.

"I hope the Supreme Court takes into consideration these facts in their deliberations next Thursday on the Little Rock controversy.

"Whatever 'deliberate speed' may be, Arkansas has achieved it sooner, or has more nearly approached it, than any other state with a comparable problem.

"The Supreme Court by approving the stay, can then hear the case on appeal, in an atmosphere of comparative calm, rather than an atmosphere of conflict."

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is pressing the Supreme Court to erase a 30-day integration stay granted Central High in a lower court.

Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett, the state's chief legal officer, said: "It is my thought that they will grant the petition of the NAACP."

Lt. Gov. Nathan Gordon said: 'I won't be surprised by any decision they make."

Faubus goes before the special legislative session with proposals to fend off renewed integration at Central by closing the school. Passage undoubtedly would enmesh the courts in another long round of reviews.

A legislative source said ready for submission are:

1 A bill to buy the Legislature a little time by postponing Central's reopening from Sept. 2 to Sept. 8.

2 A bill allowing the governor to close Central in the face of any federal orders to integrate. Such a decision would be subject to a school district referendum within 30 days, with voters deciding whether to integrate or keep Central closed.

3. A technical bill to provide transfer of state aid when a displaced white student enters a new segregated school district.

Faubus No-School Bill Seen Sure of Passage

By ARTHUR EVERETT

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus' office Sunday worked on legislation to close Central High School completely if Negro students are returned to its classrooms, either by court edict or by federal force.

It was learned such a bill definitely will be submitted to the 126-man Arkansas State Legislature later in the week. Faubus has summoned the legislators into emergency session on Tuesday at 11 a.m.

The governor was in a weekend round of conferences with key state and legislative aides. Among those being contacted were members of the potent Pulaski County delegation, which includes 11 senators and representatives from Little Rock.

Support of any bill the governor offers the Legislature seemed assured. Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett predicted to a newsman: "Come Sept. 2 there will be no troops around the school and the seven Negroes will not be inside."

Faubus hopes special legislation will counter any last-minute Supreme Court mandate for the return of seven Negro pupils to Central High when it reopens Sept. 2. A year ago, when Negroes first entered, white rioting occurred and President Eisenhower sent federal troops into the Southern capital.

Faubus claims he repeatedly has been tipped off that the mood of local segregationists is even more violent this year than it was last. He said he called the Legislature "to combat by legal means the forcible integration of the Little Rock high schools and to avoid the almost certain disorders that would ensue."

Re-entry of seven Negroes into Central currently is stymied by a 30-day integration stay granted last week by the 8th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has asked U. S. Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Whittaker to supercede —that is, to upset—the stay. A decision is not expected before next Thursday, at the earliest.

If Whittaker goes along with the NAACP's legal arguments, his decision would constitute a mandate for readmittance of Negroes to Central. Faubus said he's not going to be caught at the last minute in such a situation.

The governor has in hand more than a score of anti-integration proposals. He hopes to weed out three or four in final form for the Legislature.

The measures are expected to provide for the complete closing of Central High, as a last resort against enforced integration.

Lt. Gov. Nathan Gordon predicted: "Any bill which he proposes will pass without trouble."

Faubus recently strengthened his position with a smashing primary election victory that insured him a third term as Democratic governor of the state.

IF NEGROES ADMITTED

Faubus Works On Bills To Close Central High

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus' office Sunday worked on legislation to close Central High School completely if Negro students are returned to its classrooms, either by court edict or by federal force.

It was learned such a bill definitely will be submitted to the 126-man Arkansas State Legislature later in the week. Faubus has summoned the legislators into emergency session on Tuesday at 11 a.m.

Lt. Gov. Nathan Gordon predicted: "Any bill which he proposes will pass without trouble."

Faubus recently strengthened his position with a smashing primary election victory that insured him a third term as Democratic governor of the state.

Registration at Central began last Friday, with no Negroes being accepted. Unless Justice Whittaker upsets the St. Louis stay, the breathing spell in Central's bitter integration dispute is expected to continue for weeks and perhaps months until the full U. S. Supreme Court has had a chance to act.

Gov. Faubus Gives Call For Session

Emergency Summons May Close School To Block Mixing

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus Saturday called an emergency session next week of the Arkansas State Legislature to try to block further racial integration at Central High School.

The legislators may be asked to close the big school entirely, as a last resort against what Faubus called illegal federal interference.

Faubus told a news conference that information he has received indicated that violence in the event of renewed integration at Central would be even greater this time than a year ago. Riots outside the school last fall shocked the nation and led President Eisenhower to send federal troops to Little Rock.

During the past year of crisis here, Faubus often threatened to call on the legislature for special anti-integration measures. But he kept putting off the actual call for one reason or another.

LAWMAKERS SUMMONED

Finally, in midafternoon, Faubus solemnly announced he had summoned the lawmakers to a special session next Tuesday—one week before Central High is scheduled to reopen.

In his call, Faubus said in part:

"Because of the grave concern of the people of Little Rock and the general public in this matter, and the great desire to combat by legal means the forcible integration of the Little Rock high schools and to avoid the almost certain disorders that would ensue, it is imperative that the people be given an opportunity to act. . . .

"It is the responsibility of the chief executive, under the constitution and law of Arkansas, to preserve the peace and good order of the state. This has been and will continue to be my firm position.

WILL OF PEOPLE

"I have not offered nor will offer any objections to changes which are brought about through constitutional and Democratic processes, in accordance with the will of the people."

Faubus told newsmen he would have liked to delay his call until the Supreme Court makes its next scheduled move in the case. That appears to be nearly a week away, however, and Faubus declared: "There is no time to do that."

Although he wouldn't discuss the nature of any bills he has in mind, Faubus said:

"It is my hope and my expectation that the legislature will act on the bills before Sept. 2."

Of any measures that are passed Faubus said: "I hope it will never be necessary to use them."

Asked if he had information that violence this year might even go beyond last year's if Central's integration program is resuled, Faubus replied: "That is the information brought to me over and over."

Faubus accused integrationists of a clever plot — through legal maneuvering in the U.S. Supreme Court—to spring a last-minute trap on Little Rock school authorities and thus force the re-entry of seven Negro students when Central reopens Sept. 2. The governor said he would not stand still while time runs out on him.

COURT RULING

The high court currently is being asked by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to erase a conflicting series of lower court rulings that have at this point stayed a renewal of integration at Central for at least 30 days. The NAACP wants the high court in effect to direct renewed integration of the seven Negro students when Central reopens.

Central High was the center of last year's great Little Rock integration crisis. When white mobs rioted outside the beautifully landscaped school, President Eisenhower sent in federal troops to insure the entry of Negro students for the first time in Central's history.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES

The complex legal situation confronting local school authorities was being closely watched as a possible national guide line for integration showdowns in other Southern states.

In Norfolk, Va., for example, U.S. Dist. Judge Walter Hoffman says that if the Supreme Court permits a long delay in Central's integration, he will not desegregate Norfolk schools.

He told Norfolk City Atty. Leonard H. Davis Friday night to wait and see if the high court grants Little Rock an extended cooling off period.

If it does, Hoffman added: "Comeback and see me, and I'll end all your trouble . . . . I'll end this case with four lines."

A score of prospective anti-integration school bills already are in Faubus' hands. They were turned over to the Democratic governor by Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett. Their text was not made public. But among them, it is believed, is a measure to close Central High rather than admit the seven Negroes for a second school year.

The governor put the Legislature on a stand-by alert for a special emergency session several days ago. He recently won a smashing primary victory that assured him a third term as governor of the state. He is generally conceded to have the firm support of a legislative majority.

Nine Negroes originally entered Central last September. One graduated, another was expelled, leaving seven who planned to re-enter this year.

NAACP Petition Asks Court Void Integration Stay

Immediate Central High Order Urged

WASHINGTON (AP) - The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People appealed to the Supreme Court Friday for an order directing immediately racial integration at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

Justice Charles E. Whittaker was asked to vacate an order of the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis which would delay the mixing of white and Negro students at the high school until the Supreme Court has ruled on the main issues in the case.

But as the NAACP's appeal was filed in the Supreme Court clerk's office, Justice Whittaker was en route to the American Bar Assn. convention in Los Angeles. The Supreme Court is in recess until Oct. 6, and it was uncertain how soon the NAACP could get a ruling.

LEGAL BARRIERS

Thurgood Marshall of New York the association's attorney, said he has every hope legal barriers standing in the way of integration at Central High can be removed by Sept. 2 when the new school term begins.

Marshall's appeal was directed to Whittaker because he is the associate justice who has jurisdiction over the 8th Circuit.

The NAACP appeal asks not only that the stay granted by the 8th Circuit Court of appeals be vacated but that an order by U.S. Dist. Judge Harry Lemley of Hope, Ark., allowing Little Rock a two-year breathing period before integration, be set aside too.

This would appear to be a sort of legal shortcut to get integration resumed at Little Rock as soon as possible.

An NAACP appeal from Judge Lemley's order resulted in a decision by the Court of Appeals Monday that the Little Rock School Board could not have the breather period. This opened the doors of Central High to Negroes for the new term.

But Thursday the Court of Appeals granted a stay of its order so that the school board could take the case to the Supreme Court.

APPELLATE PAPERS

Newsmen at the Supreme Court did not have an immediate opportunity to examine the appellate papers. Marshall said he had mailed copies of them to attorneys for the school board earlier in the day in an attempt to speed up the proceedings.

It was anticipated that Justice Whittaker will rule on the appeal personally, consulting on an informal basis as many of his associate justices as he can reach. Normal procedure calls for the Supreme Court clerk to advise counsel for the school board of Marshall's action and ask whether they want to oppose it. They undoubtedly will oppose it, so time will have to be allowed them to prepare an answer.

Whittaker could make a ruling on the basis of written briefs. Or he could request oral arguments by attorneys for both sides.

The legal papers filed by Marshall were sent via airmail Friday evening to Justice Whittaker in Los Angeles.

The clerk's office already has been in touch with the justice. It was learned that Whittaker directed that attorneys for the school board be notified promptly and given an opportunity to present their opposition. Whittaker specified that the school board's arguments should be in his hands by noon next Thursday.

SAME CHANCE

Should Whittaker allow Marshall to argue orally, attorneys for the school board would be given the same chance.

Marshall's petition said the right of the Negro students involved in the case to attend unsegregated schools has long been settled and that they have in fact attended unsegregated schools for one year.

The only issue in the case, Marshall contended, is whether public school officials are entitled under the circumstances to an order suspending the rights of the Negroes for any period of time.

"The court below has effectively decided this issue by issuing a stay," the petition said.

"If that stay is allowed to stand until Sept. 2, 1958, it will for all purposes constitute a final disposition of the only issue in this case . . . . the traditional function of a stay is to maintain the status quo existing before the commencement of the proceedings until the party whose legal status has been altered is given opportunity to appeal.

EXCLUDE PETITIONERS

"But the effect of the stay issued by the court below was to alter the status quo by excluding petitioners from the school they attended during the past year.

"Thus, the stay of mandate (by the Court of Appeals) is in the same category as the denial of petitioners' motion to stay his order. Consequently, this court has authority to stay the order issued by Judge Lemley and thereby maintain the status quo pending final decision by this court."

Marshall argued that if the stay order of the appeals court is permitted to stand and Judge Lemley's order remains in force, the Negroes' rights will be "effectively destroyed, the damage will be irreparable and the order of a federal court will in fact 'be whittled away.'"

Plainclothesman Blocks Photographer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—An armed plainclothesman Friday prevented an Associated Press photographer from taking pictures on the campus of Little Rock Central High School.

Griffith said the plainclothesman, with a .45-caliber pistol at his side, told him that he could only take pictures across the street from the big school.

"I asked him if he was a deputy sheriff," Griffith said. "He said [illegible] that he was with the school board."

High Tribunal Asked To Void Delay Order

Hope Is Given By Negro Group Of Quick Success

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 22 (AP)—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People moved in appeace today trying to force a reopening of Central High School to Negroes. A spokesman expressed every hope of success.

The school, focus of the nation's bitter integration crisis of a year ago, reopens Sept. 2. It now has appellate court permission to delay renewed integration of seven Negro students for at least 30 days—or well past the opening of the new term.

As registration on an all-white basis for the coming school term got under way during the day at Central, the NAACP asked the Supreme Court to vacate yesterday's 30-day breathing spell, granted to allow a high court review of the ticklish Little Rock integration situation.

The appeal was addressed specifically to Justice Charles Whittaker, a fledgling member of the high court who has jurisdiction over the Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

It was the Eighth Circuit that yesterday granted the 30-day stay. Thurgood Marshall, attorney for the NAACP, asked that the order be vacated, and with it an earlier order by an Arkansas Federal district judge setting the breathing spell at 2½ years. It was Marshall in Washington who sounded the hopeful note on behalf of the NAACP.

Whittaker, en route to the West Coast for a lawyers convention, was contacted in Denver during the day. He said under certain circumstances it was his understanding that a single justice may vacate the stay of a lower court. He did not in any way indicate whether he would do so.

The full Supreme Court is in recess until October. It could be called back into special session to act on the NAACP's request. Or Whittaker might undertake to settle the matter individually.

The seven remaining Negro pupils, who spent one hectic, historic school year under Federal troop protection, are expected to try to register again at Central, probably next week. The school board has said they will be turned away, as long as the 30-day breathing spell is in effect.

Gov. Orval Faubus, meanwhile, kept a watchful eye on the NAACP's latest court move. He kept the Arkansas state Legislature on a standby alert for a possible emergency session. There has been speculation that the Legislature might close Central High entirely to avoid another bayonet showdown with President Eisenhower.

Faubus said in a brief prepared statement:

"If the stay . . . is superseded by a judge (SIC) of the U. S. Supreme Court, the call will go out for a special session of the Legislature on Monday. If the stay is not superseded there is still a very good possibility of a special session to have certain measures acted upon by the Legislature . . ."

At least one legislator openly expressed fear that the NAACP legal moves might still bring a return of integration to Central High. Rep. Carroll Hollensworth, a Democrat, said:

"It now appears that there [illegible] be ways to end this breathing spell without much [illegible]. If that is true I think we should go ahead with the special session, perhaps not [illegible] Monday, but within the next 10 days."

NAACP Petitions Justice To Void Little Rock Delay

By ANTHONY LEWIS
(Copyright 1958 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—Justice Charles Evans Whittaker of the Supreme Court was asked Friday to take action ensuring the admission of Negro children when Little Rock Central High School reopens Sept. 2.

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel of the NAACP, filed an application at the Supreme Court. It asked Justice Whittaker, who is circuit justice for the eighth circuit, to do either or both of two things:

(1) Vacate the stay granted by the court of appeals for the eighth circuit Thursday suspending its own decision to reinstate Little Rock's integration program.

(2) Stay the June 21 decision of District Judge Harry J. Lemley postponing integration until 1961—a decision reversed by the court of appeals but still in effect because of that court's action in staying its own order.

NOW EN ROUTE

Justice Whittaker is now en route to Los Angeles to attend a meeting of the American Bar Assn. The Supreme Court Clerk's office mailed copies of the application to him Friday night by air mail special delivery.

The clerk's office, at Justice Whittaker's request, notified the Little Rock school board Friday that any papers opposing Marshall's move must be in the justice's hands by noon next Thursday in Los Angeles. The board is expected to file an opposition.

Marshall requested an opportunity to argue the case in person "at a time and place suitable" to Justice Whittaker's convenience. Under the applicable statutes, he could pass on the matter in Los Angeles or anywhere else.

VITAL ISSUE

The NAACP application argues centrally that the vital issue in Little Rock is whether the Negro children admitted last year will be in Central High School again as the new term starts.

As things stand, the application said, "despite an opinion of the court of appeals deciding the right of petitioners to continue in nonsegrated schools, petitioners will be relegated back to segregated schools for at least a year.

"Thus respondents (the school board) have effectively secured the relief they originally sought—a suspension of desegregation for an undetermined duration."

Marshall told reporters afterward that the children need not be excluded from Central High School for the entire year should they be out Sept. 2. He indicated he would seek immediate admission at the earliest date possible.

EARLY ENTRY

The application said, in effect, that a stay preventing the early entry of the Negroes into Central High School was as bad as a decision on the merits against the NAACP view. It noted that Judge Lemley had been asked to stay his own order but had refused on the ground that a stay would, in effect, negate the effect of his order.

The application quoted the language of the eighth circuit this week that "the time has not yet come . . . when an order of a federal court must be whittled away, watered down, or shamefully withdrawn in the face of violent and unlawful acts."

The application concluded:

"If the (eighth circuit) stay order is permitted to stand and Judge Lemley's order remains in force, petitioners' rights will be effectively destroyed, the damage will be irreparable and the order of a federal court will in fact 'be whittled away.'"

Marshall made the double-barrelled request of Justice Whittaker because of a time problem.

The eighth circuit decision reversing Judge Lemley will not take effect formally unless speeded up by that court, until Sept. 7. Thus even should Justice Whittaker vacate the eighth circuit stay, the Negro children might be excluded until the decision becomes official on that date.

Should Justice Whittaker stay Judge Lemley's order, however, the legal situation would immediately be clear for the admission of the Negro children.

It is also possible that it may legally be easier for Justice Whittaker to grant a stay of the Lemley order than to vacate the eighth circuit stay. Lawyers here Friday could find no precedent for a single justice vacating a court of appeals stay, but it is routine for one justice to stay lower court decisions.

The application cited a recent case in which the full Supreme Court vacated a stay with the result of putting integration orders into effect immediately. The case, decided in 1955, concerned Miss Autherine Lucy, whose attempt to enter the University of Alabama later caused violence.

A district judge had ordered Miss Lucy admitted, but he stayed his own order pending appeal. The court of appeals refused to remove the stay. An application to a single justice was referred to the full court, which quickly vacated the stay.

Justice Whittaker may confer with his colleagues by telephone about the case, which of course raises issues of tremendous importance. And he could refer the matter to the full Supreme Court for decision.

If it were referred to the full court, a decision would be unlikely before Oct. 6. That is when the Supreme Court, now in recess, is scheduled to open a new term.

The NAACP application emphasized some language used by the high court last June when it turned down a petition to bypass the court of appeals and review Judge Lemley's order itself. The Supreme Court said then:

"We have no doubt that the court of appeals will recognize the vital importance of the time element in this litigation, and that it will act upon the application for a stay or the appeal in ample time to permit arrangements to be made for the next school year."

NAACP Claims Community Opposition No Basis For Delay In Integration

ST. LOUIS, (AP) — Negroes appealing the suspension of racial integration at Central High School in Little Rock contended Saturday community opposition provides no legal basis for overturning a court-approved plan for integration.

This was stated in briefs filed in the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals here by attorney Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., and Thurgood Marshall of New York, chief counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

A three-judge court will hear their appeal Aug. 4 from a June 1 order of U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., which suspends integration at the high school until 1961.

The brief, received by mail, said Judge Lemley lacked constitutional power to suspend the Court of Appeals mandate approving the integration plan.

The brief said the sole purpose of the Lemley order was to obtain a "cooling-off period because of community opposition to whites and Negroes attending classes together.

Quoting from a 1936 Supreme Court decision in a Minnesota case, the brief said:

"Carried to its logical conclusion, this rule would result in civil authorities suppressing lawlessness by compelling surrender of intended victims to lawlessness.

"The banks could be closed and emptied of their cash to prevent bank robberies, the post office locked to prevent the mails being robbed, the citizens kept off the streets to prevent holdups, and a person accused of murder could be properly surrendered to the mob which threatened to attack the jail in which he was confind."

The Little Rock Decision

Birmingham News

The ruling of the Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals is bound to mean trouble. The court in a six-to-one judgment has reversed District Judge Lemley's wise decision to postpone any further Little Rock integration effort for two and a half years.

Birmingham Ala

This puts the situation almost immediately back into an explosive state.

The lone dissenter in the appeals ruling, Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner, offered the most realistic judicial approach to the situation. He was, of course, as much concerned with upholding law and order as any of the other members of the court. But he could not blind himself to reality in the Southern situation, and especially that at Little Rock. He found that the school authorities "have acted in good faith," as indeed they so demonstrably have. And it is clear that Judge Gardner believed that when even that school board which had tried to implement court orders changed its position to one of additional caution, calling for some additional delay, it was a local plea deserving of federal judicial respect.

What is to happen now no one can say. Whether the President might again use troops to try to press Negro children into Central High School in Little Rock is uncertain. One fervent hope can be that Mr. Eisenhower will fully understand that there can be no law and order in Little Rock in this explosive situation until it can be preserved by the local authorities themselves.

True order cannot be imposed by federal fiat or arms from Washington. Bayonets may hold back mobs, but they cannot bring peaceful integration to Little Rock schools.

It is a decision, then, which holds much of trouble for the near future. The court in our view would have acted wisely, would have been upholding the principle already set down in law, had it conceded more time in this troublous situation. Monday of this week may not be another "Black Monday," but it is certain that it was indeed another dark day for Arkansans of good will and knowledge of the human problem involved.

Court's Little Rock Decision Described As 'Tragic' Move

Houston Chronicle

Galveston, Tex.

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Court of Appeals decision overruling a district court and ordering resumption of integration at Little Rock Central High School was described as a tragic and unhappy one Monday by Arkansas' Democratic senators.

Sen. John L. McClellan told reporters:

June 8-9-58

"It is rather tragic that the Circuit Court of Appeals has wholly disregarded the welfare of both races, and the will of the people in overruling the decision of the district court.

P. 3 A

"It has substituted its judgment without exercising due respect for the equities and justice of the situation that prevails and the conditions that have been brought about in Little Rock, by reason, first, of the erroneous and unjust decision of the Supreme Court, and second, by the unwise, indiscreet and illegal actions that have been perpetrated against the Little Rock community."

Sen. J. William Fulbright, in a separate interview, declared:

"I deeply regret the court's decision. It presents the people of Arkansas with a very unhappy situation, and I am very unhappy about it."

Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) who represents the Little Rock district, said he hoped that a solution will be found.

"It seems to me," he said, "that under the 1955 decision the Supreme Court recognized the importance of allowing the judges closest to the situation the discretion of determining the time element.

"It is regrettable that the Court of Appeals overruled the findings in this case. It poses a difficult problem for the school board and the community leadership, but their resources are great and we can hope that a solution will be found."

Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga) called the court's decision unrealistic and unfortunate.

"The judges apparently felt that integration was much more important than education, despite the grim lesson of Little Rock that you can't have both there," Russell said.

"All of the wisdom of all of the judges involved cannot possibly provide education for the 2,000 students in a school occupied by troops."

Sen. Clifford Case (R-NJ), an advocate of civil rights legislation, said "I hope the law abiding citizens of Little Rock will give active support to those who now have the responsibility of carrying out the court's decision."

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif), commented that the appeals court's decision "points up more than ever the need for the President to announce to the country what his policy is going to be on enforcing the law of the land in Little Rock and everywhere else."

There was no immediate comment from the Department of Justice.

Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-SC) warned that the decision "could lead to trouble and bloodshed."

Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-SC) said it now appears that "judicial tyranny in this country is running rampant over local self-government" and added that he could not predict "what will happen next in Little Rock."

Victory for Faubus?

The Nation

Oct 7-5-58

For all that Judge Lemley's decision suspending integration in Central High School in Little Rock is shot through and through with absurdities, inconsistencies and non-sequiturs, it is by no means the "victory" for Governor Faubus and the segregationists that it has been made to appear. If it removes, as it may, the issue of segregation from the Arkansas gubernatorial primary on July 29, it could prove extremely helpful to the Governor's chief opponents, Judge Lee Ward and Chris E. Finkbeiner. If Faubus is to be defeated or forced into a run-off, attention must be focused on the miserable record which he is trying desperately to conceal by posing as the savior of white supremacy.

New York Times

More important, the very illogic of the decision points to the source of the trouble and suggests the remedy. Judge Lemley makes it quite clear that he was not influenced by evidence of lawlessness or "malevolent desires"; there was no attempt "to bomb the school or to burn it down." By clear inference, then, the source of the trouble lay in the inability of the school authorities to cope with an internal disciplinary problem which was aggravated by the federal Administration's failure to back up its original intervention. For example, the FBI has never released, nor has the Administration acted upon, the FBI report on the circumstances surrounding the disturbances last fall. No effort has been made to prosecute those who sought to obstruct the court's original desegregation decree; indeed, assurances were given by the Attorney General that no action was contemplated. Once federal troops were withdrawn, the National Guardsmen who replaced them refused to arrest trouble-makers and thereby encouraged a small hoodlum element in the student body to create disturbances. Naturally the school authorities were annoyed by the failure of the Administration to back up its decision to intervene.

Even so, the situation inside the school could hardly have been "intolerable": The Negro students, with one exception, completed the term and one of them graduated. In brief, the experiment succeeded despite the incompetence of the school authorities and the failure of both the state and federal governments to act in support of the court's original order. Judge Lemley's decision should be reversed, as it will be, on the basis of his own findings.

High Court Ruling On Little Rock Due

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29—The Supreme Court's response to the request for emergency review of the order suspending school integration in Little Rock will probably be made known tomorrow.

The court has indicated that it will adjourn tomorrow for the summer. It is expected that its final list of orders, posted by the clerk after the justices leave the bench for the last time this term, will give the answer on Little Rock.

Lawyers of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have asked the court to continue its term or hold a special summer session. The chances that the justices will agree to do so now appear slim.

If the court had wanted to take the Little Rock case on such an emergency basis, the belief is that it would have asked the Little Rock School Board last Thursday or Friday for a statement of its views. No such request to the school board has been made public.

Order Came 8 Days Ago

The order under attack by the N. A. A. C. P. was handed down eight days ago by District Judge Harry J. Lemley in Little Rock. It was on appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, in St. Louis, when the N. A. A. C. P. attorneys asked the Supreme Court to bypass the Eighth Circuit.

The case could go back to the Eighth Circuit in a number of ways, should the Supreme Court not agree to immediate review there.

If the high court formally denies the petition, the N. A. A. C. P. would be free to proceed in the Court of Appeals. The problem then would be getting that court, which has recessed for the summer, to hear the case before the beginning of the school term in September.

It is also possible—though less likely, in view of the grave issue—that the Supreme Court will ignore the N. A. A. C. P. petition, as one that came too near the end of its terms for action. In that case, the lawyers could withdraw it and proceed in the Court of Appeals.

In addition to the Little Rock matter, the Supreme Court has twenty-one cases that were argued and briefed during the term still awaiting decision before adjournment.

N. A. A. C. P. Case at Issue

One of the most important of these concerns the N. A. A. C. P. In fact, the decision of the case could go a long way toward determining the future of the organization in the hostile states of the South.

The case arose from efforts of Alabama to obtain a list of N. A. A. C. P. members. Rather than produce the list, in the course of a pending lawsuit, the N. A. A. C. P. stood in contempt. The Alabama Supreme Court then held that the organization had used an imporper method to seek review of this contempt citation.

If the Alabama ruling is upheld, the N. A. A. C. P. will be permanently enjoined from doing business in that state. The state has contended that its decision rejecting the N. A. A. C. P. review attempt as improper is purely procedural and hence not subject to Supreme Court supervision at all.

The case was argued orally before the high court last January.

The oldest argued case on the docket is one heard last Nov. 18. It tests the power of the President to dismiss a member of an independent, quasi-judicial Federal agency.

Myron Wiener, a member of the War Claims Commission, was dismissed by President Eisenhower for political reasons. He contends that, constitutionally, he could be removed only by the Congressional process of impeachment. The Justice Department regards the case as one of great importance for the organization of the Executive Branch.

Among the other cases is a group testing the right of California to withhold tax exemptions unless churches and veterans otherwise entitled to the exemptions first take loyalty oaths.

Another group may determine how far the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination protects persons who are questioned in state or local proceedings, rather than Federal investigations.

Two cases raise the question whether a state criminal suspect is constitutionally entitled to see a lawyer before he is questioned by the police. Two more will test whether California, whose law prohibits execution of insane persons, can leave the determination of sanity entirely up to the prison warden, without medical or judicial review.

It is possible, of course, that the court will not finish its work on all the argued cases before tomorrow but will decide to adjourn anyway. According to tradition, the undecided cases would then be put back on the docket for reargument next fall.

In addition to the argued cases, there is a long list of petitions asking the court to hear arguments next term on other cases.

One of these, at least, is of exceptional importance—the case of Girard College, a Philadelphia school established a century ago by the will of Stephen Girard for "white male orphans." The question is whether state involvement in the school subjects it to the Fourth Amendment's ban on racial discrimination.

McClellan Sees Opposition

WASHINGTON, June 29 (AP)—Senator John L. McClellan, Democratic of Arkansas, said today he did not believe a majority of the people of Arkansas would ever happily accept racial integration in their schools.

But, Mr. McClellan said, "they may have to accept it some day by force. They may have to tolerate it."

The Senator made the statement in a televised interview on the American Broadcasting Company's College News Conference after saying District Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., made a "sound and just decision" in ordering integration at Little Rock delayed for two and one half years.

M'CLELLAN RAISES LITTLE ROCK ISSUE

Tells Civil Rights Nominee He Hears Army 'Cased' School Before It Sent Troops

WASHINGTON, July 22 (AP)—The Senate Judiciary Committee was told today of reports that an Army General had "cased" Central High School in Little Rock five days before troops were ordered there to enforce a court order for the admission of Negro students.

Senator James O. Eastland, Mississippi Democrat who heads the committee, said he would have an investigation made of these reports, as urged by Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat of Arkansas.

The Judiciary Committee voted to request Attorney General William P. Rogers to furnish it with any memorandums in the Justice Department relating to President Eisenhower's order sending paratroopers to Little Rock last September.

Questioned at Hearing

These developments occurred at a committee hearing on President Eisenhower's nomination of W. Wilson White of Philadelphia to be an Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division.

Mr. White, whose nomination has been stalled for more than six months in the committee, refused again to say that troops would not be used in the future to enforce court orders for school integration at Little Rock or elsewhere.

Senator McClellan said he had received two telegrams, from persons whose names he withheld, telling him of reports that Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker, commander of the Little Rock military district, had looked over Central High five days in advance of the arrival of Army paratroopers.

Committee Does Not Act

WASHINGTON, July 22 (UPI)—The committee then recessed indefinitely without acting on Mr. White's nomination.

Mr. White, in four appearances before the committee, has been questioned closely by Southern members about his role in the Arkansas school case. He is serving under a recess appointment, and must be confirmed at this session of Congress or be out of the job.

As head of the Office of Legal Counsel, Mr. White directed research and preparation of papers under which the president sent Federal troops to Little Rock to enforce a Federal court order for integration at the school.

On Troops to Little Rock

At the outset of today's hearing, Senator McLellan told Mr. White he still had not provided a "categorical" answer to the question of whether troops might again be sent to Little Rock.

Mr. White stuck by his statement of last week that he did not think the "same circumstances" would arise again.

Senator McClellan also asked Mr. White about the report that the General had cased Central High School before Federal troops were sent there.

If this were true, Senator McClellan said, it would indicate that "this thing was all planned and plotted to humiliate the State of Arkansas" and serve as a warning to other Southern states.

Mr. White said he did not know of any such incident and was "practically certain that it did not occur." But Senator McClellan said he intended to pursue the matter.

CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL
SCHOOL BOARD GRANTED 30 DAYS BY THE 8th US CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS TO CARRY CASE TO SUPREME COURT

Appeals Court Grants Stay For Little Rock

NAACP Loses Its Bid For Immediate Order

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The Little Rock School Board Thursday was granted 30 days by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to carry its fight against resumption of integration to the Supreme Court.

The court's stay order came just three days after it had set aside the order of court denied a motion of attorneys U.S. Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., suspending for the Negro students to make integration in Little Rock's Central High School for 2½ years.

Immediately after the appeals court acted, Little Rock School Supt. Virgil Blossom announced that Central High School would open Sept. 2 "as an all-white high school."

Seven of the nine Negroes who attended Central High School last year had sought readmission. One was graduated, another expelled.

In New York, Thurgood Marshall, counsel for the NAACP, said the organization will appeal to the Supreme Court Friday to overrule the stay and order that Central High be opened on an integrated basis.

"We'll be working through the night," Marshall added.

It set out that if the appeal is made within the 30 days the stay order will remain in force until the Supreme Court acts.

At the same time, the appeals effective at once its mandate over ruling Judge Lemley. Under court rules a mandate usually takes 21 days to be issued.

Even as the appeals court acted, Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus in Little Rock stood firm on his call to Arkansas legislators to stand by for a possible call to deal with the integration situation.

Judge Gardner's order set Thursday for the beginning of the 30-day period.

Should the school board take the full 30 days the case would not even reach the Supreme Court before late September and the Supreme Court itself is in summer recess until Oct. 6. Other legal moves could take nearly another month.

The Supreme Court has heard no oral arguments in segregation cases since its 1954 decision calling for "all deliberate speed" in eliminating desegregation.

Judge Gardner said the seven members of the court had decided at the time they issued their decision that a stay should be granted if requested by the school board. The 90-year-old Gardner wrote the only dissent to the reversal.

The school board's motion for a stay had contended that as long as "grave questions" in the Little Rock case remained undecided by the Supreme Court, enforcement of integration would create "an increasingly intolerable situation."

Faubus last fall called out the Arkansas National Guard to keep the nine Negroes out of school. He said he did it to preserve peace but a district judge ordered him to stop interfering with integration at the high school.

Mob riots at the school followed and President Eisenhower dispatched paratroopers and nationalized the guardsmen to restore order. Integration was troop-enforced the rest of the year.

The stay order of the appeals court was only two paragraphs long. It was concurred in by all seven judges.

The appeals court acted quickly on the school board's request, filed only Thursday morning. The board's application followed by a day the opposing motion of attorneys for the Negro students.

The board had contended the stay should be granted so the Supreme Court could decide whether an order for school integration may be postponed upon a finding that its continuation might be contrary to public welfare.

NAACP Lauds Ike For Troops Pledge

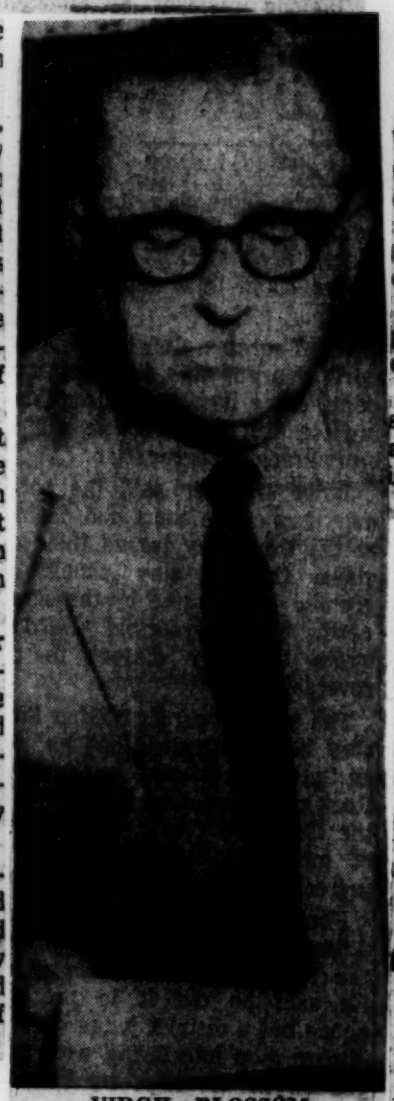
NEW YORK (AP)—Top officials of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People Thursday praised President Eisenhower for his press conference remarks about integration in Little Rock.

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, NAACP board chairman, and Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, both sent telegrams to the President lauding his declaration that "there can be no equivocation as to the responsibility of the federal government" in the event state and local authorities fail to protect citizens in the exercise of their constitutional rights.

Eisenhower made the statement Wednesday at a news conference in Washington in reference to an order of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, restoring integration to Little Rock's central high school.

Wilkins said in part: "I offer our sincere thanks for your statement in your press conference yesterday. You have heartened millions of Americans, irrespective of their views on school integration, who believe in orderly and lawful government."

In a telegram of congratulations, Tobias said he agreed thoroughly with the President and saw "no other course to follow that will uphold the judiciary and honor of the United States of America."



VIRGIL BLOSSOM
Hailed Decision

Central High 'All-White'

After Ruling

Advertiser

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Central High School, torn by rioting and surrounded by troops during the integration crisis last fall, will open Sept. 2 as "an all-white high school," Supt. Virgil Blossom said Thursday.

The school board was granted a court stay which means the high school can avoid integration until the U.S. Supreme Court rules on the issue.

The board must file its appeal within 30 days in order to make the stay effective but presumably could ask for time after that to perfect the briefs.

1. The 8th Circuit Court of Appeals grant a stay of its Monday order insisting on integration.

2. Gov. Orval Faubus tell the state's lawmakers to stand by for an emergency session of the Legislature.

3. The governor indicated that he will ask the lawmakers to close the school if President Eisenhower stations troops there as he did last fall. This possibility appeared remote, at least for a period of months.

Faubus, informed of the St. Louis appeals court's stay, still ordered aides to issue the standby call to the Legislature.

Faubus said late Thursday he would not make a decision until Friday about the session. "I didn't make my plans to call the session in haste and I am not going to call them off in haste," he said. But it was apparent that the likelihood of a session is now remote.

A veteran legislator, Carroll Hollensworth, commented, "I would think this removes the need for a special session and I don't think we will have one...I am making my plans not to attend a special session Monday."

least we can open the schools."

At a press conference just before the appeals court stay, Faubus indicated one of the bills he would submit to the Legislature would call for closing Central High School should the President station troops there.

"Likely one (bill) will deal with use of troops, either federal or state," Faubus said. He added that closing the school "has been suggested by a number of legislators and certainly that is one (bill) that is being considered."

His standby call for an emergency session indicated that he had not received the assurances he wanted at a meeting with the school board Wednesday night.

Earlier, he demanded that the board tell citizens whether its members are against or for integration, and what they plan to do to resist integration.

Supt. Blossom restated the board's position that it will continue to support U.S. Dist. Judge Harry Lemley's order delaying integration for 2½ years. It was Lemley's order that the appeals court had overturned last Monday.

The school board until late Thursday rushed preparation of an appeal to the Supreme Court. It hoped to have it in court hands within nine days. Now, under the appeals court ruling, the board will have 30 days to appeal.

School Case

May Continue For Months

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under the usual formula, it is probable that several months will elapse before the Little Rock integration litigation finally is disposed of by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals Thursday granted the Little Rock School Board's petition to appeal to the Supreme Court. The Circuit Court earlier had overruled a U.S. District Court order delaying integration at Little Rock's Central High School for 2½ years. The board appealed this ruling which resulted in Thursday's grant of a stay by the Circuit Court of integration until the appeal could be carried to the Supreme Court.

In such appeals, a period of months is allowed in which to petition for a review.

Should the board take the full three months, the case would not even reach the Supreme Court until well after mid-November.

Attorneys for Negroes involved in the litigation would have another 30 days in which to answer the petition. They, of course could file promptly, thereby shortening the time, or even waive the right to file an answer.

And when the Supreme Court acts, the losing side has 25 days to ask for reconsideration. It usually is 25 days after this petition is disposed of before the high court's mandate goes out. This is formal notice to the Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals, in turn, must send a similar notification to U.S. District Court in Little Rock.

Since its decision of May 17, 1954, holding public school segregation is unconstitutional, and its follow-up decision a year later calling for "all deliberate speed" in bringing about desegregation, the Supreme Court has heard no oral arguments in segregation cases.

All have been disposed of in orders, without even written opinions.

The apparent result of the stay is that seven Negro pupils seeking readmission to the high school at the resumption of classes Sept. 2, will have to wait until the Supreme Court acts.

The 8th Circuit Court also guaranteed the school board 30 days to take its fight against resumption of integration to the Supreme Court.

The 30-day appeal period begins Thursday. Normally there is a three-month period for appeal.

Ike Asserts He'll Follow Little Rock Pattern

GIs to Support Court Orders On Integration

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—President Eisenhower said today he deplores the use of federal troops to carry out federal court orders in civil rights cases.

But he told his news conference the fundamental rights of all Americans would be endangered by any successful defiance of court orders.

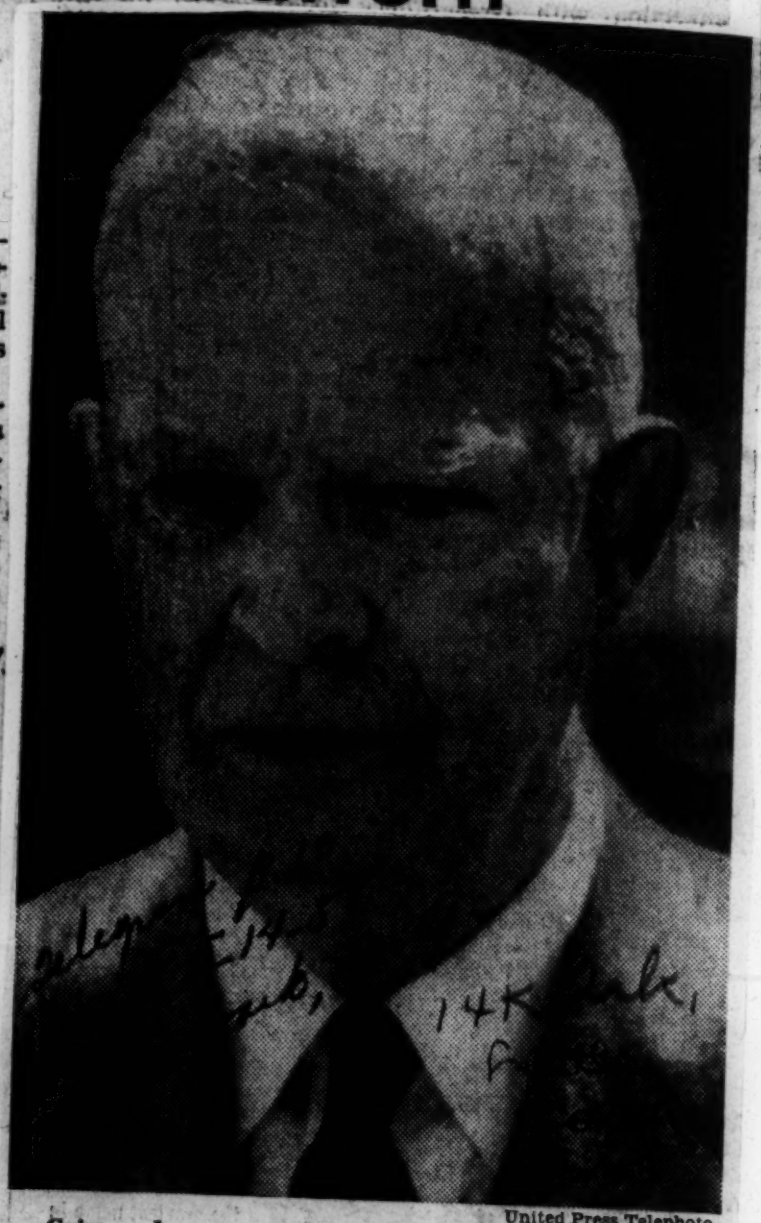
Gen. Eisenhower made these comments in response to questions concerning his attitude toward recent school integration developments in Virginia and a statement by Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida in a magazine article that Gov. Collins supports continued segregation in that state.

The President said he intends to follow "the Little Rock pattern" if he encounters further defiance of court orders in integration matters.

He said he didn't send troops to Little Rock because of some statement by a governor. He said there had been mob interference with the execution of a court order and then the statement by Gov. Orval Faubus that he would not intervene to uphold the court's order.

As an example, Gen. Eisenhower said a sheriff might arrest a person in a town that was inflamed against this particular person. He said if a federal judge issued a writ of habeas corpus and the governor wouldn't intervene to enforce it and the marshal was powerless to do so, what was the President going to do?

"You people can answer for yourselves," Gen. Eisenhower said, adding that he has answered for himself.



United Press Telephoto.

Grim and angry over treatment, Vice President Richard M. Nixon received in South America, President Eisenhower is shown as he started for his news conference today.

He dismissed as undesirable any secret investigation of conditions in Virginia or any other state faced with desegregation orders in its schools. A reporter asked if the FBI is making any secret investigations.

Gen. Eisenhower said he doesn't believe you can have any Gestapo secret police go into a state and worm out of the people any evil intentions they may have.

Everything we say or do, the President said, should be in support of the law of the land as it is interpreted by the Supreme Court, whether we agree with the interpretation or not.

Gen. Eisenhower was told that Sen. James Eastland (D., Miss.) has said he expects to be re-elected on the basis of halting the administration's civil rights program. In this connection a reporter wanted to know what the President is going to do about the long delay in action by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which Sen. Eastland heads, on the nomination of W. Wilson White to be assistant attorney general in charge of civil rights enforcement.

The President said that is a difficult question because he hasn't yet found any way in which to speed up consideration of a nomination.

The Troops In Little Rock

Many Hold President Has No Right To Use Forces In Such A Manner

BY DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON

AMERICANS RIGHTLY BOAST that theirs is "a government of laws—not of men." When a dispute arises as to whether presidential powers are lawfully exercised, it is of the utmost importance that both sides of the controversy be presented to the public so that the citizens may know whether they are being governed by the arbitrary action of the executive branch of the government or by rules of law.

The White House has just made public a statement announcing that federalized troops will be withdrawn from Central High School at Little Rock, Ark., on May 28 at the end of the present school term. The statement is of historic importance because nothing like it has ever been issued before and, in the view of many prominent lawyers throughout the country, the position taken by the federal government in ordering the troops sent in was in violation of the Constitution and the laws of Congress.

THE STATEMENT, in full text, says:

"Since last September federal government has stationed soldiers at the Little Rock high school to prevent obstruction of the orders of the United States District Court.

"Since the Summer recess starts at the Central High School on May 28, and since there will be no further present need for guardsmen, I have directed that they be released on May 29.

"Following that date I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the Federal Court are not obstructed. The faithful execution of this responsibility will make it unnecessary far the federal government to act further to preserve the integrity of our judicial processes."

BUT, AS VARIOUS ARTICLES in the American Bar Association journal and pronouncements by constitutional lawyers in the North as well as in the South have since pointed out, there is no law that authorizes the President of the United States to use troops to enforce court decrees. The power to request federal troops to suppress disorder or insurrection devolves on the state authorities.

Also, a year before the Little Rock episode, President Eisenhower said to his press conference at the White House apropos of the possible use of federal troops in a Texas school incident:

"Now, I assume that if that marshal is not able to carry it (an order of the Federal Court) out by himself, he has got the right to deputize any number of deputy marshals to help him carry it out. I really don't know what the next step is. I do know this: In a place of general disorder, the federal government is not allowed to go into any state unless called upon by the governor, who must show that the governor is unable with the means at his disposal to preserve order. I believe it is called a Posse Comitatus Act of 1882—and I am now going back to my staff school of 1925—and that is the thing that keeps the federal government from just going around where he pleases to carry out police duties."

BUT WHEN FEDERAL troops were ordered to Little Rock in September, 1957, the White House statement cited certain federal statutes as authorizing the action. None of these is applicable, because they refer to obstructions of "the laws of the United States." Charles J. Bloch, an eminent lawyer of Macon, Ga., in his recently published book "States' Rights—the Law of the Land," wrote as follows: "However much entitled to respect a decree of a federal court may be, it is not a law of the United States." He cited a specific decision on that point by the Supreme Court of the United States—"U. S. vs. Cooper Corporation" — which says the same thing.

TO ENFORCE JUDICIAL DECREES, the first step is to deputize private citizens as assistant U. S. marshals. Thousands of them can be deputized for that purpose, and it is customary for citizens to accept such duty when asked by the federal government. No such step was taken at the time of the disturbance at the high school at Little Rock, in September, 1957, and no such step has been taken in the several months that have since elapsed. There have been episodes in the past where federal troops have been sent into states to quell disturbances, but in every instance these have been marked by the subsequent cooperation of state authorities or the use of U. S. marshals and deputies.

More than $4,500,000 of federal funds for the maintenance of the troops has been spent in the Little Rock episode. Unfortunately, no challenge as to the proper use of such funds can be made by any taxpayer under rulings laid down by the Supreme Court. So the entire affair can be argued only in the court of public opinion in the hope that never again will the executive branch of the government send federal troops to quell a local disturbance except at the request of the state.

For if the precedent becomes valid, federal troops may be used at any time to put down strikes and prevent violence in labor disputes, and on other occasions of local rioting, without the consent of state authorities. There have been many instances of terror recently inside the public schools in various Northern cities which, if the Little Rock precedent were followed, would justify the use of federal troops.—©

INTEGRATION:

Troops and Politicians

When Little Rock learned that the Arkansas National Guard will be withdrawn from Central High School the day after school closes, the news caused barely a ripple. From Little Rock, NEWSWEEK's William A. Emerson Jr. reports why:

"All of us had already assumed the troops would be withdrawn when school is out," said Harry S. Ashmore, ex tive editor of The Arkansas Ga page 64). "It would be kind of keep them standing around an empty school all summer."

Ashmore's easygoing view of the troop movement accurately reflected the general attitude in Arkansas. There, in the state that erupted in violence school opened eight months a public attention had been drawn away from the Army to two new developments:

▶An election for governor in which the segregation conflict is partly obscured by other local issues.

▶A new Federal court case that may determine whether integration of the public schools in Arkansas stops where it is, or is forced ahead.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, now running hard for a third term, is rated ahead in the election race in spite of a strong anti-third-term tradition. Faubus has also lost many votes because he sponsored a tax increase in the 1957 legislature, something he said he would never do. His principal opponent, Judge Lee Ward, is also an avowed segregationist, but he is pledged to uphold "law and order"—he tells voters he would obey Federal rulings. Some Arkansans think Faubus upset law and order and might again. In his campaign speeches Ward blames Governor Faubus for the Federal "invasion" of Little Rock, and many voters seem to be listening to him. Faubus, however, hasn't budged from his stand.

What's ahead for Arkansas? A hot political fight, with Faubus a probable, but not a sure, winner. Barring some unexpected development, it is expected that Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley will, sometime this summer, turn down the Little Rock school board's request for a delay on integrating. Thus the opening of school will not resolve the issue of integration in tle Rock.

Troops to End Little Rock Duty

WASHINGTON, May 8 (AP) —President Eisenhower today ordered the withdrawal, at least for the summer recess, of all Federal troops stationed in Little Rock to enforce school segregation.

About 400 are still on duty at the city's Central High School, scene last September of violent outbreaks following the entry of nine Negroes into the formerly all-white school.

Mr. Eisenhower indicated in his withdrawal announcement that whether the troops will return will depend on whether State and local authorities support Federal court orders for integration.

The President's press secretary, James C. Hagerty, was asked whether he could say that troops would not be sent back. He refused to go beyond the President's statement, but added: "I think it is quite clear where the responsibility lies. We will just have to wait and see."

Little Rock Guard To Leave May 29

Ike Orders Pullout Of Troops at Close Of High School Term

By the United Press.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—President Eisenhower today ordered withdrawal May 29 of federalized National Guard troops still remaining at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

The President's order was phoned by Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker to Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, commanding officer at Little Rock. The troops have been stationed at Central High to enforce a court order for racial integration.

Capt. James L. Smith, a spokesman for the Arkansas Military District, said in Little Rock he presumes President Eisenhower's order means the troops will be de-federalized. Capt. Smith said the order affects about 420 guardsmen who were federalized—taken out from under state control and put under federal control—last September.

Gen. Walker said only that Gen. Eisenhower's orders will be carried out as "indicated."

The President's statement:

"Since last September, the federal government has stationed soldiers at the Little Rock High School to prevent abstruction of the orders of the U.S. District Court.

"Since the summer recess starts at the Central High School on May 28, and since there will be no further present need for guardsmen, I have directed that they be released on May 29.

"Following that date, I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the federal court are not obstructed. The faithful execution of this responsibility will make it unnecessary for the federal government to act further to preserve the integrity of our judicial processes."

Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said that, as far as he knew, there had been no consultations between the President and other administration officials and Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas in advance of today's order.

ORDER TROOPS HOME AFTER SCHOOL ENDS

Little Rock Duty Cost Millions

BY WALTER TROHAN
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, May 8—President Eisenhower today ordered withdrawal of federalized national guard troops from Central High school at Little Rock, Ark., on May 29, the day after the current school year ends.

In a statement Mr. Eisenhower expressed the hope that it will be unnecessary to return the guardsmen, in federal service, at the beginning of the next school year.

About 400 on Duty

About 400 officers and men of the Arkansas national guard still are in federal service in connection with the integration controversy which stirred the nation last fall. Assistant Adj. Gen. William C. Page said at Little Rock the troops will be returned automatically to the state guard. At the peak of the dispute 10,500 guardsmen and 1,000 regular army paratroopers were on duty.

Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, who had called the guard out to "preserve law and order" by preventing nine Negro students from attending the high school, was not consulted by federal officials on the withdrawal, the White House said.

At Little Rock, Faubus said he would not "bet any money" the soldiers will be withdrawn May 29 as ordered.

On Duty Since Sept. 24

"The withdrawal of federal troops from Central High school, if carried out, will mark the end of a tragic occurence in the history of Arkansas and the Republic of which it is part," he said.

May 28 is the last day of classes at Central High school as well as other schools in Little Rock. Graduation exercises are to be held in the school May 27.

The federal government has had troops on duty at the high school since last Sept. 24. For months the White House has been considering ways of withdrawing the troops, which have cost more than 4½ million dollars to maintain there. The close of the school year was determined as the best time for withdrawal without running the risk of incidents. No Negro students are expected to attend the high school's summer session.

Under the President's order of Sept. 24, 1,000 paratroopers from the 101st airborne were sent to keep order at Central High school and 10,500 Arkansas guardsmen were federalized. This meant that the guardsmen were paid by the federal government.

By Nov. 27 the regular army forces had been withdrawn and the number of guard troops reduced to 950 men in a series of four reductions. On Dec. 18 the federalized guardsmen were reduced to 432 officers and men.

In a statement accompanying the withdrawal order, Mr. Eisenhower said:

"Since last September, the federal government has stationed soldiers at the Little Rock High school to prevent obstruction of the orders of the United States District court.

No Further Need

"Since the summer recess starts at the Central High school on May 28, and since there will be no further present need for guardsmen, I have directed that they be released on May 29.

"Following that date, I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the federal court are not obstructed. The faithful execution of this responsibility will make it unnecessary for the federal government to act further to preserve the integrity of our judicial processes."

At Little Rock Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and a spokesman for the Negro students attending Central High, said she had no comment on the President's order.

Mrs. Bates said she didn't want to comment on the troop withdrawal order "because everytime I say something, rocks are thrown at my house."

She said rocks had been hurled at her residence three times in the past week.

Mrs. Bates said a barrage of rocks was thrown on her front porch last night and a window was broken. She reported that incident to police but said she didn't bother to tell them about similar rock throwings Tuesday night and last Saturday night.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
BRIEF WRITTEN AUTHORIZING TROOPS
ATTORNEY GENERAL W. WILSON WHITE

W. WILSON WHITE
Prepared Brief

White Admits Writing Brief On Troop Use

By Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—Assistant Attorney General W. Wilson White said today he was ordered by former Attorney General Herbert Brownell to produce a brief spelling out authority for use of federal troops to enforce integration at Little Rock.

But White told Chairman James O. Eastland (D.-Miss.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee and Sen. Olin D. Johnston, a member, that he did not remember the exact words of Brownell's order. He refused to say whether Brownell or President Eisenhower originated the order he received.

The question came up as the Judiciary Committee continued hearings on Mr. Eisenhower's nomination of White to head the new Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department. At the time the Little Rock issue came to a head, he was legal counsel for the department.

IN FOR TROUBLE

As today's hearing developed, some indication appeared that White may be in for more trouble than had been anticipated. It had been expected that four Southern members of the committe would question him extensively and seize any opportunity to delay action on the nomination.

But today, one Republican member of the committee joined in the rough questioning of White and an ardent pro-civil rights Democrat joined Sen. John L. McClellan (D.-Ark.) in requesting that consideration of the nomination be indefinitely delayed in order that he could be questioned in more detail later.

Hennings, who had interpolated a few questions of his own in this morning's examination of White by anti-civil rights Southerners, did not say what he wanted to question him about later. But his delaying action came as a surprise.

WANTS TO KNOW

McClellan, in also asking delay, said he wanted to find out from White when "military occupation of my state" will end. White, in answer to earlier questions, had said that he does not know when Federal troops will be withdrawn from Little Rock, nor whether they will be returned there in the next school year.

Johnston said bluntly during the hearing that White's nomination should not be confirmed.

"If we let this get by," he said, "then the president and the Federal government can take over everything and the states will be left with no powers or rights at all."

He added he was seeking to protect states and individual rights, and would feel the same way if no racial issue were involved.

IS SUFFICIENT

He said the fact that White had advised the President to take an "unconstitutional" action in sending troops to Little Rock was sufficient to demonstrate that he was unfit for the post of assistant attorney general.

In answer to questions from Johnston, White conceded there is no statutory authority under which the President can enforce a court order, but he said it was proper for the President to use troops to assure the "existence and function" of the court.

Sen. William Langer (R.-N.D.), who supported the legislation creating the civil rights division White would head, asked him roughly "what business did the President have sticking his nose into the Little Rock matter?"

IKE'S OPINION

When White replied that it was "the opinion of the President as to what should be done," Langer retorted, "then you think the president can go into any state and just take over on his own opinion."

White then said the President's action was based on statutes used by President Cleveland to suppress disorders in Chicago during a labor strike, which caused Johnston to demand that the Cleveland proclamation be made a part of the record to show there was no similarity between the Chicago and Little Rock cases.

In the Chicago strike, United States mails were being delayed and federal statutes violated, Johnston said, adding that, regardless, "two wrongs would not make a right."

He asked White to put into the record any cases since 1877 where a President used troops in the manner they were used at Chicago.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D.-N.C.) put into the record a newspaper report to the effect that Edgar Eisenhower, brother of the President, had been critical of the use of troops at Little Rock and had said the President had had "poor advice" in the matter.

Ervin, continuing his questioning of White, agreed. And he blamed White for the poor advice, insisting that the President's action was unconstitutional.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25. — W. Wilson White, President Eisenhower's nominee to head the Justice Department's new Civil Rights Division, testified Tuesday the President was justified in sending troops to Little Rock and would be justified in using them again if a similar situation developed.

The 52-year-old Philadelphia lawyer, who would head the Government's new machinery for enforcing civil rights laws and court decisions, outlined his views at a confirmation hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Peppered With Questions

Committee members peppered him with questions, as they did at an earlier hearing Feb. 4, and again deferred action on the nomination.

At the earlier hearing, Mr. White testified it was his Office of Legal Counsel in the Justice Department that advised the President he had authority to use troops at Little Rock.

Asked to name his aides at the time the advice was formulated, he listed several but did not include J. Smith Henley, formerly of Harrison, Ark., and chief legal adviser of Mr. White's office. Mr. Henley is the President's nominee for Federal judge of the Little Rock-Eastern Arkansas District.

Challenged By Southerners

He said he knew of no plans for removing the troops from Little Rock. And he asserted he doesn't know whether they will return with the opening of the next school term in September.

He insisted the troops weren't sent to Little Rock to enforce school integration, but to maintain law and order. Promptly challenged by Senators James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) and Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D., N.C.), he denied this was "hair-splitting."

He also denied Little Rock was being "occupied." But Senator Ervin declared, "It's an occupation just as much as Russia occupying Hungary, though to a lesser degree."

Senator William Langer (R., N. D.), who, as Governor of North Dakota once was threatened with the use of Federal troops by the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, led the hostile questioning.

He drew from Mr. White the admission that neither the Federal judge nor the United States marshal at Little Rock were consulted about the use of troops. Former Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann, according to Mr. White's previous testimony, was the only local official who requested troops.

'Executive Decision'

Senator Langer wanted to know why a corps of deputy marshals wasn't used. He insisted this would have been the lawful way to cope wasn't with the disturbances.

Mr. White said it was a matter of "executive decision." And he went on to argue that the President has broad, unilateral powers to use troops to enforce law and order.

"The President's responsibility and duty to use troops arises when there is a Federal court order and the form of mob violence has arisen to where, in the President's judgment, there is no other way to maintain law and order," he asserted.

He cited as his only precedent former President Grover Cleveland's use of troops to quell rioting in the bloody Pullman strike in Chicago in 1894. However, he conceded under questioning that in this instance there was interference with the United States mails and interstate commerce.

Says 'Duty Inescapable'

Senator Eastland said Mr. White's interpretation of the Constitution and laws rendered meaningless the requirement that troops may not be sent into a state until they have been requested by the governor or state legislature.

"Do you think the President did right in sending troops to Little Rock?" Senator Olin D. Johnson (D., S.C.) asked.

"I think when the President said his duty was inescapable, it was," Mr. White replied.

Discussing the resistence to integration at Little Rock, Mr. White said he "wondered" if the people of Little Rock actually were opposed to it.

"Don't you know?" Senator Johnson asked. "What are the facts?"

"I don't know, but I wonder," Mr. White said.

"You know," Senator Eastland interjected, "you can't act on what you wonder. You must act on the facts."

Little Rock School Board Told To Prove Relief Need

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 7-29-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Little Rock School Board must prove that a suspension of racial integration at Central High School here is needed before such relief will be granted, an Arkansas federal judge said Monday.

U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley of Texarkana, declaring "the federal courts are not school boards," tentatively set June 2 for a full airing of the racial situation at the school where eight Negroes attend classes with some 2,000 white students.

The Negro children, since last September when anti - integration riots erupted outside the school, have been under protection of federal troops.

Lemley took over the integration case from U.S. District Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D. Both were assigned jurisdiction temporarily because of a vacancy on the bench of the Eastern District of Arkansas.

The school board on Feb. 20 petitioned the court to set aside Davies order of Sept. 3 directing that desegregation under a previously court-approved gradual plan be commenced forthwith.

Davies ruled after school board attorneys asked for an opinion in light of Gov. Orval Faubus' action cordoning the school with National Guardsmen who denied the Negroes entry.

Lemley Monday noted that Davies' Sept. 3 order was the first specifically directing the immediate start of integration.

He said, too, that the plan, approved in 1956 by U.S. District Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith, was that of the school board and not the federal court.

Wayne Upton, president of the school board, said later that the board would follow a Lemley suggestion that its petition be amended to specify whether a moratorium or a cooling off period is sought and to specify the length of postponement it wants.

Lemley said he would grant a stay of integration only if the school board could prove its allegations that a small group of students encouraged by adults are creating almost daily disturbances at the school; that pupil, teacher and parent unrest exists; and that educational standards are being destroyed.

Thurgood Marshal of New York, chief legal counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, was one of the attorneys opposing the school board in court Monday. He declined comment on Lemley's statement as did Mrs. L. C. Bates of Little Rock, Arkansas NAACP president.

Faubus, asked about it later, also declined comment.

Little Rock School Ruling May Bring New Litigation

From The Commercial Appeal, Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 28.—Gov. Orval Faubus had no comment Monday on dismissal of a suit on the Central High integration dispute in which he figured, but a Little Rock attorney said he thought he saw "an opening for new litigation."

Kenneth Coffelt, the attorney, said he probably will file new court suits this week in state courts as a result of dismissal of a suit brought by Mrs. Margaret Jackson, whom he represented.

Mrs. Jackson, an official of the Mothers League of Central High, had challenged the right of President Eisenhower to send troops here.

Mr. Coffelt said as he understood the Court of Appeals ruling in St. Louis, the court didn't rule on the constitutional question involved, relating to presidential powers. However, he said some of the wording of the ruling raised new legal angles which could be explored further.

Copy of Ruling Awaited

He said he will probably receive a copy of the ruling Tuesday, at which time he will start preparing new court filings.

The St. Louis court overruled Governor Faubus' contentions that a Federal District Court was without jurisdiction to question him on his role in the Central High controversy. The Governor also had raised the question that Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N. D., should have excused himself from the case.

The Governor said he would have no comment at least until after he had seen a written copy of the ruling.

His attorney—Tom Harper of Fort Smith—said the dismissal would be appealed to the United States Supreme Court. Mr. Coffelt, however, said he didn't plan to appeal the case in which Mrs. Jackson was involved.

Trouble Reports Denied

Meanwhile, "Federalized" National Guardsmen again were on duty at Central High Monday, with no indications when they are to be released from guard duty.

Military spokesmen revealed Friday the Guardsmen had been pulled out of the school a few times in recent weeks, apparently to see what would happen if pulled out entirely.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said they were back at the school "as usual" Monday, and that conditions had been quiet in the past few weeks.

Newsmen heard reports that student disorders had resumed again Monday, but Mr. Blossom said no incidents had occurred.

Faubus Is Rebuffed; Plans New Appeal

ST. LOUIS, April 28.—(AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas Monday lost in the Federal Court of Appeals his fight in the Little Rock integration dispute but planned an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

The court censured the Governor for calling out National Guard troops to keep nine Negro children out of Central High School there last fall.

If permitted to steand, the court said, such a course could lead only to "a complete breakdown of government.

The Appellate Court also rejected appeals in two parallel cases in which the Federal Government's use of troops to enforce integration was challenged.

The racial controversy drew international attention last fall, and the Arkansas Governor became the storm center when school authorities sent the Negroes home in the fact of mob action.

Governor Faubus withdrew the Arkansas National Guardsmen under the Federal Court injunction. The Negro children were slipped into the school by a side entrance but were sent home the same day when whites rioted outside the building.

Russell Says South Won at Little Rock

Constitution
Atlanta Ga.

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

SWAINSBORO — Sen. Russell said Friday the Eisenhower administration is in such a jam over Little Rock that it will go slow in the future about calling out troops to enforce a desegregation decree.

Georgia's senior senator declared that in the long run Little Rock will help the South's fight to restore constitutional government and guarantee the rights of the states.

Addressing a throng of 15,000 at the annual Pine Tree Festival here, Russell said President Eisenhower "was led into the bushes" by former Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell and persuaded to send armed troops to uphold the school integration order at Little Rock.

"As Commander in Chief he got the troops into Little Rock all right, but the whole administration is going crazy trying to figure out how to get them out," Russell said.

He added it will "be a long time" before the President repeats his Little Rock action.

Russell, the acknowledged leader of Southern forces in the Senate, accused liberals in both national parties of "making a political football out of the South with their so-called civil rights proposal."

Russell said the legislation liberals propose amounts to "civil wrongs" rather than civil rights. Referring to the bill first proposed during the previous session of Congress, Russell said:

"It would be just as logical to call a polecat a country ham as to call that bill a civil rights bill."

Congress passed a greatly watered-down civil rights bill last year after the Southern bloc in the Senate succeeded in eliminating many of its most drastic features.

Russell cited the successful fight to water down the bill as "the best job we've done in the Senate in 100 years."

He said there are other signs appearing that the South is making some headway in its fight for "constitutional government."

He cited approval by the Senate Judiciary Committee last week of a bill to curtail the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

"If we can pass this law, we will be on the road to getting the Supreme Court back to judging," he said. Russell ripped into the Supreme Court justices as "political opportunists and dreamers." He said some of the court's decisions are just as unconstitutional as would be a decision "that there could be no religious freedom and that everybody would have to belong to the same church."

NAACP CHARTS NEW MIX TRY IN LITTLE ROCK

DETROIT (AP) — A representative of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said Friday night the association hopes to extend school integration in Little Rock, Ark., next fall.

Daisey Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP Conference, told a news conference her group hopes to get Negro students into two additional Little Rock high schools. Eight Negro students now are attending Little Rock's Central High School.

Daisey Bates said a plan to enroll Negro children in Hall High School and Technical High School hinges on a federal court decision which is scheduled to be handed down June 2.

She said the Little Rock school board recently appealed to Federal Court in Little Rock for a delay in school integration.

If the court finds against the school board, she said, then efforts will be made this fall to enroll Negroes in the now all-white schools.

3 Pulitzer Prizes Are Awarded For Little Rock Crisis Coverage

NEW YORK (AP)—Coverage of the explosive integration crisis at Little Rock's Central High School won three separate 1958 Pulitzer Prizes in journalism Monday.

They went to the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette for meritorious public service, the newspaper's executive editor, Harry S. Ashmore, for editorial writing, and Associated Press correspondent Relman (Pat) Morin for his eyewitness account of violence outside the school Sept. 23.

Morin, a Pulitzer Prize winner in 1951, was one of two winners this year for national reporting. The other was Clark Mollenhoff of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, who was cited for his investigation of labor racketeering.

Mollenhoff also is Washington correspondent of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune.

In the case of the Arkansas Gazette, it marked the first time a newspaper captured the public editors was winning the editorial prize for the same news event. Separate citation lauded the newspaper and its editor for objectivity in the face of mounting public tension.

The 1958 fiction award went to James Agee's novel, "A Death in the Family." It deals with a Southern family's reaction to the death of a beloved father. It was completed by Agee before his death in 1955.

The annual drama award went to "Look Homeward, Angel," Ketti Frings' adaption of the late Thomas Wolfe's autobiographical novel of the same name. It has been a Broadway hit since its opening last Nov. 28.

It was the 41st annual award of prizes established by the late publisher, Joseph Pulitzer. They are made annually by the trustees of Columbia University on recommendation of the Advisory Board on the Pulitzer Prizes.

The public service newspaper award consists of a gold medal. All other journalistic awards carry a $1,000 prize. The art awards are $500 each.

Other press awards included:

The Fargo (N.D.) Forum, for local reporting under pressure of edition time in its news and picture coverage of a tornado that struck that city the night of last June 20.

George Beveridge, 36, a reporter for the Washington (D.C.) Evening Star, for local reporting without edition time pressure. He was cited for a series of eight Sunday articles on urban development problems in the nation's capital.

The New York Times for international reporting. It was the first time a newspaper staff had been collectively honored in this category. The award lauded the Times for distinguished coverage of foreign news.

Bruce M. Shanks of the Buffalo (N.Y.) Evening News, in cartooning, for his Aug. 10 cartoon depicting the dilemma faced by members of some labor unions with racketeers among their leadership. It was entitled "The Thinker."

LIPPMAN CITED

Walter Lippmann, columnist of the New York Herald Tribune, received a special citation for "wisdom, perception and high sense of responsibility with which he has commented for many years on national and international affairs."

History—"Banks and Politics in America—From the Revolution to the Civil War," by Bray Hammond of Thetford Center, Vt., 71-year-old retired assistant secretary of the Federal Reserve Board.

BIOGRAPHY AWARD

Biography — "George Washington," six volumes of which were written by Douglas Southall Freeman before his death in 1953, the remaining volume written afterwards by John Alexander Carroll and Mary Wells Ashworth Freeman won a similar prize in 1935. His associates, Carroll and Mrs. Ashowrth, were commissioned to complete the biography. However, the $500 prize will go to Freeman's estate.

Poetry—"Promises: Poems 1954-1956," by Robert Penn Warren, who won a Pulitzer Prize in fiction in 1947. His poetry has been described as "a kind of rough balladry."

Music—Samuel Barber, for the score of his first opera, "Vanessa." Twice winner of a Pulitzer music scholarship, Barber became the first scholarship holder to win the music prize. He is 48.

Little Rock Case Opens Again Today

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The lengthy and bitter Little Rock integration case will be reopened in U.S. District Court here Monday under an Arkansas judge.

Lemley, a native of Virginia, has spent more than a week studying court records in the case which arose last fall when integration began at Central High School here.

At issue is a Little Rock School Board petition asking for a postponement of integration at the school. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has asked that the petition be denied.

Lemley indicated that Monday he will merely outline procedure to follow in reaching a decision. That would mean future hearings.

Eight Negroes and about 1,500 whites now attend Central High.

Three Judges Rule In Favor Of Integration

ST LOUIS (Special) - The United States Court of Appeals in Saint Louis has ruled in favor of public school integration in Little Rock, Ark. Three federal judges dismissed Monday an appeal made by Governor Orval Faubus who was seeking an injunction to remove eight Negroes who presently are attending the previously all white Central High School in Little Rock.

Last September when the Negro students appeared on the campus to enroll, Faubus ordered out the Arkansas National Guard and gave instructions to prevent any integration movement in the city. But President Eisenhower Federalized the National Guard, issuing new orders, this time to preserve integration at Central High School instead of preventing it.

The Appeals Court held that a state could not use forces to suppress rights which is the duty of the state to defend.

Troops Will Leave Little Rock May 29

Ike Orders Withdrawal For Summer

By J. W. DAVIS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower has ordered the withdrawal, at least for the summer recess, of all federal troops stationed in Little Rock to enforce school segregation.

About 400 are still on duty at the city's Central High School, scene last September of violent outbreaks after the entry of nine Negroes into the formerly all-white school.

Eisenhower indicated in his withdrawal announcement, made Thursday, that return of the troops will depend on whether state and local authorities support federal court orders for integration.

WAIT AND SEE

The President's press secretary, James C. Hagerty, was asked whether he could say that troops would not be sent back. He refused to go beyond the President's statement.

"I think it is quite clear where the responsibility lies. We will just have to wait and see," he said.

At Little Rock, Gov. Orval Faubus commented that state and local authorities are charged with enforcement of state and local laws and ordinances and not with enforcement of federal laws and orders.

He told reporters he was saying this merely as a statement of fact and did not consider it an invitation to Arkansas to disobey federal laws or orders.

WILL NOT SPECULATE

Faubus also said that the withdrawal, "if carried out," would mark the end of a tragic occurrence. Later he said he expected the withdrawal to take place, but would not speculate on whether the troops will be sent back.

Last September the governor stationed units of the Arkansas National Guard at Central High. He said his intention was to preserve law and order; the effect was to keep out the nine Negroes seeking to transfer there from a Negro school.

A short time later, under federal court order, Faubus removed the guard. Violence broke out and the Negroes were removed from the classrooms. Eisenhower thereupon federalized about 10,000 of the National Guardsmen and sent in 1,000 paratroopers from the regular Army.

As things quieted, the soldiers on duty here have been steadily diminished.

The Army has estimated the cost of the operation from the beginning to the end of the fiscal year next June 30 at about $3,698,000.

There are eight Negroes still in Central High; one was expelled.

Mrs. L. C. Bates of Little Rock, Negro woman who heads the Arkansas branch of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and who has been a spokesman for the Negro pupils, said that as far as she knew none of the eight plans to attend summer classes at the school.

Eisenhower's use of troops was widely applauded by the NAACP and other critics of racial segregation; it aroused a storm of protest in the South.

Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark) said Thursday that it was "a grave mistake to send them there and it is to be devoutly hoped that the mistake will never be repeated by this or any administration."

Sen. Fulbright (D-Ark) commented: "I have every confidence the local authorities in Little Rock will be able to preserve order in the community if they have the cooperation of federal and state officials."

Newspapermen Surprise Truman With Cake, Cream

Truman ducked the cake.

"I just had breakfast," he explained. "Save some of it for me and I'll eat it later."

"We hope we can be here to help you celebrate No. 75," one newsman said.

"I hope you can help me on No. 95," Truman responded.

Faubus Calls Use Of Troops Tragic

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus said that scheduled withdrawal of federal troops from integrated Central High School would mark the end of a tragic occurrence.

He qualified his statement with the phrase "if carried out" in regard to the announced withdrawal.

WOULD NOT BET

President Eisenhower Thursday ordered troops pulled out May 29.

Asked if he had any doubt that the troops would leave, he said "I wouldn't want to bet all my money on it."

Faubus concluded a statement by noting that state and local authorities are charged with enforcement of state and local laws and ordinances and not with enforcement of federal laws and orders.

In reply to a question, Faubus said he did not consider this an invitation to Arkansas to disobey federal laws or court orders but merely a statement of fact.

He said it was inspired by President Eisenhower's expressed hope that after troops are withdrawn local officials and citizens will assume full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the federal court are carried out.

He said he wouldn't want to predict what the President might do.

Troops To Leave Little Rock Day After Closing Of School

By MORRIS CUNNINGHAM

Of The Commercial Appeal, Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 8. — President Eisenhower announced Thursday that Federal troops will be withdrawn from Little Rock's Central High School on May 29—one day after the city's schools close for the summer.

A presidential order was issued and relayed by Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker to Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, the commanding officer at Little Rock.

"Since the summer recess starts at Central High School on May 28," the President said "and since there will be no further present need for guardsmen I have directed that they be released on May 29.

"Following that date, I trust state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the Federal Court are not obstructed.

Could Return Troops

"Faithful execution of this responsibility will make it unnecessary for the Federal Government to act further to preserve integrity of our judicial process."

The President thus appeared to leave the way open for returning troops if new difficulties develop with the opening of schools next September.

The order will affect approximately 400 federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen who are still on duty.

Their withdrawal will end, at least temporarily, an action unprecedented in American history which began last Sept. 24 when the President abruptly federalized the 11,000-man Arkansas National Guard and sent 1,200 battle-trained paratroopers to Little Rock to enforce racial integration at Central High.

Total Cost Figured

With a display of toughness, the fully-armed troops quickly quelled protests against admission of nine Negro pupils to the school, and effectively enforced Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies' integration order.

The paratroopers later were withdrawn and the National Guard gradually restored to Gov. Orval E. Faubus' command.

Total cost of the operation, including $86,700 for an untold number of FBI agents ordered to Little Rock by former Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr., will starts at Central High School on amount to $4,855,412 by May 28 according to official estimates.

By contrast, the total schoo budget for the 1957-58 session a Little Rock is $5,222,2

Naacp Attorneys Want Proof of School Board's Allegation

The Little Rock school board in its petition seeking a postponement of its court approved integration program, alleges that a small group of students at the school and some adults, almost daily created incidents which make it exceedingly difficult for teachers to teach and pupils to learn.

The allegation by the school board was the basis for the action of Attorneys Wiley A. Branton, Pine Bluff and Thurgood Marshall, New York City in seeking proof of the allegation from the school board. Mr. Branton and Mr. Marshall represent the thirty-three Negro children in the original school suit and the eight Negro children who are now enrolled in Central hi school.

They filed a series of questions with the court Monday demanding that the school board furnish names of the groups and certain persons alleged in the petition that are obstructing the smooth operation of the integration plan at Central hi school.

In addition, the attorneys seek identification of those who had reluctantly accepted the plan, who believed there was "some power in the state of Arkansas which, when exerted, could nullify the federal law and permit disobedience of the decree."

The pleadings noted that the school board has 15 days from the date of service to answer the questions.

Hearing on the school board's petition has been slated for June 3 before Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley.

Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley requested the board to put a specific date in its petition at a preliminary proceeding April 28. He said the original petition was too vague.

A school board spokesman said the January, 1961, date had been selected because the board believed integration could be achieved more effectively at midterm than at the opening of a term.

Central High was integrated last Sept. 25 under guard of federal troops. A token force of soldiers still patrols the school.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. May 8—(AP)—The Little Rock School Board, which had been asked by a federal judge to say exactly how long it wanted racial integration delayed, suggested yesterday that the court put off integration until January of 1961.

The board set the date in an amendment to its petition in Federal District Court asking

Desegregation eyed for 2 Ark. schools

IN A NUTSHELL

Arkansas NAACP snubs "peace plan" offered by businessman.

June 2 hearing on integration postponement in schools may determine future of school board's integration plan.

DETROIT — The Arkansas NAACP has thrown cold water on what has been termed "a peace plan to restore racial harmony" in Little Rock and announced it will seek to integrate two more white high schools this fall.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP, told a Detroit news conference Friday that the civil rights group would move to desegregate Tech and Hall High Schools in September if the Little Rock School Board loses its Federal Court plea to halt school integration.

This was Mrs. Bates' answer to a proposal by businessman Herbert L. Thomas Sr. to drop integration at Central High School after this month. The action is indicative that the NAACP will do no business with segregationists seeking to buck the law of the land.

THE THOMAS PROPOSAL calls for the suspension of integration in city schools and the establishment of an interracial commission by the school board to advise local school districts on desegregation matters.

In effect, the bill would halt integration, snatch away rights gained and start all over again in the matter.

Thomas' so-called "peace plan" was also rejected recently by some 90 colored leaders, mostly ministers. The author of the measure met Wednesday with Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas who did not give comment one way or the other on the measure.

Thomas now entertains hope the state Board of Education accepting the plan, which he later desires to present to Federal District Court. A hearing on the Little Rock School Board's petition for a delay in integration has been set for June 2.

Mrs. Bates, in announcing the NAACP's position in the school matter, said troops could have been removed from Central High long ago if School Superintendent Virgil Blossom and other officials would have enforced discipline at the school.

The two high schools Mrs. Bates spoke of seeking to integrate if the school board plea is denied, are the only all white high schools in Little Rock, now that Central has been desegregated.

West Rock is a colored community in the Hall High area. School Board President Wayne Upton said colored applicants for admission to either of the two schools would have to be considered, but:

"What the board might do with their applications would be another matter."

* * *

IN DIRECT CONTRAST TO THIS attitude by Upton, Federal Judge John E. Miller's approval of the school board's gradual integration plan ordered all city high schools to desegregate.

The school board is now seeking to postpone school integration on the basis of "existing conditions at Central High."

The board's petition for a halt in interracial classes does not mention how long a postponement is wanted. NAACP attorneys for the eight colored pupils at Central have motioned that the school board petition be dismissed.

Little Rock '9' 'Takes' Big City

NEW YORK—There was some question as to whether New York was more awed by the appearance here of the nine Negro students from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., or the students by New York.

In either case, a profound impression was made by each on the other.

Invited here for the week-end, along with Mrs. Daisy Bates, by the Hotel and Club Employes Union, Local 6, to receive their annual Better Race Relations Award, the kids drew mobs everywhere they went.

Celebrity - proof personalities like Gov. Averell Harriman, Mayor Robert F. Wagner, countless high government, judicial and labor officials never quite took the Little Rock Nine in stride. None could hide their pride and excitment at finally meeting the history-making group face to face.

FESTIVITIES commenced on Thursday when a large crowd was at the airport to meet the group. Among them was Minnijean Brown, who had been expelled from Central High and who for the past two months has been attending the New Lincoln School here on a scholarship.

There followed a reception with the children meeting the Local 6 civil rights committee, the Governor and other high city and state officials.

They were whisked then to Local 6 headquarters where nearly 1,000 people crammed the auditorium and outer rooms for the award presentation.

THE FORMAL program offered as speakers Carl Schutt, Local 6 president; Mrs. Bates, Charles Zimmerman, chairman, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee; Manhattan Borough President Hulan Jack, Harry Van Arsdale Jr., president, Central Trades and Labor Council; Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, NAACP; Betty Bentz, general organizer and chairman of the civil rights committee; James Marley, secretary-treasurer; Jay Rubin, president, Hotel Trades Council, and Governor Harriman. Thelma Carpenter sang two selections.

Mrs. Bates emphasized that the children would return to Central in September "to win more victories."

She said that Vice President Nixon experienced in one day in South America what the kids had experienced for eight months.

President Jack said that the children represented "the spirit and conscience of America." Roy Wilkins said that if the NAACP is a target of white segregationists, "we intend to remain targets as long as we have these kind of people to fight for."

A CHECK for $500—to go into an educational fund — was presented to Mrs. Bates along with a plaque.

Speaking for the group, Elizabeth Eckford expressed "gratitude and sincere appreciation," and Ernest Green, first to graduate from Central, said, "In summing it all up—the good things and the bad things—I guess you'd say it's been an interesting year."

Friday morning the children were received at City Hall by Mayor Wagner. Again, there were crowds from all over the area who had heard the kids were in the Mayor's office.

After another press conference they were taken to lunch in the delegates' lounge of the United Nations. They took a brief tour and were introduced to UN dignitaries. Last affair for the night was attendance at "Jamaica," a musical starring Lena Horne. Backstage they met the star and members of the cast. It was quite a big thrill.

SATURDAY WAS a play day: a visit to the Statue of Liberty, to Coney Island and at night a teen-age party at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth Clark at Hastings-on-the-Hudson. Minnijean has been living with the Clarks.

"How does it feel to be a heroine?" "No, no, I'm no heroine. I just happened to be there at the time."

■

MAYOR WAGNER'S assistant, Anne Arnold Hedgeman, was seen crying during the reception at City Hall.

Mrs. Bates said that she was especially happy to be in New York's City Hall because Mrs. Hedgeman was there.

Seven of the children and Mrs. Bates flew back to Little Rock Monday morning. Ernest Green and Terrance Roberts, two of the three boys in the group, will remain here for the summer to earn school money at jobs obtained for them by Local 6. The union bore all expenses for the week-end junket. Others in the group are Jefferson Thomas, Gloria Ray, Carlotta Walls, Thelma Mothershed and Melba Pattillo.

The children have already received the Robert S. Abbott Memorial Award in Chicago and will be presented with the NAACP's Spingarn Medal at the annual NAACP convention in Cleveland next month.

Hotel, club union cites Little Rock 9

MINNIEJEAN WANTS TO RETURN TO CENTRAL NEXT FALL

NEW YORK (ANP) — Little Rock Central High School's first nine colored pupils received another honor last Thursday when Local 6, Hotel and Club Employees union, bestowed upon them the fifth annual Better Race Relations award.

Eight of the pupils, accompanied by Mrs. Daisy Bates, president, Arkansas NAACP chapter, arrived in the city that afternoon. The ninth, Minniejean Brown, has been attending a private school here since expulsion from Central in February.

The award, for advancing the cause of equal rights for all Americans, was given them, according to Carl Shutt, union local president, "for their dignity and unfailing courage during the tense school year just ended."

THOUGH MINNIEJEAN has been attending New Lincoln School on a scholarship since her expulsion from Central, she disclosed last week that she would like to return to the Little Rock school in September.

She said originally she wanted to go to Central because it was better than the segregated colored school. However, now she has other reasons.

"Colored kids don't have to break down segregation in the New Lincoln; it's a wonderful school and there is none (discrimination) here. It is more important that they do so in Little Rock.

* * *

JESS MATHEWS, principal of Central High School, said that if the girl applied for readmittance, he presumed her application would be handled like any other suspension case.

Minniejean was suspended for the duration of the 1957-58 school year. He said Supt. Virgil Blossom would have to decide upon her application. However, Blossom was not available for comment.

What they did to me in Little Rock

—by Minnijean Brown

They called her "Nigger, nigger" and spilled hot soup on her while her school mates cheered. Minnijean Brown was kicked, cursed and pushed. Yet she couldn't fight back. Now, safely at school in the North, Minnijean tells her dramatic story in the new issue of LOOK Magazine. What is it like to have an armed soldier for your bodyguard at school? And how does it feel to be told: "Nigger . . . you'll have to kill me or walk around the room"? Read a 16-year-old girl's story of loneliness, hurt and frustration in the new issue of LOOK.

Big Thrill for All—New York's Gov. Averell Harriman is as thrilled as the kids as he presents plaques to three of the nine Little Rock youngsters who were guests in New York following the end of their history-making semester at Central High School. The boy is graduate Ernest Green, and the girls are Minniejean Brown and Gloria Ray. Occasion was the awarding of the Better Race Relations Award by the Hotel and Club Employes Union Local 6, to the nine students and to Mrs. Daisy Bates, head of the Arkansas NAACP.—Martin Photo.

Minnie Jean's Burden

When Minnie Jean Brown, the refugee student from Little Rock takes up her studies here in New York, in due time, she no doubt will visit the Statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island.

When she does she will find there engraven on a tablet by the main entrance of the statue the following words by Emma Lazarus:

"Give me your tired, your poor
Youh huddled masses yearning to breathe free
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore
Send these, the homeless, tempest tost to me
I lift my lamp beside the golden door."

As Minnie Jean goes back to her history class after a visit to the Statue of Liberty her teachers will tell her that the statue is the property of the U. S. Government and that it stands as a symbol of unity of 37 nations and races in America and of the American government's determination that all races within its borders shall enjoy liberty and individual freedom.

For as Minnie's history teacher struggles to extol the virtues of freedom and liberty as signified by the Statue of Liberty we can picture Minnie Jean sitting there in the classroom and permitting her mind to wander 1,252 miles away to Little Rock, Ark.

Minnie Jean's history teacher will tell her that Arkansas was admitted to the union of the United States on June 15, 1836, and that as such Arkansas agreed to, and must abide by the Constitution of the United States which guarantees to all life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

And as the teacher goes on (as the teacher must and should) we can picture the wrinkled puzzles that must cross Minnie Jean's sixteen-year-old brow as she listens to her teacher.

Minnie Jean is thoroughly capable of understanding just what her teacher is saying—but neither Minnie Jean, nor we, nor anyone else will be able to reconcile what the teacher is saying with the true experiences of Minnie Jean's life in Little Rock, U. S. A.

For Arkansas is a part of the U. S. A. and as such it owns its share of the Statue of Liberty, and again as such, it is supposed to abide by the U. S. public policy and welcome within its boundaries the "huddled" masses yearning to breathe free."

But while Arkansas would never give up its claim to a part of the Statue of Liberty, Arkansas at the same time refuses to recognize Minnie Jean's "yearning to breathe free."

As a matter of fact, Minnie Jean Brown was forced out of Arkansas simply because she yearned to "breathe free." She had committed no other crime.

Minnie Jean's obvious dilemma places a great burden on her history teacher, and as we previously stated we would not like to be that teacher.

But in a larger sense the burden does not rest on Minnie Jean's teacher.

And the time is running out when we can continue to let the rest of the world see us shift such a heavy burden on the small shoulders of a child.

Minniejean To N. Y. Trip Called Mistake

"They made a mistake bringing Minniejean Brown to New York," Major John Silvera, head of psychological warfare for the New York Military District, said Sunday at the 5th Annual Negro History-Brotherhood Breakfast of the Peekskill NAACP Branch.

"Of course, it is a generous offer and will help Minniejean to continue her education. But we know these schools are mixed.

"It would have been better strategy for her to have been enrolled in a school in the South that has already been integrated," he continued. "That would have been the perfect answer to the bigots of Little Rock."

Admits Gains

Major Silvera, author of "The Negro in World War II," and public relations consultant for the African Methodist Episcopal Church, further told his audience: "It is true that we have made some political and legislative gains. However, the Negro will win more respect when he develops his own businesses and improves his economic position."

In the afternoon, the Peekskill NAACU, assisted by thee Peekskill Civic Improvement Society, presented a Negro History-Brotherhood program. Assemblyman Theodore Hill, Jr., of the 6th Assembly District, was guest speaker.

Assemblyman Hill revealed that he had voted for the Ives-Quinn Bill and "for the William T. Andrews Bill against segregation i nthe National Guard . . . both measures that promoted "Brotherhood."

"I canont state my position at this time, however, on the Urban League Bill . . . I mean, the Metcalf-Baker Bill," he said.

Officer Charles H. Bolden, of the Peekskill Police Force, was presented the Crispus Attucks Award by the Peekskill NAACP. The award is given to those who helped "the betterment of race relations in Peekskill."

Included on the program, also, was a dramatization of the "Little Rock Incident" by an interracial group of young people of Ossining and Peekskill. Vocal solos by Mrs. Mildred Cochrane and Elmer Madden and a piano duet by Louis Bynum and Edna Swick completed the program.

Minnijean Would Like To Return To Little Rock

NEW YORK. — The New York Times has quoted Minnijean Brown, 16 year old girl who was expelled from Little Rock's Central High School, as saying she would like to return to the Arkansas school in September.

Miss Brown, one of nine Negro students who entered the formally segregated school last fall, was expelled following a series of incidents with white students.

She has since attended the New Lincoln School in New York on a scholarship. Miss Brown was quoted as saying she had originally desired to attend Central High because it was better than the segregated Negro school in Little Rock.

She said sh ewants to go back for other reasons, too.

Miss Brown was quoted as saying "Negro kids don't have to break down segregation in the New Lincoln—it's a wonderful school and there is none here."

She added "It's more important that they do so in Little Rock."

In Little Rock, principal Jess Mathews said if she applied for readmission he presumed it would ze handled the same way as any other suspension case. He noted her suspension had been for the 1957-58 school year.

Negro Coed's Father Held In Slaying

Girl Was Expelled In Little Rock Crisis

Little Rock, June 22 (AP)—The father of Minnijean Brown, Negro girl expelled earlier this year from Central High School, shot and killed a man early Sunday, police reported.

The police said Willie Bob Brown, about 50, admitted the slaying of Elmer Isaac, a 68-year-old Negro. Brown was jailed here on an open charge for investigation.

Officer E. J. McDaniel, a Negro policeman, said he heard shots and then saw Brown climb into a car with a revolver in his hand. McDaniel said he followed Brown, stopped him, and made the arrest several blocks from the scene of the shooting.

Minnijean Transferred

Other policeman quoted Brown, a contractor for yard sodding and other residential building projects, as saying he knew Isaac was mad at him and had gun.

Brown told officers that he waited for Isaac outside a private club and when Isaac came out, he attempted to talk to him. Brown told them that when Issaac reached for his gun, Brown fired.

Brown's daughter, Minnijean, was one of the nine Negro students who enrolled at Central High School last fall, touching off the racial crisis here. She later was expelled and transferred to the private interracial new Lincoln School in New York City.

'NY Is Wonderful'—Minniejean Brown

BY SARA SLACK

"It was wonderful! The most exciting day of my life!" This was Minniejean Brown's reaction after completing her first day in the New Lincoln School at 31 W. 110th St.

The expelled Little Rock student added she was "more than pleased" after her first day as a New York City schoolgirl.

Minniejean was warned by Dr. John J. Brooks, director of the experimental school she's attending that, "the curriculum here at the New Lincoln School will be a lot tougher than the one you left back in Little Rock."

Nevertheless, Minniejean is braced for a grind and anxious to resume her studies. "I don't care how hard it is, I'm just glad to be back in school again. I've always loved school and really missed it," she told The Amsterdam News.

Newsmen Mob School

It was early Monday afternoon before corps of cameramen and pressmen relinquished their siege on the New Lincoln School and made it possible for Minniejean and the school to settle down. After the sparkling 11th grader enrolled in the school shortly after 8 a. m., Minniejean was taken to meet her homeroom teacher, Mrs. Pauline Carpenter.

She will study history and social studies two hours per day under Mrs. Carpenter in Room 620 with 27 other students of varied backgrounds. Minniejean will attend classes with a veritable cross section representation of the United Nations. Among her classmates will be Indonesians, Indians, Burmese and numerous Oriental pupils.

Her school days begin at 8:45 a. m. and end at 3:30 p. m. She is the third Negro in her homeroom class. Others are 16-year-old Yorke Mizelle and 17-year-old Mirian Davis. They are three of the "between 45 and 60 Negro students" attending the school.

Used to Threats

The poised adult outlook she entertains was very evident when she added a postscript to an account her mother gave newsmen of their wait to board the plane at Little Rock Airport Saturday. Neither Minniejean or her mother were told the airline had received a call telling them a bomb had been planted aboard their plane.

"When we arrived in New York City, we were told our flight had been delayed because of the bomb scare," Mrs. Brown said. "I wasn't surprised at all. I didn't tell Minniejean, but I suspected just what was happening. I felt sure we couldn't leave without an incident."

To this, Minniejean quickly added, "Oh, Mother, you know bomb scares don't frighten us anymore. We're used to them now. This is part of our daily lives."

Going to College

Minniejean says she has not made up her mind definitely on the college she will attend. Her subjects are American history, English, French, science, physical education, biology and a "few art electives."

Mrs. Brown said it was her contractor husband, Willie B. Brown, who convinced her Minniejean should come to New York City to study. "He thought it was a wonderful educational opportunity and would also remove her from the constant punishment for a while," she said.

Yet, visibly unhappy, Mrs. Brown continued, "I'm grateful to Dr. Brooks, Dr. Kenneth Clark and the many others who made this possible, but it hurts me so much to think my daughter has to come so far from home to go to high school."

No Private Schools

There are no private schools in Little Rock, Ark. When Minniejean was expelled last Monday evening, she was barred from entering all public schools in Little Rock. The afternoon after her expulsion she received Dr. Brooks' offer of a scholarship at the New Lincoln private school here. "I started getting ready right away," Minniejean told newsmen.

"We will begin immediately and give her IQ and achievement level tests," Dr. Brooks said. He has received Minniejean's records from Central High School, but was not satisfied with them. "They are professionally made-up records which only include her grades," he said. "And grades alone do not give an accurate picture of a student's abilities."

Will Avoid Limelight

Dr. Brooks said he had written School Superintendent Virgil Blossom for further information about Minniejean "so I can get a more accurate fix on her entire school background," he said.

Minniejean told this newspaper she hopes at the New Lincoln School, she can be "just an ordinary student." To her the popping cameras and interviews were once a novelty and "fun" but now, she confided, "It's truly tiresome and wearing."

Airport Welcome

Minnie Jean was greeted at LaGuardia airport Saturday by a battery of television, radio and news reporters and a cheering interracial throng of high school students representing their schools, the NAACP and the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Anona Holland, 111-07 179th Place, Jamaica, president of the Youth Council of the Jamaica, L. I. NAACP, hugged Minnie Jean as she stepped off the plane and presented her with an orchid corsage.

There were more white students on hand to greet Minnie Jean than there were Negro students. Herbert Wright, NAACP youth director said the airport would have been mobbed if he had given permission to all the high school groups who had called his office asking permission to form welcoming parties.

Among the Queens high school students present were Helen Roth, 26-15 Parsons Blvd., Flushing High representative, Steve Garnett, 5844 204th St., Bayside, representing Bayside High, Skip Ackerman, Bryant High and others.

Foreign Guest

Minnie Jean was also greeted by Katherine Clark, teen age daughter of Dr. Kenneth Clark with whom she will live while attending school here. They struck up a fast friendship with Kate immediately introducing Minnie Jean to Ritva Fabrin of Findland, who is also Kate's houseguest. Ritva is in this country as a part of the Herald Tribune's youth forum.

Among others on hand to welcome Minnie were Louise Dias of the Henry Snyder High School in Jersey City, Mrs. Marcella West, Jersey City NAACP Youth advisor, Bill Brown, 258 W. 117th St., member of the Manhattan Youth Council of NCCJ and Robert Perlzweig of the Young Adult Council of the National Social Welfare Assembly.

Nothing Solved

Mrs. West did not hesitate to state that she did not feel Minnie Jean's coming to New York "solved anything."

While expressing happiness that Minnie Jean could continue her education, Mrs. West said, "I think the group fighting integration will feel they have gained a point although it is a personal gain for Minnie Jean."

Brown said "Little Rock's loss is New York's gain."

At the airport, Minnie Jean told of making an agreement with Little Rock school officials in which they bound her not to talk back or retaliate in any way on abuses from white students. She said she had tried hard to abide by the unfair ruling but that the time came when "I just couldn't take it any longer."

Tip To Reporters

Minnie Jean's mother disclosed that reporters knew Minnie Jean had been suspended from the school before she or Minnie Jean did. School officials sent her a note by a student and then got on the phone and called the press and radio. Minnie Jean first heard of her suspension via radio.

Mrs. Brown returned to Little Rock Tuesday to take care of other members of the family, two boys and another daughter.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER
LITTLE ROCK

Judge Hails Ike's Little Rock Action

Daily World Atlanta Ga.
Sun. 2-9-58 p. 7

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — (INS) — A New York State Judge declared Saturday the Little Rock school crisis was a "freak incident" which "never should have been allowed to come to that point."

Justice Philip Halpern, U. S. expert on the United Nations Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, said however that members of his committee placed the incident in "perspective" to other American advances to end racial segregation in education.

The Buffalo Justice told a news conference that President Eisenhower was right in calling in the federal troops after Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus refused to control the situation arising from the admission of Negro students to Little Rock Central High School.

DEFIANCE NOTED

He declared the situation was similar to Lincoln's Declaration of War after South Carolina seceded from the union. In both cases, Halpern stated, there was a "defiance of the Federal Government."

He declared studies done by the Subcommission on Discrimination in Education and Religion were helping to end global restrictions against minority groups.

Halpern's suggestion that the next study be made on the right to immigration was accepted unanimously by the group at this session after heated Soviet objections.

He has served on the 12-nation group since 1954. Halpern is Associate Justice of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of N. Y., fourth division.

White House Silent On Little Rock

Dallas News
Dallas, Texas
Sun. 6 2-2-58

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House refused to comment Saturday on the federal court ruling suspending integration at Little Rock's Central High School for 2½ years.

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said: "It is entirely a matter for the Department of Justice. I have no comment."

Sen. Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) said the Little Rock school case is "purely a federal matter." He said, "The responsibility of Congress ended when it achieved passage of the civil rights legislation; now the responsibility is in the hands of the executive."

Sen. Paul Douglas (D.-Ill.), a member of the Judiciary Committee and a former associate justice of the North Carolina Supreme Court, said: "I think in view of what happened at Little Rock the ruling was extremely wise."

First Negro Will Get Diploma

By KEITH FULLER

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — To the strains of a solemn march, 650 Central High School seniors will file across the football field next week to receive their diplomas.

For the first time, one of them will be a Negro.

His presence will represent integration in Little Rock: A page in history, violent, bitter and far-reaching, but an accomplished fact for at least one school year. U.S. troops and an expenditure of nearly five million dollars went into its accomplishment.

The commencement exercise will unfold in the stadium where the tough 101st Airborne infantry had field headquarters when it guarded the presence of nine Negroes at the school last fall.

Campus Tranquil.

But the school campus, first the scene of riots, then an Army encampment last autumn, wears an outward aura of tranquility.

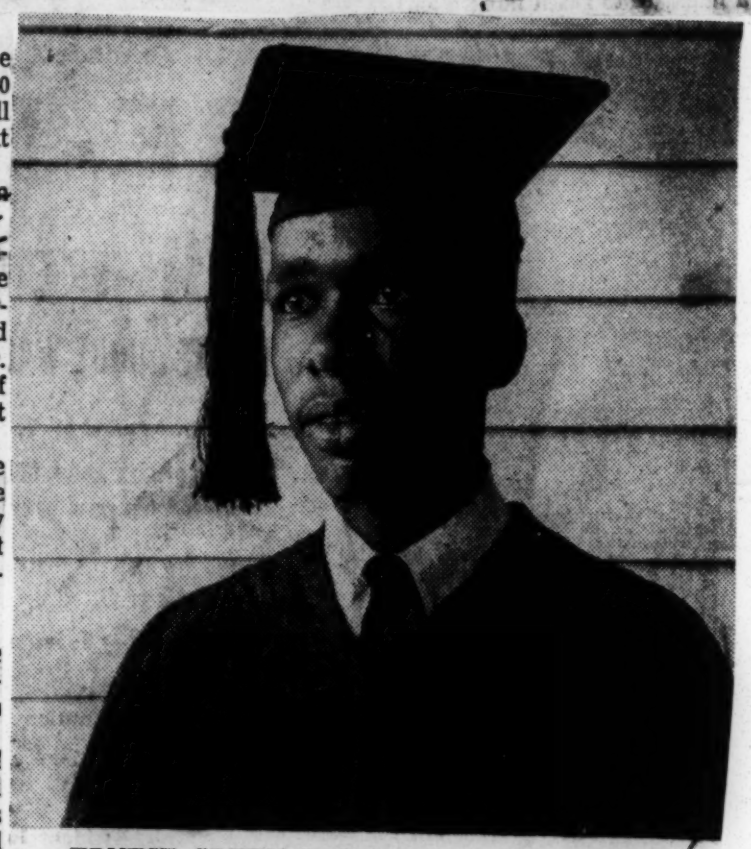
A few federalized National Guardsmen loll about the school and a jeep with two more soldiers slowly patrols the elm-lined streets.

To the delight of the Guardsmen, all of them Arkansans, their "babysitting" job will end May 29 when school closes for the summer. The big unanswered question is whether they, or men like them, will be needed again next fall to guarantee the safety of Negro students.

A federal court judge may answer the question summarily when he rules on the school board's petition to have its gradual integration plan postponed until 1961. His ruling may come June 3.

If the court holds that integration — launched last fall with bloody fights, gripping tension and racial hatred — should proceed, the seven remaining Negro students say they will go back. President Eisenhower said the troops would return only if circumstances forced it, but that he would use troops to meet defiance to a federal court order.

In his third term bid for governor's office—a feat accomplished by only one man thus far in Arkansas history—Gov. Orval Faubus said he used National Guard troops to keep Negroes out of Central High School last September "in accordance with the wishes of a majority of the people which was my [illegible] the will [illegible] ss of whether it was right or wrong."



ERNEST GREEN POSES IN CAP AND GOWN.

Quiet City.

Little Rock—shouted as an epithet at Vice President Nixon in Venezuela and spoken as an insult by anti-American elements around the world—has resumed its place as a normal, quiet city of 150,000.

Conversation on buses, in cafes or on the street turns more to a discussion of business condition than integration.

But the outward calm may not mean the majority has accepted integration here as an accomplished fact.

"I definitely do not think it has been accomplished," commented Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council and an ardent segregationist.

"I think," he added, "it has been a flat dismal failure. I think integration can be stopped, that it will be stopped and that it has been stopped. I mean here and all over the South. The effects of the valiant struggle of white parents against armed might has caused integration to be in disrepute not only in the South but in the North, East and West."

Mrs. L.C. Bates, president of the Arkansas National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, declined comment on this aspect of the question because, she said:

1. The fate of the present integration at Central High temporarily is at stake again in U.S. District Court where the Little Rock School Board has asked that its program be delayed for 2½ years. The board said it disrupted teaching to a dangerous degree.

2. She did not want to provide ammunition for Gov. Faubus, currently campaigning on a platform that emphasizes states rights.

3. She did not want to stir the comparative calm that has prevailed in recent weeks.

The NAACP leader pointed to the scheduled graduation next Tuesday of 17 - year - old Ernest Green, the only senior among the eight Negroes at the school, and said:

"I'm very happy with this progress, although it is said that Ernest has to be graduated under pressure. He was not able to participate in any activities related to the graduation.

"This should be a happy time. But it is dampened by the fact that Negro children have had to undergo an ordeal in order to obtain an education that is their inherent right."

A popular high school senior girl said the Negroes at Central no longer seem the center of attention or abuse:

"The kids just don't seem interested in them any more. The soldiers just sort of stand around and flirt with the girls. There hasn't been any trouble—any real trouble—for a long time. Actually since Minniejean left."

Minniejean Brown was one of the Negroes enrolled at Central last fall. She was expelled in December following a number of racial incidents with white students. She accepted a scholarship to an integrated private school in New York City.

Has integration made progress among those neither radically for or against

A Central High teacher said, "I think some parents lost interest in the question after the hectic first term. But one must make some qualifications: Whether you mean those who opposed it are now for it or those who opposed it now tolerate it. I think the latter is more correct."

Except for the coming gubernatorial campaign, which is expected to have integration vs. Segregation as its principal subject, the city might have its own vacation from the racial headache.

Faubus' chief antagonist is an eastern Arkansas judge, Lee Ward, who advocated "law and order" during the riots at Central High. A third candidate, Chris Finkbeiner, a Little Rock meat packing executive, has labeled himself a secregationist.

Lil' Rock's Ernest graduates

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Tuesday was a great day in the life of Ernest Green, former senior in Little Rock's Central High School. It marked graduation day.

Last weeks at the school saw a buildup of the psychological and physical campaign of hatred toward him and his family. Segregationists vowed he would never graduate.

Ernest was quoted as saying: "I'm glad I made it; I'm glad I don't have to do it again."

The remaining seven of the eight colored students there made passing grades and one of them, according to Jess W. Matthews, principal, has made the scholastic honor roll.

If the petition of the school board for a three-year delay in integration is denied in Federal court June 3, the seven under-graduate colored pupils will return next fall.

Integrated Ceremony Explosive

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—An historic baccalaureate was held at Central High School last night against a backdrop that resembled an armed camp. There was at least one racial incident.

About 120 armed National Guardsmen and some 100 policemen rolled into the school area shortly before the first racially integrated baccalaureate began.

The service went smoothly on the floodlit field. But before it started seven Negroes were arrested in a car a few blocks away. And afterwards a white youth was arrested for spitting at a Negro visitor.

Among the 600 seniors to be graduated tomorrow is Ernest Green, an 16-year-old Negro. He is the first of his race to get a diploma from Central High, the scene of rioting last September when Green and eight other Negroes entered the school.

No one molested Green. He waited outside the stadium awhile after the ceremony, apparently for relatives. Then three detectives escorted him to a gate.

As some 1,500 persons, including 25 Negro visitors, filed outside the stadium, a white youth spat at one of the Negroes. He was arrested by city police, charged with disturbing the peace and released on $200 bond.

8 Negroes Pass At Central High

The lone senior in the group, Ernest Green, will join 600 white students in the school's first integrated commencement Tuesday night.

Principal Jess W. Matthews said regulations prohibit disclosure of grades to anyone but students and their parents, but he said all the Negroes who entered the school last fall under paratroop protection had passed, except Minnijean Brown. She was expelled last January after five shuffles with white students. She attends a private school in New York.

NEGRO TO GET DIPLOMA

Little Rock Graduation Safeguards Are Taken

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 26 (UPI)—Police and school authorities clamped down today on tomorrow's historic integrated commencement when 18-year-old Ernest Green becomes the first Negro ever to earn a diploma from Central High School.

The school board limited admission to ticket holders and handed out eight tickets to each senior to give his parents and friends. The board said newsmen would be limited to upper rows of the stadium and photographers—save one from each of the two Little Rock newspapers — would be prohibited.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom explained "our objective is to have as dignified a commencement as is humanly possible." Blossom said the school board had laid down rules to make the proceedings as normal as possible under the circumstances.

But the exercise will be far from normal.

About 420 federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen moved into the school Sunday night and undoubtedly will be available if anything happens.

"Our mission hasn't changed," the spokesman said. "That's all I can say."

Negro Press Barred At Baccalaureate

Little Rock School To Graduate First Negro

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — Baccalaureate services at integrated Central High School came off quietly Sunday night but five Negroes and a white boy were arrested outside the stadium.

Taking part in the baccalaureate was Ernest Green, 18, one of the nine Negroes who integrated the school last September with the help of armed paratroopers. He is scheduled Friday to become the first Negro ever to receive a diploma from Central High.

PRESS REFUSED

Newsmen were told by police to sit down in their roped-off section at the top of the stadium 15 minutes before services started. Two Negro reporters and a Negro photographer were barred, although about 16 Negro spectators attended.

The barred Negroes, Simeon Booker and Ernest Withers of Jet and Ebony Publications and Miss Sarah Slack of the New York Amsterdam News, said School Superintendent Virgil Blossom told them the School Board wouldn't allow them to attend.

When Blossom was asked if this was true, he said, "You did-not ask me that. You didn't see see me tonight." He said to ask him the question again Monday.

Police charged two of five Negroes with carrying concealed weapons—a pistol and a long knife—and arrested the white boy for spitting on a Negro spectator as the students and parents filed out of the stadium.

BOTH 'OVER 20'

Police identified the two Negroes as Vernon Barnes and Frank Ashew, both "over 20." They were arrested a block from the school an hour before the services began.

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Ernest Green, first colored graduate from Central High School, Little Rock, Ark., has been granted a scholarship to Michigan State University.

J. Robert Stewart, chairman of the MSU Scholarship Committee, said the grant from the University would be worth $555 a year, the regular out-of-state tuition fee.

In addition to the university grant, Green is to receive from $300 to $500 from the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students. Green, who has been saving since childhood for a college education, finished Central High in the top ten per cent of his class.

WOULD USE U.S. TROOPS SCHOOL INTEGRATION

Vows He'd Act If Anarchy Is Threatened

Birmingham Herald
Birmingham, Ala.
Editorial P. 4

BY DAYTON MOORE
United Press International

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20 — President Eisenhower made it abundantly clear today that he again would use Federal troops to enforce court-ordered public school integration if such action became necessary to avoid "anarchy."

The President told his news conference the Federal Government must and will enforce court integration rulings if the states fail to do so.

He said his feelings "are exactly as they were" last Fall when he ordered paratroopers and Federalized National Guardsmen to maintain order at newly-integrated Central High School at Little Rock, Ark.

But Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus said in quick reply that the President need not expect him to use state militia to enforce integration at Central High School when it opens Sept. 2.

"If it is the purpose of Mr. Eisenhower's statement to reaffirm his position of last Fall, that it is my duty as governor to use the state militia to enforce integration in any school district in this state, then I must say that my position of last Fall is unchanged," Faubus said.

In St. Louis, attorneys for Negro children who want to attend Central High next Fall moved to insure that they would be eligible to attend when the school opens.

Meanwhile, Wiley Branton, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People attorney for Arkansas, disclosed that 60 Negroes had applied to attend Central High this Fall.

He said he understood that the school board had "approved for enrollment" 17 or 18 of them. Nine Negroes attended the school last year. One graduated and another transferred to a New York school.

The attorneys in St. Louis asked the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals to issue an immediate mandate putting into effect last Monday's decision. It overturned a U. S. District Court ruling which would have delayed integration at Little Rock for two and a half years.

They asked the appeals court to bypass the usual 20-day waiting period from the date of judgment. The Little Rock School Board was considered certain to fight the request.

In Raleigh, N. C., Gov. Luther H. Hodges said if the President again uses troops in Little Rock he will be "just as much at fault as he was the first time." Hodges said he felt the President "didn't give the time or the thought he should have given" to the question.

The President opened his news conference by reading a prepared statement which he said was aimed at answering questions raised by the appeals court decision.

"Every American must understand that if an individual, community or state is going successfully and continuously to defy the courts, then there is anarchy," he said.

The President said it was the duty of each state to "suppress unlawful forces" and maintain order to "permit compliance with the final orders of the court . . .

"Defiance of this duty would present the most serious problem, but there can be no equivocation as to the responsibility of the Federal Government in such an event," he added.

But Faubus said in a statement at Little Rock that "I do not interpret my consitutional duities to cover any such theory as that advanced by the President. I do recognize my duty to preserve the peace of my state and I shall continue to do so to the best of my ability."

The governor made it clear that he would seek every means to delay integration at Little Rock.

He said many attorneys had questioned the legality of the Supreme Court's integration decision and "no law has ever been passed which says that all people of every section of the country must be forced to integrate against their wishes and regardless of the consequences, however bad they might be."

It appeared almost certain that Central again would become an integration battleground unless the school board is successful in getting a stay of the appeals court order pending an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The President said his feelings were unchanged from last Sept. 24 when he ordered Federal troops into Little Rock. He quoted a paragraph from his nation-wide television speech at that time which said:

"The very basis of our individual rights and freedoms rests upon the certainty that the President and the executive branch of the government will support and insure the carrying out of the decisions of the Federal courts."

During a follow-up question period, Eisenhower was asked whether Virginia Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. had requested a conference with him regarding school integration problems certain to arise in Virginia this Fall.

"No," the President replied, "but there have been one or two political figures from Virginia that have agreed with me we would like to talk some of these things over, but so far we just haven't gotten the opportunity."

The President told his last news conference he was willing to meet with Almond to discuss the integration situation, particularly in Arlington, just across the Potomac from Washington, and Norfolk. Thousands of families of Federal employes live in these two areas.

Thurs 8-21-58

In his formal statement, the President said "it is my hope that each state will fulfill its obligations with a full realization of the gravity of any other course."

But he warned that a state "cannot by action or deliberate failure to act permit violence to frustrate the preservation of individual rights as determined by a court decree."

The Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis Monday set aside a ruling by U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley which would have suspended integration at Central High School for two and a half years. However, Little Rock school officials have announced they will appeal the decision to the Supreme Court.

The President said agreement or disagreement with the outcome "must not be confused with the solemn duty that all American have to comply with the final orders of the court."

He also restated his position that "the common sense of the individual and his feeling of civic responsibility must eventually come into play if we are to solve this problem."

After reading his statement, the President said he would have nothing further to say about integration matters now pending before the courts. Nevertheless, he was later asked whether he personally favored a start toward school integration.

The President said he always had declined to answer that question "for the simple reason that here was something that the Supreme Court says this is the direction of the Constitution, this is the instruction of the constitution.

"Now I am sworn to one thing, to defend the Constitution of the United States, and execute its laws," he said. "Therefore, for me to weaken public opinion by discussion of complete—separate cases, where I might agree or might disagree, seems to me to be completely unwise and not a good thing to do."

IKE PLEDGES U. S. WILL UPHOLD RULING OF THE SUPREME COURT

President Vows Use Of Troops To Bar "Anarchy"

By DAYTON MOORE
United Press International

WASHINGTON. — (UPI) — President Eisenhower made it abundantly clear Wednesday that he again would use federal troops to enforce court-ordered public school integration if it was necessary to avoid "anarchy."

The President told his news conference the federal government must and will enforce court integration rulings if the states fail to do so.

He said his feelings "are exactly as they were last fall when he ordered paratroopers and federalized National Guardsmen to maintain order at newly-integrated Central High School at Little Rock, Ark.

Although he did not specifically mention the use of troops, Eisenhower made it perfectly clear that he would use them again as a last resort in Little Rock or any other locality where violence and mob rule threaten public order.

The President opened his news by reading a prepared statement which he said was aimed at answering questions raised by the U.S. Court of Appeals decision reinstating integration in the Little Rock high school.

"Every American must understand that if an individual, community or state is going succuessfully and continuously to defy the courts, then there is anarchy," he said.

The President said it was the duty of each state to "suppress unlawful forces" and maintain order to "permit compliance with the final orders of the court . . . .

"Defiance of this duty would present the most serious problem, but there can be no equivocation as to the responsibility of the federal government in such an event," he added.

The President said his feelings were unchanged from last Sept. 24 when he ordered federal troops into Little Rock. He quoted a paragraph from his nation-wide television speech at that time which said:

My Stand Unchanged--Faubus

I'll Use Troops Again, Bristling Ike Pledges

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — President Eisenhower made it abundantly clear Wednesday that he again will use federal troops to enforce court-ordered public school integration if such action becomes necessary to avoid "anarchy."

The President told his news conference the federal government must and will enforce court integration rulings if the states fail to do so.

He said his feelings "are exactly as they were" last fall when he ordered paratroopers and federalized National Guardsmen to maintain order at newly-integrated Central High School at Little Rock, Ark.

But Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus said in quick reply that the President need not expect him to use state militia to enforce integration at Central High when it opens Sept. 2.

"If it is the purpose of Mr. Eisenhower's statement to reaffirm his position of last fall, that it is my duty as governor to use the state militia to enforce integration in any school district in this state, then I must say that my position of last fall is unchanged," Faubus said.

The Little Rock School board announced Wednesday night it has petitioned the U.S. Eighth Court of Appeals to stay its order which would continue integration at Central High.

The decision was announced after a two-hour meeting with Faubus. The governor had earlier challenged the board to take quick action on preventing continued integration.

In St. Louis, attorneys for Negro children who want to attend Central High moved to insure that they will be eligible to attend when the school opens.

The attorneys asked the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to issue an immediate mandate putting into effect Monday's decision, which overturned a U.S. District Court ruling which would have delayed integration at Little Rock for 2½ years.

They asked the appeals court to bypass the usual 20-day waiting period from the date of judgment.

The President opened his news conference by reading a statement which he said was aimed at answering questions raised by the appeals court decision.

"Every American must understand that if an individual, community or state is going successfully and continuously to defy the courts, then there is anarchy," he said.

The President said it is the duty of each state to "suppress unlawful forces" and maintain order to "permit compliance with the final orders of the court . . .

Text of Ike's Statement on School Integration

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Eisenhower's statement Wednesday on the subject of school integration follows:

Because there are still some phases of this case pending in the courts, it would not be appropriate for me to express my view on the case itself.

This case, however, or any person's agreement or disagreement with its outcome, must not be confused with the solemn duty that all Americans have to comply with the final orders of the court. Nor should we lose sight of the fact that the maintenance of order to permit compliance with the final orders of the court is the responsibility of each state.

Each state owes to its inhabitants, to its sister states and to the Union the obligation to suppress unlawful forces. It cannot by action or deliberate failure to act permit violence to frustrate the preservation of individual rights as determined by a court decree.

It is my hope that each state will fulfill its obligation with a full realization of the gravity of any other course.

Defiance of this duty would present the most serious problem, but there can be no equivocation as to the responsibility of the federal government in such an event. My feelings are exactly as they were a year ago. As I said then:

The very basis of our individual rights and freedoms rests upon the certainty that the President and the executive branch of government will support and insure the carrying out of the decisions of the federal courts.

Every American must understand that if an individual, community or state is going successfully and continuously to defy the courts, then there is anarchy.

I continue to insist that the common sense of the individual and his feeling of civic responsibility must eventually come into play if we are to solve this problem.

President Stands On High Ground

WASHINGTON—The rule of law is in danger in Little Rock but the rule of reason is in danger in the national political community. Not often has the country seen a time when temperate words and action were more needed. Not in recent times have all men holding any responsibility had a greater duty to have done with the knee-jerk reactions of emotionalism.

These are the conclusions of some of the most elevated people in Washington in both parties. These people are not panicky; but they are very worried.

Orval Faubus in Arkansas has declared the Supreme Court's school integration decision to be "unconstitutional." He has thus, as governor of a single state, asserted an interpretative power over the Federal Constitution which that Constitution itself has given only to the court.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas of Illinois, a civil rights leader, has attempted to have the United States Senate express its "full support and approval" of the court's decision. This is only the other side of the Faubus coin.

Gov. Faubus was placing himself above the Supreme Court of the United States. Sen. Douglas, in his later withdrawn move to "defend" that court was hardly less than actually attacking its integrity. Some of his liberal colleagues, notably Sen. Richard L. Neuberger of Oregon, tried in vain at the beginning so to persuade him.

For if the Senate has the right to "approve" or in effect to ratify a specific decision of the court, it has an obvious right also to "disapprove" one.

This is perhaps most of all why President Eisenhower himself has persistently resisted all efforts to force him not merely to promise to enforce the court's decree but to "approve" it.

In this, whatever his failures of leadership elsewhere on the racial issue, the President is standing upon what some here see as the only possible constitutional ground.

These are not merely the views of those often dismissed in the prevailing climate as mere moderates." These are also the views of some of the most devoted of all the advocates of all-out civil rights—and of all-out enforcement.

They are the true responsibles. They are not trying to "let Faubus get away with it" and defy federal court orders. They are trying instead to support the President's power—and duty—to maintain order in Little Rock if he must. But they are backing a sensible use of that power.

Why, they ask, were federal troops sent last time before the federal Department of Justice made any effort to use its easily exercisable right to summon any number of deputy marshals to enforce integration orders?

The President will be under heavy pressure from these responsibles to make use of this civil alternative before again resorting to the military one.

If he is wise, it is felt among some of his well-wishers inside and outside Congress, he will at least make the attempt this time if the new legal breathing spell at length produces final—and resisted—orders for integration at once.

LITTLE ROCK
SUPREME COURT DECISION
MON. SEPT. 29, 1958

Evasion Assailed In Opinion

Highest Tribunal Says '54 Decision 'Is Supreme Law'

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

The Supreme Court held unanimously yesterday that southern states cannot convert public schools into private schools or use other "evasive schemes" to keep segregation.

The Nation's highest court thus dealt an advance blow to untested anti-integration laws in the South. Its decision was of immediate importance in Arkansas and Virginia, where schools have been closed to thwart desegregation and private schooling is contemplated.

The Supreme Court's opinion, read by Chief Justice Earl Warren, technically was a presentation of its reasons for erasing a 2½-year desegregation delay granted by Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley to the Little Rock School Board.

But the effect of the opinion went much further than that. It took note of southern resistance to the 1954 school desegregation decision and firmly declared segregation in schools must go.

Decision Reaffirmed

The 17-page opinion declared:

• The Fourteenth Amendment prohibits "state support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds or property."

• The present Court—with three of its members appointed since then—unanimously reaffirms the 1954 decision.

• School authorities have flexibility in accomplishing desegregation—but Federal district courts must make sure that programs are developed "pointed toward the earliest practicable completion of desegregation."

• That, contrary to what some southern segregationist leaders have maintained, the Court's interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment in the 1954 decision "is the supreme law of the land."

• That, while public education is primarily the concern of the states, the responsibility of the state "must be exercised consistently with Federal constitutional requirements."

No Sacrifice of Rights

• Gov. Orval E. Faubus and the Arkansas Legislature caused the violent resistance in Little Rock, and the constitutional rights of the Negro children cannot be sacrificed because of it.

Anti-integration las of Virginia, Arkansas and other southern states were not directly before the Court. But the opinion shows clearly how the Supreme Court would deal with them, and this will be a firm guide for lower-court rulings as the laws are contested.

Constitutional doubt thus is cast on Virginia's "massive resistance" laws which provide for the closing of desegregated schools, cut-off of state funds to desegregated schools and tuition grants for private schooling.

The opinion seems to doom legally the latest reported plan of Gov. J. Lindsay Almond of Virginia in attempts to reopen closed schools in Norfolk, Charlottesville and Warren County on a segregated basis.

Vote in Arkansas

That plan envisioned removing from each closed white school only the particular grade to which Negroes have been assigned.

In Arkansas, residents of Little Rock voted Saturday to keep high schools there closed under the promise of Faubus that they could be reopened on a private basis with state funds.

But the Supreme Court said: "... the constitutional rights of children not to be discriminated against in school admission on grounds of race or color declared by this Court in the Brown (1954 desegregation) case can neither be nullified openly and directly by state legislators or state executive or judicial officers, nor nullified indirectly by them through evasive schemes for segregation, whether attempted 'ingeniously or ingenuously.'"

The Supreme Court has been roundly criticized throughout the South on the grounds that it used "sociology" in deciding the 1954 case instead of citing legal precedent.

Ringing Reaffirmation

It met squarely the frequently-expressed opinion by white southern leaders, including Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), that the Court might reverse its 1954 decision.

The Court reaffirmed it in ringing language, pointing out that Associate Justices Charles E. Whittaker, William J. Brennan Jr. and John M. Harlan have been appointed since 1954. State the opinion:

"The principles announced in that decision and the obedience of the states to them, according to the command of the Constitution, are indispensable for the protection of the freedoms guaranteed by our fundamental charter for all of us.

The decision was awaited by southerners and some Federal district judges with the expectation the Supreme Court would detail further what it meant by "all deliberate speed" in the 1955 implementation decree.

"Appropriate Steps"

It noted that many localities properly could begin desegregation slowly, but added:

"In such circumstances however, the (Federal district) court should scrutinize the program of school authorities to make sure that they had developed arrangements pointed toward the earliest practicable completion of desegregation and had taken appropriate steps to put their program into effect.

"It was made plain that delay in any guise in order to deny the constitutional rights of Negro children could not be countenanced, and that only a prompt start, diligently and earnestly pursued, to eliminate racial segregation from the public schools could constitute good faith compliance."

The Supreme Court justices cited the premise by the Arkansas Governor and Legislature that the 1954 decision is not binging on them.

Article VI Cited

The Court cited Article VI of the Constitution, making the Constitution the "supreme law of the land," and historic acceptance of the Supreme Court as the final interpreter of the Constitution.

"No state legislator executive or judicial officer can war against the Constitution without violating his undertaking to support it," said the Court.

It cited an opinion of Chief Justice Marshall who said the Constitution "becomes a solemn mockery" if Federal court decisions can be nullified.

"A governor who asserts a power to nullify a Federal court order is similarly restrained," said the Court, citing an opinion by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes.

The states have the primary responsibility for providing public education, the Court said.

"But it is equally true that such responsibilities, like all other state activity, must be exercized consistently with Federal constitutional requirements as they apply to state action.

"The Constitution created a government dedicated to equal justice under law. The Fourteenth Amendment embodied and emphasized the ideal.

"State support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds or property cannot be squared with the Amendment's command that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Calls Faubus' Action Drastic

Referring specifically to the Little Rock case, the highest court virtually indicted Faubus and the Arkansas Legislature for causing the outbreak of violence at Central High School last year.

It termed "drastic" the action of Faubus in calling out the militia to stop desegregation last year. The opinion detailed step by step the desegregation story of Little Rock and said resulting conditions are "directly traceable to the actions of legislators and executive officials of the State of Arkansas . . . which have brought about violent resistance."

The Supreme Court acknowledged the Little Rock School Board displayed "entire good faith" and accepted the findings of Judge Lemley that turmoil had injured educational progress. But it added:

"The constitutional rights of respondents (Negro pupils enrolled in Central High) are not to be sacrificed or yielded to the violence and disorder which have followed upon the actions of the Governor and Legislature."

It said law and order in Little Rock must not be preserved by depriving Negroes of their rights. State action caused the trouble, said the Court, and the trouble can be brought under control by State action.

Little Rock Corporation Gets Lease

But Appeal Bench Ordered Check on Action by Board

By Preston McGraw

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 29 (UPI)—A white citizens corporation leased Little Rock's public high schools today, but a Federal appeals court intervened quickly in plans to reopen them as private, segregated institutions.

Judges Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodrough of the Eighth United States Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting at Omaha, Neb., issued an order restraining the School Board from leasing the schools.

The order was directed against the members of the Little Rock School Board, Supt. Virgil Blossom, and "officers, agents, servants, employes, attorneys and all in active concert or participation with them."

It declared they are "restrained from taking any further action to transfer possession, control or operation, directly, or indirectly of the senior high schools of the Little Rock School District, or in any way alter the status quo of the senior high schools insofar as their integrated status is concerned."

It is good for a week, after which the appeals court will hold a hearing on a petition by the National Association for Advancement of Colored People for an injunction.

Faubus Not Surprised

Judge Johnsen said from the bench: "An attempt is being made to reopen Central High School (in Little Rock) as a private school but in reality one that is segregated, to be available to all previous students except Negroes.' This, he said, is "not in harmony with the Court of Appeals plan" for desegregation at Little Rock.

"We're not passing on the propriety of closing the schools," the judge said. "We're not ruling on the constitutionality of acts of the Arkansas State Legislature." What the judges are doing, he explained, is attempting to maintain the status quo pending a full Court of Appeals hearing of the case before them.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who sponsored the private schools plan to sidestep U. S. Supreme Court desegregation orders, said he was not surprised and has further plans. "I don't know what my next move will be at the moment," he said. "But the situation may develop pretty rapidly.

"I haven't surrendered. I am not ready to surrender and I do not intend to surrender."

He said it could develop that the Federal Government may try to stop the children from going to school. He said whether the schools try to open privately Tuesday or Wednesday will be a decision the corporation will have to make on advice of its attorneys.

Signed Before Order

Faubus pointedly noted that, "The schools were already leased," when he learned of the restraining order.

[T. J. Raney, president of the private group that leased the schools, said he still plans to open the schools Tuesday "unless we get some sort of direct order not to proceed," the Associated Press reported.

[Attorney General Bruce Bennett said he believed the order does not prevent opening the schools under the present plan.

[Wayne V. Upton, president of the School Board, said "we shall have to reconsider."

["If the school corporation is not named as a defendant, or is not included in the wording of the restraining order, the schools will reopen in the morning," Bennett said.]

The four schools, in which more than 3000 students of the 10th, 11th and 12th grades are enrolled, have been closed since Sept. 2 by the integration crisis.

It was the first attempt to evade the Supreme Court's decision by setting up a private school system with public funds.

The signing of the lease was under attack in Omaha less than an hour after it was signed.

The appeals judges had a guide, a new, sweeping formal opinion by the U. S. Supreme Court, which said:

"State support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds, or property cannot be squared with the Fourteenth Amendment's command that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The Supreme Court handed down the formal opinion to back up its Sept. 12 ruling that integration at Central High School in Little Rock must proceed.

Rent Not Determined

The heart of the private school plan is an 1875 law which allows a corporation to lease unused or closed school buildings and operate them as private schools.

Under special laws passed by the Legislature a month ago, the state agreed to pay for the tuition of each student to the precise amount he now get for his education from state, county and city.

"The rental value (of the schools) shall be determined at the end of each school year by three arbitrators," the lease said. "It shall be less than $10,000 a year."

The state-paid tuition will take care of all the normal expenses of operating the schools. Each student, however, is expected to be charged personal tuition of $1 to $5 a year to pay the rent.

School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom said he declined an offer to be superintendent of the private school system.

"I told them I could not do it for several reasons," he said. "I feel it would be in contempt of Federal court, and I do not think I would be in a proper position to administer a public and a private school program at the same time."

Blossom Under Injunction

Blossom said that when the lease becomes effective Tuesday, he will become superintendent of the first nine grades in the Little Rock public school system. All elementary and junior high schools are operating normally.

Blossom said he is under a Federal injunction not to interfere with desegregation, which put him in a "peculiar" position, compared with other school employes.

The corporation offered new contracts to all teachers and other employes of the high schools. Blossom said he had no idea how many of the 175 teachers want to continue in the private system.

The teachers are all under contract to the School Board, which has to pay them if they don't want to work in private schools.

"We will use them (those who choose not to work for the private schools) in junior high or in some way which will be determined when we know who, what and how," Blossom said.

The corporation agreed to release the teachers immediately if the School Board takes over the high schools again.

It also agreed to release any or all of the schools when the board can reopen them as public schools.

The School Board noted in the resolution declaring the schools vacant and open for lease that it wanted to support "any feasible plan leading to a high school educational program although it is capable of and would prefer to operate its own high schools as part of a system of public education."

Confusion Spreads As Teachers Advised Not to Participate

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Attorneys for the teachers in Little Rock high schools said Monday night they have advised them not to "participate in the operation of the Little Rock high schools by any private corporation."

The action came while school officials and officers of the private corporation that leased the schools Monday were conferring over the next step in the legally-tangled situation.

Two federal circuit judges, in Omaha, issued a restraining order Monday which forbade altering the "status quo of the senior high schools insofar as their integrated status is concerned."

Federal marshals in Little Rock immediately began serving copies of the notice on several hundred people—all those directly and indirectly involved in the transfer of the school properties to the private corporation.

Confusion spread rapidly, not only among the officials concerned, but among the 3,700 high school students and their parents as to whether the schools would open Tuesday morning.

Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the private school corporation that leased the high schools, said earlier that they would.

He stuck to that position even after word reached Little Rock of the decision in Omaha. He said his attorneys advised him that the ruling of the federal judges did not alter the situation.

Immediately, conferences began and none of the principal figures in the case could be reached for comment.

Hours later, Bruce T. Bullion and Eugene R. Warren, attorneys for the Classroom Teachers Assn., issued the following statement.

"We have been advised by the attorneys for the Little Rock school board of the issuance of a restraining order this afternoon at 4:10 p.m. by the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals restraining the Little Rock School Board, its officers, agents, servants, employes, attorneys and any and all persons acting in concert therewith, directly or indirectly, from leasing or carrying into operation a lease or transferring control or in any way altering the status of the Little Rock high schools from their present integrated basis.

"We are therefore advising all teaching personnel in the high schools in Little Rock to commit no act in violation of this restraining order, and not to participate in the operation of the Little Rock high schools by any corporation until this restraining order has been dissolved or modified."

Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent of schools, said the members of the School Board are standing by for a meeting.

They were reported going into a session with the officers of the private school corporation.

Arkansas Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett hastened to the official residence of Gov. Orval E. Faubus after he received a copy of the order issued by Federal Judges Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodrough in Omaha.

They were closeted together for several hours.

Officials at the governors' residence declined to say who else, if anybody, was in Faubus' office. They would not say what Faubus and Bennett were discussing.

There was a report that federal marshals were trying to reach the governor to serve him with a copy of the federal order.

It became apparent, earlier, that many of the high school teachers were doubtful about going back into the classrooms Tuesday, in the face of the restraining order.

Dr. Raney said some 20 per cent of the Central High teachers had not signed contracts with the corporation at a late hour Monday afternoon.

He also said the corporation has no funds of its own to operate the schools. If enjoined from using state funds, he said, the corporation would have no means of financing the operation.

He said it has no plans for leasing other buildings — churches, empty office buildings, etc. — in case the court denied the use of the high schools.

"In other words, you are staking everything on the private school plan, as it now stands," a reporter said.

"That is correct," Raney replied.

Soon after the actual transfer of the properties to the corporation, through leasing, took place, the U.S. Supreme Court, reviewing the whole history of the critical Little Rock case, stated in an opinion that "evasive schemes for segregation" are unconstitutional.

Faubus said he believed the schools could open Tuesday morning, and classroom work go on, while the court actions are being fought out.

The order issued by the two federal judges, however, said the high schools must maintain their integrated status.

If it is obeyed, that presumably would preclude any Tuesday opening.

Raney said he would comply with an order. There was no word from his office, however, hours after copies of the restraining order were in Little Rock.

Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent of schools, said the members of the School Board are standing by for a meeting.

They were reported going into a session with the officers of the private school corporation.

Arkansas Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett hastened to the official residence of Gov. Orval E. Faubus after he received a copy of the order issued by Federal Judges Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodrough in Omaha.

They were closeted together for several hours.

Officials at the governors' residence declined to say who else, if anybody, was in Faubus' office. They would not say what Faubus and Bennett were discussing.

There was a report that federal marshals were trying to reach the governor to serve him with a copy of the federal order.

It became apparent, earlier, that many of the high school teachers were doubtful about going back into the classrooms Tuesday, in the face of the restraining order.

Dr. Raney said some 20 per cent of the Central High teachers had not signed contracts with the corporation at a late hour Monday afternoon.

He also said the corporation has no funds of its own to operate the schools. If enjoined from using state funds, he said, the corporation would have no means of financing the operation.

He said it has no plans for leasing other buildings — churches, empty office buildings, etc. — in case the court denied the use of the high schools.

"In other words, you are staking everything on the private school plan, as it now stands," a reporter said.

"That is correct," Raney replied.

Soon after the actual transfer of the properties to the corporation, through leasing, took place, the U.S. Supreme Court, reviewing the whole history of the critical Little Rock case, stated in an opinion that "evasive schemes for segregation" are unconstitutional.

Faubus said he believed the schools could open Tuesday morning, and classroom work go on, while the court actions are being fought out.

The order issued by the two federal judges, however, said the high schools must maintain their integrated status.

If it is obeyed, that presumably would preclude any Tuesday opening.

Raney said he would comply with an order. There was no word from his office, however, hours after copies of the restraining order were in Little Rock.

DARK OMEN IN THE SMOG OF EDUCATION
. . . This sign went up today on campus of Little Rock's Central High

Urges citizens to stand firm

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 30 —(AP)— The four Little Rock high schools remained closed today and signs were placed on the campuses which read: "This school closed by order of the federal government."

The move to open the high schools as private institutions was halted officially at 8 a.m. (CST) when Dr. T. J. Raney, head of the operating corporation, declared a court injunction made it impossible.

He said:

"The Little Rock Private School Corp. made arrangements to open the senior high schools to offer educational facilities to all high school students.

"Through the concerted efforts of the government of the United States and the NAACP, the Little Rock Private School Corp. has now been enjoined and prohibited from operating the high schools."

"AS UNFAIR AND unwarranted as we think this action is, we are now prohibited from using the buildings despite our sincere desire and strenuous efforts to give the 4000 high school students of Little Rock an opportunity to continue their education as soon as possible," Raney said.

"The closing of our senior high schools is now the full responsibility of the federal government and the NAACP. It is quite evident that they are ready to sacrifice the educational opportunity of 4000 students to satisfy their consuming desire to mix the races in our school, public or private."

Gov. Orval E. Faubus said:

"As long as the people stand firm, a way will be found to preserve our traditions and educate our children."

He said in the face of the injunction that other avenues and means of providing education for the students will be explored.

"WE THINK THE ACTION of the federal government is illegal. But if the injuctive action of the court is made permanent, it will make our efforts more difficult but not at all impossible," the governor said.

Raney said the corporation was restrained by a court order granted in Omaha, Neb., yesterday by two judges of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The judges moved swiftly at the request of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to keep the school board and the corporation from opening the schools.

Raney did not say what the corporation planned to do next.

Shortly after Raney read the statement to newsmen, a school guard tried to keep the sign from being placed on the Central High campus.

A BRIEF STRUGGLE ensued and the workman who tried to erect the sign started to leave. But an employe of the school came out and told the guard. "He is supposed to put it up."

Herschel Goodman, one of the corporation directors, said "It's like a chess game. We made our move. They made theirs. Now all we can do is wait."

Federal marshals clouded the plan to reopen the schools when they fanned out over the city last night serving scores of persons with copies of a restraining order.

The order instructed all persons connected with the private school plan not to take "further action to transfer possession, control or operation, directly or indirectly," of Little Rock schools.

It also forbade altering the "status quo of the senior high schools insofar as their integrated status is concerned."

THE ORDER CAME a few hours after the school board had turned the four high school buildings over to the Little Rock Private School Corp. and plans were in the mill to open the schools today.

The judges made their ruling retroactive to last Thursday after Justice Department Atty. Donald MacGuineas said the school lease had been executed in haste to complete action before the hearing.

Whether the schools were under control of the school board or the private corporation wasn't clear.

THUS THE city's 3700 high school students were again thrown into indecision. Their schools originally were scheduled to open three weeks ago, but have yet to attend a day of classes.

Teachers were advised by their attorneys not to take any part in the operation of the high schools by a private group.

Copies of the restraining order were served later by federal marshals on teachers and others connected with the schools.

U. S. Marshal R. Beal Kidd said Faubus telephoned him later and Kidd read the court order to him. Kidd said that would be sufficient and there would be no need to serve the governor physically.

THE RESTRAINING order is in force until Oct. 6 when a three-judge panel of the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals will meet in St. Louis to hear the case for a temporary injunction.

The order was issued by Justices Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodbrough after NAACP Attys. Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., and Thurgood Marshall of New York appeared before them.

Earlier in the day, the U. S. Supreme Court, in reveiwing the history of the critical Little Rock case, stated in an opinion that "evasive schemes for segregation" are unconstitutional.

MAKESHIFT private classes continued at Charlottesville, Va., where facilities in homes and churches are available to about 800 of the 1700 pupils affected by closure orders of Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. Also closed are six schools in Norfolk, idling about 10,000 pupils and one at Front Royal affecting about 1000.

Sixty Protestant clergymen in Norfolk requested officials to "open our public schools immediately." A group of 82 parents formed an organization to work for prompt reopening of the school at Front Royal.

NAACP Secretary Urges Little Rock To Refuse Suspending Minnie Brown

Official Learns Action Against Negro Girl was Proposed Because She "Had Talked Back" To A Fellow Student At School

New York, Feb. 13—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peolpe today urged the Little Rock Board of Education to "reject the recommended suspension" of Minnie Jean Brown, 16-year-old Negro student of Little Rock's Central High School.

In a telegram to Wayne Upton president of the Little Rock Board Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, cited the harassment to which Miss Brown and other Negro students at the school have been subjected. The suspenson of Miss Brown on the charge of "talking back to a white girl," Mr. Wilkins pointed out, "is an absurdity which your board cannot accept. . . . in the extraordinary situation obtaining at Central High School.'

Your records will show that the New York office of NAACP has refrained from injecting itself into the Little Rock situation. However the threatened permanent suspension of Minnie Jean Brown impels us to suggest that in the interest of fair play in which Americans everywhere have a stake the Board of Education reject the recommended suspension.

Minnie Jean Brown is formally charged in a letter from her principal with "Talking back to a white girl." We submit that in an ordinary situation this would be an unthinkable basis for xpulsion and that in the extraordinary situation obtaining at Central High School. it is an absurdity which your board cannot accept.

Making due allowance for the pressures under which you are operating we nevertheless feel that as reponsible citizens you cannot approve of this tactic.

In his letter the principal admits by inference that there was provocation in the Brown case yet the provocation has not been penalized in any fashion while the most drastic punishment has been recommended for Minnie Jean.

It has been evident for several months that the continuing harassments at Central High have been the work of a very few individual students. Reasonable Americans who sympathize with your Board as it wrestles with a situation made more difficult than it actually is, nevertheless wonder why the usual disciplinary measures inherent in firm admniistration have not been taken to curb the tiny minority and thur permit the more than 1,900 students to attend classes in peace.

Instead, the persecuted Negro students have been told in effect to grin and bear it and in silence with the penalty of expulsion to be imposed for even "talking back." The overwhelming majority of white students at Central High has been fair. The substantial and thoughtful white citizens of Little Rock have been fair.

The nine Negro students have conducted themselves admirably under trying circumstances. We express confidence that the Board of education in considering the Brown matter will match this record.

NAACP Seeks More Action By Troops At Little Rock

NEW YORK (AP)—The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People Monday night renewed its demand for more militant action by troops at Little Rock Central High School.

Otherwise, the NAACP claimed, "We are confronted with the incredible spectacle of the government of the United States placing the burden of enforcing the orders of its courts upon the slender shoulders and the young hearts of eight teenaged Negro students.

The eight Negroes have been attending Central's first integrated classes since last Sept. 25 under troop protection.

The NAACP originally complained that the troops failed to intervene in at least 42 incidents where white students were the aggressors against the eight Negroes.

The Army replied that the troops are prepared to intervene if necessary to aid school authorities and to carry out other unspecified instructions.

NAACP Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins released the text of a new letter addressed to Army Secretary Wilbur M. Brucker. It read in part:

"We suggest strongly that the general mission of the military personnel (and we are not familiar with the detailed instructions) would seem to require that they not only assist the school authorities, but insist on affirmative action by the latter to effect the purpose of the court's order.

"It does not seem reasonable that the order of the court contemplates only the safe conduct of the Negro students to the front doors of Central High School and abandonment thereafter to such harassment as might be devised by some white students and condoned by the officials in charge."

The NAACP contends that only about 30 out of a white student body of 2,000 is responsible for the harassment of the eight Negroes.

NAACP Asks More Militant Rule At Little Rock

NEW YORK, March 31.—(AP)—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Monday night renewed its demand for more militant action by troops at Little Rock Central High School.

Otherwise, the NAACP claimed, "we are confronted with the incredible spectacle of the Government of the United States placing the burden of enforcing the orders of its courts upon the slender shoulders and the young hearts of eight teenaged Negro students."

The eight Negroes have been attending Central's first integrated classes since Sept. 25 under troop projection.

The NAACP originally complained that the troops failed to intervene in at least 42 incidents where white students were the aggressors against the eight Negroes.

The Army replied that the troops are prepared to intervene if necessary to aid school authorities and to carry out other unspecified instructions.

Little Rock Transfer Up in Air

Judges to Hear Injunction Plea

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(UPI)—Little Rock school officials worked out the details Sunday of transferring four closed high schools to a corporation that will reopen them as private institutions with rigid segregation.

The officials doubted that the transfer could be completed in time to reopen the schools today. After today, it may be too late for them ever to be reopened as private, segregated schools.

The reason is that two judges of the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will hear at Omaha at 10 a.m. today a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's plea for an injunction to stop the transfer.

If the judges issue an injunction, it will stop the transfer. The NAACP wants, if it can't get an injunction, an order permitting Negro children to integrate schools under the private school plan.

In Norfolk, Va., the other main center of resistance to integration, Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. closed six junior and senior high schools because the School Board assigned 17 negroes to them. It left 10,000 children without schools.

The U.S. Supreme Court meets today in Washington to issue a formal opinion spelling out its Sept. 12 order to Little Rock high schools to continue with its gradual integration plan.

At the same time, the Supreme Court may explain exactly what it meant three years ago when it ordered public schools integrated with "all deliberate speed."

Mrs. Pearl Lewis, a Negro, integrated the Pulaski Heights Methodist Church, in the best section of Little Rock, Sunday.

"It was a deliberate attempt to embarrass me because of the stand I've taken," the Rev. J. Kenneth Shamblin, the minister, said. The subject of his sermon Sunday was "Friendship."

A white woman who identified herself as "Mrs. Jones," but said that wasn't her name, invited Mrs. Lewis.

"I enjoyed myself, too," Mrs. Lewis said. "I'll come back again if I'm invited."

The congregation ignored Mrs. Lewis, but the Rev. Charles Smith, assistant pastor, and members of the congregation, argued with newsmen that they should not report the incident.

The School Board's decision to lease out the four schools was reinforced by a 19,470-7,561 vote for continued segregation of schools in a special election Saturday.

A majority vote for segregation was necessary to put into effect Gov. Orval E. Faubus' plan to open the schools under private control to evade the U.S. Supreme Court's immediate integration order.

The Little Rock Private Schools Corporation to take over the schools was organized a week ago and the Little Rock School Board went to work with it as soon as the results of the election became known.

DECISION HALTS SCHOOL LEASING

Order Against Little Rock Proposal Extended

(Other news of the public school integration situation on Page 4.)

By RELMAN MORIN

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A federal court extended Monday the order that prevents a Little Rock group from leasing the city's high schools and operating them as private, segregated institutions.

It scheduled the next hearing on the case for Oct. 15 in St. Louis.

Legally, this freezes the situation in Little Rock. The schools remain closed and beyond the reach of the Little Rock Private School Corp.

But Dr. T. J. Raney, corporation president, said his group will open private schools as soon as possible, without waiting for the Oct. 15 decision. The corporation is looking for classroom space, teachers and money.

"We will open as soon as we get things rolling," Raney said.

Raney said he did not know whether the schools can be opened this week or next.

THREE HEAR CASE

Three judges of the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals heard attorneys representing the federal government, the Little Rock School Board and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored Peo-

The pleadings concerned an NAACP request for a preliminary injunction to freeze the situation in Little Rock, pending action on an appeal from an earlier ruling in the case.

Two weeks ago, the NAACP challenged the constitutionality of the Arkansas law, authorizing private corporations to lease the buildings and facilities of the public schools, and to use state funds for their support.

RULING APPEALED

Federal Dist. Judge John E. Miller declined to accept jurisdiction. He said the Appeals Court would have to take the case. The NAACP appealed Miller's ruling and got a temporary restraining order.

Donald MacGuineas, Justice Department attorney, said the Oct. 15 hearing will cover three main points:

1. Was Judge Miller correct in his ruling that the Appeals Court must decide on the constitutionality of Arkansas' private school law?

LEASE QUESTIONED

2. Whether Miller, having so ruled, should have asked the Appeals Court to convene and hear the case? Miller made no official request.

3. Is the lease, by which the private group acquired title to the high schools, invalid because it was designed to frustrate the orders of the supreme court to proceed with integration in Little Rock?

Kenneth Coffelt, a pro-segregation attorney in Little Rock, said of the Appeals Court ruling: "There is not a bit of law for what they're doing up there in St. Louis."

But Clarence Laws, NAACP field representative, commented: "It is our view that the Supreme Court, in its opinion last week, made it crystal clear that the court will not permit a community to use subterfuge to circumvent the Supreme Court decision."

SEEKS HALT CHANGE

The three judges—M. C. Matthes, Harvey M. Johnsen, and Joseph W. Woodrough—asked frequent questions.

Richard Butler, attorney for the Little Rock School Board, told the judges: "If you restrain (the corporation), there will be no high schools in Little Rock for some indefinite time."

In reply, Thurgood Marshall, general counsel for the NAACP said: "We are not contesting, as yet, the governor's power to close the schools." Then he added, "We are asking solely for relief from the action turning over the schools to somebody else."

Roy Wilkins Labels Faubus' 'Valuable' Foe

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus is a "valuable enemy," Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said Sunday.

"I have no bad words for him," said Wilkins. "I trust he stays healthy and active, coming out on the odd-numbered days with new plans to replace those which did not work on the even-numbered days."

Addressing the 14th annual NAACP state conference, Wilkins, of New York, asserted that Faubus had "aided in many ways in clarifying the issue of segregation."

Wilkins—his remarks punctuated by applause from a virtual all-Negro audience of 1,500—said Faubus had:

1. Disposed effectively of the interposition proposal. He used the ultimate in state interposition — troops—and did not succeed.

2. Aroused and educated to our (NAACP) point of view millions of people here in America and abroad who had little or no feeling on the issue. He and Little Rock have embarrassed our country in its foreign relations.

3. Challenged and brought out the courage and heroism of the nine children who went to Central High School, and through them he fired the enthusiasm of countless white and colored people who were believers but who had not been baptized in the spirit. They needed a human image and he gave them nine human images.

4. Forced the State Legislature and the Little Rock School Board to act in such a way as to bring forth the inclusive ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court Sept. 29, thus blocking others from even temporary success should they try to use similar action.

5. Caused a temporary ruling to be handed down forbidding the leasing of school buildings for private, segregated schools.

FAUBUS CALLED 'VALUABLE FOE'

NAACP Leader Says Arkansas Governor Helped Clarify Race Issue

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Oval E. Faubus is a "valuable enemy," Roy Wilkin, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said Sunday.

"I have no bad words for him," said Wilkins. "I trust he stays healthy and active, coming out on the odd-numbered days with new plans to replace those which did not work on the even-numbered days."

Addressing the 14th annual NAACP state conference, Wilkins, of New York, asserted that Faubus had "aided in many ways in clarifying the issue of segregation."

Wilkins—his remarks punctuated by applause from a virtual all-Negro audience of 1,500—said Faubus had:

1. Disposed effectively of the interposition proponal. He used the ultimate in state interposition — troops—and did not succeed.

2. Aroused and educated to our (NAACP) point of view millions of people here in America and abroad who had little or no feeling on the issue. He and Little Rock have embarrassed our country in its foreign relations.

Fired Up.

3. Challenged and brought out the courage and heroism of the nine children who went to Central High School, and through them he fired the enthusiasm of countless white and colored people who were believers but who had not been baptized in the spirit. They needed a human image and he gave them nine human images.

4. Forced the State Legislature and the Little Rock School Board to act in such a way as to bring forth the inclusive ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court Sept. 29 thus blocking others from even temporary success should they try to use similar action.

5. Caused a temporary ruling to be handed down forbidding the leasing of school buildings for private, segregated schools.

Wilkins noted that private schools for white students only had been set up in Little Rock to replace the public high schools Faubus closed to avoid integration.

He said Negroes should not make a similar move.

"The segregationists have set up their temporary schools to defy the law," Wilkins observed. "If we join them and set up our schools, we will be defying the law, also."

Sooner or later, he continued "sober people will demand an end to all the futile gestures."

Wilkins said "it is conceivable that if the states choose to deny everyone an education rather than give up segregation, the federal governmen will find a way to fill the breach."

NAACP Calls Faubus Valued Enemy

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — About 1,500 Negroes thundered agreement Sunday when a high official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People called Gov. Orval E. Faubus a valuable enemy.

"I trust he stays healthy and active, coming out on the odd-numbered days with new plans to replace those which did not work on the even-numbered days," said Roy Wilkins of New York NAACP executive secretary.

"Victory is near at hand," he said in a speech launching a statewide NAACP membership drive.

Wilkins urged Little Rock Negroes to stand fast in their fight for integrated schools, and rejected any suggestion that they open private schools of their own.

"I know it is hard to watch some of the white students getting some little education while your own high school students are shut out of school by your governor," said Wilkins.

Wilkins promised new, undisclosed legal moves in the Little Rock dispute. He predicted soon "sober people" would demand that the closed schools be reopened.

Faubus Takes Last-Minute Stand

Voting Light as New School Board Is Picked by Little Rock Voters

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 6 (AP)—Early voting was light today as Little Rock residents marked their choices for a new School Board which must cope with the problem of meeting local demands for segregation in the face of Federal court orders to integrate.

Two slates were on the ballot—one carrying the tacit backing of Gov. Orval E. Faubus and another group the Governor labeled as integrationist.

The new Board members will fill the posts of five members who resigned because of the integration impasse and a sixth who was elected to Congress.

All 13 candidates for the six positions have announced their opposition to integration. Campaigning was keyed largely to the question of who was against it the strongest.

Faubus, whose school-closing action touched off the current stalemate, maintained a hands-off policy toward the election until yesterday, declaring, "I don't vote in the Little Rock district."

But less than 24 hours before the polls were scheduled to open the Governor branded a slate of candidates backed by businessmen as "the integrationist slate."

The candidates Faubus labeled intregrationist are W. F. Rector, a real estate and insurance executive; Everett Tucker, an industrialist; Ted Lamb, an advertising executive; Russell H. Matson Jr., a building contractor, and Mrs. Charles W. Stephens, a clubwoman.

Members of the opposing slate, which has pledged itself to support Faubus, are Traffic Judge R. W. Laster; C. C. Railey, a union business manager; Ben D. Rowland, attorney and former school administrator; Mrs. Pauline Woodson, a real estate executive, and Mrs. Margaret Morrison, a housewife.

One candidate, Ed I. McKinley Jr. is unopposed. McKinley is an attorney and a former State Banking Commissioner. He seeks the post to be vacated when Dr. Dale Alford Jr. takes the congressional seat in January he won from Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark.) with a write-in campaign in the Nov. 4 general election.

Dr. George P. Branscum, a dentist, and John W. Clayton, an insurance executive, are in the race as independents.

Faubus Backing Influence Vote

Governor-Favored Slate For School Board Takes Early 2-1 Lead

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Dec. 6.—Faubus-backed candidates in the Little Rock School Board election jumped into an early lead here Saturday in what appeared to be a light vote on the segregation question.

With only 2 of 36 precincts reporting, some candidates backed by Gov. Orval Faubus had a 2 to 1 lead over candidates the Governor had denounced.

A total of 500 ballots had been tabulated. Some 30,000 voted in the congressional election Nov. 4.

Slates Are Listed

The five-member slate which apparently had the Governor's backing included Municipal Judge R. W. Laster; C. C. Railey, a labor union official; Ben D. Rowland Sr., attorney and former school official; Mrs. Pauline Woodson, vice president of a realty firm, and Mrs. Margaret Morrison, housewife who drew publicity recently when she took her Negro maid to church with her one Sunday. A church spokesman later said her action was designed to "embarrass" the pastor, who had expressed liberal views on integration.

Also in the race, and backed by the States Rights Council, were Dr. George P. Branscum, a dentist, and John W. Clayton, an insurance executive. The States Rights Council is a segregationist offshoot of the Citizens Council, formed when some members of the Citizens Council left that organization some months ago.

McKinley Assured Seat

The slate which drew the Governor's opposition, and sometimes has been referred to as a "businessman's slate," included insurance executive W. F. Rector; Everett Tucker Jr., an industrial association official; Ted Lamb, advertising and public relations executive; Russell H. Matson Jr., a contractor, and Mrs. Charles W. Stephens, a former president of the Parent-Teacher Association here.

Voting was reported light to moderately heavy as Little Rock voters turned out for the third election in the past four months in which integration has been a hot issue.

Definitely assured of one seat on the six-member board was Ed I. McKinley, attorney and former state banking commissioner, who drew no opposition.

ACTION ORDERED AT LITTLE ROCK

New Integration Decision Reaches City

The document—a mandate of a three-judge panel of the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals—apparently set the stage for another court hearing in the prolonged battle over school integration at Little Rock.

But its only immediate effect was confirmation of the appellate judges' Nov. 10 ruling at St. Louis. They held then that Little Rock's empty public high school buildings could not be leased legally for use as segregated private schools.

At the same time, the judges directed that the school board take affirmative steps toward integration. They did not make detailed suggestions.

The mandate orders District Judge Miller to enjoin the school board and all persons acting with the board from leasing any property of the Little Rock school district for use as segregated schools. The appellate judges' temporary injunction against such leasing continues in effect pending Miller's new order.

Miller also was directed to issue an injunction forbidding acts serving to impede, thwart or frustrate the execution" of the Little Rock integration plan.

Miller was told that it was up to him to decide what affirmative steps should be taken in Little Rock to "facilitate and accomplish" integration.

Miller has indicated he probably will schedule a new hearing in the case, but he refused to disclose any specific plans pending receipt of the mandate.

The appellate court order thwarted an attempt by the Little Rock Private School Corp. to lease the public high schools which Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed last September to avoid court-ordered integration.

The corporation later opened a private all-white high school n other quarters. The corporation schools operate on public contributions.

LITTLE ROCK SEES NO SCHOOL ACTION

All 13 Running for Board of Education Vow to Bar Integration

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 29—Little Rock voters will elect next Saturday a new school board, which will have to deal with the integration dispute that prompted the mass resignation of five of the old board members.

Federal court orders requiring the integration of the city's public schools — currently stymied by the closing of the high schools by Gov. Orval E. Faubus — will be binding on the new board just as they were on the last one.

The new school board also must cope with the ruling by the Federal Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals that the board "move forward" with the 1955 United States Supreme Court integration plan and start it again on its "own initiative."

Voters for Segregation

Most residents of Little Rock oppose integration. They voted three to one in September to close the high schools rather than integrate them — a choice outlined under a law passed by the Legislature last August.

All thirteen candidates in the board race are avowed segregationists and have said that they would not move toward integration.

Ordinarily, the Little Rock voters would fill only two of the six positions on the board in this election. But all five board members resigned on Nov. 12, declaring that their position was one of "utter hopelessness, helplessness and frustration."

Alford Going to Congress

The sixth member of the board — Dr. Dale Alford — also will be leaving. He was elected to Congress this month as a pro-segregationist write-in opponent of Representative Brooks Hays.

One of the thirteen candidates is unopposed. He is Ed I. McKinley Jr., a lawyer and a former State Banking Commissioner. He is seeking the full three-year term being vacated by Dr. Alford, whose term ends this year.

The other candidates, running for one, two and three-year terms, are:

Ted L. Lamb, an advertising executive; Mrs. Pauline Woodson, the vice president of a real estate concern and Dr. George P. Branscum, a dentist. Dr. Branscun is a former member of the pro-segregation Capital Citizens Council and ran unsuccessfully for the board in 1957.

Also, Russell H. Matson Jr., a contractor, and C. C. Railey, business manager of a plumber's union; Mrs. Charles W. Stephens, a housewife and former president of the Central High School P. T. A., and Robert W. Laster, municipal traffic judge and a previous unsuccessful candidate for the board.

Also, W. F. Rector, a real estate and insurance executive; Ben D. Rowland Sr., a lawyer; Everett Tucker Jr., executive director of the Little Rock Industrial Development Company; Mrs. Margaret Morrison, a housewife, and John W. Clayton, an insurance man.

One of the first tasks the new board faces will be the selection of a superintendent. Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent since 1953, was discharged by the old board members and will leave his job tomorrow.

Board split, 3-3—

L. R. election fails to end deadlock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 8—(AP)—The deadlock over desegregation here remained unbroken today following an inconclusive election, in which three business men opposed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus won seats on the Little Rock School Board.

Faubus charged the three were integrationists who had worked against his successful bid for a third term in last Summer's election.

Three others elected to the school board had the implied backing of the governor.

Seemingly split on the degree of resistance to integration, the new board soon will have to cope with an uncompromising federal order for "affirmative steps" toward racially mixed classes in public schools.

ALL 13 CANDIDATES for the six board seats had professed to be segregationists. Their differences centered on the price.

Apparently only day-by-day developments will tell what direction the new board will take.

As to the implication of Saturday's relatively light but close voting, therewere as close views as viewpoints despite the silence of Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who had sought to influence the results.

"This is the first crack in the Faubus edifice and I predict that his entire political empire, founded as it is upon misrepresentation and bigotry, will soon be crumbling at his feet," asserted Ted L. Lamb, an advertising executive who defeated two pro-Faubus candidates in a three-way race.

But Amis Guthridge, attorney for the pro-segregation Capital Citizens Council, analyzed the voting this way:

"OUR PEOPLE took the election for granted and refused to run scared."

Gov. Faubus injected himself into the school board race in an election-eve maneuver. He said these five candidates were integrationists:

Lamb; W. F. (Billy) Rector, an insurance executive; Everett Tucker Jr., executive director of an industrial development company; Russell Matson Jr., a contractor, and Mrs. Charles W. Stephens, former president of the Central High School Parent-Teachers Assn.

The Faubus-denounced five placed great emphasis on a need to preserve public schools—even in the midst of racial crisis.

Lamb, Tucker and Matson won.

Rector and Mrs. Stephens lost close races to members of the pro-Faubus, citizens council-endorsed slate. Mrs. Stephens, however, said she planned to seek at least a partial recount.

Triumphant pro-Faubus candidates included Ben D. Rowland Sr., an attorney, and Robert W. Laster, a city traffic judge who had said he would go to jail if necessary to preserve segregation.

The sixth seat went to Atty. Ed. I. McKinley Jr., who was unopposed. McKinley also was endorsed by the Citizens Council.

U.S. Court Ruling Sought On Faubus School Plan

Board's Action May Delay Showdown; Segregationists Want 4 Members Ousted

By The Associated Press

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 23.—The Little Rock School Board asked United States District Court Tuesday to say whether it can legally lease four closed high-school buildings to a corporation for use as private segregated schools.

The board said it was willing to lease the schools if the Federal Court would assure the board it would not be held in contempt for doing so.

Amis Guthridge, segregationist attorney and Citizens Council leader, immediately declared the action showed the board is more interested in seeing the mixing of the races in schools than seeing them operate.

Faubus Claims It's Legal

He called the action absolutely unnecessary.

Governor Orval E. Faubus has claimed his private-school plan could legally circumvent the United States Supreme Court's integration order.

To avert integration, Faubus closed the schools before they opened.

The board voted, 4 to 1, to ask the Federal Court for instructions in the integration case. If the court should answer that the board may not legally lease the schools, it could snarl Faubus' plans to get the four high schools reopened next week.

Board Notes Conflict

The people of the school district will vote Saturday on whether they want integrated schools. Faubus precluded that the voters' answer would be "no" and announced a plan for reopening the schools on a private segregated basis sometime next week.

In its petition to Federal Court, the board also noted the conflict in federal rulings that the schools must integrate and the so-called Faubus package providing for continued segregation under private-school operations.

The board's action may cause a postponement of the impending showdown. Only the board now has the power to lease the schools, and without the buildings the recently created private corporation would have to seek other plants to house the nearly 4,000 students now idled by the showdown.

Also blurring the legal picture is a recall petition being circulated by the Central High Mothers' League, a strongly prosegregation group seeking the ouster of all but one of the present board members.

Will Consume Time

If the petitions are signed by the required 6,300 qualified voters, an election would have to be called to see if the people wanted to replace these board members.

All these moves will consume time. The students of Little Rock are into their fourth week of waiting for classes to begin.

The board's petition filed late Tuesday asked the court for a quick answer, noting it wished schools to open as quickly as possible.

In another development, a group of Arkansas missionary Baptist ministers and laymen called for Congressional action to make the question of school integration and segregation subject to local-option elections.

The estimated 3,400 Little Rock High School students consider Kennedy, who is "a very high-grade man who must be regarded seriously." Georgia's Marvin Griffin claims credit for spearheading the drive to make Kennedy the vice-presidential nominee at the 1956 convention. Griffin said Kennedy "has a lot of friends" in Georgia.

'We're Democrats There'

Others of the Southern governors are willing to say kind words about Kennedy, and, in the same breath, declare that there is no sentiment in their states for a third-party movement in 1960.

Tennessee Governor-elect Buford Ellington said there is no prospect that Tennesseans will push for a third party. "We're Democrats there and always have believed in working out our troubles within the party," he said.

Expects Rights' Plank

Tennessee Governor Frank Clement thinks the Democrats can successfully write a civil-rights plank that will hold the party together.

"We are fast approaching the time when we're going to have to write something, or else destroy our position of leadership," he said.

Earlier in the day, Clement told a news conference he thinks President Eisenhower should sit down with all the nation's governors and try to work out an answer to the desegregation problem.

"I think he is absolutely not meeting his responsibilities in this matter," Clement said. "He needs to do something about the problem. We need a face-to-face conference between all governors and the President and his advisers, not to coerce, not to assess blame, but to seek an honorable solution."

Has Resolution Ready

Clement said he has a resolution he will not offer at the conference unless he believes it has a chance of adoption. It would call for a "reaffirmation of states' rights on the one hand, and for State responsibilities to protect the rights of all its citizens on the other."

The desegregation problem in the South is so severe, Clement said, that efforts to solve it "may well determine whether your child and mine will die on a foreign battlefield or here at home."

Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus told a news conference that Communists eight years ago forsook their previous aims of infiltrating the proletariat and moved into the field of communications, newspapers, magazines, radio, and television, and into the ministry, and into educational circles.

Faubus said he had no idea how successful the Communists have been in this effort, "But I know they are industrious and hard workers."

'Some Good, Some Bad'

Does Faubus feel the press has given fair coverage of the Little Rock situation? He was asked.

"I'm sorry I can't say that I feel that way," he replied. But, Faubus added, he would not condemn all the press because, like other groups, there are some good, some bad.

"I like to see people practice what they preach," Faubus declared. "If the ministers want integration, let them integrate their churches. What better place is there to begin than the house of God? These people should put into practice what they are attempting to force us to do."

Pulls An About-Face

The South pulled a surprising about-face at the day's business session, taking a stand for protective tariffs and quotas on oil imports as a restrictive measure.

Its position long has been one leaning to free trade, as opposed to the feelings of protectionist Northerners.

To make the reversal complete, Maryland's Governor Theodore McKeldin, a member of the protectionist Republican Party and one of the northernmost chief executives, spoke his piece for free trade.

The Southern governors gave their support to a proposed resolution calling for measures to restrict oil imports and create an incentive for Southern wildcat drillers, the explorer drillers who hunt new oil fields.

Chandler for Wildcatter

Gary, who pleaded the cause of the Southerners, said: "It seems to me we are gradually destroying our free-enterprise system through these imports."

Kentucky Governor Chandler spoke for the wildcatter, who, he said, has made Kentucky "a fairly important oil state."

"Let them destroy the wildcatter," he said, "and it'll be a sad day for this country. He's the rugged explorer who learned his lesson the hard way. He knows you don't fill a dry hole with tears. You just move your digger."

McKeldin suggested this country's peace and prosperity are tied to "buying from other countries so they can buy from us."

"Our interest is served by not having tariffs, not having quotas," he said.

LITTLE ROCK ASKS RULING ON CLASSES

Panel Plans to Put Schools Under Private Corporation

By BILL BECKER

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept 23—The Little Rock School Board asked a Federal court today to rule whether it could legally lease the city's four high schools to a private corporation.

A petition for instructions was filed in the United States District Court.

An adverse ruling could have a bearing on Saturday's election to determine whether all Little Rock schools shall be integrated.

The school board requested Federal Judge John E. Miller for an immediate ruling whether it would be in contempt of court if it negotiated such a lease.

Expecting that the voters are likely to spurn integration, the board said:

"If it is proper for petitioners to lease said school properties, it is necessary that negotiations for such leases be commenced and commitment made immediately, so that there will be a minimum of delay in reopening high schools within the district."

In 1956, Judge Miller approved the Little Rock School Board's integration program in pursuance of the United States Supreme Court's edict.

Last week a state court approved the formation of the Little Rock Private Schools Corporation. The organization tacitly was set up to implement Gov. Orval E. Faubus's announced plan of operating the Little Rock high schools as private segregated institutions.

The four schools have been closed for more than two weeks.

The earliest that Judge Miller probably will hear the case is Thursday, a court attaché said. A copy of the petition was forwarded to the judge's office in Fort Smith. Judge Miller sat on a case in El Dorado, Ark., today.

The board, in its petition, said it was willing to lease the high school properties, valued at $6,000,000. But it asked assurance that such action would not subject board members to contempt charges for having violated the court's 1956 directive.

The legal move was taken by a 4-to-1 vote of the board, Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent of schools, told newsmen. The dissenter was reliably reported to be Dr. Dale Alford, a segregationist.

Attorneys for Board

The attorneys acting for the board were Richard C. Butler, A. F. oHuse, and John H. Haley. Mr. Butler recently argued the board's appeal before the Supreme Court.

Governor Faubus then signed state anti-integration bills into law and ordered the four high schools closed until the election.

The Governor has stated his confidence that the vote Saturday would be against integration. He has called upon the board to "demonstrate their good faith" by offering the school buildings to a private group after election.

Unless a majority of the registered voters of the school district voters for racial integration of all schools, no school in the district shall be opened on an integrated basis.

There is a possibility, some lawyers believe, that the election result could be challenged. These lawyers said today that the election was in the nature of a referendum and thus required only a simple majority of those voting.

The Capital Citizens Council held a rally attended by about 850 persons in a downtown hotel last night. The ardent segregationist group was addressed by William Gerber, Memphis lawyer and former counsel for a House subcommittee on integration in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Gerber described only adverse phases of the Washington school problem.

Some ministers and youth groups representing seventeen Missionary Baptist churches adopted resolutions endorsing Governor Faubus's program. Earlier, ministers of other Baptist group shad indicated some opposition to the plan.

Numerically, th eBaptists are the largest of the Little Rock Protestant denominations.

The Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools, a pro-integration group, met with lawyers and ministers to map a program of advertising.

Students continued to transfer from the closed schools. Mr. Blossom said the total reached 302 today. Nearly two-thirds of these, 194, were from Hall High; 102 have left Central, four from all-Negro Horace Mann, and two from Technical High.

Television instruction continued and Mr. Blossom said he was gratified by the response of both students and parents.

Supreme Court To Meet On Little Rock Thursday

Summoned In Crisis on Integration

Verdict Expected By School Start

By ANTHONY LEWIS
(Copyright 1958, The New York Times Co.)

LOS ANGELES—Earl Warren, the chief justice of the United States, Monday called the Supreme Court into extraordinary session to resolve the school integration issue in Little Rock, Ark.

The court will begin at noon Thursday in Washington. It will hear oral argument and, in all likelihood, hand down a decision before the scheduled opening of Little Rock schools the following Tuesday.

The chief justice, who is here for the annual meeting of the American Bar Assn., telephoned the clerk of the Supreme Court in Washington Sunday. The clerk issued the formal call for a special term Monday morning.

MOST UNUSUAL

The action is in all respects most unusual. The Supreme Court has not met in special term since 1953, when it reconvened in June, just after the end of the regular term, to consider the case of atomic spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg.

The issue before the Supreme Court will be the order handed down by Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley last June 21 cancelling the Little Rock integration program until 1961. Lemley based his order on the violence that erupted last year over the entry of nine Negro children into Little Rock Central High School.

CALLS HIGH COURT

Justice Warren

Last Monday the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit upset the Lemley order. But it stayed its own decision until the Little Rock School Board could seek review in the Supreme Court.

NAACP MOVES

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People promptly asked Justice Charles Evans Whittaker to vacate the Eighth Circuit's stay and, in addition, stay Lemley's order. Only these twin moves would permit the Negro pupils to re-enter Central High School on opening day.

Whittaker, who is circuit justice for the Eighth Circuit, received the NAACP application here. He has attended the ABA meeting along with the chief justice and Justices Tom C. Clark and William J. Brennan.

Whittaker took counsel with Warren. The chief justice consulted with the justices who are here, and other members of the court by telephone, and the call for a special term was issued.

As part of the call the Supreme Court invited the solicitor general of the United States, J. Lee Rankin, to file a brief and participate in the oral argument. The solicitor general represents the executive branch in the Supreme Court.

The government will almost certainly accept his invitation, which is in the nature of a polite command. But approval of President Eisenhower will have to be formally secured first.

Participation by the United States will be of the greatest significance. The administration has never before taken an official position on the Little Rock School Board request for postponement of the integration program, and in fact the Justice Department affirmatively decided not to participate in the case when it was before Lemley and the Eighth Circuit.

The general impression is that the government will argue in favor of the Eighth Circuit decision overruling Lemley, and in favor of vacating the Eighth Circuit's stay promptly.

There is some question whether the Supreme Court will consider at this time only the stay. It is possible that the court will, at the same time, indicate its view on the expected petition by the school board for review of the Eighth Circuit's decision.

In short, having once convened in special term, the justices are likely to want to dispose of the entire issue. Should they vacate the stay, they would in effect be saying that integration must proceed at Central High.

Rankin is here for the American Bar meeting. He decided to fly back to Washington Monday night, and ordered his staff to begin work on material for a brief in the event that there is a formal decision to accept the court's invitation. The brief would have to be filed by Wednesday afternoon.

The extraodinary nature of the Supreme Court's action is emphasized by the fact that this is the first time the court has called for oral argument of any case involving racial segregation since the decisions in the school cases in 1954 and 1955. It has refused review of all other cases or disposed of them summarily, without argument.

Last June 30 the high court turned down a plea by the NAACP for immediate review of Lemley's decision. But it said at that time: "We have no doubt that the court of appeals will recognize the vital importance of the time element in this litigation and that it will act upon the application for a stay or the appeal in ample time to permit arrangements to be made for the next school year."

Since then the significance of the Little Rock situation for the entire South has become even plainer.

It also will have a direct bearing on integration in Norfolk, Va., schools, which begin the fall semester Sept. 8.

In Norfolk, Federal Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman told the school board Monday to reconsider the rejected applications of 151 Negroes who asked for admission to white schools. He ordered the board to report by next Friday.

Hoffman has said he wouldn't order Norfolk schools desegregated if the Supreme Court permits a delay in Little Rock.

In Monday's ruling, Hoffman upheld the school board's refusal to let 26 Negroes into white schools on grounds of below-par scholarship. But he also told the board it cannot use racial tensions or isolation of a Negro child in a largely white school as "a sole legal excuse for denying an otherwise qualified Negro child admittance into a previously all - white school."

The last special term of the Supreme Court before the Rosenberg case was in 1942. That one considered appeals from Nazi saboteurs who had landed in this country by submarine and had been captured and convicted by military tribunal.

By statute, the Supreme Court may meet only in Washington. All the justices are expected to attend Thursday's session except Harold H. Burton, who is in Europe.

Central Case; Petitioned

Rare Parley To Discuss Delay Plea

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court Monday called a special session for Thursday on the Little Rock school integration crisis but gained additional time for consideration of the involved situation when opening of the school was postponed until Sept. 8.

When the court first announced its rare, off-season term, it did so with the expectation that the schools would open Sept. 2. The question before the court will be whether to allow or forbid a delay in racial integration in the Little Rock schools.

But Monday night the school board postponed the opening of Central High School, as well as other Little Rock schools, until Sept. 8.

Board President Wayne Upton said it did so in the hope that "This action on our part will remove the pressure of shortage of time for both the Supreme Court of the United States and the Arkansas legislature."

BROADEN INTEGRATION

The emergency meeting of the nine Justices will be only the fifth in four decades.

Violence broke out in the Arkansas capital school a year ago when nine Negroes enrolled at Central High under a federal court order calling for desegregated public schools.

While the postponement of schol opening applies to the entire Little Rock public schools system, it is intended as a brief measure of pressure in the complicated legal situation at Central.

School Superintendent Virgil Blossom said the school board had not consulted either Faubus or legislators in the decision to delay the opening of schools.

Blossom told a news conference that two more Negro male students applied during the day for registration at Central High. A third—a 14-year-old Negro girl—sought admission to hitherto all-white Hall High School.

He indicated that their applications will be denied until the Supreme Court decides whether seven other Negroes have the right of immediate reentry to Central High.

The impending Supreme Court decision has sweeping implications. It is expected to provide the first guidance on desegregation methods and timing since the tribunal outlawed racial segregation in public schools more than four years ago and ordered desegregation to proceed with deliberate speed.

DIRECT BEARING

It also will have a direct bearing on integration in Norfolk, Va., schools which begin the fall semester Sept. 8.

In Norfolk, Federal Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman told the school board Monday to reconsider the rejected applications of 151 Negroes who asked for admission to white schools. He ordered the board to report by next Friday.

Hoffman has said he wouldn't order Norfolk schools desegregated if the Supreme Court permits a delay in Little Rock.

In Monday's ruling, Hoffman upheld the school board's refusal to let 26 Negroes into white schools on grounds of below-par scholarship. But he also told the board it cannot use racial tensions or isolation of a Negro child in a largely white school as "a sole legal excuse for denying an otherwise qualified Negro child admittance into a previously all - white school."

This petition will be up for argument when the court meets Thursday noon. The NAACP is asking the Supreme Court to reject a ruling of a federal district court at Little Rock last June granting a 2½ year delay in integration.

This delay was voided by the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis. But the circuit court then held up its order pending a Supreme Court decision.

The NAACP appealed to Supreme Court Justice Charles Whittaker to nullify this latter stay order, or the 2½ year delay, or both. Whittaker has jurisdiction over appeals from the eighth circuit while the Supreme Court is in recess. But Whittaker decided the matter should be handled by the full court.

Accordingly, Chief Justice Earl Warren issued the call for a special session after consulting the eight other justices.

Warren issued his call, through his office here, from Los Angeles. He, Whittaker and justices William J. Brennan and Tom Clark are attending the American Bar Assn. meeting there.

They are expected to fly back to the capital, as is Justice William O. Douglas, vacationing on the West Coast. Justices Hugo L. Black and Felix Frankfurter are at their homes here. Justice John M. Harlan is at his New York summer home. Justice Harold H. Burton is not expected back from Europe until the first of next week.

Tacked onto the Warren announcement of the special term was an invitation to the U. S. solicitor general, J. Lee Rankin, to file a brief and participate in the arguments on the Little Rock case.

Rankin is the government's chief legal officer in cases before the Supreme Court. Justice Department officials had no immediate announcement on what the administration might do about accepting the invitation.

U. S. Jurist Says He Lacks The Authority

Private, Segregated Use Of Buildings Up To 3-Man Court

By CLIFTON WELLS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — An Arkansas federal judge Thursday declined to tell the Little Rock School Board whether it could legally lease public school buildings for use as private, segregated schools.

U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller, sitting at Fort Smith, Ark., told the school board, the federal government and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People that he had no authority to hand down such advice.

NEXT STEP UNKNOWN

The question involves the constitutionality of recently enacted Arkansas anti-integration laws, the judge said, and these laws could only be passed upon by a three-judge federal court.

MILLER

"I have no inclination to shirk my responsibility but this court is without authority to rule on the matter before it," said Miller — Arkansas' only federal jurist at present. "I realize the predicament you — the school board — are in and I realize the pressure you are under, but I cannot assume the responsiblity for advising you; that is something for which you have to depend on your counsel."

The school board had asked whether it could lease Little Rock's four closed high school buildings to a recently formed private corporation—as envisioned by Gov. Orval E. Faubus — without being held in contempt of federal rulings.

SCHOOLS CLOSED

Faubus closed the schools after the U.S. Supreme Court ordered the immediate readmission of Negroes to Central High School where they attended for the first time last year under protection of federal troops.

Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers entered the case before Miller Thursday as a "friend of the court," declaring that Faubus' private school plan was a "sham" and illegal. While not an actual party to the case, as a "friend" Rogers filed a memorandum of law stating the Justice Department's position.

The NAACP intervened, petitioning the district court to enjoin the school board from leasing the school buildings, or, as an alternative, to require any private school using them to admit Negroes.

DISMISSES PETITIONS

Miller dismissed the petitions without prejudice — meaning that the school board and the NAACP could seek relief in another court.

Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., Negro attorney for the NAACP, asked the judge what procedure to follow in pressing the issue in the courts.

"The constitutionality of the anti-integration acts passed by the recent legislative session will have to be decided first," Miller replied.

Two of the anti-integration measures enacted by the recent special session of the Arkansas Legislature already have been challenged in state court. The test cases concern an act empowering the governor to close schools by proclamation and one providing that state funds may be withheld from integrated schools.

In similar cases, three-judge federal courts have refused to rule on state laws until after state courts have had a chance to act on their validity.

HAS NO PLANS

Richard C. Butler, a school board attorney, said immediately after the brief hearing before Miller that the board had no immediate plans for further court action.

In petitioning Miller, the school board said that it would be willing the lease the school buildings immediately provided such action was legal.

The Little Rock school district will vote Saturday in a referendum called by the governor on the question of integrating the schools of the district.

Faubus, hurrying back to his racially tense capital from the Southern Governors Conference at Lexington, Ky., has said that an anti-integration vote Saturday would clear the way for reopening the schools by next week.

The governor, informed of Miller's decision when he stopped for lunch at Forrest City, Ark., said: "The school board asked for these instructions and the federal court has not stopped them from leasing the buildings. I think the situation looks very bright."

PLANS TV SPEECH

He will go on television here Friday night, he said, to urge "both integrationists and segregationists" to vote Saturday in order to reflect the will of the people. Faubus often has said his actions are dictated by the feeling of the majority.

The big question, Faubus said, is "integration, complete and total."

Thursday night, a "Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools," was to present a televised panel discussion urging a prointegration vote as the only legal way of reopening the schools.

The obvious Southwide impact the outcome of the balloting will have was reflected by out-of-state advertisements appearing in Little Rock newspapers.

Some Mississippians used a full newspaper page here, declaring, "Your actions will have a decisive effect upon not only your city and state but on the future of the United States."

The advertisement added: "The question is: Do the parents and taxpayers of a state and a community have the right to educate their children as they always have, without destructive interference from the federal government?"

Even though tension mounted as the time for voting on the emotional issue neared, no new racial incidents were reported Thursday.

Little Rock Police Chief Eugene Smith said Thursday he would permit no further demonstrations by high school students. Approximately 200 segregationist white students rode an automobile caravan through Little Rock Monday, and one of the cars struck and seriously injured an aged man.

Smith said he turned down a request for a similar student demonstration planned for Friday.

N. A. A. C. P. TAKING LITTLE ROCK FIGHT TO APPEALS COURT

Acts to Ask Circuit Bench to Block Private Group's Leasing of High Schools

INJUNCTION PLEA SEEN

Faubus Urges a Heavy Vote Today in Referendum on Segregation Policy

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 26—The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals will be asked to block the proposed leasing of this city's four high schools to a private corporation.

Wiley A. Branton, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, filed notice here today in Federal District Court that he would ask the appeals bench to review a ruling by District Judge John E. Miller.

He said that the association intended to take action tomorrow in the Eighth Circuit Court, which is in St. Louis.

Judge Miller, sitting in Fort Smith, Ark., declined yesterday to tell the board whether it could legally turn over the buildings to the newly formed corporation, which would open the schools as segregated facilities.

Judge Declines to Rule

The jurist said this would have to be decided by a three-judge Federal court since the constitutionality of the state's recently enacted anti-desegregation laws was involved.

[Meanwhile, in Washington a Justice Department spokesman said the department would join the N. S. A. C. P. in contesting Judge Miller's refusal to decide the issue.]

When Mr. Branton was asked if it was likely that he would ask the Appellate Court to enjoin the school board from leasing its properties, he replied:

"I should think so.

The association's move came on the eve of a special election to decide if the city's four high schools would be opened under a Supreme Court ruling ordering the continuing of desegregation.

This would require approval by a majority of the voters in the Little Rock school district, a virtual impossibility according to most political observers here.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus made a thirty-minute television speech tonight urging voters to go to the polls. He argued that the question they must decide was whether they wanted total integration of the schools.

He called the special election under the same law that he used to prevent the schools from beginning their fall term, already twice-delayed, on Oct. 15 because of "impending violence."

The N.A.A.C.P. had asked Judge Miller to enjoin the board from granting the lease, or, as an alternative, to require any private corporation using the public school buildings to admit Negroes.

Mr. Branton filed the appeal notice only five minutes before the District Court clerk's Office closed at 4:30 P. M. The clerk said it would be mailed immediately to the Circuit clerk in St. Louis, who should receive it tomorrow morning.

According to the lawyer, the appeals court could take one of two steps:

Further that Judge Miller did have jurisdiction to grant the relief requested by the association and return the case to him for action.

Hopeful of Action

Mr. Branton said that he thought one of the Circuit judges, acting for the court, could issue a preliminary restraining order preventing the board from leasing the property pending a hearing of the case.

The five-man school board is under orders from the United States Supreme Court to readmit six Negroes who attended Central High School last year.

Meantime the campaigns of opposing factions in tomorrow's election continued unabated. Although there was some tension, there were no reports of violence.

A Negro girl accused of "brushing" three white girls as she passed them on a sidewalk in adjacent North Little Rock was held temporarily by police and released to her school principal.

Telephone campaigns to get out the vote, statements in the press and on radio and television and newspaper advertisements were used heavily by both sides.

In a news conference this morning, Governor Faubus asserted that "there may be violence again" if the Federal Government moved in for a second time to enforce desegregation.

Commenting on Judge Miller's decision, he said:

"The way is now open for the operation of the schools on a private basis." But, he added, the School Board must decide whether this would be done.

Shortly after Mr. Faubus opened the news conference, five Little Rock ministers entered the conference room to present a statement supporting segregation. It had been signed by seventy-nine pastors in the area.

Meanwhile, the school board's attorneys advised the five board members that any leasing of the high school buildings and other facilities must be on a tentative basis.

Their recommendation said this was so because "the validity of the lease will depend upon the final decision to be rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Little Rock Clerics In Hostile Camps Divided By Furor Over School Question

By RICHARD DAW

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The furor over school integration has split Little Rock's ministers into near-hostile camps.

"We believe that integration is contrary to the will of God," one group declared.

"We stand for the principles of human rights and dignity of all before God," another states.

Few of the city's approximately 200 ministers have managed to remain completely aloof from the simmering issue. Most have aligned themselves in varying degrees with one of the opposing groups.

Spilts have developed even within denominations. The Baptists—dominant sect here — have seen some of their ministers throw their weight strongly behind segregation, others declare believe in eventual integration.

Only Saturday morning, as residents balloted to express their opinions on the issue, the Arkansas Baptist Convention declared itself neutral.

The convention's official voice was raised after a former executive secretary, the Rev. Ben. L. Bridges, joined a group of pastors who backed Gov. Orval E. Faubus stand against integration.

Such action, convention officials said, could not be considered as representing the state group.

On election eve, two groups voiced their opposition publicly.

The other side spoke, too.

"We resent the implication of certain liberal ministers that it is un-Christian to oppose integration," declared the Rev. M. L. Moser, Jr., a Missionary Baptist minister who said he represented 30 Little Rock pastors.

"Our beliefs are not based on prejudice or bias but on sound Bible interpretation, while integration is based on the false theory of the universal fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man,'" Moser's statement continued.

The governor himself sparked a chain of events that drew the lines of opposing thought more clearly among the churchmen. At a press conference, he declared that some Presbyterian ministers had been effectively brainwashed by leftwingers and Communists.

A statement demanding an apology was quickly issued by the Presbyterians, and soon several Methodist ministers came to their fellow pastors defense.

The city's segregationist Capital Citizens Council is headed by a Missionary Baptist pastor, the Rev. Wesley Pruden.

Efforts have been made—without success — to form a "ministry of reconcliation" as a mediating force between the opposing groups. Evangelist Billy Grham was mentioned as a possibility to head the ministry, but a group formed to invite him or some other public figure here dropped the plans after a few days.

Appeals Court Studies Delay In Little Rock Integration

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 4—Suspension of integration at Little Rock was described today as a blow to democracy and Negro rights, and as a necessary cooling off period for white southerners.

A full seven-member United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals heard dramatic arguments from attorneys for Little Rock Negroes to review the decision of Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley which has suspended integration at Central High School for two and a half years.

Just as dramatic were the the harrassed Little Rock School Board who asked for the suspension of their own integration plan after months of turmoil within the school.

Courtroom Packed

More than 150 persons packed the courtroom here to hear arguments on the most significant school desegregation case since the Supreme Court outlawed racial discrimination in the schools in 1954. More than 300 other persons crowded the halls outside, unable to get in.

Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., attorney for the seven Negroes ousted from Central High School by Lemley's decision, said that upholding the suspension would be comparable to the Dred Scott decision of the Supreme Court before the Civil War.

"You will be saying the Negroes in the South have no right which the white people must respect," he said. "If you affirm that decision, you will create a Frankenstein monster, because people opposed to integration look upon that decision as an answer."

The suspension of integration, Branton contended, represented a victory for violence and lawless elements and, if upheld, "then we're getting into an awful predicament as far as our democracy is concerned in world government."

The Little Rock School Board attempted to institute its voluntary desegregation program last September by admitting nine Negroes to white Central High School.

Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, however, surrounded the school with militia and barred the Negroes from entering the 2000-pupil school on the grounds he was maintaining peace and order. This was a new twist in desegregation history; previously, Governors had used the National Guard to maintain order while Negroes entered the schools.

Gov. Faubus Enjoined

A Federal court enjoined Faubus from interfering with its desegregation order, whereupon the Governor withdrew the troops and a mob of 1000 persons gathered at the school. President Eisenhower sent in paratroopers to enforce the Court order.

But inside the school during the school term, a small but hard band of teenage segregationists raised constant turmoil. The School Board asked the Federal court to suspend integration, which Lemley did. Attorneys for the Negroes appealed directly to the Supreme Court which, in effect, then directed the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals to hear the case before school opened in September. Decision on the appeal is not expected for several days.

Thurgood Marshall, counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the court today that the School Board had defaulted in maintaining discipline within the school.

He said the Board should have asked the assistance of the Federal court as was done in Hoxie, Ark., and Clinton, Tenn., to crack down on continued resistance to integration once it had begun.

"No real effort was made to discipline the white students," he said. "I think it all adds up that the School Board thought it would ride it out and they'd wake up one morning and it would all be over with."

"The decision of Judge Lemley," said Marshall, "tells the people of Arkansas that if they merely dislike integration and merely speak against it, they won't be successful. But if they throw rocks or commit arson or overt acts of violence, they will be successful.

"The issue is whether or not a premium is to be put on violence."

Marshall warned that, if the Lemley decision is upheld, many communities which have desegregated, or are about to begin, "will suffer a great setback."

He cited language in the Supreme Court's implementation decision of 1955 which, he said, decrees that the constitutional principles of integration must not yield to disagreement or opposition.

The same decision was cited by A. F. House, attorney for the School Board, who said it recognized delays might be necessary once desegregation has begun.

House was critical of the Federal role in the Little Rock case. He said leaders of the mob were easily identifiable but that the Justice Department announced after an investigation that no one would be prosecuted.

"That emboldered them (the ardent segregationists) and made them more aggressive," he said.

House said the state courts were in the local atmosphere and refused to indict mob leaders. At this point, Judge M. C. Matthes asked:

"Well, what is the answer then? If the Federal courts can't act and the state courts won't, are you going to surrender to this violence?"

"We would not surrender voluntarily," House said of the School Board members, but added: "They are not there to get into an unending, vicious turmoil with their neighbors.

"That's too much to ask. It's a difficult problem. I wish I could give you an answer. The enforcement problem is the heartbeat of the whole integration problem."

Matthes asked what good would the two and a half year cooling off period serve. This was answered by Richard C. Butler, the other School Board attorney.

Pleads for Patience

"We plead for patience. We plead for time," he said, "so the path will become somewhat clearer. We plead for the School Board, also for that great mass of people who are not inherently violent, and for the third group of people, the present 2000 students of Central High School for a high school education that is free from turmoil, strife and bedlam."

Butler said the older generation was more bitterly opposed to integration than youngsters, and time would help mitigate that.

He sai dFaubus' recent overwhelming victory in the Democratic primary for renomination was a mandate of the people in opposition to integration. State anti-integration laws have not yet been declared invalid, he said, and thus "people keep saying you don't have to integrate."

Text of Statement by Gov. Faubus on Little Rock Decision

New York Times

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 19 —Following is the text of a statement by Gov. Orval E. Faubus on a decision yesterday by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. The decision overturned a District Court ruling that had granted a two-and-one-half-year delay in integration at Little Rock's Central High School.

New York Times Wed Aug 20 58

The reversal of the Lemley decision by the Federal Court of Appeals is most regrettable. The higher court's decision indicates an indifference and disregard for the will of the people that is most alarming and dangerous.

The spotlight now is limited to the school authorities, the officials of the N. A. A. C. P. [National Association for the Advancement of Colored People] and the parents of the Negro children.

Any action taken by the Chief Executive, the Legislature or the people before the attitude of these people is known, might prove to be premature and unnecessary.

Pilot

The school board now needs to take the people of the district into its confidence and let them know its intentions and its plans. Does the board intend to continue to promote the complete integration of the Little Rock school while muttering insincere, half-hearted protestations, or does it intend to fight in every legal way possible the integration by force, with such dire consequences for education in the affected schools, and the peace of the community.

For evidence of the school board's attitude, I point to two quotations from the reversal ruling itself.

"This court recognizes that, following the first Brown decision the members of the board, acting in good faith, and working with the Superintendent of Schools, moved promptly to promulgate a plan designed to gradually bring about complete integration in the Little Rock public schools, and they are to be commended for their efforts in that regard."

At another point in the reversal we find the following language: "On Aug. 29, 1957, on application of the board, the United States District Court at Litle Rock entered an order enjoying the use of the state court injunction in an attempt to block the integration plan."

School Board's Action

It must be noted here that it was the school board that dashed into the Federal Court presided over by udge Davies the very next day after the state court ruling, staying the execution of the plan of integration, and asked for the ruling which said in substance—"integrate forthwith, without regard for the consequences."

If the school board intends to continue to promote the complete integration of the Little Rock schools, the people are entitled to know. It is the people's business, because the schools belong to the people and not to the school board.

How many Negroes will be admitted to Central High School on opening day? If only those previously enrolled are re-admitted, when will the number be raised to ninety or to 900, the latter figure being the number eligible to attend Central High School under the board's complete integration plan?

Will Negro students be admitted to Hall High School on the opening day? If so, how many? If not, when will this be done? It is necessary under the board's plan of complete integration. The delay of the plan by Judge Lemley has now been reversed, and the board is ordered to continue.

What other schools will be integrated on opening day? They are all in the plan of complete integration. When will white students be ordered to enter the Negro school? Will that be on opening day this year, and if not, when will it be done? It is a part of the plan of complete integration, drawn up by the board and approved by the Federal Court.

How many Negro students have applied for admission to white schools? Who are they and when did they apply?

Why all the secrecy surrounding these developments? Why the secret board meetings? Aren't the people entitled to know about their own school affairs?

The school board must surely realize the dire implications of any forceable integration of the schools at this time.

Although it has been ordered to continue with the integration plan, it has every right to resist the order by any and every legal means.

The board may use the school assignment law, now on the statute books, which was passed by the overwhelming vote of the people at the general election of 1956.

Meet with the parents of the Negro students, and the officials of the N. A. A. C. P. who have instigated and promoted the continued integration efforts. Discuss frankly with them the situation as it now exists, iwth the dire consequences that may ensue as to the quality of education for the Negro students as well as others, and also the jeopardy to the peace and tranquility of the community. These Negro parents may rise above their desires for the attainment of their immidate objectives in this matter.

Their decision, the Negro parents and the N. A. A. C. P., in the interest of harmony and greater good to the whole community, to allow a cooling-off period, by sending their students to school with their own race during the coming year, would do much, if not more than anyone else could do, to resolve this whole unhappy situation.

Failing in both of the above, the school board should resign as previously suggested by Judge [John] Pilkington [of Hope, Ark.], and others and allow the people to select a new board which would have the courage to act in conformity to their wishes.

The schools are scheduled to open in less than two weeks from this date. If the people, the members of the Legislature, or the Chief Executive, are to have any opportunity to do anything about this situation, without the possibility of unnecesary action, or of conflicting action with the efforts of the school board, then it is necessary to know almost immediately the plans and intentions of the school board and the Negro leaders.

Surely, the board has plans. If not, it has been very shortsighted indeed.

Point to impossible conditions—

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb 21 — (AP) — The City School Board yesterday asked a federal court to suspend racial integration at Central High School.

A strongly-worded petition requested U. S. District Court to stay an order which allowed nine Negro students to enter the previously all-white school last Fall.

THE PETITION virtually admitted that opposition to integration had made normal school conditions at Central High impossible. It said the school district, in its respect for the law of the land, was left standing alone, the victim of extraordinary opposition on the part of the state government and apathy of the part of the federal government."

Suspension of the board's integration plan, which was put into effect under the protection of federal troops last September, was sought until:

1. There is a clear definition of the concept "all deliberate speed" in the U. S. Supreme Court's 1954 ruling on school desegregation.

2. There are effective legal procedures by which the schools can be integrated without impairment of the quality of the educational program.

A series of racial clashes has occurred at Central High in recent months and Minniejean Brown, one of the Negro pupils, last Monday was expelled from the school for the rest of the semester.

Minniejean Brown, who plans to enter an interracial school in New York, is the only Negro either expelled or suspended over racial incidents. Several whites have been suspended.

THE SCHOOL BOARD said there was unrest among pupils, teachers and parents over integration at Central High.

Gov. Orval Faubus said last night he approved the board's action. State Guardsmen placed at Central High on his orders prevented integration for several weeks last Fall. Then President Eisenhower federalized the state guard and sent 1000 paratroopers to Little Rock to enforce the court-ordered integration plan.

(In Washington, the Justice Department said the School Board petition is a matter between the board and the Federal District Court in Little Rock and the department will not participate in the case. The department said, in response to an inquiry:

("The subject matter of the petition does not fall within our area of responsibility and no authority exists for us to step in.

("The United States is not a party to this action and the United States attorney (at Little Rock) will not participate in the proceedings.")

SUPT. VIRGIL T. BLOSSOM said the status of the eight Negroes now attending 2000-pupil Central High remains unchanged pending possible court action.

'Long way off both in South, in Boston'

BOSTON, Feb. 21 — (AP) — Harry Ashmore, editor of The Arkansas Gazette, said last night that integration in the South can be achieved only "by a change in the hearts and minds of men and not through any law."

Ashmore, recipient of the brotherhood award at a dinner sponsored by Temple O'Habeim Shalem, said integration is a long way off in the South just as it is a long way off in Boston.

Little Rock Board Asks Stay Of Integration Orde

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.— (INS) — Little Rock School Board Thursday petitioned the U. S. District Court for an indefinite stay of the court order directing integration at strife-torn Central High School.

The petition, which was signed by all members of the Board and by School Superintendent Virgil Blossom, asked that "the plan of integration heretofore ordered by the court be realistically reconsidered in the light of existing conditions."

The petition urged "that in the interest of all pupils" at the school that the "beginning date of integration be postponed until such time as the concept of 'all deliberate speed' be clearly defined."

The petition pointed out that further time would enable the District to integrate "without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

The petition was presented by the School Board on the recommendation of 24 top Arkansas business and civic leaders.

Grady Miller, Federal court clerk, said he had telephoned Federal Judge Ronald Davies, who retains jurisdiction in the integration case, at Davies' home in Fargo, N. D.

Davies told Miller he would confer with Federal Judge Arch Gardner of Hudson, S. D., chief judge of the U. S. Eighth District Court at St. Louis, before making a statement on the petition.

Previously, all-white Central High School in Little Rock became a racial storm center last September when nine Negro students were entered on a court order of integration.

U. S. paratroopers and national guardsmen were ordered to the scene to help keep order as mobs converged on the school.

Early this wek, Minnie Jean Brown, a Negro student, was suspended for the rest of the school year after she became involved in incidents with white students.

SCHOOL BID TO COURT

Little Rock Asks Integration Curb

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 20 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board today asked the federal courts to suspend the six-month-old racial integration at Central High School.

The requested suspension would be in effect, until the "deliberate speed" in integration ordered by the U.S. Supreme Court "can be clearly defined and effective legal procedures can be obtained which will enable the—school—district to integrate without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

Gov. Orval Faubus said the school board's action should have been taken some time ago and added that the "situation in Central High School at present is intolerable from the standpoint of a proper educational atmosphere."

The state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said the filing of the petition "must have been a shock to all decent-thinking people in Little Rock."

Nine Negro students have been attending the school along with nearly 2,000 whites under the protection of federal troops in compliance with a court-appointed plan for gradual desegregation in the Little Rock public schools.

One of the nine, Minniejean Brown, was expelled recently as a result of one of the many racial incidents which have plagued the school and has announced she will enter a private integrated school in New York.

The board and Supt. Virgil T. Blossom filed the petition for delay with U.S. District Court a few minutes before close of business for the day, Court Clerk Grady Miller said.

This is the second time the school board has asked that integration be postponed.

Last September, such a request was overruled by U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D., here on temporary assignment.

When Central High's fall term began Sept. 3, a contingent of the Arkansas National Guard, at the direction of Gov. Orval Faubus, was on duty at the school to prevent Negroes from entering.

Faubus withdrew the guard and when rioting developed outside the school, the guard was federalized.

Little Rock Asks Shelve Integration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UP)—The Little Rock School Board today sought court permission to suspend integration at Central High School because "defiance" by "a small group" was hampering efforts of both teachers and students.

In a petition filed Thursday in Federal District Court, the board asked the court to stay the execution of its decree issued last year calling for gradual integration of the high school. It also asked the court to define the term "deliberate speed" as applied to school integration.

Since nine Negro students were enrolled at Central High last fall under protection of federal paratroops and federalized National Guardsmen a series of racial incidents occurred, culminating in the expulsion last week of one of the nine, Minnie Jean Brown.

The board and school superintendent Virgil T. Blossom scheduled a hearing today on the suspension last Monday of two white boys accused of following up Minnie Jean's departure by displaying a banner that read "One Blossom, asked by newsmen down—Eight to go."

whether granting of the school board petition would result in removal of the eight Negroes now attending Central High, declined to comment.

No date has been set for a hearing and H. Grady Miller, clerk of court, said he did not know when a hearing might be held.

"Needs court review"—

Leaders in Little Rock ask halt to integration

Little Rock's School Board Asks Court To Suspend Integration

Definition Of Order Requested

By LEON HATCH

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 20 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board today asked the federal courts to suspend the six-months-old racial integration at Central High School.

The requested suspension would be in effect until the "deliberate speed" in integration ordered by the U.S. Supreme Court "can be clearly defined and effective legal procedure can be obtained which will enable the school district to integrate without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

FAUBUS COMMENT

Gov. Orval Faubus said the school board's action should have been taken some time ago and added that the "situation in Central High School at present is intolerable from the standpoint of a proper educational atmosphere."

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the filing of the petition "must have been a shock to all descent - thinking people in Little Rock."

Nine Negro students have been attending the school along with nearly 2,000 whites under the protection of federal troops in compliance with a court - appointed plan for gradual desegregation in the Little Rock public schools.

One of the nine, Minniejean Brown, was expelled recently as a result of one of the many racial incidents which have plagued the school and has announced she will enter a private integrated school in New York.

The board and Supt. Virgil T. Blossom filed the petition for delay with U.S. District Court a few minutes before close of business for the day, Court Clerk Grady Miller said.

This is the second time the school board has asked that integration be postponed.

PREVIOUS REQUEST

Last September, such a request was overruled by U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D., here on temporary assignment.

Court Clerk Miller said he telephoned news of the petition filing to Judge Davies at Fargo. Miller said Davies told him that he woud confer with Judge Arch Gardner of Huron, S.D., chief judge of the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, before making a statement about the petition.

When Central High's fall term began Sept. 3, a contingent of the Arkansas National Guard, at the direction of Gov. Orval Faubus, was on duty at the school to prevent Negroes from entering.

Faubus withdrew the guard and when rioting developed outside the school, the guard was federalized to protect the Negroes.

Tonight the Governor was at Lepanto, Ark., to deliver a speech at a civic club meeting.

When newsmen told him of the filing of the petition, Faubus said: "This action of the school authorities should have been taken some time ago. I have suggested this a number of times in the past. The situation in Central High School is intolerable from the standpoint of a proper educational atmosphere. I sincerely hope the federal courts will give the matter proper consideration."

BOARD'S PETITION

In today's petition the school board declared that opponents of integration "are continually implanting in the minds of residents of the district by all types of inflammatory publicity" the thought that the federal court order to integrate is a nullity and the board was "betraying the interest of district residents in attempting to comply with the court order."

The petition said that the U.S. Supreme Court envisioned in its original school desegregation opinion the "revision of local laws" to conform with its interpretation of the Constitution.

"Instead of revising local laws to bring them into conformity with the federal law, the State of Arkansas has enacted several laws which tend to defy the federal law and obstruct compliance by the district with the order of this court," the petition declared.

The board declared that, "The federal government, except for having placed troops around the school grounds, apparently is powerless to enforce compliance with this court's order of integration and suppress the interference now being encountered. . . ."

It charged that federal authorities had not penalized persons who defied the court's orders but "have stepped aside and placed on the district the full responsibility of compliance."

Neither Congress, by new laws, nor the federal judiciary has aided the board, which "is left standing alone, the victim of extraordinary opposition on the part of the state government and apathy on the part of the federal government," the petition said.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 20 (AP)—A group of business and civic leaders yesterday asked the Little Rock School Board to seek a stay in a federal courts order for integration of Central High School.

If such a stay is granted, it apparently would mean withdrawal of eight Negro pupils now attending the big school which has been the center of an integration dispute since last September.

The 24-man committee of citizens did not indicate whether it wanted the stay to be temporary or permanent.

SPECIFICALLY, the group asked the school board to petition U. S. District Court "for a stay of compliance with the adopted schedule of integration."

In a letter to the board, the committee said that "in the light of our experiences of the past several months," the school board's plan of gradual integration at Little Rock should have further court review.

This obviously referred to a series of clashes between white and Negro students at Central High. Several white students have been suspended in the incidents. One of the nine Negroes who started attending Central High Sept. 25 under federal troop protection has been expelled.

GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS, informed of the group's letter, said "I think it is a very good statement."

School Supt. Virgil Blossom said he saw nothing wrong with the group's suggestion for going back into federal court soon.

The group of business and civic leaders was formed last Fall to study the integration problem.

While The Army Looks On

Negro Students Are Forced To Bear The Burden Of Enforcing U.S. Court Ordered Integration Of Schools

NEW YORK. — The failure of the Army to protect Negro students in Little Rock's Central High school presents "the incredible spectacle of the government of the United States placing the burden of enforcing the orders of its courts upon the slender shoulders and the young hearts of eight teen-age Negro students," Roy Wilkins, N.A.A.C.P. executive secretary, charges in a letter to Wilber M. Brucker, Secretary of the Army.

The complete text of Mr. Wilkins' letter, dispatched on March 27 and made public here today, follows:

We are in receipt of a letter of March 21 from Mr. John W. Martyn, written at your request, asserting that the Federalized troops around Central high school in Little Rock, Ark., are not operating under orders to do nothing in the case of a disturbance except to observe.

We note further Mr. Martyn's assurance that "adequate provisions exist in the instructions issued by the Army to the troops on duty to insure necessary action in the performance of their mission."

However, Mr. Martyn writes that the troops "have conducted themselves in such a manner as not to usurp or interfere with the responsibilities of the school authorities" (for the discipline of the students within the sochol), and he states further that the military personnel "have been and will continue to be prepared to intervene if necessary to assist the school authorities . . ." (underscoring ours).

We submit that this language is subject to the interpretation that the troops have initiated no move in case of obstruction by white students against Negro students, and that they have waited "to assist" the school authorities, presumably on request of the latter.

The record contains forty-two incidents over an eighty-day school period with mild disciplinary action having been taken in only a very few cases. There is no record of action by military personnel after the withdrawal of the Federal troops, either original or in the form of assistance to school authorities.

We have, as you have noted, an intense interest in this matter. We believe, on the basis of the President's order and on the statements in Mr. Martyn's letter, that the presence of the troops was to effecuate compliance with the order of the U. S. District Court and that in discharging this mission, the troops were to proceed against any and all persons whose conduct tended to nullify the order.

If this interpretation is correct, the school officials who failed to exercise the authority at their disposal are as guilty of hindering the court order as are those who commit overt acts of obstruction.

We suggest strongly that the general mission of the military personnel (and we are not familiar with the detailed instructions) would seem to require that they not only assist the school authorities, but insist on affirmative action by the latter to effect the purpose of the Court's order.

It does not seem reasonable that the order of the Court contemplates only the safe conduct of the Negro students to the front doors of Central high school and abondonment thereafter to such harassment as might be devised by some white students and condoned by the officials in charge.

If this is the Army's interpretation, then we are confronted with the incredible spectacle of the government of the United States placing the burden of enforcing the orders of its courts upon the slender shoulders and the young hearts of eight teen-age Negro students.

LITTLE ROCK — "Will Ernest make it?"

As June and commencement time draw nearer, in high schools throughout America, that same question, except for the name, might be asked about hundreds of thousands of high school seniors.

Ernest's case, however, is somewhat special, for he is Ernest Green, the only senior among the eight colored pupils at Little Rock's Central High School.

If Ernest is graduated, no matter what happens at the school afterwards, it will have been a triumph for him, the rest of the colored pupils and their parents.

CENTRAL High's hard core of segregationists know this, and as a result, have opened an intensified campaign of physical and psychological violence against him and his parents.

There have been threats of demonstrations if he attempts to march with his class.

He must attend assemblies which plan graduation events which he knows that he will not be able to attend.

"Do you think Ernest will graduate? You don't think we'll let him get that far, do you?"

Little more than a week ago Ernest was pushed down a flight of stairs at the school.

* * *

ERNEST SMILES as though it didn't matter, but his mother shows the concern that they both feel:

"I keep telling Ernest that pioneers have to go against the odds," she declares, "Here at home we're trying to condition him that if he doesn't get to march with the class, well, it's the diploma that counts and he will have that."

SPEAKING at the "Dog House" last week, Governor Faubus attempted to pass the buck of responsibility for Little Rock's Central High School disorders on to Dr. Lee Lorch, Philander Smith College math professor, and Mrs. Lorch.

Picking up an accusation made by J. B. Matthews, ex-Dies Committee investigator, in a magazine published by the Rev. Billy Jack Hargis, a Tulsa, Okla., segregationist, Gov. Faubus declared:

"Both (the Lorches) have been identified as members of the Communist party . . . both of them were active behind the scenes and then openly in the Little Rock affair."

* * *

THE GOVERNOR'S statement was made as he addressed a Southwest Little Rock Kiwanis meeting at Hank's Dog House.

Dr. Lorch, who was contacted after the meeting, retorted: "I am not interested in engaging in any public debate with Faubus. I would like to observe, however, that unlike Faubus, neither my wife nor I have attempted the overthrow of the United States government by force and violence or any other method."

* * *

OTHER Little Rock developments included:

Herbert L. Thompson Sr., a Little Rock insurance executive proposed a "voluntary progress" plan to supplant the Little Rock School Board's gradual desegregation plan, calling for:

1. Dropping of the eight colored pupils from Central High at the end of the semester;
2. Removal of troops from the school;
3. Establishment of a commission, "with colored representation," to work with local boards to bring about "complete or partial desegregation" in those communities "where

Integration Failed, Governor Repeats

Faubus Predicts Troop Use Will Be Restricted

NEW ORLEANS, April 17.—(AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas Thursday said integration has failed at Little Rock's Central High School although Federal troops still are present.

Governor Faubus predicted the Federal Government will never again send troops into any other Southern city to enforce school integration.

The Little Rock incident, he said, "has proven it won't work by the method that has been used. The Negroes in Central High are just as alone as they were before."

Governor Faubus headed a 150-man goodwill tour to inspect New Orleans' port and industry.

He told newsmen pro-integrationists had "all the force in the world at Little Rock. They had the mayor, who controlled the police, the Federal troops, the federalized National Guard troops, the school board and its officials, the biggest newspaper in the state, and certain other influences."

But with all those favorable conditions, he said, they failed.

The opposition today, he said, "is stronger than ever, and if those troops are pulled out, I'm afraid we're in for more trouble."

Governor Faubus said he feels United States District Judge Ronald Davies was sent to Little Rock "to engineer" the school integration situation that triggered the use of Federal troops.

He said it was good news in Little Rock that Judge Davies will not be back to handle any of the pending segregation legislation in Little Rock.

Little Rock's Race Mixing Held Failure

NEW ORLEANS, April 17 (INS) Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus said today—nearly eight months after Negroes began attending Little Rock's Central High School under protection of federal troops—that integration at the school has failed.

The Governor, in New Orleans at the head of a group of Arkansas businessmen, said that "one favorable circumstance" resulting from President Eisenhower's historic order sending troops into Little Rock last September is that it resulted in a stiffening of opposition to integration.

He said: "Little Rock has proved that troop-enforced integration won't work. The Negroes in Central High are just as alone as they were before.

He said that if the 400 troops still stationed at the high school were pulled out "we're in for more trouble."

Faubus, who is seeking re-election to a third term, said that if integrationists had "all the force in the world" they would not succeed in the removal of racial barriers at the school. He added:

"They had the mayor, who controlled the police, the federal troops, the federalized National Guard, the school board and its officials and the biggest newspaper in the state."

Despite this and the fact that the Negroes are still in the school, he asserted, "they failed because opposition to integration is stronger today than ever before."

He added that because of the "adverse public opinion" to the President's troop order, "I doubt whether the government will ever try again a Little Rock in any other Southern city."

Arkansans reject surrender proposal

(Special to the AFRO)

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A businessman's plan, which would take colored pupils out of Central High School here and snatch away hard-earned rights, has been flatly rejected by some 90 colored leaders of Little Rock.

Almost simultaneously with this action, a Federal court judge who didn't bite his tongue in ordering Central High to desegregate last fall, was stripped of his jurisdiction in the case.

In a meeting last Wednesday with insurance executive Herbert L. Thomas, the 90 colored leaders, mostly ministers, listened attentively to a plan by Thomas that would:

Remove the eight colored pupils from Central High School and allow the school board to start integration all over again by setting up an interracial commission to work with school districts on the segregation problem.

* * *

WHEN THOMAS finished explaining his proposal, it was turned down flatly by the ministers, 20 of whom signed a statement explaining why they rejected the plan. Four reasons for its rejection were offered.

They are:

1. The plan might have the effect of supporting segregation instead of integration.
2. It would put them (the leaders) in a position of turning their backs on school integration gains already made in the courts.
3. They could never agree to withdraw the eight pupils from Central High.
4. The compromise called for in the plan would not be in keeping "with the concepts of morality and Christianity."

"WE WOULD be held up to the world as cowards and unworthy of the respect of other people if we agreed to remove the pupils from the school," the Rev. Roland Smith stated in answer to Thomas.

The minister referred to the plan as "the Thomas Plan of Voluntary Segregation." He added:

"We are committed to give our full support to the program of desegregation of the public schools as decreed by the U.S. Supreme Court."

Several members of the Committee for the Arkansas (Thomas) Plan were seemingly surprised by the refusal of the leaders to accept the plan.

* * *

MRS. DAISY BATES, president of the Arkansas NAACP was invited by Thomas to attend the Phyliss Wheatley YWCA meeting, but was scheduled out of town when it was held.

Mrs. Bates has already refused to accept the plan, which has been termed a "peace plan for restoring racial harmony in Arkansas."

Thomas immediately declared that the present road traveled by colorel persons "is dooming yourself to a miserable co-existence with members of the Southern white race." He added:

"You may win the battle now and then, but you can never win the war. You can never be accepted into a cordial relationship with the white people."

* * *

ONE OF the colored leaders, Dr. J. M. Robinson, told Thomas that colored persons through no fault of their own, had been "subjected to debauchery and mongrelization but "as a result of slavery."

He added that colored citizens would accept his plan if:

1. It were accepted by the Federal courts.
2. The pupils were not withdrawn from Central High.
3. Integrated schools were not segregated again.

The plan would require Federal court approval, since the current integration issue was ordered by U.S. District Court

* * *

THOMAS HAD earlier presented the plan to white Little Rock leaders for discussion from the segregationist point of view.

Elsewhere in Little Rock earlier, Federal judge Ronald N. Davies, who last fall gave the order for integration at Central High, was ruled out of the case.

Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner of the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals gave the directive, saying Judge Davies "definitely" will not return to Little Rock to hear integration cases.

In his stead, Judge Gardner said last Tuesday, "an Arkansas Federal judge" is preferable to hear a Little Rock School Board petition to halt integration of public schools here.

Judge Davies was sent to Little Rock last year by Judge Gardner because of the retirement of Federal judge Thomas C. Trimble.

* * *

WHILE THERE, he ordered Central High School to desegregate. Under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, he has the right to retain jurisdiction in the case.

In ordering Judge Davies out of the case, Judge Gardner stated, "He's a busy man. I'm not going to send him back to Little Rock.

"I think an Arkansas judge would be appropriate to handle the case. Arkansas judges know the traditions, habits and so forth of the people there."

SOUTH'S SALVATION

[In two articles on the progress of integration at Central High School in Little Rock ("Little Rock: More Tension Than Ever," March 23, and "The Silent Fear in Little Rock," March 30) Gertrude Samuels reported that the segregation issue there is still very much alive, and in fact is growing worse, particularly within the school. The real crisis, she warned, may be just beginning. Here are excerpts from some of the letters from readers.—Editor.]

TO THE EDITOR:

If Northern reporters would stay in the South long enough, they would learn that all "decent" Southerners don't favor integration; in fact, a very small percentage of decent or indecent whites want any part of it. We deplore the violence attendant upon trial race mixing, but we nearly all want legislation and more legislation to prohibit racial intermingling. Northerners hoot at the idea of propinquity and intermarriage, yet the number of mixed marriages in the entertainment world, where the two races are so intimately associated, proves our point.

There are no race riots in the South, though our daily contact is greater than elsewhere. The fact that each race respects the color line is our salvation.

'FATHERS' INIQUITY'

TO THE EDITOR:

I think the churches are falling down lamentably on this whole [integration] question. We are supposed to be a Christian people with Christian ideals. Slavery was wicked from the first moment that the Jamestown settlers bought the "Negars" from the Dutch in 1619. And certainly the New England traders and the Northern colonies that compromised with evil in Philadelphia in 1787 were equally responsible for the sin. Although Virginia led in the Abolitionist movement at that time, it is ironical to read today that Senator Byrd has reconsidered and is to run again for the Senate on the platform of "massive resistance."

What has happened to my country? God made the men with the black skins—others have yellow, some red, part of us white. Is there nothing we can do? Can we not be able to repeat the sixth verse of the chapter of Exodus, showing "mercy unto thousands" rather than so comporting ourselves that "the iniquity of the fathers" will never cease?

ON THE N. A. A. C. P.

TO THE EDITOR:

It was a surprise indeed to read in Gertrude Samuels' otherwise excellent article her characterization of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People—the N. A. A. C. P.—as an "extremist" group, equivalent to the Little Rock Capital Citizens Council, one of the White Citizens Councils, on the other extreme.

Miss Samuels misses the point of extremism. The N. A. A. C. P. supports the Constitution and the laws of the United States; the White Citizens Councils seek to obstruct the Constitution, and they often use unlawful means to frustrate its enforcement. What is the test of extremism? The N. A. A. C. P. is not a small radical group, far out and apart from the main body of respectable opinion. Quite the contrary: the advocacy of prompt compliance with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is hardly susceptible to such a description. MARVIN M. KARPATKIN.

New York

Miss Samuels replies: "Mr. Karpatkin appears to have misread words in my article. The N. A. A. C. P. is not an "extremist" group, and nowhere in the piece is this word to describe N. A. A. C. P. Both of my articles report the restraint and courage of N. A. A. C. P. in Little Rock. In contrast, the Capital Citizens Council is characterized as "white extremists" using techniques of terror. The N. A. A. C. P. is certainly at the extreme other end of the C. C. C."

Blames Faubus For Race Clashes

NEW YORK — A Negro girl expelled from Little Rock's Central High school charged today that statements by Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus increased racial hostility at the school.

In a signed article in the new issue of Look Magazine, 16-year-old Minnijean Brown declared that the nine Negro students enrolled at Central High always "knew we were going to get it" whenever Gov. Faubus made a statement.

Speeches by Amis Guthridge, attorney for the White Citizens' Council, and leaders of the Central High Mothers League also intensified racial "incidents," the girl said.

WOULD KID ABOUT IT

"We could always tell when the incidents would get worse," she stated.

"We'd kid about it, and say we'd go and buy pads because we knew we were going to get it."

Minnijean, who attended school in New York after leaving Little Rock in February, said in the article that she was kicked, pushed, cursed and had soup spilled on her by white students.

She asserted that "the whole thing would have been different" if Arkansas National Guard Troops "had protected us better" and if people like school superintendent Virgil Blossom—"I'm sure he really was not in favor of integration"—had done more.

"The day the 101st (Army division) was taken off duty, inside the school, the kids 'massacred' us," Minnijean wrote in Look.

NO RESPECT

"We went to Gen. Clinger (commander of the Arkansas National Guard) and said we would have to go home, because the white kids didn't respect the National Guard.

"The officers didn't want us to leave; they put two guards with each of us. The guards acted real unhappy about their job. The next day, the 101st was brought back inside the building."

Superintendent Blossom, she said, once complained to her that he was getting threatened because of the presence of the Negro students.

"I suggested that he was older, and he ought to be able to take it as well as I could. He complained that they called him a 'nigger lover.' That he certainly was not."

Private School Plan Legal, Faubus Says

Gazette Union p.1 9-19-58

Calls On Citizens of Little Rock To Reject Integration at Polls

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 18 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus, exhorting the people of Little Rock not to accept integrated schools, assured them tonight he has a legal plan to operate the high schools as private institutions barred to Negro students.

"The plan is sound and workable," he said in a televised speech. "It is all legal."

He said the U.S. Supreme Court order may mean "the destruction of our school system, our educational processes, and the risk of disorder and violence that could result in the loss of life—perhaps your

"At this price I could not see you pay without first offering you a legal plan whereby such a catastrophe can be avoided and still provide the opportunity of an education for our children."

Outlining the plan, he said:

1. If the people vote against integration in the special referendum Sept. 27, the facilities of the public schools "will become surplus and not needed for public school purposes."

Building Lease

2. The school board, then, would be free to lease the buildings to a private agency. "I am sure you are aware such an agency already has been organized," he said. He referred to the Little Rock Private School Corp., organized yesterday.

3. He called upon the city's board of education to offer "to a private group these unoccupied buildings after the election."

He cited, as authority for this, an Arkansas law of 1875.

He said the plan is sound, workable and legal, adding, "To this the advocates of the so-called 'law of the land' can have no objection."

Faubus said "complete and total integration . . . will come sooner than you think" if the city votes Sept. 27 to reopen the schools on an integrated basis, as ordered by the Supreme Court.

He said the federal government cannot require a state to operate public schools, nor tell a state government how tax revenues may be spent. Then he said regarding integration:

"In all cases involving the public schools and integration, the federal courts have said only that an agency of the state cannot maintain segregated schools.

"This ruling does not apply in any way to private schools. Private schools are not affected by these decisions, even though the schools receive aid from state and federal sources."

Faubus placed heavy emphasis on the Sept. 27 balloting—although lawyers say they see no legal significance in it in view of the Supreme Court order last week.

He said a vote against reopening the schools on an integrated basis would clear the way for leasing the buildings to a private agency.

Those who are working for a vote for integration, he said, have as one of their objectives, "the destruction of Orval Faubus."

He told the people not to weary of the struggle, nor shrink from defiance of the federal government because of its great power.

"It could well be that the rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution will be taken from us by the use of billy clubs, pistol barrels and bayonet points," he said.

"But we do not have to be parties to such methods. We can carry on the struggle in the legal and political arenas."

In an apparent reference to clergymen, Faubus said, "For those who condemn me because I decline to forcibly integrate the public schools, may I suggest that they can best demonstrate their good faith by integrating their own social and religious activities."

He did not again mention Presbyterian ministers, some of whom, he said recently, "have been very effectively brainwashed by leftwingers and Communists."

A group of Methodist clergymen has called on him for an apology to the Presbyterians.

Faubus said that if the people do not vote against integration Sept. 27, "total integration will come sooner than you think."

He cited conditions he said exist in the schools of New York City and Washington, D.C.

"All of us were made aware . . . of the terrible conditions that exist in the schools of New York City," he said.

He quoted large portions of a congressional report on public school conditions by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the 84th Congress.

After reading extensively from it, Faubus said:

"There are many things in this report which I cannot, in good taste, mention on this television program."

"Write your congressman and secure a copy of this report and read for yourself the revolting and shocking developments in Washington, D.C., schools following integration."

After pointing to the wholesale exodus of white people from Washington, he closed by asserting that between now and Sept. 27 Little Rock will be subjected to a "terrific propaganda campaign of slanted, distorted and even false versions."

Dr. T. J. Raney, elected president of the newly formed private school corporation in its first business session today, said Faubus had not suggested creation of the corporation. He said its officers have not been in contact with Faubus adding, "The governor did not select us."

Group At Little Rock Obtains State Charter For Private Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 17.—A private school corporation was organized here Wednesday. Its purpose is to lease and reopen Little Rock high schools on a private basis if the district votes against integrated classes on Sept. 27.

The action, obviously related to Gov. Orval Faubus program of resisting racial integration, came as the Little Rock School Board announced it had decided to restore certain extracurricular activities, such as football and band practice. This followed an exchange of telegrams with the Governor.

All But One Leaves

On the Federal court front, the wait-and-see attitude by the Justice Department apparently is continuing. Dist. Atty. Osro Cobb's office announced all but one of the five-man team of Justice Department attorneys had left Little Rock, including Asst. United States Atty. Gen. Malcolm Wilkey.

Only Stephen Bransdorfer of the Justice Department team remains here. Mr. Wilkey was to go to Houston on another Government case before returning to Washington. He and the others may come back "if or when needed," a spokesman said.

The private school group was granted a charter in Pulaski Circuit Court by Judge J. Mitchell Cockrill, after six incorporators had filed a petition for incorporation. It bears the name of the Little Rock Private School Corp., and plans an organizational meeting here Thursday morning.

Seeks No Federal Aid

The [illegible] declares the organization "is a [illegible] with the purpose of establishing and operating private schools of the highest educational standards."

Formation of the group followed reports Tuesday that such an organization was part of Governor Faubus' overall program of re-opening the schools he closed Friday under a new state law. However, one of the group said the Governor "didn't know anything about this."

Incorporators include both active segregationists and civic leaders. They are Ben C. Isgrig Jr., Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, Dr. T. J. Raney, Herschel Goodman, Mrs. Gordon P. Oates and J. C. Mitchell.

Dr. Taylor, an osteopath, is a member of the Capital Citizens Council. Mrs. Oates is a prominent clubwoman and newly-elected member of the 1959 House of Representatives on the Democratic ticket. Dr. Raney is a physician; Mr. Isgrig a lawyer and farmer; Mr. Goodman owns a fireworks factory and Mr. Mitchell operates a tractor sales company and is a member of the Arkansas Merit System Council. Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Central High Mothers League, is Mr. Goodman's private secretary.

Blossom Noncommittal

The Governor had no immediate comment on formation of the group, and school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom turned aside most questions about it. One question he was asked dealt with whether the school board would be willing to "turn the schools over to a private group."

"That hasn't been discussed and is simply a bridge we'll have to cross when we get to it," he said. He added later that he wasn't sure what role he will play, if private schools eventually are set up.

Private School Papers Filed in Little Rock

By Presto

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 17 (UPI)—Six white citizens today formed with Circuit Court approval a nonprofit corporation to reopen Little Rock's four closed public high schools as private, segregated institutions.

Their action apparently was the plan of Gov. Orval Faubus to get the high schools functioning again on a segregated basis, despite a U.S. Supreme Court order to admit Negro students.

Three of the four schools which Faubus closed Monday saying he anticipated violence if they were desegregated, are white. The fourth is Negro.

Doctor Lands In Middle Of Little Rock Conflict

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A white-haired medical man, more used to professional conferences than news conferences, has carried his doctorly bedside manner into the turbulent school integration struggle here.

"All we want to do is have the kids going to school and let them (the state and federal governments) fight it out," said Dr. Thomas J. Raney, president of Little Rock's newly formed Private School Corporation.

The corporation was chartered for the purpose of operating the four high schools as private, segregated institutions.

The plan was advocated by Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who closed the schools against court-ordered integration. It is vigorously opposed by the federal government and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

POLITICAL NEWCOMER

Raney, now a central figure in the emotional controversy, never before has been involved in a political dispute. He has lived here most of his adult life, prospering quietly as a general practitioner and surgeon.

He looks like the successful physician he is. Well groomed, his 6-foot frame carries a well proportioned 190 pounds.

He was born 45 years ago at Newark in northeast Arkansas, one of six brothers and three sisters.

Immediately upon graduation from the University of Arkansas Medical School, he opened a practice here.

He has continued his practice in Little Rock except for the five years he served in the Army Medical Corps during World War II. saw duty in China and the Aleutian Islands and was released as a lieutenant colonel — a rank he still holds in the inactive reserve.

He has a wife and two sons—Jeff, 13, and Glen, 10.

RAISES HORSES

For relaxation, he operates a 540-acre farm near here where he raises gaited horses which he rides in horse shows throughout the Southwest. In addition, he is an avid backer of the University of Arkansas football team.

Raney said he became involved in the integration dispute because of his keen concern over the educational future of his sons. He said he would go to jail "if I have to" in support of the private school plan for maintaining segregation.

But asked if he was a segregationist, he replied:

"I don't know."

"Are you a particular friend of Gov. Faubus" he was asked.

"No more than anyone else," he said.

Raney and his fellow incorporators have maintained that the governor had no hand in the formation of their group.

An attempt by the corporation to open the high schools Tuesday was thwarted by a federal court restraining order.

What's the next move

"I don't know." said Raney slowly. But he added cheerfully: "We ain't through. Not yet."

Private Schools At Little Rock Sign 650 Pupils

Some Classes For Seniors Are To Start Today—Others Monday

NEGROES STAY AWAY

Faubus Laughs At Threats Of NAACP To Go To Court In New Test—Courses Are Limited

By PHIL NEWMAN

United Press International

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 20. — A white citizens' corporation and a Baptist organization registered a total of about 650 white high school students Monday for private, segregated classes in a former university graduate school and three churches.

The corporation planned to start classes for seniors Tuesday. The Baptists will continue registration through Wednesday and start instruction next Monday.

Private classes are a substitute for public high school, which about 3,000 students — including 700 Negroes—can't attend because four high schools have never opened this fall in the integration dispute.

Negroes Avoid Them

The Little Rock Private School Corp. registered about 250 white seniors. Ouachita Batpist College registered 283 white students of the 10th, 11th and 12th grades for classes in Baptist churches.

Students registered by the Baptists do not include 47 who have attended a private school at Second Baptist Church a week. The school corporation's schoolhouse is the former graduate school of the state university.

Two Negro schools, Philander Smith and Shorter, were considering the idea of establishing private schools for Negro students, but it was reported the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will oppose such a move. NAACP opposition stemmed from belief it would put Negroes in a position of supporting segregation.

The University of Arkansas estimated nearly 400 high school students had applied for correspondence courses to complete high school work. School Supt. Virgil Blossom said the public schools would grant diplomas to seniors who qualify through the university's correspondence courses.

No Negroes tried to register Monday and Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who sponsored the private school plan, laughed at threats of the NAACP to go into court and demand admittance of Negroes to the private schools.

"There's absolutely no legal ground whatsoever for any such action; but, of course, the Federal courts have given the NAACP whatever they asked for," he said.

Some Criticism Heard

Governor Faubus said he can't think of any way the Government can force him to reopen the public schools and he is ready to help the Negroes set up private schools.

Students who used to attend Little Rock Technical High refused to register at the Private School Corp.'s school Monday because it had no automotive or woodwork shop facilities.

Other students said they were disappointed by the corporation's offering only subjects they had already taken.

Remarks over the courses the corporation is offering led Dr. Thomas J. Raney, president of the corporation, to order all newsmen and photographers off the school grounds.

A girl who came to Little Rock from Texas told a television man in an interview: "They had everything they're offering here in the eighth grade where I came from in Texas."

Police patrolled the streets heavily around the private school building, but there was no trouble. Negroes on their way to junior high and elementary schools in the district walked by without being molested.

Says Integration Decision Covers Any 'State-Participation' School

Sun-9-30-58

From Wire Dispatches

Washington, Sept. 29—The Supreme Court said Monday that neither direct opposition nor "evasive schemes" could nullify its ruling that racial segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional.

A unanimous opinion written by all nine justices gave the court's reasons for rejecting any delay of integration in Little Rock. The court had met in special term September 12 and decided against delay.

But Monday's opinion went far beyond the issue in the Little Rock case—whether violent local opposition can justify postponement of a plan to admit Negro children to white schools.

Officials' Duty Is Noted

The court laid out in strong language—stronger than the original school decisions—the duty of State and local officials to end school segregation as promptly as possible.

It warned that its 1954 decision against school segregation applies not only in formally public schools but in any school

"where there is State participation through any arrangement, management, funds, or property." This was an evident reference to plans for setting up "private" school systems in Little Rock and elsewhere.

Finally, the opinion discussed in historical terms the power of the federal courts to interpret the Constitution and the obligation of State officials to follow those interpretations.

'Solemnly Committed'

"Every State legislator, and executive and judicial officer," the court said, "is solemnly committed by oath taken to Article VI, Paragraph 3 (of the federal Constitution) 'to support this Constitution.'

"No State legislator or executive or judicial officer can war against the Constitution without violating his undertaking to support it."

The courtroom scene Monday was one of quiet drama. Suppressed excitement could be sensed among the spectators as it became apparent, at the start of the reading by Chief Justice Earl Warren, that this was more than an ordinary opinion.

'Supreme Law of Land'

The opinion was unanimous, as have been all of those since the court first ruled in 1954 that forced segregation is unconstitutional. The opinion stressed the thesis that the 1954 opinion "is the supreme law of the land."

And, in declaring that State officials cannot nullify it, Warren quoted from two of his predecessors, Chief Justice John Marshall, who served from 1801 to 1835, and Charles Evans Hughes, who was Chief Justice from 1930 to 1941. The quotations:

Marshall: "It is emphatically the province and the duty of the judicial department to say what the law is."

"If the legislatures of the several states may, at will, annul the judgments of the courts of the United States, and destroy the rights acquired under those judgments, the Constitution becomes a solemn mockery."

Hughes: "If a governor can nullify a Federal Court order, it is manifest that the fiat of a State governor, and not the Constitution of the United States, would be the supreme law of the land; that the restrictions of the federal Constitution upon the exercise of State power would be but impotent phrases."

All but Douglas Present

Warren took special note that three of the men now on the court—Justices John H. Harlan, William J. Brennan, and Charles Evans Whittaker—have joined since the original decision against segregation in 1954.

Then he added:

"They are at one with the justices still on the court who participated in that basic decision as to its correctness and that decision is now unanimously reaffirmed."

Warren's closing words:

"The principles announced in that (1954) decision and the obedience of the states to them, according to the command of the Constitution, are indispensable for the protection of the freedoms guaranteed by our fundamental charter for all of us. Our constitutional ideal of equal justice under law is thus made a living truth."

There was some expectation in advance that the court would say in some detail what it meant three years ago when it said public-school segregation on account of race would have to be ended "with all deliberate speed."

No Dates Suggested

The opinion was not detailed, in the sense of suggesting specific dates. It did say in effect that delay in integration might be all right in some cases, provided local authorities develop good-faith plans to proceed as they could.

On the question of immediacy, the court said:

"In many locations obedience to the duty of desegregation would require the immediate general admission of Negro children, otherwise qualified as students for their appropriate classes, at particular schools.

"On the other hand, a district court, after analysis of the relevant factors (which, of course, excludes hostility to racial segregation), might conclude that justification existed for not requiring the present nonsegregated admission of all qualified Negro children.

"In such circumstances, however, the court should scrutinize the program of the school authorities to make sure that they had developed arrangements pointed toward the earliest practicable completion of desegregation, and had taken appropriate steps to put their program into effective operation."

Private-Corporation Head Ready To Obey

Teachers Advised To Stay Away If Classes Open as Faubus Expects

Sun-9-30-58

From Wire Dispatches

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 29.—A white citizens' committee leased Little Rock's closed high schools Monday, but a United States appeals court stepped on plans to reopen them Tuesday as private, segregated schools.

Two judges of the Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Omaha issued a temporary order restraining the Little Rock School Board from transferring the four schools to the Little Rock Private School corporation.

The order, retroactive to September 25, came down 5 hours after the lease was signed.

Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the corporation, said he would comply with an order. There was no word from him, however, hours after federal marshals began serving copies of the order on several hundred Little Rock residents—all those directly or indirectly involved in transfer of the schools to the private corporation.

Attorneys for the teachers in the high schools said they had advised the teachers not to "participate in the operation of the Little Rock high schools by any private corporation."

Confusion Spreads Rapidly

Confusion spread rapidly, not only among the officials concerned, but among the 3,700 high-school students and their parents as to whether the schools would open Tuesday morning.

Dr. Raney said his attorneys advised him that the ruling of the federal judges did not alter the situation.

But that was before copies of the actual restraining order directed against the members of the Little Rock School Board, Superintendent Virgil Blossom, and "officers, agents, servants, employees, attorneys, and all in active concert or participation with them."

It declared they are "restrained from taking any further action to transfer possession, control, or operation, directly or indirectly of the senior high schools of the Little Rock School District, or in any way alter the status quo of the senior high schools, insofar as their integrated status is concerned."

Judge Harvey M. Johnsen who joined Judge Woodrough in hearing the plea for a temporary order to halt transfer of Little Rock high schools to a private corporation planning to reopen them as segregated schools, said the order extends until a week from Monday, when a hearing will be held in St. Louis before a three-judge court.

Courier-Journal

Sun 9-30-58

Judge Johnsen said, "An attempt is being made to reopen Central High School (in Little Rock) as a private school, but in reality one that is segregated, to be available to all previous students except Negroes." This, he said, is "not in harmony with the court of appeals' plan" for carrying out integration at Little Rock.

Would Keep Status Quo

He said all Monday's order is attempting to do is to maintain the status quo pending a full court-of-appeals hearing on the case before them.

Faubus, sponsor of the private-school plan, said he was not surprised and has further plans.

"But I don't know what my next move will be at the moment," he said. "The situation may develop pretty rapidly.

"I haven't surrendered. I am not ready to surrender and I do not intend to surrender."

But Raney said he has no further plans if the Eighth U. S. Appeals Court forces him to close the schools.

Faubus Thinks They'll Open

Governor Orval Faubus said he believed the schools could open Tuesday morning and classroom work go on while the court actions are being fought out.

The order issued by the two federal judges, however, said the high schools must maintain their integrated status.

If it is obeyed, that presumably would preclude any Tuesday opening.

Raney said he would comply with an order. There was no word from his office, however, hours after copies of the restraining order were in Little Rock.

The order signed by Judge Joseph W. Woodrough, was di-

300 Enter LR Private School

200 More Expected in Segregated Plan

By CLIFTON WELLS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Little Rock's white high school students prepared to take up private, segregated studies Monday after seven weeks without public schools.

Approximately 300 seniors registered with the Little Rock Private School Corp., for classwork beginning Tuesday. Another 200 may be enrolled when registration is completed.

Another 300-students of all grade levels—enrolled for classes to begin next week in a Baptist high school set up here as a division of the church's Ouachita College.

WELCOMED BY PARENTS

Negro students—like their white counterparts, shut out of public high schools by Gov. Orval E. Faubus' anti-integration closing order—made no attempt to register. They would have been barred if they had tried.

Many white parents welcomed the private school registrations as the best way to "satisfactory meet an emergency."

"Any time the federal government starts meddling in our state schools, I will cheerfully accept the extra financial burden of sending my son to a private school," said one father.

LIMITED TO SENIORS

The corporation's school for seniors, made possible through contributions of people across the nation who support Gov. Faubus' stand, plans no tuition charge. The Baptist school charges $20 per month.

The corporation limited its first classes to seniors because of a lack of facilities. Expansion to include all grades is planned later.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said it would attempt to throw a legal roadblock in front of the private school corporation — the cornerstone of Gov. Faubus' plan to replace public schools with private institutions.

In New York, NAACP counsel Thurgood Marshall said the organization was preparing legal moves against the corporation. He did not disclose what action was contemplated.

3,600 STUDENTS AFFECTED

About 3,600 students were affected when Gov. Faubus closed Little Rock's four high schools to prevent court-ordered integration.

About 600 students have since entered schools in other parts of the state and nation, and about 350 are working toward high school diplomas through correspondent courses.

In addition to those who enrolled for private classes here, a group of 30 began commuting 42 miles to Hazen, Ark., to attend the white high school there. They were invited by the town as a display of support for the governor.

NEGROES NIP PLANS

Although no private groups have planned schools for Little Rock's 700 Negro students, the two Negro colleges here are considering opening high school branches which could accommodate about 250. About 200 Little Rock Negroes already rae enrolled in nearby rural schools for their race.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas NAACP president, has said Negroes will make no attempt to enter the private white schools as long as public buildings and public funds are not used.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis now has under advisement an NAACP petition for a permanent injunction to prevent the Little Rock School Board from leasing the empty high school buildings to the private corporation.

No plans for Negroes

LR private school group has big task

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 2—(AP)—The Little Rock Private School Corp. today faced the stupendous task of organizing an educational system for 2600 white high school students within days. The corporation has no plan for educating Negroes barred from their high school.

After announcing yesterday that it will seek to set up high school classes in private buildings and operate them with donations, the corporation issued an appeal for funds and facilities.

DR. T. J. RANEY, corporation president, said money is coming in rapidly and "the chances are good that the private schools can be opened next week."

"Money is pouring in from all over," Raney said. He would not say how much has been received.

Yesterday, Raney appealed for public contributions to support the proposed private school plan.

Dr. Raney revealed yesterday that the program does not include any plans for the 700 Negroes who normally attend Horace Mann High.

THE CITY'S senior high school students now have been out of classes five weeks past the normall Fall opening. Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the high schools before they opened. He said he did so to prevent violence such as occurred at Central High a year ago when integration took place with military support.

The U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals holds a hearing Monday on a petition for a temporary injunction to bar the school board from leasing the four high schools to the corporation.

A leasing plan would have gone into effect Tuesday. But the circuit court issued a restraining order preventing any transfer of schools, pending Monday's hearing.

Under the original plan, the private corporation would have taken over the high school system intact, including buildings, teachers, administrators and facilities. The program included Horace Mann High.

IF THE APPEALS COURT is sued an injunction to replace last Monday's restrainer—as appears likely—the corporation faces a seemingly super-human task.

It must find makeshift classrooms, adapt them and procure desks, chairs, books, blackboards and other aricles necessary for teaching.

It also must find money and teachers.

Public school administration figures indicate Little Rock spends about $15,000 each week for white high school education.

DR. RANEY said that within hours of his appeal, offers of use of an old rental building, a union hall and three churches were made to the corporation. He said an individual whose identity was not disclosed had donated $5000 and other contributions had been received.

"Teachers will be no problem," he predicted. "There are a lot of retired teachers who would help."

The segregationist Capital Citizens Council issued a statement declaring, "We can raise the money to educate our children. We are not beholden to the mighty tax trough." A council spokesman said the organization has no available funds but will aid in raising money.

Dr. Raney said, "We are studying several plans for public appeals for funds," an indication the corporation may be considering an organized campaign similar to those staged by Community Chests and other agencies.

NEW PLAN TOLD AT LITTLE ROCK

Corporation Would Use Private Resources

By RELMAN MORIN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A new maneuver was started Wednesday to put Little Rock high schools beyond the reach of federal courts, by using private resources to operate them as private, segregated institutions.

Dr. T. J. Raney appealed for money and for space in buildings.

He said one vacant building already has been examined and three churches had offered facilities. Raney declined to name the churches.

In a statement issued Wednesday, Raney asked that anyone owning an available building which might be used for classroom purposes call the corporation offices. Financial contributions, he said, should be sent to the bank where the corporation has an account.

ATTACKS PRESIDENT

Raney's statement attacked President Eisenhower, saying: "Federal officials, from the President on down, must be made to understand that the course they have chosen is leading the nation to destruction."

So began the newest move to circumvent federal courts. Last Monday, the Supreme Court ruled that integration must proceed in Little Rock without further delay. A few hours later, two federal circuit judges said public school buildings and facilities may not be taken over by the private corporation.

Raney said, before issuing his statement, he would not answer any questions about it, and he didn't.

Matters relating to Little Rock teachers, and the operation of the all-Negro school, Horace Mann remained unclarified.

TEACHERS BEING PAID

The teachers are being paid now although they are not working. They are under contract to the school board, and they get pensions and other fringe benefits.

They are among others enjoined by the federal court from working for the corporation. Their attorney, Bruce Bullion, said they agreed unanimously to comply with the order.

Reporters had no opportunity to ask Raney whether funds collected through public contributions, would be used to support Horace Mann as a private school.

It costs $19,000 a week to operate the four high schools on the present basis, Supt. of Schools Virgil Blossom said.

UNSOLICITED GIFTS

Even before Raney's appeal today, money had come into Arkansas from other Southern states—unsolicited.

Rainey made his appeal contingent on the action, scheduled next Monday by the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. The court is to rule on making the temporary restraining order, blocking the corporation from using public school facilities, a permanent order.

"If the court enjoins our use of the high school buildings . . . we will immediately begin school in other quarters.

"We have chosen our course, and as long as the people of Little Rock and our public officials give us their support, there will be no turning back."

Leaders Plan To Beat Oct. 15 Appeals Court Hearing But Date Isn't Firm

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From the Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 2.—Gov. Orval Faubus and officials of a private school corporation here expect to have privately financed, segregated schools open by Oct. 15.

Both the Governor and Dr. T. J. Raney, preident of the Little Rock Private Schools Corp., said they didn't expect to wait until the Oct. 15 Circuit Court of Appeals hearing in St. Louis before opening some kind of school system.

Both men declined to set a positive target date for school opening and both were vague on details as to how much money has been donated to finance privately operated schools.

Receives $3,000 In Day

Both intimated a meeting of the corporation and the Governor will be held this week, possibly in the next few days.

Their comments followed action of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis in extending for two weeks a temporary restraining order against use of the four public high school buildings here as private schools. The court set Oct. 15 for further hearing, which means at least two more weeks before final ruling on the restraining order.

The Governor and the private schools corporation had been awaiting a ruling from the court as a possible indication of how they should move next in the closed-schools controversy.

Pleased By Donations

Governor Faubus said it was his belief the private school group will set up privately conducted classes before Oct. 15. Not to do so would result in two more weeks of inactivity for students, he said.

The Governor said donations were coming in well.

"Just to give you an idea, we received about $3,000 in my office Monday. The corporation is receiving more daily," he said.

The Governor said he also was receiving donations daily at the Executive Mansion, and sending them to the corporation.

That was the first figure given out on donations. Dr. Raney said he didn't know the total received.

He also said he didn't know exactly when schools would open. But he said the corporation won't wait for further rulings from the Court of Appeals.

"We're going ahead with our plans," he said.

Government Waiting

Dr. Raney, who said he had just returned from a week-end trip to Dallas, also declined any information on buildings available or when a meeting is planned. He said a meeting was possible Tuesday.

Meanwhile Dist. Atty. Osro Cobb's office continued its policy of official silence.

A Federal Court official interpreted the policy as one of "waiting it out" by the Justice Department. He said it appeared the Justice Department might be hoping the Court of Appeals continuation of enjoinder action for another two weeks would bring pressure on Governor Faubus and segregationists here for a reopening of the public schools.

Little Rock School Operation Planned in Private Buildings

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 1 (AP) A maneuver started today to put Little Rock high schools beyond the reach of federal courts by using private resources to operate them as private, segregated institutions.

Dr. T. J. Raney appealed for money and for space in buildings.

He said one rental building, a union hall and three churches have been offered. He declined to name the churches.

"There has been quite a lot of money contributed — $5,000 from one person alone here in Little Rock," Dr. Raney said. He reported earlier that the corporation received about $1,500 even before it announced the school-leasing plan last week.

"Teachers will be no problem," he predicted. "There are a lot of retired teachers who would help."

Asked if any program is in the offing to teach Negroes of Horace Mann High School, which also is closed, Raney said, "not in our corporation." He said he has no knowledge of any offers of money or facilities for the schooling of Negro high school students.

Ike Attacked

Raney's statement attacked President Eisenhower, saying:

"Federal officials, from the President on down, must be made to understand that the course they have chosen is leading the nation to destruction."

So began the newest move to circumvent federal courts. Last Monday, the Supreme Court ruled that integration must proceed in Little Rock without further delay. A few hours later, two federal circuit judges said public school buildings and facilities cannot be be taken over by the private corporation.

Teachers Paid

City teachers are being paid now, although they are not working. They are under contract to the school board, and they get pensions and other fringe benefits.

They are among many others enjoined by the federal court from working for the corporation. Their attorney, Bruce Bullion, said they agreed unanimously to comply with the order.

It costs $19,000 a week to operate the four high schools on the present basis, Supt. of Schools Virgil Blossom said.

Even before Raney's appeal today, money had come into Arkansas from other Southern states —unsolicited.

Private Contributions

The newspaper The Arkansas Democrat has received currency and checks from private individuals. Georgia and Mississippi segregationists bought advertising space urging people to vote against integration in the special school election last Saturday.

Raney made his appeal contingent on action scheduled for next Monday by the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. The court is to rule on making the temporary restraining order blocking the corporation from using public school facilities a permanent one.

"If the court enjoins our use of the high school buildings ... we will immediately begin school in other quarters.

IN CHURCHES, HALLS—

L. R. Citizens Plan To Commence Classes

BY PRESTON McGRAW
United Press International

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 6—The Little Rock Private School Corp.'s lawyer said today he expects the corporation to try to open classes in churches, lodge halls and rumpus rooms this week.

"The decision of the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals today is not going to make any difference," Leon Catlett, the lawyer, said.

"I think we can get the schools opened this week, but I doubt that there is any way right now to detail our plans.

"There is nothing more that either I or Dr. T. J. Raney could say at this time."

Dr. Raney is president of the Private School Corp.

The Appeals Court extended until Oct. 15 a restraining order that was issued Sept. 29 to keep the Little Rock School Board from turning the closed high schools over to the corporation for operation as private, segregated institutions.

The plan to start classes around Little Rock in private quarters with publicly subscribed funds is an alternative to the plan of leasing the public schools and operating them privately with tax funds.

There is always the possibility that the Appeals Court would let the public high schools be leased, but the Private School Corp. apparently did not think it promising enough to wait for.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus did not put much stock in the possibility, however. He said the Appeals Court would extend the restraining order two hours before it did.

Faubus, speaking in Hot Springs, also raised the possibility that Little Rock's high school students may not go to school at all this year.

"Suppose the children of Little Rock missed a year of school; they still wouldn't be as far behind as the children of Washington, D. C.," Faubus said.

He made this reference to the possibility of the children missing a year of school after an illusion to a report by a congressional subcommittee.

The report, on the effect of integration in Washington's schools, said students there are two years behind.

He said he has no plan to do

MOVE IN COURT BY GOVERNMENT HITS ARKANSAS

Circuit Judges Today Will Be Asked to Block Private School Plan

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Three judges of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will hear a government brief Monday asking for an injunction to prevent Little Rock, Ark., schools from operating on a private, segregated basis.

Attorneys for the Justice Department have filed a 25-page brief with the court supporting a request that the court enjoin the Little Rock School from leasing the city's four public high schools to a private corporation.

The hearing will be before Judges M. C. Matthes, Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodrough.

Restraining Order.

The injunction was requested by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP has appealed an order of U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller of Arkansas which dismissed its suit to declare the Little Rock school lease plan unconstitutional.

The Justice Department, acting as a friend of the court, vigorously supported the NAACP request. "The Negro children have suffered long enough," part of the brief read.

The government said a comprehensive injunction is needed to prohibit the "existing or potential schemes" to evade desegregation mandates of the U.S. Supreme Court.

There was no suggestion how the injunction would be enforced if it was granted.

Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus has bluntly said that high schools in Little Rock will never be opened on an integrated basis by him.

Government Contention.

The government brief contended that Judge Miller erred when he ruled that he didn't have jurisdiction to grant the NAACP injunction.

He ruled that a three-judge court was necessary to rule on the matter.

Lawyers for neither the school board nor the Little Rock Private School Corp. have filed briefs or intervening pleadings with the circuit court. But if they should appear at Monday's hearing, the court is expected to allow them to present oral arguments in opposition to the application for an injunction.

The strongly worded government brief said in part: "If Central High School were reopened on a segregated basis . . . the harmful effects both to the children and to the country could in no way be undone by the courts.

"The courts cannot allow the process of law to be subverted in such fashion, for otherwise legal rights and judicial remedies would become meaningless forms."

U. S. To Ask Court To Halt Faubus' Plan

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Three judges of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will hear a government brief Monday asking for an injunction to prevent Little Rock, Ark., schools from operating on a private, segregated basis.

Attorneys for the Justice Department have filed a 25-page brief with the court supporting a request that the court enjoin the Little Rock School from leasing the city's four public high schools to a private corporation.

The hearing will be before Judges M. C. Matthes, Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodrough.

CONTINUE ORDER?

The injunction was requested by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP has appealed an order of U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller of Arkansas which dismissed its suit to declare the Little Rock school lease plan unconstitutional.

The Justice Department, acting as a friend of the court, vigorously supported the NAACP request. "The Negro children have suffered long enough," part of the brief read.

INJUNCTION NEEDED?

The government said a comprehensive injunction is needed to prohibit the "existing or potential schemes" to evade desegregation mandates of the U.S. Supreme Court.

There was no suggestion how the injunction would be enforced if it was granted.

Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus has bluntly said that high schools in Little Rock will never be opened on an integrated basis by him.

The government brief contended that Judge Miller erred when he ruled that he didn't have jurisdiction to grant the NAACP injunction.

He ruled that a three-judge court was necessary to rule on the matter.

Lawyers for neither the school board nor the Little Rock Private School Corp. have filed briefs or intervening pleadings with the circuit court. But if they should appear at Monday's hearing, the court is expected to allow them to present oral arguments in opposition to the application for an injunction.

STRONG WORDS

The strongly worded government brief said in part: "If Central High School were reopened on a segregated basis . . . the harmful effects both to the children and to the country could in no way be undone by the courts.

"The courts cannot allow the process of law to be subverted in such fashion, for otherwise legal rights and judicial remedies would become meaningless forms."

The brief claimed a segregated Central High School would mean victory for "the persistent and resourceful schemes which have been devised for evading decrees of the federal courts enforcing those rights."

The brief concluded that issuance of the injunction "is vitally necessary to maintain the supremacy of the federal Constitution and the integrity of the federal judicial process against challenges by officials of the State of Arkansas."

THREE JUDGES-8th U.S. CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS WILL HEAR A GOVERNMENT BRIEF ASKING INJUNCTION TO PREVENT LITTLE ROCK, ARK FROM OPERATING ON A PRIVATE, SEGREGATED BASIS

Order Extended On School Lease

NEXT HEARING OCT. 15

By RELMAN MORIN
Associated Press Staff

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 6.—A Federal Court extended the order Monday that prevents a Little Rock corporation from leasing the city's high schools and operating them as private, segregated institutions.

It scheduled the next hearing on the case for Oct. 15 in St. Louis.

Legally, this freezes the situation in Little Rock. The schools remain closed and beyond the reach of the Little Rock private school corporation.

Three judges of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals heard attorneys representing the Federal Government, the Little Rock School Board and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Monday.

The pleadings lasted exactly one hour.

Concern NAACP Request

They concerned an NAACP request for a preliminary injunction to freeze the situation in Little Rock, pending action on an appeal from an earlier ruling in the case.

Two weeks ago, the NAACP challenged the constitutionality of the Arkansas law, authorizing private corporations to lease the building and facilities of the public schools, and to use state funds for their support.

Federal District Judge John E. Miller declined to accept jurisdiction. He said the Appeals Court would have to take the case. The NAACP appealed Miller's ruling and got a temporary restraining order.

The order of the three judges Monday said in part.

"As the simplest and most effective way of continuing the necessary protection to appellants until the hearing of the case on its merits, said temporary order is hereby renewed and extended to and including Oct. 15, in all its terms and prohibitions" (and applies to) "appellees, their officers, agents, servants, employes and attorneys, and all persons in active concert or participation with them."

Three Main Points

Donald MacGuineas, Justice Department attorney, said the Oct 15 hearing will cover three main points:

1. Was Judge Miller correct in his ruling that the Appeals Court must decide on the constitutionality of Arkansas's private school law?

2. Whether Miller, having so ruled, should have asked the Appeals Court to convene and hear the case? Miller made no official request.

3. Is the lease, by which the private group acquired title to the high schools, invalid because it was designed to frustrate the orders of the Supreme Court to procede with integration in Little Rock?

Kenneth Coffelt, a pro-segregation attorney in Little Rock, said of Monday's ruling:

"There is not a bit of law for what they're doing up there in St. Louis."

But Clarence Laws, NAACP field representative, commented:

"It is our view that the Supreme Court, in its opinion last week, made it crystal clear that the court will not permit a community to use subterfuge to circumvent the Supreme Court decision."

The courtroom was completely filled and overflowing Monday. Most of the spectators were Negroes. They listened intently to the swift exchange of arguments.

The three judges — M. C. Matthes, Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodrough—asked frequent questions.

Sees Closed Schools

Richard Butler, attorney for the Little Rock School Board, told the judges:

"If you restrain (the corporation), there will be no high schools in Little Rock for some indefinite time."

In reply, Thurgood Marshall, general counsel for the NAACP said:

"We are not contesting, as yet, the Governor's power to close the schools." He emphasized, with a slight pause, the phrase, "as yet." Then he added, "We are asking solely for relief from the action turning over the schools to somebody else."

Three hours later, the judges ordered the case to remain unchanged, and told the lawyers to come back Oct. 15 prepared to argue "the merits of the case."

Federal Schools Denied

Attorney General Says Columnist Is All Wrong

By ROULHAC HAMILTON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON (Special) — Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers categorically denied Monday that he had obtained presidential approval of a program for establishment of a federal school system in the South, or that he had even discussed such a program with the President "or anyone."

COLUMN IS UNTRUE

Rogers said that a syndicated newspaper column by Robert S. Allen, veteran Washington writer, was untrue when it said he was "going ahead" with such a program after having obtained the "reluctant consent of President Eisenhower" to its use as "a last resort."

Allen wrote that Rogers was planning the construction of federal schools in southern areas where state and local officials have refused to racially integrate public schools. Allen said that under the plan, federal levies of local taxes to support such schools was contemplated.

QUOTED ROGERS

The writer quoted Rogers as saying that no new federal enabling legislation would be necessary to permit federal construction of public schools in unintegrated areas, although congressional appropriation of funds to operate a federal system would be needed.

Rogers said Monday he didn't say "any of the things" Allen attributed to him.

In a formal statement issued at his office Rogers said this of the Allen column:

GIVES STATEMENT

"The attorney general has never at any time talked with the President about any plan to have the federal government operate integrated schools in the southern states, nor has he talked to anyone else about any such plan.

"The article (Allen's column) purports to quote Mr. Rogers. Mr. Rogers never said any of the things attributed to him in it."

FEDERAL COURT EXTENDS ORDER

Clinton High Students to Occupy School Buildings In Oak Ridge

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A private school corporation in Little Rock, Ark., announced plans Monday to operate high schools for white children in private buildings. The schools would be financed by private donations.

The announcement came shortly after a federal court ban on operation of four Little Rock high schools as private, segregated institutions, was extended until a further hearing Oct. 15.

As the Little Rock school crisis ground to a new climax, federal and state authorities looked for clues to the identity of dynamiters who wrecked the Clinton, Tenn., high school early Sunday.

The 850 white and 11 Negro pupils of Clinton high will be sent in buses to a vacated school building in Oak Ridge, six miles from Clinton.

"The Clinton school was desegregated by federal court order two years ago and several racial incidents occurred during the first year. The situation quieted down after race agitator John Kasper was given a federal sentence for stirring up violence.

Little Rock segregationists initially planned to lease the four Little Rock high school buildings for use as segregated private schools. Gov. Orval Faubus approved a substitute plan calling for private buildings and donations after the lease plan was temporarily enjoined by Court of Appeals justices in Omaha, Neb. The restraining order was extended for a nine-day period Monday by a three-judge federal Appeals Court in St. Louis.

The Little Rock Private School Corp. hopes to open classes this week or next. Dr. T. J. Raney, head of the group, said the privately supported institutions would open "as soon as we get things rolling."

Justice Frankfurter of the U.S. Supreme Court released an eight-page opinion Monday concurring with the unanimous decision of the court last week in the Little Rock case. The court said then that states cannot use evasive schemes to halt integration.

Frankfurter's opinion said critics have a right to disagree with the court's integration rulings. But he added "active obstruction or defiance is barred."

Troops To Stay On At Arkansas School

By BASCOM N. TIMMONS
Clarion Ledger Bureau

White House is just about reconciled that it can find no way of getting off the hook at Little Rock and will have to keep troops there the more than four months remaining of this school term. What to do about the new term in September? General feeling in Administration is that if there are more incidents there may be another court order and then a Presidential decision on sending troop again. tration wishes on some points to escape a Presidential veto.

Faubus estimates—

Little Rock troop costs top $4 million

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 12—(AP)—So far the federal government has spent more than $4 million to keep troops on duty in the Little Rock integration crisis, Gov. Orval Faubus estimated yesterday.

Faubus computed the amount at the request of Rep. Thomas G. Abernethy (D-Miss.) who wrote the governor that he was unable to obtain an estimate from other sources.

Abernethy did not indicate why he wanted the information.

Since Sept. 25, the day President Eisenhower ordered 1000 federal paratroopers to Little Rock and federalized the 10,500 members of the Arkansas National Guard, Faubus figures that at least $4,280,000 has been expended on troops.

In the past few months the number of troops on duty in connection with the integration crisis at Central High School has been whittled down to 432 federalized Guardsmen. At present the Army stations about a dozen soldiers at the school during class hours.

A railroad flare was found in a corridor at the school yesterday and the two boys who discovered it thought at first it was a stick of dynamite. Police said it was non-explosive "fuse" used for signaling and probably was placed in the school by pranksters.

Arkansas Supreme Court Hears Little Rock Case

CITY IS 'PARTICIPANT'

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 24.—The Arkansas Supreme Court heard oral arguments Monday on a case growing out of the Central High School integration dispute.

It is the first case to reach the state's high court on the school integration issue.

The appellant is Vernon Duncan, Little Rock lumber dealer, who's appealing a $51.50 municipal court fine levied against him for resisting the order of an Army officer shortly after Federal troops had been sent here to enforce the integration decree.

Refused To Move

Mr. Duncan, who contended he was getting his automobile filled with gasoline at a service station near the school, refused to "move on" when ordered, and was arrested.

His attorney, Kenneth Coffelt, argued his client's constitutional rights were violated. The attorney is trying to get a state ruling on validity of orders which President Eisenhower issued in dispatching troops here.

The city of Little Rock is an "unwilling" participant in the case. City Attorney Joe Kemp tried to have the case dropped, but the Supreme Court ordered briefs on jurisdictional questions which court spokesmen have said will go to the "merits" of the case itself.

Among rulings which were handed down Monday, the court upheld a Mississippi Chancery Court ruling in a dispute between the City of Blytheville and the Blytheville Housing Authority.

The court held the housing authority liable for a judgment of $1,634 on sewer charges applied to customers throughout the city when the city expanded sewer facilities in 1955.

Exempt From Fee

The housing authority argued that under 1941 and 1950 agreements, it was "exempt" from the fee. The court however held that the $1.80 monthly fee applied to houses in the housing authority the same as other customers throughout the city.

Little Rock Troop Use Case Appealed

ST. LOUIS, Mar. 11 (AP).—The authority of President Eisenhower in sending Federal troops into Little Rock, Ark., was challenged in the United States Court of Appeals today in a hearing on a suit that stemmed from integration of Central High School.

The suit, which sought an injunction for removal of the troops, was dismissed in Little Rock in September by Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies. Mr. Eisenhower sent troops into the city to enforce a Fderal Court decree which ordered the admission of nine Negro students to the school.

Attorney Kenneth Coffelt, in urging the Appeals Court to overrule Judge Davies' action, argued that the President's power to send troops was limited to cases where there was an obstruction of Federal law. He said a Federal decree was not in fact a Federal law.

Attorney Donald B. MacGuineas, representing the Department of Justice, told the Appeals Court that there must be broad construction of the law to include court decrees and not merely legislative actions. He said the President had the authority to dispatch troops in cases involving an unlawful obstruction of Federal laws.

GOP chairman here—

Alcorn approves use of U. S. troops

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

Republican National Chairman Meade Alcorn, who said he approved President Eisenhower's use of troops to force school integration at Little Rock, declared "I think the Republican Party was—and is—on the rise in the South.

He conceded that the Little Rock action had interrupted the upsurge of the GOP in Dixie, but said that "the long-range impact of the Little Rock situation was substantially less than I and many others first thought it would be."

ALCORN MADE these statements at a press conference before addressing a statewide $25-a-plate dinner rally of Republicans from over Alabama at Tutwiler Hotel Friday night when he lauded President Eisenhower's leadership and lambasted the Democrats.

He said he believed the recession is "about over" and predicted Republicans will win control of the House "by a small margin" in this year's elections, 'if business conditions will begin to improve."

"But I cannot be that optimistic about the Senate," Alcorn added, pointing out it would be difficult for the GOP to overturn senators who come up for reelection in Southern states.

Chairman Alcorn, who emphasized that he "believes in party loyalty," added that "I wouldn't be much of a party chairman if I didn't."

"And I certainly believe in a two-party system," he declared "I believe implicitly that the cause of good government demands a two-party system in the South and in every section of our great country."

ALCORN DECLINED comment on the fight over the Alabama Democratic loyalty oath for candidates in primary elections, which the State Republican Executive Committee and the Jefferson County Republican Executive Committee have denounced as "political tyranny." He added that he wasn't familiar enough with the loyalty oath tussle to discuss it.

The national GOP head, in addressing some 300 Republicans from over the state, said I am extremely hopeful that this year will see more Republican candidates challenging the incumbent Democrats."

But Alcorn declined to comment on prospects of the GOP holding a statewide primary election in Alabama. He said this should be left up to state Republican leaders.

He predicted that Republicans would hold the congressional seats they now have in Florida, Tennessee, North Carolina and other Southern states and possibly win additional ones.

WHEN ASKED if he approved Eisenhower's action in sending troops to Little Rock, Chairman Alcorn said "Of course, I approve any action to maintain the authority of our courts. If we permit the flaunting of our judicial sytem, then the whole concept upon which our republic is built will fall apart."

The ruddy-faced GOP chairman from Connecticut, who bears a slight resemblance to the late Sen. Robert A. Taft, said he doubts that the president's veto of the "farm freeze" bill will hurt chances of Republicans in congressional elections.

"The average farmer now realizes that there is no substitute for a customer to buy his products and that government storage bins are not the answer to the farm problem," he said.

IN POUNDING the Democrats, Alcorn declared that a two-party system in the South "would put a damper on the Hubert Humphreys, the Soapy Williamses and the Walter Reuthers."

He told the Republican rally, amid repeated applause, that "this left-wing element controls the Democratic Party, and they consider the South safe territory, no matter how far to the left they pull the Democratic Party."

Alcorn, in stressing the importance of the GOP in Dixie, declared that "many Democrats don't yet seem to realize the Republican Party is already an effective instrument in the South, and is here to stay."

Alcorn said "on the basis of leadership alone, certainly the people of this nation would prefer to entrust their government to President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon, and a cabinet such as we now have, rather than to an administration composed of such left-wing Democrats as now control that party."

ALCORN SAID, "the greatest hope for individual freedom and private enterprise rests with the continuance of a Republican administration.

"For these reasons, I believe the Republican Party is the party of the future—the party best able to meet the challenges, the uncertainties and also the opportunities which lie ahead."

State Chairman Claude O. Vardaman, who presided at the dinner, told the GOP gathering that "a lot of Democrats will run for cover when they see the Democratic platform of 1960. They'll be looking for a home and the doors of the Republican church will be open."

Vardaman said "when the Democrats see Williams, Walter Reuther and that crowd coming at them, they're going to hide."

LEE POTTER, Virginia Republican chairman, who accompanied Alcorn to Birmingham, spoke briefly. He and Alcorn went to New Orleans Saturday for another GOP rally.

Army Is Mum On Little Rock Troop Role

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Army, apparently adopting a new information policy, declined again Thursday to say whether troops have shown up at integrated Central High School this week.

Several federalized National Guardsmen were inside the school the past three days, pupils reported.

But an Army spokesman, in contrast to his freely released information about troops last week, declined all comment except to reaffirm the Army's mission:

"To insure that all properly enrolled students are allowed to attend school without interference."

Last week the Army disclosed that on Thursday none of the 10 to 20 soldiers usually at the school appeared. It was the first day since last fall that no troops were at the school during class hours.

Newsmen and pupils have been curious to see if the Army would try it again. But jeep patrols and movements of soldiers to and from the school have been evident since Monday.

At night watchmen hired by the Little Rock school board guard the massive building, scene of numerous bomb scare hoaxes and the planting of one real stick of dynamite that was unarmed.

The orders and activities of the token soldier force at the school also are hidden by silence.

Expanding on the statement about the Army's mission, the spokesman said:

"The Army remains responsive to requirements and makes redispositions, alterations and troop relocations as they become necessary."

Translated, this means sometimes the soldiers are in the basement, sometimes they are on classroom floors, sometimes they are outside, sometimes they are hidden from the view of pupils and sometimes they are everywhere at the same time.

As for whether soldiers are under orders merely to observe disturbances, an Army official at Washington has reiterated that the Army will discharge its duties at Central "without fear or favor" until relieved.

An official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has charged that the Army now was maintaining a hands-off policy in interracial incidents involving any of the eight Negroes among the 1,900 whites at the school.

Privately, the word from the troops is that there have been few such incidents lately that would merit discipline from school authorities—a sharp departure from the internal near-chaos that reportedly prevailed several months ago.

Won't Protect Negroes If Troops Go—Faubus

By Herald Wire Services

GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS of Arkansas, key figure in the Little Rock school integration crisis last year, says he will not protect Negro pupils if federal troops are removed from Central High School.

PEOPLE

Faubus declared:

"It is improper to put police force in the schools." He added, it "isn't my role to promote social change."

The Arkansas chief executive said 80 to 85 per cent of his state's citizens are behind him on his integration stand and added that reports that violence would break out if federal soldiers were removed come from both "parents and students" at the school.

No Troops Withdrawal Schedule Yet Possible

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP) — Rep. Hays (D.-Ark.) said after a conference with Sherman Adams Thursday that it still isn't possible to fix a schedule for withdrawal of troops from Little Rock, Ark.

Hays was accompanied to the White House meeting with Adams, President Eisenhower's No. 1 aid, by C. E. Lowry, described by the congressman as "one of Little Rock's foremost citizens."

In response to a question, Lowry said he and Hays met with Adams to try to find out just what Eisenhower had in mind in connection with a statement he made at his news conference last week.

At that time, Eisenhower was asked what he thought "the wisest next step" would be in the Little Rock school situation. He replied he hoped that Little Rock officials could "soon express their confident intention of maintaining order and peace in their town" to clear the way for withdrawal of the federalized National Guardsmen still patroling the school area.

In response to a question, Lowry said he did not meet with Adams to convey any assurance such as Eisenhower mentioned.

Adams was not available to newsmen for comment.

Army Spikes Little Rock Troop Rumors

By ROULHAC HAMILTON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Army told Sen. Olin D. Johnston Monday it has no plans now for pulling out of Little Rock.

It will make no such plans until directed by President Eisenhower to do so, Johnston was told.

Johnston asked the office of Maj. Gen. C. D. Eddleman, deputy chief of staff for operations, whether the troops assigned to enforce integration of Central High School at Little Rock would be removed when the school session ends May 28.

The reply was that troops would not be pulled out of Little Rock "until an order to relieve them comes down from appropriate authority."

In response to a question, Johnston was told that "appropriat authority" meant the "person who sent them there." That, of course, was President Eisenhower, acting in his capacity as commander in chief.

Johnston then inquired if those in Eddleman's office directly responsible for the handling in Washington of the Little Rock maneuver—"I suppose you'd call it an operation," an Eddleman aide said dubiously—had had any indication that preliminary plans should be made for the removal of Little Rock troops.

"There has been no such indication," was the reply. "We only carry out orders, and until such time as we have been ordered to relieve the troops now on duty at Little Rock, we will maintain them there."

Eddleman's aide said that his schedule shows that commencement exercises will be held at Central High School May 27, but that students will return the following day to pick up their final reports and other such matters.

"To all practical intents and purposes, May 28 is the last day of the school session," Johnston was told. "We have no way of knowing now what will happen to the troops May 29."

Speculation that the Army might be preparing to relieve the troops on duty at Little Rock was aroused last week when for a full day—the first since the "occupation" of the Arkansas capital began last year—there were no soldiers on duty at Central High.

Guard Ban Appeal Lost By Faubus

Use Of State Troops At School Opposed

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 28 (U.P.) —The United States Court of Appeals today upheld a Federal judges ban against the use of Arkansas National Guardsmen to bar Negro children from the Little Rock Central High School.

The court rejected an appeal filed by Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus against the anti-troop injunction issued last September by U. S. District Judge Ronald M. Davies.

The court ruled that a state government does not have the right to call out troops to suppress "rights which it is the duty of the state to defend."

Allied appeals filed by Mrs. Clyde Thomason and Mrs. Margaret Jackson, both members of the pro-segregation League of Central High Mothers, also were rejected.

The legal actions were followups to the controversy which raged about Central High School last year over the issue of racial integration of the students.

Faubus called out Guardsmen to prevent Negro children entering the school after anti-integration mobs had gathered about the building. President Eisenhower then ordered Federal troops into Little Rock to enforce integration.

In today's opinion, the court said that a state government cannot suppress disorders, "the object of which is to deprive citizens of their lawful rights, by using its forces in carrying out the unlawful purposes of those who create the disorders, or by suppressing rights which it is the duty of the state to defend."

Use of state troops for such purposes, the court stated, would breed violence. It would constitute an assurance to those who resort to violence to obtain their ends, that if they gathered in sufficient numbers to constitute a menace to life, the forces of law would not only not oppose them, but would actually assist them in accomplishing their objective."

The court decision upheld a temporary injunction against Faubus, the Arkansas adjutant general, and the unit commander of the Arkansas National Guard.

A Government of Laws

The decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis in the Little Rock school desegregation case is a striking reaffirmation that ours is a government of laws: "We say that the time has not yet come in these United States when an order of a Federal court must be whittled away, watered down, or shamefully withdrawn in the face of violent and unlawful acts of individual citizens in opposition thereto."

There can hardly be any question that if the court had granted the Little Rock school board's petition to defer its integration plan because of the artificially instigated turmoil that took place last year, an "impossible situation"—even an anarchic one—might have developed throughout the South. As the court noted, an "affirmance of 'temporary delay' in Little Rock would amount to an open invitation to elements in other districts to overtly act out public opposition through violent and unlawful means." While the fullest consideration must be given to the revolution in Southern mores being brought about by the desegregation decision of 1954, that cannot mean yielding to mob rule.

There also can be no question that the Court of Appeals decision, logical and inevitable as it was, presents the people of Little Rock and the Administration in Washington with tough and urgent problems. The original integration plan is still in force, and—unless there is a stay of the Circuit Court's order—will still be two weeks hence when the schools of Little Rock reopen. It is perfectly evident from Governor Faubus' attitude, strengthened by his recent smashing electoral victory, that he will do everything in his power to prevent those schools from opening in even a minutely integrated form. Another clash between state and Federal power seems sadly inevitable; and plans had better be more carefully laid in Washington now than they were at this time last year to cope with it.

The overwhelming mass of moderate opinion throughout the nation recognizes that the element of deliberateness in the Supreme Court's 1954 opinion must be recognized, in some areas and under certain circumstances, as more binding than the element of "speed." The lower Federal courts certainly recognize this fact, too; and there has been no disposition to force this basic change with undue haste. But come about it must, under the Constitution and laws of the United States; and violence and intimidation will not prevent it. That is the meaning of Judge Matthes' decision; and sooner or later Gov. Orval Faubus must understand it instead of leading his people, as he is now doing, backward into the nineteenth century, with potentially disastrous consequences to Arkansas and the nation.

ARKANSAS

Finally, Governor Faubus and all who hold with him may be reminded that wherever there has been an honest and sober attempt to carry out the spirit of the 1954 decision there has been progress.

Judges In Little Rock Case Are From Midwest

By AL DOERING

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The seven judges who will hear the Little Rock intregation case appeal Monday come from states where racial problems are remote.

But they are not strangers to the Little Rock case. As members of the 8th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, they have dealt with it three times. Each time they ruled in favor of integration.

This time, the case is back on an appeal by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People from a U. S. District Court order postponing integration at Little Rock's Central High School for 2½ years.

The Supreme Court is in recess until October and the appellate court's decision will decide whether seven Negro pupils can return to Central, where integration was enforced last year with federal troops.

Judges Listed

Who are these seven judges?

Most of them come from the upper Midwest. Of the seven states in the district, Arkansas lone has no member of the bench.

There is the chief justice, Archibald K. Gardner of Huron, S. D. at 90, he is the oldest active federal judge in the nation.

Other members of the court are Joseph E. Woodrough, Omaha; John B. Sanborn, 74, St. Paul; Harvey M. Johnsen, 63, Hastings, Neb.; Charles J. Vogel, 60, Fargo, N. D.; Martin D. Oosterhaut, 58, Orange City, Iowa; and Martin C. Matthes, 52, St. Louis.

Gardner, Sanborn, Oosterhaut and Matthes are Republicans.

Sanborn, a widower, points out rather tartly he was around long before the integration cases. He and Johnsen upheld the original Little Rock integration order. They also upheld Dist. Judge Ronald E. Davies of Fargo, N. D., in enjoining Gov. Orval Faubus from using National Guardsmen to keep nine Negro students out of the school last fall.

Johnsen, slim and gray-haired with a squarish, rugged jaw, is known for his early and late hour working habits. He often is at his desk in the Omaha Post Office Building by 7 a. m. The bald, 6-foot-2, 250-pound Oosterhaut was a football letterman with University of Iowa. He considers his $17,500-a-year job on the bench 'an excellent opportunity to serve the people."

Vogel was elevated to the circuit bench by President Eisenhower in 1954. A year before his U. S. District Court appointment in 1941, Democrat Vogel tried to beat Republican William Langer for the U. S. Senate and failed.

'Walking Judge'

Woodrough is called the "Walking Judge." Throughout his long career (he was named to the District Court in 1933) he has walked part of the way to work from his suburban home in Omaha.

No one expects a decision Monday. It generally takes several weeks. In this case, it may come within days. The Circuit Court has been reminded by the Supreme Court that time is important because of the approaching school term.

The integration delay was ordered by U. S. Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., at the request of the Little Rock school board to allow a peaceful interlude.

CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL

All 7 Judges Told To Rule On Little Rock

St. Louis, July 21 (AP) — All seven judges of the U.S. District Court here have been ordered to rule on the appeal from an order delaying integration at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

Chief Judge Archibald A. Gardner today ordered all the judges to sit in on the hearings, which he set for the morning of August 4.

The appeal was filed Saturday on behalf "of the Negro students and pupils of the Little Rock School District."

It asked the court to set aside and reverse an order by Federal District Court Judge Harry J. Lemley on June 23.

Saturday's brief was filed by Wiley A. Branton, Pine Bluff, Arkansas, and Thurgood Marshall, representing the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People. On July 9, Branton had filed a brief calling for a stay of Lemley's order.

To Rule On Merits

Gardner told the appeals court to "hear the case on its merits," which indicated that Saturday's appeal would include the coverage of Branton's stay motion.

Earlier this month it was understood that only three of the seven judges would hear the motions.

In Lemley's decision, the integration of Central High School, which started in 1957, was delayed until January, 1961. It was in 1957 that nine Negro students entered Central High under the protection of Federal troops.

The seven judges who will hear the appeal are Gardner, from Huron, S. D.; John B. Sanborn, St. Paul, Minn.; Joseph W. Woodrough, Omaha, Neb.; Harvey M. Johnsen, Omaha, Neb.; Charles J. Vogel, Fargo, N. D.; Martin D. Van Oosterhout, Sioux City, Iowa; Marion C. Matthes, St. Louis.

Little Rock Judges Get Strong Letter

Many Protest To Federal Jurists, Hearing Appeals

ST. LOUIS, Aug 1 (AP)—Mail is pouring in on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals which will hear an appeal in the Little Rock school integration case Monday.

Every day brings more letters, mainly from the South. Robert C. Tucker, clerk of the appellate court, says they are bitter and frequently vicious.

Some are addressed to the court; others to the seven judges.

Regardless, the bundle of letters mounts. It will be quite a stack when the judges convene Monday in a small courtroom in the Federal Building to hear arguments on a U. S. District Court's order postponing integration at the Little Rock Central High School for two and one-half years.

The delay was granted by U. S. District Judge Harry L. Lemley of Hope, Ark., at the request of the school board. Lemley said he granted it to provide a "peaceful interlude."

Ordinarily, three judges hear an appeal but the court's 90-year-old Chief Justice, Archibald K Gardner of Huron, S. D., decided all seven would hear this one.

The others are Joseph Woodrough, 84, Omaha; John B. Sanborn, 74, St. Paul; Harvey M. Johnsen, 63, Hastings, Neb.; Charles J. Vogel, 60, Fargo, N. D.; Martin D. Van Oosterhout, 58, Orange City, Ia., and Martin C. Matthes, 52, St. Louis.

The court has dealt with the Little Rock case three times and has upheld integration on all points, including the original court-approved plan permitting nine Negroes to enroll last Fall.

The Supreme Court is in recess until October and the appellate court's decision will determine whether seven of the Negroes can return to the school this Fall. One Negro was graduated. Another was expelled.

Little Rock Case Coming Up Today

ST. LOUIS (UPI)—The appeal of a Little Rock, Ark., school segregation case, in which integration was ordered delayed until 1961, will be heard Monday by all seven judges of the U.S. Court of Appeals. It will be the first time in 30 years that all the judges have sat at a hearing.

The court, which is in the Eighth District Circuit, is made up of Arkansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, and North and South Dakota. Arkansas is the only state in the circuit that is not represented on the bench.

Sufficient Reason.

Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner, who called for Monday's en banc hearing of the case, said there was "sufficient reason" for the unusual procedure.

The importance of the decision is pointed up by the position of Gov. Orval Faubus.

Faubus, who recently won the Arkansas Democratic primary and is virtually assured of election in Democratic Arkansas, is a leader in the fight against integration. He has said that desegregation would lead to violence and disorder.

Last fall, federal troops were ordered to Little Rock by President Eisenhower to enforce a Federal Court order which allowed nine Negro students to enter Central High School. On April 26 of this year, the court upheld a ruling of U. S. District Judge Ronald N. Davies enjoining Faubus and Arkansas National Guard officers from barring the school to Negro students.

Ordered A Delay.

But U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley of Arkansas, following a request by the Little Rock Board of Education, ordered a delay in integration to allow "a peaceful interlude."

Wiley Branton, attorney from Pine Bluff, Ark., and Thurgood Marshall, representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, appealed Lemley's order "on behalf of the Negro students and pupils of the Little Rock schol district."

Earlier, the NAACP tried to bypass the Court of Appeals and take the case to the Supreme Court. The high court refused to consider the case because preliminary steps were not taken, but emphasized the need for a speedy decision because of the coming school year.

Court to Hear Little Rock Case Monday

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 2 (AP)—A case which could affect the speed of public school desegregation throughout the South will be argued Monday before the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

All seven judges of the court—instead of the usual three—are meeting in special session during their summer recess to hear the important case.

At issue is an appeal from an order by Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley, Virginia-born and a resident of Hope, Ark., suspending racial integration at Central High School in Little Rock for 2½ years.

The appellate court, which in previous rulings has upheld the Little Rock integration plan, is acting this time with unaccustomed haste. A ruling is expected before the start of the fall school term next month.

JUDGE LEMLEY'S suspension order was requested by the Little Rock School Board. The board cited unrest and disciplinary problems which marked the first phase of the gradual integration plan, enforced with the use of federal troops.

It was appealed by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, which calls Judge Lemley's order "an invitation to violence."

Arkansas is the southernmost of the seven states in the Eighth Circuit and the only one without a member on the bench. The other states are Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

The court is headed by 90-year-old Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner of North Dakota, a Republican. Judge Gardner and John B. Sanborn, 74, a Minnesota Republican, were appointed by former President Hoover.

Harvey M. Johnsen, 63, and Joseph W. Woodrough, 84, Nebraska Democrats, were named by the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

CHARLES J. VOGEL, 60, North Dakota Democrat; Martin D. Van Oosterhout, 58, Iowa Republican, and Martin C. Matthes, 52, Missouri Republican, are appointees of President Eisenhower.

These are the men who are called upon to decide the proper application, in the complex Little Rock case, of the Supreme Court's 1955 order for an end to segregation in public schools with "all deliberate speed."

Judge Lemley held that Negroes have a constitutional right to attend Central High. But, citing deep-rooted opposition to integration in the area, he found the school board had "convincingly shown that the time for the enjoyment of that right has not come."

The NAACP's attorney, in their brief, argue that Judge Lemley's order, if permitted to stand, "as a precedent will be disastrous to our whole concept of constitutional government."

Little Rock to File Brief on Delay

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 2 (AP). The Little Rock School Board made public a legal brief it will file next week in its effort to gain a respite from school integration.

The board will file the 80-page brief with the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis Monday, the date set for a hearing on an appeal from a 2½-year integration delay here ordered by U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley.

Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People filed the appeal.

Richard C. Butler and A. F. House, attorneys for the school board, declared in the brief that the central question which the appellate court must decide is whether a school district is responsible for enforcing district laws.

The brief cited instances of violence that erupted throughout the past school year after nine Negro children entered Central High School under protection of federal troops.

FBI Probes Dynamite In Little Rock School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—FBI agents had orders today to investigate the discovery of a stick of dynamite in a basement locker at Little Rock Central High School.

An anonymous telephone call yesterday sent city policemen and federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen on a 1½-hour search. They found the dynamite, which had no cap or fuse, in an otherwise empty locker.

The Justice Department said at Washington last night that the FBI would find out whether any federal law had been violated.

The telephone caller's tip said two sticks of dynamit had been placd at the school but only one was found.

NOT DANGEROUS

An explosives expert said it was possible but difficult to set off unfused, uncapped dynamite.

It was the second bomb scare in recent days at the school, where nine Negro students were integrated under the protection of federal troops Sept. 25. Last Thursday night federalized guards men combed the huge building in an unsuccessful search for explosives after an anonymous call.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom told a news conference several hours after the dynamite discovery that he considered it a terror weapon aimed at shutting the doors of the school to all students. He said he definite planned to keep Central open.

About 25 federalized guardsmen are stationed at Central on each class day. They are drawn from the last 432 guardsmen still on duty in connection with the integration crisis.

DYNAMITE CACHE STIRS LITTLE ROCK

Stick of Explosive Found in Locker at Central High—Negro Pupil Assaulted

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 20 (AP)—A stick of dynamite, uncapped and unfused, was found in an empty locker at Integrated Central High School today. Virgil Blossom, Superintendent, called it a weapon of terror "to force us to close the school."

The dynamite, relatively harmless in its unfused, uncapped state, was found after an hour and a half search by city police and federalized National Guardsmen. An anonymous telephone call to a local radio station manager, Ray Bartlett, started the search.

Mr. Bartlett said the caller asked for him by name and told him there were two sticks of dynamite planted in the basement of the 2,000-student school "in a locker." No second stick was found.

In Washington, the Justice Department announced that the Federal Bureau of Investigation had been authorized to investigate "to determine if there had been any violation of federal law."

The discovery of the dynamite highlighted a hectic first day of the new semester that was filled with rumors and tension. Earlier in the morning a Negro student—one of the nine whose integration into Central High started the Little Rock crisis—was knocked down by a white boy. Both were sent to the principal's office and Mr. Blossom said an investigation of the incident was pending.

The search for the dynamite was carried out while some students were attending classes and others were lunching in the basement cafeteria, just a few yards from where the stick was found.

Acting Police Chief Eugene Smith said he believed the dynamite was put there "not to blow up anything but to create hysteria."

Mr. Blossom commented:

"It appears that this is a part of a campaign to try to force us to close the school. This is an opinion on which the police, F. B. I. and military agree.

"We further feel that no one in this community would actually carry out anything of this sort that would result in harm to the children.

"Every precaution is being taken for the safety of the children and at the same time carry on their educational program."

It was the second explosion scare in five days. Last Thursday night a platoon of federalized Guardsmen searched the huge high school for explosives after an anonymous call. They found nothing.

At a news conference, Mr. Blossom said he first heard of the dynamite report from the Federal Bureau of Investigation this morning.

Questioned about steps taken to insure the safety of students, Mr. Blossom said he could not reveal the measures but added no increase in the number of troops was anticipated.

Central High School now is guarded on school days by federalized Guardsmen of the Arkansas National Guard. Without comment, the military resumed its outside patrols this morning. They had been discontinued about ten days ago.

NASHVILLE INVOKES STATE SCHOOL LAW

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 20—The Nashville School Board invoked Tennessee's new Pupil Placement Law today as a defense against complete and immediate integration of the city's public schools.

In a brief filed in United States District Court the board asked dismissal of a suit in which the National Association of Colored People is asking for complete desegregation.

By court order, the city schools' first grade was desegregated last fall after an outbreak of racial violence. The board was given until Dec. 31 to submit a plan for desegregating the remaining eleven grades.

At the insistence of a local segregation organization, the Parents School Preference Committee, the board proposed a "voluntary integration" program. This was similar to a "voluntary segregation" program previously rejected by William E. Miller, Federal District judge.

Dynamite Found At Central

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 20 (AP)—A stick of dynamite, uncapped and unfused, was found in an empty locker at integrated Central High School today. Supt. Virgil Blossom called it a weapon of terror "to force us to close the school."

Little Rock High Yields Dynamite

Superintendent Calls Incident 'Weapon To Force Closure'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 20 (AP)—A stick of dynamite, uncapped and unfused, was found in an empty locker at integrated Central High School today. Supt. Virgil Blossom called it a weapon of terror "to force us to close the school."

The dynamite, relatively harmless in its unfused, uncapped state, was found after a 90-minute search by city police and federalized National Guardsmen. An anonymous telephone call to a local radio station manager, Ray Bartlett, started the search.

Bartlett said the caller told him there were two sticks of dynamite planted in the basement of the 2,000-student school "in a locker." No second stick was found.

The discovery of the dynamite climaxed a hectic first day of the new semester that was filled with rumors and tension. Earlier in the morning a Negro student — one of the nine whose integration into Central High touched off the Little Rock crisis — was knocked down by a white boy. Both were sent to the principal's office. Blossom said an investigation of the incident is pending.

The dynamite search was carried out while some students were attending classes and others were lunching in the basement cafeteria, just a few yards from where the stick was found.

CREATE HYSTERIA

Acting police Chief Eugene Smith said he believed the dynamite was put there "not to blow up anything but to create hysteria."

Blossom commented: "It appears that this is a part of a campaign to try to force us to close the school. This is an opinion on which the police, FBI and military agree.

"We further feel that no one in this community would actually carry out anything of this sort that would result in harm to the children.

Blossom told a news conference he first heard of the dynamite report from the FBI this morning.

Questioned about steps taken to insure the safety of students, Blossom told reporters he could not reveal the measures but did say no increase in the number of troops was anticipated.

Central high now is guarded on school days by federalized Guardsmen of the Arkansas National Guard. Without comment the military resumed its outside patrols this morning. They had been discontinued about 10 days ago.

Blossom said there was no indication any additional Negroes would enroll for the second semester. That, too, was rumored at the school this morning.

FBI Given Orders To Probe Dynamite

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20 (AP)—The Justice Department today authorized the FBI to investigate the finding of dynamite in a locker at Little Rock's Central High School.

The department said the FBI would "determine if any violation of federal law was involved."

Officials declined to elaborate.

The FBI made an investigation of disorders at the school last September when nine Negro children enrolled under a federal court desegretation order.

After getting a lengthy report on these disorders, the department adopted a mark time policy with respect to possible federal prosecution of those involved.

But officials indicated that if further disorders occurred involving the same persons this policy might be changed.

Violence flares at Ft. Chaffee; soldiers beaten

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Reports that two colored soldiers were beaten by a group of white persons in an army barracks at nearby Fort Chaffee, Ark., were confirmed Friday by the Washington Bureau NAACP.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington NAACP branch, said a complaint of the attack had been filed with Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP. He said the action was presently in her hands.

• • •

EARLIER REPORTS stated that Pvt. Vernon Lewis and Specialist Lester Minor were attacked in the army barracks and then reprimanded by their commanding officer.

The statements say that both Lewis and Minor have been charged with assault and battery and held for courtmartial while no action has been taken against their assailants.

According to reports, the soldiers claim they are being denied justice and have asked an NAACP investigation. Mr. Mitchell's office said that as of Friday it had not received a report in the matter.

16-Year-Old Girl Hate Target

Pressure Is Mounting In Little Rock on Minnie Jean, NAACP

She Commits 'Crime' Of Talking Back to Her White Tormenters

Courier

NEW YORK—"A battle lost and a new one begun" characterizes the plight of plucky Minnie Jean Brown, 16-year-old student of Little Rock's infamous Central High School. P. 3

• As if she hasn't gone through enough humiliation gaining entrance to the previously all-white high school, now it has become necessary for the NAACP to urge that the Little Rock Board of Education "reject the recommended suspension" of Minnie Jean.

• It seems her only "crime" was "talking back" to a white girl who had harassed her recently in the school.

By orders of Principal Jess W. Matthews she was not to "retaliate, verbally or physically to any harassment" which might be heaped upon her by any white student in the school.

Pittsburgh

THIS ORDER came despite the fact that Minnie Jean apparently is the object of a movement to have her removed from the integrated school.

She was suspended for calling a girl student "white trash" after the latter repeately called her "n——r bitch," and had struck Minnie Jean on the head with her pocketbook.

Sat 2-22-58

The white girl was not suspended and superintendent of schools, Virgil Blossom, praised her for having "a good citizenship record."

Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, in a telegram to Little Rock board chairman Wayne Upton, cited the abuse to which Minnie Jean and other Negro students at the school have been subjected.

MINNIE JEAN, who dared fight back, and consequently has been suspended twice, now faces expulsion from Central High School for the rest of the year at the recommendation of Mr. Blossom.

Faubus Picks Birthday Of Abe Lincoln to Nix NAACP's Franchise

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—On Lincoln's Birthday, Gov. Orval Faubus signed a proclamation revoking the Arkansas state franchise of the NAACP, after telling newsmen the day before that he "probably" will call a special session of the Arkansas Legislature before next fall to prohibit use of Federal troops to enforce integration in the public schools. The ordinance requires certain organizations, mainly aimed at the NAACP, to file their membership list and financial data with the city of Little Rock.

THE JURIST let the television cameras, usually banned from courtrooms in the state, whirr in the background as the case proceeded.

The next day, Minnie Lee Brown, was expelled from Central High School as another "strike."

Mrs. Bates had originally been fined $100 and costs in Little Rock Municipal Court but attorneys for the city of Little Rock had agreed that $25 was the maximum fine she could be fined because of a state law which limits the amount of fines which may be assessed under certain kinds of ordinances.

NAACP Urges School Board

Halt Suspension Of Minnie Jean

New York - The NAACP today urged the Little Rock Board of Education to "reject the recommended suspension" of Minnie Jean Brown, 16-year-old Negro student of Little Rock's Central High School.

In a telegram to Wayne Upton, president of the Little Rock board, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, cited the harassment to which Miss Brown on the charge of "talking back to a white girl," Mr. Wilkins pointed out "is an absurdity which your board cannot accept. . .in the extraordinary situation obtaining at Central High School."

Sat 2-22-58

Roy Wilkins

Your records will show that the New York office of NAACP has refrained from injecting itself into the Little Rock situation. However the threatened permanent suspension of Minnie Jean Brown impels us to suggest that in the interest of fair play in which Americans everywhere have a stake the board of education reject the recommended suspension. Minnie Jean Brown is fomally charged in a letter from her principal with "talking back to a white girl." We submit that in an ordinary situation this would be an unthinkable basis for explusion and that in the extraordinary situaton obtaining at Central High school it is an absurdity which your board cannot accept. Making due allowance for the pressures under which you are operating we nevertheless feel that as responsible citizens you cannot approve of this tactic. In his letter the principal admits by inference that there was provocation in the Brown case yet the provocateur has not been penalized in any fashion while it wrestles with a situation more difficult than it has been recommended for Minnie Jean. It has been evident for several months that the coordinated harassments at Central High have been the work of a few students. the tiny minority and thus permitting majority of white students who might the more than 1,900 students have been fair. The nine Negro board as to attend classes in peace. In-students have conducted themselves admirably under trying circumstances. We express the fect that the Board of Education in considering the penalty of exclusion to be imposed for even matter will match this record.

LITTLE ROCK—Do a handful of segregationists inside Central High School have a time-table by which they hope to have the nine colored pupils ousted one by one?

That was the question in minds of fair-minded citizens here after the unprecedented suspension of Minnie Jean Brown, the most spirited of the Little Rock Nine.

Hardly had Minnie Jean been told she faces possible expulsion before another of the youngsters, Thelma Mothershed, became the target of the "Faubus forces."

And on the same day, a third student, 15-year-old Jefferson Thomas, was choked by a white pupil in a gymnasium incident.

* * *

The white girl, identified as Florence Calloway, 15, said Thelma kicked her on the knee as they climbed a stair in the school.

The Calloway girl said she called Miss Mothershed "something I shouldn't have," in reference to the kicking incident.

Almost simultaneously, 15-year-old Jefferson reported that an unidentified white boy kicked him by the throat and choked him near the school gymnasium after threatening him.

He said the youth accused him of "bumping into me in the hall."

Ellis Thomas, young Thomas' father, said his son told the white boy he hadn't "bumped into him," that he "didn't even know him."

Principal Jess Matthews turned aside the incident, saying he had no knowledge of it.

JEFFERSON IS ONE of three colored boys enrolled at Central High School. The other six pupils are girls.

Blossom extended Minnie Jean's original three-day suspension to two weeks because the 16-year-old child called Frankie Ann Gregg "white trash," after the Gregg girl called her a "n . . . . r" and attacked her with a purse.

On the same day she was attacked by the Gregg girl, Minnie Jean was doused with scalding hot soup by a white boy identified as Lester Judkins Jr.

In a conference with the parents of the children, Blossom announced his intention to recommend to the school board permanent expulsion of Minnie

Mrs. W. B. Brown, Minnie Jean's mother; the NAACP and the New York Herald Tribune (editorially) immediately came to the attack.

MRS. BROWN SAID SHE would resist any effort to remove Minnie Jean from the school.

Clarence Laws, NAACP regional director, said:

"Minnie Jean's parents plan to appeal to the school board any action to remove her from Central High School.

"And the NAACP is going to go all the way in support of the parents."

Lashing out at the action against Minnie Jean editorially, the New York Herald Tribune declared:

"She was suspended for talking back to a white girl. Principal J. W. Matthews says Minnie Jean had no right to retaliate.

"To expect a 16-year-old high school girl to turn the other cheek under constant provocation is to expect too much."

"I will appeal to the school board. I'll try to get a hearing just as soon as I can," Mrs. Brown stated, adding:

"We feel like we're not getting a fair deal. It's all part of the pattern of harrassment."

In a telegram to Wayne Upton, president of the Little Rock school board, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, stated:

"The suspension of Miss Brown on the charge of talking back to a white girl is an absurdity which your board cannot accept.

"We urge the Little Rock Board of Education to reject the recommended suspension of Minnie Jean Brown."

Miss Brown said Blossom suggested that Minnie Jean take correspondence courses and go to summer school to make up her classes or go to Horace Mann High School for colored pupils.

Said Mrs. Brown of the suggestions:

"We haven't even discussed the possibility." Minnie Jean said, "My parents don't like the idea and neither do I."

She added:

"For five months the situation has been almost unbearable. I don't think people realize what goes on at Central.

* * *

"THEY THROW ROCKS, they spill ink on your clothes, they call you n . . . . r, they just keep bothering you every five minutes.

"All of us were ordered to be humble to the white pupils."

"They hate me and I know it. No matter what I do that happens to be good, they keep hating me.

"Once I had several white acquaintances, but now I have only one, a girl.

"Make that a half a friend. When she's with me she's my friend. When she's with the white students, she acts differently."

School officials sent a letter to Minnie Jean's parents which which said in part:

"Minnie Jean Brown was reinstated on probation Jan. 13 (from a previous suspension) with the agreement that she would not retaliate verbally or physically to any harrassment, but leave the matter to school authorities.

"After provocation of the (white) girl student, she called the girl "white trash" after which the girl threw her purse at Minnie Jean."

* * *

OF THE LETTER, Minnie Jean said:

In provoking Minnie Jean to the point of exasperation, the Gregg girl followed her inside the school for a week calling her "n . . . . r b . . . h" and then attacked her, Minnie Jean declared.

Mr. Laws said the parents of the children met with the principal and assistant principal of the school for two hours last Sunday and another meeting is slated for Feb. 16.

* * *

THE NAACP officials said the parents asked that permanent suspension of Minnie Jean be dismissed because it would make all the pupils targets for abuse.

Principal Jess Matthews said of the suspension:

In telling the colored parents of his intention to recommend permanent expulsion for Minnie Jean, Blossoms stated:

* * *

"IT IS NOT a definite conclusion yet, but it is being decided. I must talk with two other people before I make up my mind."

Under local laws, the school superintendent can only suspend pupils up to two weeks. For permanent expulsion, authority rests with the School Board.

If she is expelled permanently, Minnie Jean would not be eligible for admission to any other Little Rock public school for the remainder of the year.

Nor could she enroll in any other Arkansas public school.

No action was taken against the Gregg girl. In fact, Blossom praised the girl as having "a good citizenship record."

* * *

MR. LAWS SAID the Arkansas National Guard troops inside the school were "not at all effective" and the pupils were "threatening them."

He said the troops were not allowed to touch the pupils no matter what they did.

The NAACP leader said one pupil at the school became irate last week and threatened to attack a guardsman.

He emphasized that inside the school there are about "six to twelve" troops to maintain order.

As had earlier been predicted by political observers, state police here launched an investigation into the integration situation at the high school for the Legislative Council.

Observers have speculated all along that Faubus forces working for his election to a third term as governor of Arkansas, were behind the stepped up campaign of violence at the school.

The gubernatorial primaries of the state will be held this summer as well as a possible session of the legislature for what could be more segregation school laws.

This strategy of keeping things in an uproar at the school is seen by observers as Faubus' hopes for reelection.

A Central High teacher, questioned by the investigators for the state, said questions dealing with the discipline of white and colored pupils were stressed.

STILL BUILDING—Despite the 1954 Supreme Court ruling calling for integrated schools, Arkansas school districts since that year have stepped up construction of new Negro schools in the hope the segregated pattern will continue. This is Horace Mann High School, Negro facility at Little Rock, which is among the larger schools built during the past few years.

Building Of Negro Schools Has Quadrupled In Arkansas

By KENNETH JOHNSON
Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 2.—Arkansas school districts, stung by the impact of the Supreme Court's 1954 anti-segregation ruling, have stepped up the construction of Negro school facilities by about four times the building rate of 10 years ago.

Figures compiled in the State Department of Education Thursday showed that since September of 1954, about $7,228,000 has been expended on construction of new Negro facilities.

While construction totaled roughly 17 million dollars, for a ratio of about two and a half to one. Ten years ago, however, construction was running at the rate of about 10 to 1 in favor of white schools, said Assistant Education Commissioner Ed McCuistion.

Court Defied

The figures indicated that despite the Supreme Court's throwing out the idea of "seperate but equal facilities," Arkansas school districts still apparently are preceeding under that policy.

Department records showed that much of the new Negro building has been concentrated in East Arkansas, which is heavily populated with Negroes and where schcools still almost solidly are operating under separate facilities for the races.

The present ratio of new school construction is actually tilted a little in favor of the Negroes, since the population rati statewide is threew hite students to one Negro.

Mr. McCuistion said the department doesn't have current figures on the "differetiail" between facilities for the two races. The department has discontinued keeping figures on that item since the Supreme Court's ruling. However, about three years ago it was estimated that from 22 to 25 million dolalrs was needed ot "equalize" Negro facilities with that of white schools.

Closing Gap

"Since then we've been closing the gap mighty fast," said Mr. McCuistion

One of the new Negro schools built in the state since the high court ruling is the new Horace Mann High School in Little Rock, which cost about a million dollars, and which has figured indirectly in the Little Rock integration controversy.

The Horace Mann School, authorized by local district officials in 1953, first as an elementry school, went into operation last year as a high school. Opponents of integration have contended the nine Negro students now attending previously all-white Central High should be attending the new Horace Mann School.

As to white-Negro teacher salaries, Mr. McCuistion said, "those are practically equal now, or are in the process of being equaliized in the various districts."

Complaint Dropped

Negro plaintiffs recently withdrew a complaint in Federal court toward equalization of Negro teacher salaries with a statement that there was now little difference between the level of white and Negro teachers' pay.

During the 1955-56 school year, white teachers with bachelor's degrees were being paid an average of $2,486 a year, with Negroes $2,195. Since then, and including a teacher salary increase to all teachers in September, the salary differential has been virtually wiped out, said Mr. McCuistion.

Figures showed that where Negro school construction was undertaken, emphasis has been on providing new classrooms. Other additions or improvements have ranged from new gymnasiums to teacher residences. Both high schools and elementary additions have been made.

Marianna Leads

The single largest Negro construction expenditure in East Arkansas counties since 1954 has ben at Marianna, wher edepartment records showed $400,000 spent for a new Negro school there.

Other Negro construction, some of it still in the planning or building stage, has included the following:

$250,000 in new facilities at Lake Village, $50,000 at Clarendon, $250,000 at Blytheville, $260,000 at Forrest City, $111,000 at Crawfordsville, $175,000 at Huber-West Memphis, $135,000 at Marion, $140,000 at Earle, $75,000 in Phillips County special district, $100,000 at Watson Chapel in Jefferson County, $270,000 at Camden and $206,000 at Texarkana.

26 Quit Speech At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 11 (AP)—A Denver publisher deplored the international repercussions of the Little Rock school integration crisis during an address at an Arkansas Press Association banquet last night, and 26 persons walked out while he was speaking.

Palmer Hoyt, publisher and editor of the Denver Post, made no comment on the silent protests—not even when Keith Tudor, a vice president of the association, left the publisher's own table.

The 225 persons who remained sat in silence as Hoyt termed the Little Rock crisis one of three great dangers to the American way of life.

Hoyt said the two other major perils to U. S. civilization were contained in Russia's economic challenges and her supremacy in space-age arms and sciences.

Gov. Orval Faubus, one of the key figures in the integration crisis, introduced Hoyt and listened to the speech placidly.

The publisher said he would not presume to pass judgment on Faubus, whose action in stationing Arkansas National Guardsmen at Central High School ignited the explosion over integration. The soldiers kept nine Negroes from entering the school.

The world believes an American state tried to use its armed forces in preventing a handful of Negro children from getting an education, Hoyt said.

And, Hoyt added, it should be borne in mind "what an education means to the world's backward millions struggling for human identity, the great majority of whom are of the so-called colored races."

White Girl Suspended For Pushing Negro

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan 11 (AP)—A white girl student reported yesterday that she was suspended from Central High School because she pushed a Negro girl who got in her way in a corridor.

Darlene Holloway, 17-year-old junior, told her mother that Principal Jess Matthews suspended her immediately after the incident but did not suspend the Negro girl.

A reliable source quoted School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom as saying he had heard something about an incident but knew no details.

The girl's mother said "There would have been nothing to it if Elizabeth Eckford had not started to hit Darlene." She said her daughter had identified the Negro girl as Elizabeth Eckford.

Mrs. Gist said a federalized National Guardsman took both girls to the principal's office.

Blossom yesterday reinstated Minnie Jean Brown, one of the school's nine Negro students, who was suspended last month for throwing food at two white boys in the Central High cafeteria.

New Appointment Considered In Faubus Safety Program

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 3.—Gov. Orval Faubus said Friday he was considering the appointment of a "co-ordinator" to work with various agencies in a traffic safety program he is sponsoring.

He would have to tap his emergency fund to pay the salary of such an official, but the Governor said he was going to investigate the feasibility of doing that.

He made the disclosure after heads of various agencies in the state whom he invited to a conference on highway safety. Prior to the new year, the Governor—alarmed at a rising death toll—ordered state police to start a traffic safety drive.

Rhea Attends Conference

Capt. Jack Rhea, head of the safety division of the state police, was in on the conference with the Governor and automobile and truck association spokesmen.

"Their opinion was that to get a truly comprehensive safety program underway, a co-ordinator was needed to work between my office, the state police and other co-operating agencies," the Governor said.

He added there was no legislative appropriation for such an office, but that he planned to investigate the legality of using some of his emergency fund to create the job.

"If possible, I believe the money would be well spent. There's a lot of consciousness now on the part of the public about highway safety," the Governor observed.

Personnel Expanded

State police are starting out the new year with an expanded personnel which is expected to achieve some results in making Arkansas highways safer. Close to 500 persons died in traffic accidents in the state last year.

The Governor wants to "implement" the efforts of the state police with safety programs of private agencies, such as automobile clubs and truck associations.

FAUBUS HAS COOLED ON SPECIAL SESSION

Won't Call One Unless More Suits Are Filed

DALLAS RULING CITED

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 3.—Gov. Orval Faubus has told some Arkansas legislators he won't call a special session of the General Assembly if no additional integration suits are filed before the 1958 fall school term.

Confirming that report Friday, the Governor added that a recent Federal court ruling on integration at Dallas may have cut down the need for a special session.

His statements added up to considerably less enthusiasm for a special session than he earlier had expressed. About a month ago, the Governor had indicated he might call a special session in March.

Need Less Obvious

He refused Friday definitely to rule out a special session, but he added that, "Events since then have made the need for a special session less obvious."

The ruling on the Dallas case, in which the Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans overruled a previous order that Dallas schools be integrated at mid-term, was viewed by the Governor as having an important bearing on the Arkansas integration picture.

He inferred Federal courts might be inclined to take more note now of the "deliberate speed" section of the United States Supreme Court's integration decree.

The Little Rock school board has directed its attorneys to study the Dallas decision with a possible view of taking further court action in the Little Rock controversy.

No Decisions Made

A board member said Friday no decisions had been made on what further steps, if any, the Little Rock board might take. He noted the board has waited too late to appeal integration orders issued last fall, but that it could petition Federal courts to consider new conditions or evidence arising since integration went into effect here.

Governor Faubus noted that at the moment there is only one school district in Arkansas where an integration court order is still pending. That's at Bearden, where the Bearden school board has been directed to draw up a "gradual" plan of integration.

However, Federal Judge John E. Miller, who issued the order, placed no time limit for the plan to be submitted. And an education department spokesman said that so far as he knew the plan was yet to be prepared.

One legislator, who talked with the Governor this week about a special session, said he would be willing to meet on the integration question, but that he understood certain other members of the General Assembly were — with an election year coming up — reluctant to attend one.

Possible Candidate

He also said he didn't see how either the Governor or the Legislature could anticipate when a school district was going to be hit with an integration lawsuit.

Questioned on that, Governor Faubus said if the state got by three or four months without additional integration suits being filed, he thought that would be an indication none was anticipated prior to next fall's school term.

And if a district was faced with a "last minute" integration suit next fall, a special session probably could be called at that time, he added.

The Governor is a possible third term candidate this summer. Some of his critics have contended he has been holding out the special session possibility as a means of keeping the integration issue "stirred up" for campaigning purposes this summer. The Governor has denied the charge.

8 Negro Pupils Return; Little Rock Stays Calm

By the United Press.

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 2.—Eight of the nine Negro students who integrated Central High School last fall with the help of federal troops, returned to classes without incident today as the Yuletide holiday ended.

The ninth student, Minnie Brown, still has two days of suspension to serve for dumping a lunch tray on two white boys. She can return next Monday if she discusses her case with Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom, who said the case must be reviewed with her.

Fifteen members of the Central Mothers League, an anti-integration group, watched the Negroes return to class this morning. Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the group, and four others walked to the side entrance and stood there several minutes.

Mrs. Jackson would not disclose the nature of their mission, but she told a reporter it had been accomplished. After a few minutes, the group left.

Four pairs of federalized National Guardsmen patrolled outside the school grounds; two were stationed inside the building. One jeep with three soldiers drove around the school campus.

3 Little Rock Appeals Studied by U. S. Court

ST. LOUIS, Mar. 12 (AP). Another legal round was fought yesterday in the Little Rock school integration battle.

After hearing oral arguments the three-judge United States Appeals Court took three related cases under consideration. There was no indication when the court will rule.

The main case was an appeal by Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus from an injunction against his use of Arkansas National Guard troops to keep nine Negro school children from entering Central High School.

Two parallel actions have been filed by Mrs. Clyde Thomason and Mrs. Margaret Jackson, members of the League of Central High School Mothers, a pro-segregationist organization.

The three appeals are directed against the injunction issued by United States District Judge Ronald N. Davies, then sitting at Little Rock.

Thurgood Marshall, general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, defended the action of Judge Davies, who ordered the Government into the Little Rock case.

Mr. Marshall said that when Gov. Faubus called out the Arkansas National Guard to bar the nine Negroes from entering the high school he was challenging the United States courts and not individuals.

"There can be no argument," Mr. Marshall said, "as to the inherent right of any court, especially a Federal court, to see that its orders are not flaunted or disobeyed."

Two attorneys for Gov. Faubus, Thomas M. Harper of Fort Smith, Ark., and Kay L. Matthews of Little Rock, argued that Judge Davies erred in refusing to disqualify himself, as requested, on grounds of "prejudice and bias."

Mr. Harper, chairman of the Arkansas Democratic State Committee, said "the United States has no right to question Faubus in litigation in which the United States is not and cannot be a party."

Mr. Matthews, a member of the Arkansas Commerce Commission, said Judge Davies had discussion, received reports and spoke with persons adverse to the Governor before he became a party to the case.

The appeals were heard in morning and afternoon sessions attended by a dozen or so observers. The appeals judges are John D. Sanborn of St. Paul, Minn., and Joseph W. Woodrough and Harvey M. Johnsen, both of Omaha.

Little Rock: A European View

(Editor's note: This article is reprinted from The Virginian, a monthly publication of New Port News, Va. The writer is described by The Virginian as a "distinguished Scottish author," whose work has appeared in various newspapers and in Northern World, a journal devoted to North European friendship.)

By ALASTAIR HARPER

"The Little Rock Case," as doubtless the present troubles in Arkansas will prove to be called, was presented in a most biased and unfair way to the people of Southern Europe who as yet know nothing of a colored minority and with this absence of experience yet feel themselves in certain cases quite fit to judge the events in the South today.

Here in the Press of Europe and on the radio and television and, indeed, by every conceivable means of dissemination, the facts of the colored revolution in America are so distorted as to represent the Negro as a martyr in unsoiled purity and the white man as a brute who wishes to subjugate him for his special pleasure.

IN PLACES like Brixton in London, in Liverpool, Cardiff and now especially in Birmingham where for the first time in our history Negroes are being introduced to the white population the real British attitude to color is being seen and a survey which was conducted some time ago on this very subject by the socialistic "Daily Mirror" showed overwhelmingly, that the rank and file Englishman wanted to have just nothing to do with the black man.

Of course some of the British people like to show themselves so superior to their more boorish fellows that they encourage the marriage of black people into their families. And it was in this spirit that a daughter of the Labor Chancellor Cripps was given maximum publicity in her marriage to a native prince from Central Africa. "Most awfully, awfully advanced you know."

"But a truck-driver with whom I spent a long and noisy journey from Sittingbourne in Kent to Stoke on Trent (he was carrying flints for the potteries) told me in so many words what the ordinary Englishman thought of such unions. And I can tell you that his language contained a good deal of straight, old-fashioned, Saxon adjectives.

This fellow didn't really want to be considered "advanced" in the sense that some of the bright young things imagine is bon ton. He wanted to be regarded only as an Englishman who had a warm spot in his heart for the fields and little roadways of his native Kent, and he knew that if this country was to be flooded with colored people who were not lovers of Kent or Yorkshire or Devon, England would be changed, and most important of all it would be changed radically for generations of English yet unborn.

He pointed out, and I let him talk freely on the subject, that he could not help not wanting any of his descendants to be half-black and half-white. When I taxed him with why he did not want this he replied quite simply, "Cause it ain't natural."

WHEN WE PAY any real attention to America and better still when we visit the place, especially the South, we can see that the boot which was once supposed to kick the Negro so hard is now on the other foot and nowadays it is impossible to give even the most honest criticism of the Negro without running the risk of being dubbed "Negro baiter," "fascist," "racist," and all the very tiring et ceteras that have been got up in that vocabulary.

So well conditioned have the authorities in Northern America and Western Europe become to this mechanism that in the universities it is tantamount to sacrilege to mention the colored peoples of the world without a tone and context of profound respect.

It is a well known fact that the intellectuals are the most susceptible class in the community to servility and to keep their present position they will render any imaginable homage.

OF THE UNNATURAL and wholly slavelike attitude of the British Press to the question of the colored revolution in America a recent issue of "The Scotsman" serves as a good example. Two or three Negro teenagers are shown in a photo faced by a larger number of white boys, the central figure of whom is a large blond youth in a T-shirt, to all appearances threatening the Negroes with violence whilst they are seeking quite legally, to enroll in the local High School.

This, in essence, is the basic unfairness of the whole thing for though the newspaper has seen fit to show a few puny Negroes threatened by a truculent mass of blond young America this is an impression far from the truth. We are not told that behind these three young Negroes stands the power, though not the glory, of federal America and the rapidly increasing financial control of distant New York.

In fact, behind these young Negroes, as no one ever dares to say over here, there stand men who are seeking a great deal more than that Negro children should be allowed into white schools. We are not told about the hypocritical Eisenhower who dances attendance upon his masters; nor are we told how solidly the Northern press is in the grip of finance which is rapidly becoming if it has not already become the power in the land.

Certain people here and in America try to lay the blame for the whole thing at the door of the Jews, but if we reflect upon it I doubt if we can really admit this to be the case. It is true of course that the Jews are embedded in the financial racket and they are as a group rapidly gaining control of vast sections of industry and the entertainment business. As impresarios their hysterical and urbane manners make them astounding successes. In this and many other way they are suited most admirably to the shallow life of our metropolitan civilization.

WHAT WE MUST CEASE to do is treat them as a scapegoat for our own infirmities. But in the rebirth of a race, such as we Western people might see at any time in our own civilization, people like the Jews, who have remained unassimilable elements in a community tend to get caught up in the works and should not really complain if some of their number get somewhat squashed in the process.

The shocking memories of the last years of the National Socialist regime in Germany is just such a case in point. Had the Jews, when they settled in Germany in the Middle Ages, given up their religion and their peculiar ways of life they would have been absorbed as countless thousands of aliens are absorbed into every race under the sun and they would have been forgotten.

But that is exactly what the Jew did not want. He wanted the best of both worlds. He wanted to have the pickings of the Western world which he knew he could have with some effort and he wanted to retain his own identity while he did it. The explanation of the horrors which follow in his wake is thus very simple.

Nature in her wisdom will not suffer a people to remain long unassimilated within the living - room of another, for fear they disturb the status of their host and, more important perhaps, so that they will provide the hospitable race with a controlled amount of fresh blood. Minorities which remain unassimilated are therefore asking for trouble and in the main they usually get it.

THE NEGRO remains outside the grouping of Western nations because he is too far removed in racial type to be accepted into it.

Nature has ingrained in us a fear of mixing races which are grossly separate in characteristics. Indeed we may say that two races will inter-breed in proportion to the nearness which they bear to each other. This is a natural safety factor which people can deny only if they are strong enough to flout Nature's edicts or weak enough not to care. Thus despite the fact that the press here in Europe shrieks in horror at the "brutality" of the white Southerners their cries are of little avail at what the people here know deep down to be the brass tacks of the situtation.

And at the end of the day who can blame a person for feeling strongly about not wanting his offspring to be radically different from himself and for feeling that the child of a mixed marriage is lacking in the sense of belonging which is the birthright of every child.

We are imperfect creatures, most of us, but if we are honest with ourselves and not pathologically morbid we must believe that there is something which God has put in us that is worth preserving. We were given by His hand vastly different characteristics which we were charged to use. Can we really say with certainty that He intended us to change these?

DEEP DOWN in the small ragment of people who would like to see a crinkle-haired, coffee - skinned, shower of nobodies for a world population there lurks the desire to hide themselves from the world.

Perhaps it is the spirit of our times that takes such a toll of individual dignity; perhaps it is the desire to destroy and deface that which they associate with their parents or perhaps it is that mysticism which wish to [illegible] lives [illegible] change [illegible] the [illegible] intention [illegible] in the face of [illegible] you [illegible] boy in [illegible] newspaper [illegible] there can be read, [illegible] Britain would see the [illegible] as it really [illegible] not [illegible] fraculent marks of a decadence [illegible] a breaking through, if somewhat confusedly of the inner soul of the white race which knows not that it must [illegible] to live.

Youth Arrested At Little Rock's Baccalaureate

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The first racially integrated baccalaureate at Central High School was held Sunday night—with one incident at the stadium despite protection of more than 200 police and National Guardsmen.

A few blocks from the school five Negroes were arrested shortly before the services. Police, who confiscated one gun and one knife from the group, told newsmen they did not know if the arrests were connected with racial matters.

However, a newsman on the scene heard one of the Negroes say that all were heading for the stadium to protect Ernest Green, the 16-year-old senior who was the first Negro to attend the baccalaureate.

Police booked the Negroes for investigation. They declined to give further information.

Green needed no extra protection. About 120 armed National Guardsmen in battle dress rolled into the school area about 1½ hours before the service and went into a school building. Some 100 policemen patrolled the stadium area.

About 25 Negroes and 1,500 whites attended the baccalaureate, which was conducted smoothly on the floodlit field.

Negro newsmen had charged earlier that they were barred by Supt. Virgil Blossom from covering the event, even on a pool basis.

Asked for comment, Blossom said outside the stadium:

"You didn't ask me that. Ask me tomorrow. You didn't see me tonight."

The Negroes who said they were barred included Simeon Booker and Ernest Withers of the Johnson publications (Jet and Ebony magazines) and Sarah Slack of he New York Amsterdam News.

Desegregation eyed for 2 Ark. schools

IN A NUTSHELL

Arkansas NAACP snubs "peace plan" offered by businessman.

June 2 hearing on integration postponement in schools may determine future of school board's integration plan.

DETROIT — The Arkansas NAACP has thrown cold water on what has been termed "a peace plan to restore racial harmony" in Little Rock and announced it will seek to integrate two more white high schools this fall.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP, told a Detroit news conference Friday that the civil rights group would move to desegregate Tech and Hall High Schools in September if the Little Rock School Board loses its Federal Court plea to halt school integration.

This was Mrs. Bates' answer to a proposal by businessman Herbert L. Thomas Sr. to drop integration at Central High School after this month. The action is indicative that the NAACP will do no business with segregationists seeking to buck the law of the land.

THE THOMAS PROPOSAL calls for the suspension of integration in city schools and the establishment of an interracial commission by the school board to advise local school districts on desegregation matters.

In effect, the bill would halt integration, snatch away rights gained and start all over again in the matter.

Thomas' so - called "peace plan" was also rejected recently by some 90 colored leaders, mostly ministers. The author of the measure met Wednesday with Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas who did not give comment one way or the other on the measure.

Thomas now entertains hope of the state Board of Education accepting the plan, which he later desires to present to Federal District Court. A hearing on the Little Rock School Board's petition for a delay in integration has been set for June 2.

Mrs. Bates, in announcing the NAACP's position in the school matter, said troops could have been removed from Central High long ago if School Superintendent Virgil Blossom and other officials would have enforced discipline at the school.

The two high schools Mrs. Bates spoke of seeking to integrate if the school board plea is denied, are the only all white high schools in Little Rock, now that Central has been desegregated.

West Rock is a colored community in the Hall High area. School Board President Wayne Upton said colored applicants for admission to either of the two schools would have to be considered, but:

"What the board might do with their applications would be another matter."

* * *

IN DIRECT CONTRAST TO THIS attitude by Upton, Federal Judge John E. Miller's approval of the school board's gradual integration plan ordered all city high schools to desegregate.

The school board is now seeking to postpone school integration on the basis of "existing conditions at Central High."

The board's petition for a halt in interracial classes does not mention how long a postponement is wanted. NAACP attorneys for the eight colored pupils at Central have motioned that the school board petition be dismissed.

Federal judge Harry Lemley will hear the board's case on June 2.

ONE INCIDENT

Police, Guardsmen Patrol Little Rock Baccalaureate

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The first racially integrated baccalaureate at Central High School was held Sunday night—with one incident at the stadium despite protection of more than 200 police and National Guardsmen.

A few blocks from the school five Negroes were arrested shortly before the services. Police, who confiscated one gun and one knife from the group, told newsmen they did not know if the arrests were connected with racial matters.

However, a newsman on the scene heard one of the Negroes say that all were heading for the stadium to protect Ernest Green, the 16-year-old senior who was the first Negro to attend the baccalaureate.

Green needed no extra protection. About 120 armed National Guardsmen in battle dress rolled into the school area about 1½ hours before the service and went into a school building. Some 100 policemen patrolled the stadium area.

About 25 Negroes and 1,500 whites attended the baccalaureate, which was conducted smoothly on the floodlit field.

Before the ceremony, Green stood outside the stadium and chatted occasionally with other seniors. Asked if he was nervous, Green said:

"Sure I'm nervous. It's baccalaureate."

Negro newsmen had charged earlier that they were barred by Supt. Virgil Blossom from covering the event, even on a pool basis.

Asked for comment, Blossom said outside the stadium:

"You didn't ask me that. Ask me tomorrow. You didn't see me tonight."

The Negroes who said they were barred included Simeon Booker and Ernest Withers of the Johnson publications (Jet and Ebony magazines) and Sarah Slack of the New York Amsterdam News.

Saturday Blossom escorted Booker and Withers from a news conference. Booker said the superintendent told them they had not been invited.

Later, according to Booker, Blossom said he was sorry he had to bar them from both the baccalaureate and commencement.

"He said he knew that it was wrong but that the school board had insisted," Booker said.

Coverage by white newsmen was restricted. Police seemed to watch newsmen as closely as other visitors.

After the ceremony Green waited outside the stadium, apparently for his relatives. Three detectives escorted him to a gate.

The Truth About Little Rock

Racial Relations Had Long Been Cordial

Herald Tribune New York Mon 1-20-58

(This is the second of a series of twelve articles dealing with the recent conflict over desegregation in the public schools of Little Rock, Ark. Mr. Mann was the Mayor during the explosive days which ended with Federal troops arriving to put down disorder.)

The crisis that came to Little Rock stemmed, in part, from the unanimous United States Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, declaring unconstitutional racial segregation in public schools. That fateful decision, based on the court's interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment, invalidated the old "separate but equal" school doctrine that had guided Little Rock—and other Southern cities—for sixty years.

Segregation Was the Rule In Little Rock

For decades, of course, Negroes in Little Rock lived as Negroes in the South live. You did not see Negroes working in Main Street stores and offices. You found them employed as common labor, janitors, car washers, maids, gardeners. Among themselves, they had a tiny handful of professional and business men—lawyers, doctors, insurance men.

Accounting for about 23 per cent of the city total population (107,000), they had their own churches, their own schools, their own theaters, even their own separate division of the Democratic party.

Upon entering a streetcar or bus, Negroes were expected to pay their fare and then go immediately to the rear of the bus for seats. On trains, they were expected to ride in special cars set aside for them. In waiting rooms, at bus terminals and railroad depots they sat in separate sections.

This picture is still largely true.

Yet, in the last two decades, Little Rock—and Arkansas—has seen a remarkable growth in better relations between the races.

Little Rock's educational facilities, while segregated, had improved to the extent that some Negro schools had physical plants equal or better than those of white schools.

Associated Press

Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent of schools at Little Rock.

In this atmosphere of hope and progress—impressive despite the long road that still lay ahead—the United States court decision of May, 1954, at first created little stir.

My own feeling was that the court decision as the law of the land had to be complied with—regardless of personal feelings. My thought was also that Arkansas, and Little Rock in particular, had enjoyed a remarkably good record of friendly relations between the races. As a private citizen in May, 1954, and later as Mayor, I resolved to do whatever I could to help smooth the bumpy road of compliance with the law.

The School Board's Statement on the Decision

On May 22, 1954, the Little Rock School Board issued a statement to the effect that the board would comply with the Supreme Court decision when the court outlined a method to be followed and the time allowed for compliance.

In August, 1954, the N.A.A.C.P. petitioned the School Board for immediate integration. This was rightly turned down as premature.

There was still not much concern among the people.

There was a strong undercurrent of opposition, however, not noticeable in headlines of public meetings held throughout the state. It was a quiet undercurrent—at first. Neither the White Citizens Council, nor the N. A. A. C. P., for that matter, found it easy to recruit new members. (Even at the height of the 1957 crisis, the Little Rock Citizen's Council numbered less than 500 members).

In Arkansas politics, the segregation issue was to grow increasingly important. But it played no part in the 1954 gubernatorial election when "moderate" Orval Faubus, the mountain boy, squeaked through to his first term against the incumbent Francis Cherry.

In my own campaign for Mayor, in the spring, summer and fall of 1955, segregation did not loom as a real issue, in spite of the fact that the local schools would be affected.

The School Board's Plan For Gradual Integration

On May 24, 1955, the Little Rock School Board, under Schools Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom, adopted a plan of gradual integration. Under the plan, high school level grades would be integrated starting September, 1957, if (as happened) a third general high school (Hall High) were completed. During the following six years, the remaining school grades would become integrated "downward," with the lowest grades the last to be affected. Moreover, parents could transfer their children to schools where their race was in the majority.

Despite complaints by both the White Citizens Council and the N. A. A. C. P. (for opposite reasons), the plan met no early organized opposition.

During the campaign for Mayor there were quiet but increasing efforts made to find out where I stood as far as the Negro was concerned.

I received several application forms from the White Citizens Council. I was visited by its leaders, who stressed keeping away from the Negroes, not becoming friendly with them in any way. I refused to join the Citizens Council, yet I'm sure that I received the support of the bulk of its small membership. It was assumed by them that I would not go overboard on the issue either way. My announced stand was that the Mayor of Little Rock should administer to all the people, regardless of color or creed or station in life. I made it clear then, and later, that I wouldn't be dictated to by any one.

I had taken an oath to uphold, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, the laws of the State of Arkansas and the statutes of the City of Little Rock. I intended to keep my oath.

During the campaign, too, Schools Superintendent Blossom predicted that whoever was Mayor in 1956-'57 would see the integration plan, if court approved, go into effect in his administration. We both agreed then, and later, that the law-abiding people of Little Rock would not be easily swayed by extremist groups. Sure, there would be some trouble — some pushing and shoving and some lawsuits—but we felt that no major crisis would come. We were confident of that.

Demands of Negro Groups Were Minor

After I took office Jan. 1, 1956, I maintained the same viewpoint. In talking to Negro groups, I discovered that their demands were minor. To them, they were important. For example, the drinking fountain in City Hall. The Negro was expected to reach up and get a paper cup and get his water out of the fountain whereas a white person could turn a knob and drink from the waterfront itself. A sign was posted saying "Colored Do Not Drink Out of Fountain." They thought that was unfair and so did I. I had the sign removed, and put cups up for everybody.

We increased the number of Negroes on the 150-man police force from two to four (the Negroes wanted six or eight) and had plans to add two more but, partly due to a chronic lack of sufficient city funds, we never did get it done.

They Wanted Representation in Fire Department

Negro leaders also wanted representation in the Fire Department. But this constituted a real problem, since firemen on duty slept in the same bunkroom. Fire Chief Gann Nalley just would not go along on this. The Negro leadership realized that this was a touchy problem and that it would take time to work out.

No Negroes served in the City Hall offices except as janitors. But Negroes, notably the widely respected Little Rock lawyer, Robert Booker, were appointed to the Parks and Recreation Commission, the Negro Community Center, and others. Negro leaders were satisfied. There was no stampede to have Negro girls work in City Hall offices or force the city to enforce desegregation laws. I thought the Negro requests were in line, and certainly fair ones.

We both knew that emotional extremism was bad for both races. I well remember L. C. McClinton, elected leader of the Negro Democrats in central Arkansas, saying publicly that he thought (1) the Supreme Court decision was a good thing, (2) that eventually it would bring about better race relations, (3) that it would be difficult and time consuming to carry out, and (4) that he expected no big trouble.

FAUBUS, HAYS CONFER ON INTEGRATION BILL

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn. 2-7-58

Nationwide Study Of Problem Is Proposed

DETAILS NOT REVEALED

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 6. — Gov. Orval Faubus and Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) conferred Thursday on an integration study bill Mr. Hays is planning to introduce in Congress, but neither would reveal details of the proposed measure.

The Governor, who said Mr. Hays asked for a meeting with him "several days ago," said the Fifth District representative outlined a draft of the bill to him.

The Governor gave it an indirect endorsement.

"I don't see how anyone could object to a study of the integration problem—certainly I have none," he said.

Meeting Not Discussed

He added that Mr. Hays hadn't brought up the subject of another meeting between him (Governor Faubus) and President Eisenhower on the Little Rock integration dispute.

Earlier this week, Representative Hays told newsmen he would try to arrange another meeting if both sides were willing. The Governor had indicated he for one wasn't willing, "unless the Federal Government changes its attitude."

Mr. Hays said he would make details of the proposed study public when he had his bill in final form. He has said, however, it will call for a "nationwide" study of the integration problem, and that he may ask the Civil Rights Commission to conduct it.

Meeting with the Governor and Mr. Hays at the executive mansion was Forrest Rozzell, executive secretary of the Arkansas Education Association.

Keeping Channels Open

Mr. Rozzell said he was merely trying to keep "channels of communication open" between officials who have authority in the field of education.

Representative Hays said he was "simply advising the Governor of Arkansas of my purpose . . . I have a feeling there is a growing open-mindedness on the subject (of integration) and that all sections of the country would be interested in the study."

Governor Faubus said if the study brought out "all the facts" about school integration, it might persuade Federal officials "to stay out of school problems in the various states."

Official Says Little Rock Study Is Difficult

BOMB CALL IS REPEATED

Sat 2-8-58

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

P-15

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 7.—Another week of integrated classes ended Friday at Central High School with a new bomb scare and an admission by a top school official that continuing incidents at the school is making normal study difficult.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, who held a lengthy press conference to review racial outbreaks in the school, said "both white and Negro students have made mistakes, both are to blame."

Two Are Suspended

Two students, Minnie Jean Brown, a Negro and Lester Judkins Jr., a white boy, were suspended Friday.

Central High Principal Jess W. Matthews drew up suspension notices Thursday after the two had been involved in disorders.

The early afternoon press conference began as city police and school officials were making still another bomb search. The search resulted from an anonymous call to Mr. Matthews' office warning that a bomb had been placed in the building and would explode at 1:30 p.m.

Chief of Police Gene Smith said later the search revealed nothing. Police were unable to say who placed the call.

Mr. Blossom was asked if he thought normal study was possible in the present situation.

"I would say it's normal about 98 per cent of the time," he said. "But I can say it certainly makes it more difficult."

The press conference produced several sharp exchanges between the superintendent and L. C. Bates, Negro publisher who attended the gathering. Bates, husband of Daisy Bates who is president of the Arkansas chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored ePople, persisted in trying to determine why Minnie Jean Brown was suspended.

Won't Discuss Students

"I'm not going to discuss any child's problems with you—that's the business of the parents," Mr. Blossom said.

At another point, he and the Negro published clashed over whether students had been "properly instructed" as to discipline and integration orders which are in effect under Federal decree.

Mr. Blossom said one of Bates' questions inferred that the principal, Mr. Matthews, wasn't doing a good job.

"I can tell you now that I think he has done an excellent job," the superintendent said.

Bates contended that his information on both incidents involving the Negro student Thursday indicated she was "not the aggressor." Mr. Blossom suggested the Negro publisher didn't have all the facts, and again insisted he wouldn't discuss publicly the details of student incidents.

The Negro girl was involved in a brief fight with a white girl Thursday morning, and during the noon hour was the target of another soup-dumping incident. Young Judkins was suspended for dumping the soup on her. Apparently the Negro girl was suspended because of the earlier dispute with the white girl. It was the second suspension for Minnie Jean Brown, who is one of nine Negroes attending the school.

The white girl, Frankie Ann Gregg, was withdrawn from the school by her parents. She hit Minnie Jean Brown with her purse during their dispute Thursday, the girl's mother said. Mrs. Gregg said the Negro girl called her daughter, "white trash."

Some Students Withdrawn

Mr. Blossom said there have been several cases where white parents have withdrawn their children. He also disclosed there have been "perhaps five or six" cases where students were suspended for the entire first semester. He declined to give details.

He indicated the school board might have a statement soon on an attorney's study of the Dallas integration ruling. The Court of Appeals at New Orleans has ruled that Dallas didn't have to start integration at mid-term, as earlier ordered, and the Little Rock School Board called for the study.

Mr. Blossom said the board intends to make a statement as to what it may do as a result of the Dallas ruling, but said he didn't know when it would be.

Negroes Resist Integration With Other Negroes

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 7.—(INS)—A school integration problem with a new twist has been peacefully resolved in Little Rock.

It would involve transporting their children about two and one-half miles to and from classes aboard a school bus.

It would expose their children to children in a lower economic category. They claimed most Negroes living at College Station are on welfare while Negroes at Sweet Home are employed in well-paying jobs.

The Pulaski County School Board settled the matter by canceling a proposed consolidation and allowing the Negro children to remain in separate schools.

OFFICIAL LINKS MANN WITH TROOP ACTION

Part In Little Rock Crisis Confirmed By White At Committee Hearing

By MORRIS CUNNINGHAM

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—A top-ranking Justice Department official Wednesday publicly confirmed that it was former Mayor Woodrow W. Mann who asked that Federal troops be sent to Little Rock.

W. Wilson White, an assistant attorney general, told the Senate Judiciary Committee the former mayor advised on Monday, Sept. 23, that local police were unable to cope with a mob that had formed after withdrawal of National Guardsmen from Central High School.

Commercial Appeal

Tues 2-5-58

Memphis Tenn.

He indicated, under questioning, that it was this information that prompted President Eisenhower to dispatch regular Army paratroopers to Little Rock.

Seeks Confirmation

A 52-year-old Philadelphia lawyer, Mr. White is seeking Senate confirmation as director of the new Civil Rights Division created by the controversial bill passed by Congress last year.

Director of the Justice Department's office of legal counsel at the time of the Little Rock incident, he disclosed that he drafted President Eisenhower's "cease and desist" proclamation of Sept. 23 and served as legal adviser to former Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. during the entire episode.

He insisted that President Eisenhowe rhad ample authority to use Federal troops to enforce Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies' integration decree.

Under persistent questioning by Senator Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D., N.C.), a former North Carolina Supreme Court justice, he took the position that Federal Court orders are a part of "the laws of the United States."

He insisted the United States Constitution as well as Federal laws authorize the President to use troops to enforce "the laws of the United States."

"Then you base your opinion upon a belief that the term 'laws of the United States' is broad enough to cover court decisions?" Senator Ervin asked.

"Yes," Mr. White replied.

Not A Rebellion

He conceded that the troubles in Little Rock did not amount to an insurrection or a rebellion and that therefore the President had no right to use troops under the "rebellion" and "insurrection" statutes.

The question, he said, was the enforcement of "the laws of the United States."

He insisted the President, as commander-in-chief, has powers "independent of Congress" to see that the laws of the United States are faithfully executed.

Senator Ervin strenuously disagreed with Mr. White's interpretation that court decisions can be construed as "laws of the United States."

The North Carolinian said that only the constitution, acts of Congress, and treaties properly can be classified as "laws of the United States." And he documented this contention by reading a number of Supreme Court decisions covering the point.

Mr. White's position appeared to surprise some of the committee members, all of whom are lawyers. The hearing adjourned without any action on his nomination and it was indicated that he is in for considerable more questioning.

Postpones Action

At the request of Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.), the committee agreed to postpone further action for at least a week. However, it was indicated that the committee, which meets only once a week, will not take up Mr. White's nomination again until Feb. 11.

Commercial Appeal

The justice official, now temporarily heading the Civil Rights Division under a recess appointment, conceded that the normal method of enforcing court orders is through the United States marshal.

Wed 2-5-58

Senator Ervin pointed out that the Eastern Arkansas District embraces about 40 counties and that the marshal, if necessary, could have deputized thousands of men.

Memphis Tenn.

Mr. White said, however, that no effort has made to using this method of enforcing Judge Davies' integration decree.

He also conceded that no effort was made to bring members of the mob before Judge Davies' for contempt citations, which Senator Ervin suggested would have been another way of coping with the disturbances.

Mr. White parried several questions on grounds that the Government is now a party to a lawsuit, brought by Little Rock parents, questioning the President's authority to use troops.

He said he did not wan to risk giving an "oral exposition" of a brief the Government has filed in the case. He agreed, however, to file a copy of the brief with the committee.

Made An Issue

Senator Ervin sought to make an issue of Judge Davies' reliance upon a secret FBI report. He recalled that a case once was overruled in North Carolina because a somewhat similar action by a judge was held to be a violation of due process of law.

Mr. White insisted the Little Rock case was different and that Judge Davies had acted properly.

Mr. White agreed with Senator Ervin that the Little Rock episode was "unfortunate." He said it was "most unfortunate when a situation arises that compels" the Government to act in such a manner.

Little Rock 'Integration' Near End Of First Year

Negro Will Be Graduated Tuesday Night, But Issues Still Far From Resolved

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, May 24.—The first year of integrated classes here comes to an official end Tuesday night, but the deep and explosive issues generated during and from the Central High story are far from resolved.

The official, as well as historic, ending of this school year will come when some 600 graduates of the previously all-white high school step forth to receive their diplomas at graduation exercises Tuesday night.

It will be historic because one of the graduates will be a Negro, Ernest Green, the only senior among the eight Negro students who have completed the school year.

Ernest Green

There were nine of the Negro students when integrated classes went into effect last fall under a soldier-enforced integration decree. But one of the original nine, Minnijean Brown, was expelled before the school year ended, a testimony to the racial conflicts which arose from time to time within the school.

She was expelled following a series of "incidents" between her and white students, and she's finishing this school year in New York. There also were suspensions or expulsions of at least half a dozen white students before conditions apparently quieted during the closing months of the school term.

Integration was not a new thing to Arkansas when racially mixed classes started at Central High School last fall. Integrated classes already had been in effect at Charleston, Fayetteville and Hoxie. And Fort Smith, Van Buren and Hot Springs started integration plans at the same time the Little Rock School Board put it into effect here.

International Event

But Central High was different in that it marked the first time the state itself took a hand. That happened last Sept. 4, when acting under orders from Gov. Orval Faubus, Arkansas National Guardsmen turned the nine Negro students away from Central High.

The Governor said he issued those orders because he was convinced violence would erupt if he didn't stop them.

"I am the preservator of the peace—not the Federal judge," the Governor said.

From that time on, the "Little Rock affair" became more than just a local or even a national issue. It broke into the news on the international scene less than two weeks ago when in Venezuela Vice President Nixon and his wife were taunted, in an anti-United States demonstration, with cries of "Little Rock, Little Rock!"

Twenty days after the Governor sent state Guardsmen to Central High, President Eisenhower sent Federal troops to carry out the integration decree issued by "the Federal judge" to whom the Governor referred, Judge Ronald N. Davies of North Dakota.

The Arkansas National Guard was federalized in its entirety, and thus taken out from under control of the Governor, and as the school year ends 400 of the "federalized" troops still are on guard duty at Central High. They will be released Thursday, the day after school ends here for the term.

Will there be integrated classes again next year at Central High? If so, will there again be trouble? Will the troops again be back? How is it all going to end?

Answers to at least some of those questions may be contained in court hearings which are scheduled to start here June 3 before Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley, successor to Judge Davies in handling the Central High litigation. Judge Lemley is one of the state's regularly-assigned Federal jurists.

A Big Question

The question before him: Shall the integration decree issued without hesitation last fall by Judge Davies be set aside? Shall the district be given a "breathing spell" from the integration furor, and if so for how long?

The Little Rock School Board, which filed a petition in February asking for a "suspension" of the integration plan, in recent weeks has amended its petition to suggest that racially mixed classes be postponed until January, 1961.

The amended petition was at the suggestion of Judge Lemley. He said the original plea was too vague and indefinite to rule upon. He also said that if the board could offer proof of its claim, he would grant "relief."

The board is contending that the school year has been one of disturbance and turmoil, and that under such conditions a normal schooling process is impossible.

But the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, whose top legal counsel represents the Negro students in Central High, contend that the board doesn't have a legal leg to stand upon. The Negro students should be allowed to continue to attend Central High without interruption, the NAACP said in an answer filed just last week against the petition.

Special Session Possible

Segregationist spokesmen feel that if a delay should be granted, the time gained might give the entire South new hope in its overall resistance to the Supreme Court's anti-segregation rulings. Some appear to feel that eventually the high court might be "persuaded" to alter its ruling.

But what if Judge Lemley orders the Little Rock School Board to proceed with integrated classes at the start of the next school year, in September?

Such a ruling almost certainly would bring on a special session of the Arkansas Legislature before another school term, some sources close to Governor Faubus believe.

It apparently also would be the signal for a resumption of hostilities, which appeared to ease off after the school board filed its "delay" petition in February.

The statements of two of the spokesmen in the opposing camps are perhaps typical. They were asked what their plans were if integration was again ordered for Central High next year.

Replied the Rev. Wesley Pruden, president of the Capital Citizens Council:

"I don't know of a single one of us who has expressed any thoughts of quitting. It's something we never consider. However, we don't advocate violence in opposing integration—we have consistently discouraged violence.

Opinions Differ

"We are hoping we will get some state laws that will resolve this thing. If necessary, I believe we will turn to state-subsidized private schools."

Both the Rev. Mr. Pruden and Amis Guthridge, Little Rock attorney and also a segregationist spokesman, called integration here "a dismal failure."

"I think integration can be stopped, that it will be stopped and that it has been stopped. I mean here and all over the South," said Mr. Guthridge.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, Negro head of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP, has been the "spokesman" for the Negro students at Central High. Will the seven remaining students yet to graduate return to Central High next year, if the integration decree remains in effect?, she was asked.

She replied in the affirmative, and added:

In dollars and cents, the known cost to the Federal Government as of early this month in integrating Central High School was roughly $4,855,000—including Army costs and financing FBI investigations. The total school budget for all public schools here this year is about $5,230,000, said School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom.

In terms of human emotions, some of the effects probably will be reflected in this sum-

QUIET SCHOOL—Arkansas National Guard troops stand by as students change classes at Little Rock Central High School. President Eisenhower has ordered the troops withdrawn when the school is closed for the summer. Whether they will be returned in the fall is a big unanswered question.

INTEGRATION AN ISSUE—Gov. Orval Faubus discusses his campaign for a third term with reporters in Little Rock. Integration versus segregation is primary issue. Most observers say a decisive Faubus win would be a mandate to resist school integration with every means.

mer's gubernatorial race. Governor Faubus, bidding for an almost unprecedented third term, is expected to stand or fall on the role he played in the Central High dispute. He has been reminding audiences of the "usual" accomplishments under his administration, but integration is the big issue.

One of the Governor's admirers introduced him at a recent East Arkansas rally as "the man who has done more for the South than any man since the Civil War."

Chancellor Lee Ward of Paragould, however, has sharply drawn the issue by accusing the Governor of having "invaded" the rights of a local school district in interfering with Central High integration. It's the same charge which the Governor has applied against the Federal "invasion" of the state's rights and powers.

On these two sharply divergent views the voters themselves will pass judgment on the Central High story.

Minnie Jean Brown Attends N. Y. School

Talking Back Causes Little Rock Expulsion

New York — Minnie Jean Brown, 16-year-old Negro student who was expelled for Little Rock's Central High School recently, is attending the new Lincoln school here on a $1,050 scholarship.

Couldn't Stand By

"We couldn't just stand by and allow injustices of this sort to continue," Brooks said. "We are known as an experimental, interracial and inter-economical school. . . . and we are trying to do something for equal opportunity and to relieve the interracial situation."

Minnie Jean was expelled from the former all-white school because she rebelled against continued harrassment from white students, even though school officials said she was expelled for "her repeated involvement in racial incidents."

Forced Promise

Suspended once because she dumped soup on students who deliberately pulled chairs out in front of her in the cafeteria, when Minnie Jean was re-instated she was forced to promise the principal that she would not retaliate when she was molested in the school.

For 18 days after re-instatement the young girl bore the taunts and physical maltreatment from the white students. When she finally turned on a persistent molester, she was suspended by the principal who also recommended that she be permanently expelled.

Displayed Cards

In Little Rock, the girl's mother said she was grateful to Dr. Brooks for extending the scholarship to Minnie Jean.

"But I'm not happy that my daughter must go away to attend school. I'm not happy that children of both races are hurt by hateful men."

The school that Minnie Jean is attending was established by the faculty and alumni of the Horace Mann-Lincoln School which was closed in 1948 by Teachers College, Columbia University.

LITTLE ROCK GIRL SEES MORE STRIFE

Expelled Pupil Doubts That 8 Remaining Negroes Can Stand Harassment

A Negro student expelled from Central High School at Little Rock, Ark., said yesterday that Negro pupils were continually being harassed by white students there. As a result, she said, integration is being strained to the breaking point.

The student, Minnijean Brown, arrived from Little Rock with her mother to enroll as a scholarship student at the private New Lincoln School, 31 West 110th Street. She was received by a representative of the school and about fifty delegates of city youth councils and high schools.

The 16-year-old girl said she had been expelled for violating an agreement with school authorities by the Negro students not to retaliate to harassment from other pupils.

Asked whether she believed the eight remaining Negro students would be able to maintain a passive acceptance, Miss Brown said:

"Things cannot go on as they are. I'm praying for the other kids, but I don't think they are going to stand it."

She said, however, that she had not given up hope that integration would work out successfully at Little Rock.

Miss Brown's expulsion came after several suspensions for run-ins with white students. "I took abuse from them. I was kicked twice. I was called all kinds of terrible names, but I always walked away and laughed at it. But finally, I couldn't."

Miss Brown described the final incident that led to her ouster in a soft, high-pitched voice. Her mother, Mrs. Imogene Brown, was at her side during the news conference at La Guardia Airport.

She said a white girl had followed her in a corridor of the school "calling me all kinds of unmentionable names."

"I was taught not to use bad language, but after so much complications I got mad," Miss Brown said. "I just let go and called her white trash."

She said that despite her expulsion she felt "no bitterness whatsoever." She added:

Miss Brown said, however, that she had not given up hope that the integration program would work out successfully at Little Rock.

"I think it will come out alright," she said. "At least, I hope so."

She said that she "wished with all my heart" that she could have continued at Central High, but that she was looking forward to New Lincoln School.

She told reporters that she had recently changed the spelling of her name from Minniejean to Minnijean.

Mrs. Brown, who has three other children, said her husband, a building contractor, had had increasing difficulty getting work since the Little Rock school integration began last fall.

"I am sure that this is another form of retaliation," she said. She said she planned to return to Little Rock as soon as her daughter gets settled here.

'HAD TO FIGHT BACK,' NEGRO STUDENT SAYS

Girl Facing Expulsion Tells Of 'Constant Harassment'

CENTRAL HIGH QUIET NOW

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 13. — A Negro girl facing expulsion from Central High School following incidents involving her and white students said Thursday that the five months she spent in the school had been "almost unbearable."

Minnie Jean Brown said that white students had kept up a stream of almost constant harassment not only against her, but also against the other eight Negro students who are still attending the school.

Suspended Earlier

She was suspended Wednesday by School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, who also recommended that the board expel her for the rest of the school term.

The girl had drawn an earlier suspension this school year, prior to the Christmas holidays, and had been involved in incidents with white students. Several white students have been suspended also as a result of the incidents.

In a letter to the Negro girl and her parents, made public Wednesday night, Mr. Blossom said her latest suspension and recommendation for expulsion were based on the earlier suspension. The earlier disciplinary action followed her dumping a bowl of chili on two white boy students.

Agreement Reached

The superintendent said that when she was reinstated she agreed not to "retaliate either verbally or physically" to harassment from other students, but to leave such things "entirely up to school authorities to handle."

Thursday, Mr. Blossom said Minnie Jean Brown as well as the other eight Negro students attending Central High "were given instructions but only in their own interest."

He said a school board meeting was set for Friday, but that it wasn't being called to deal with his recommendation for expulsion. Instead, routine administrative matters will be taken up, he said.

Expulsion Automatic

Unless a reinstatement is requested, the board doesn't have to act on the expulsion recommendation, he pointed out. A student is expelled "automatically" unless he or she asks a board review of the superintendent's recommendation, he added.

Mr. Blossom said if there were any further incidents at the school Thursday, he hadn't heard of them yet. A student interviewed said that things appeared to have "quieted down" since the Negro girl was suspended again from classes.

The student, however, remarked that "it may take a little while to see just what has been causing the trouble."

Daisy Speaks

Daisy Bates, NAACP Negro leader here and spokesman for the Negro students, said Minnie Jean Brown's statement about the nine Negro children being constantly harassed was correct.

"They (white students) are after them all the time," she said.

She said she understood the suspended girl and her parents would request a board hearing on the expulsion.

Minnie Jean said white students have thrown rocks, "spilled ink on our clothes and were always calling us "nigger."

She said she'd "taken everything I could, and then I just had to fight back."

Several white students had accused the Negro girl of referring to them as "white trash," and also as a "troublemaker."

Little Rock Girl Arrives In New York For School

NEW YORK — Minnie Jean Brown, Negro student expelled from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., was scheduled to enter the new Lincoln School here Monday. She arrived in New York Sunday with her mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown.

Minnie, who is 16, was expelled February 17 because she retaliated to harrasements by white pupils. The day following her expulsion, she accepted a $1,050 scholarship to the New York private school.

Dr. John J. Brooks, founding director of the school, said, when offering the scholarship, that "Our kind of school just can't sit by and not make some sort of gesture in a case like this." New Lincoln was established in 1948 by faculty and alumni of the Horace Mann-Lincoln School. It maintains two buildings in Manhattan.

Miss Brown has been suspended, with recommendation that she be expelled at the end of the school year; but every Negro will understand what the real reason is.

Dat. 2-22-58

Miss Brown has been involved in several incidents at Central High School, and the reason is that she refused to knuckle down and let certain white students insult and attack her—so she has been suspended.

Miss Brown deserves great credit for withstanding these Negrophobic attacks, instigated by the offspring of Negrophobic adults.

We think it is wonderful that Negro youngsters like Miss Minnie Brown are able and willing to stand up against such pressure.

It makes us feel proud of our youth.

It indicates again that the canard about Negroes in the South being scared and cowardly is a complete fiction.

MINNIJEAN'S DAD JAILED Arrested For Gambling In Little Rock

Commercial Appeal
Memphis, Tenn.
Mon. 3-3-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 1.—(AP)—Police said Sunday that a man identified as the father of Minnijean Brown, Negro girl recently expelled from integrated Central High School, was arrested during a raid on a private club here and charged with gambling illegally.

Officers said Bob Brown was arrested at the club early Wednesday. Several other Negro men were arrested at the same time.

Brown and the others have been charged with violation of an anti-gambling statute and will be tried in Municipal Court.

Minnijean was expelled from Central High last Feb. 17 after being suspended twice. She now attends the interracial New Lincoln School in New York.

Little Rock Integration Suspension Sought

Compulsory school integration at Little Rock's Central High School, with federal troops still on duty there, has continued to produce serious difficulties and tensions. A number of racial clashes have occurred. Last Monday one of the nine Negro students attending the school was expelled for the rest of the current semester. Several white students have been suspended. Now the city School Board has asked the Federal Court to suspend racial integration at the school.

The petition, The AP reports, virtually said that opposition to integration had made normal school conditions impossible at Central High. The school district, in its respect for the law of the land, the petition set forth, was "left standing alone, the victim of extraordinary opposition on the part of the state government and apathy on the part of the federal government."

Suspension of the integration plan was asked until—

1. There is a clear definition of the concept of "all deliberate speed" in the 1954 Supreme Court school desegregation decision.

2. There are effective legal procedures for integration without impairment of the quality of the educational program.

The School Board said there was unrest among pupils, teachers and parents over Central High integration. Gov. Faubus has expressed approval of the board's action.

The School Board last Fall sought a stay of the integration order but the request was rejected by Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies of North Dakota, who was then filling a temporary vacancy in that district.

The action now taken by the Little Rock School board underscores again that unless any integration plan is supported by broad public acceptance in the community where it is applied it is bound to face great difficulties and fail of satisfactory results. In the Little Rock Central High situation the School Board, which had approved the plan, evidently believes current conditions make such results impossible at the present time.

FAUBUS TELLS GROUP RACE ISSUE UNIVERSAL

Helena Civic Club Hear Of Bright Business Future

HELENA, Ark., Feb. 20. (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus said here Thursday that the racial problem is not peculiar to Little Rock, Arkansas, the South or any section of the nation.

He told a joint meeting of all civic clubs in Phillips County that the problem has existed since the earliest recorded time and declared that critics who call for a quick solution are being unrealistic.

In obvious reference to use of federal troops at Little Rock, Governor Faubus said that "force . . . violates the Sonstitution in all of its forms. One can never change the will of the majority by court decrees."

He said that he was opposed to force "and I will not yield, regardless of my political fortunes or misfortunes."

Governor Faubus discussed what he said was a bright future for this area, particularly in reference to new industries, a multi-million dollar plant planned near here by Arkansas Power & Light Co., and the planned new Mississippi River bridge here.

On the current business recession, Governor Faubus said that Arkansas had less unemployment than any other state in the Union and added that what slackening of business there has been in the state was caused by a poor crop year.

Faubus Offers Comment On Brown Case

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 19 (AP) —Gov. Orval Faubus said today that Minniejean Brown should have been permitted to return to all-Negro Horace Mann High School here instead of being expelled from the Little Rock public school system.

The Negro girl was expelled Monday from integrated Central High School. She was under suspension at the time. No official reason for the suspension or expulsion has been disclosed.

Faubus said that if Minniejean "preferred to go to New York, that is different. She probably had no choice because the school board expelled her from the entire Little Rock school system."

The Negro girl's mother, Mrs W. B. Brown, confirmed today her daughter would accept a scholarship to an integrated private school in New York City.

Faubus Vows Continuance Of Fight Over Integration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (ANP) — Saying that he is not a quitter, Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas has promised to keep fighting until "the anti-integration issue is settled." He did not explain how he believes the issue could be settled.

The governor made the remark during an appearance at a Shetland pony sale here. He drew applause from a crowd of several hundred persons from a 12-state area.

One of the reasons the governor said he showed up at the sale was to dispel certain stories about him. Because he gained "notoriety" following the racial integration dispute at Central High School, some magazine and newspaper articles have pictured him as having horns he said.

Faubus made headlines last September when he called out the Arkansas National Guard to block court-ordered integration at Central High. The school has since been integrated under federal orders. Eight Negro students are attending classes there.

Faubus Ready To Face Race Issues Anew

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The next governor of Arkansas is going to be "plagued" by school integration problem, Gov. Orval Faubus said Tuesday.

Faubus, a key figure in the Little Rock integration dispute, is a candidate for a third term in this year's elections.

The governor told an Optimist Club luncheon meeting that his role in the federal-state clash over integration of Little Rock Central High School had been a consistent one.

"Our situation is smooth," Faubus declared. "There have been quite divergent views in this state over the issue and of course we regret some of the occurrences, but I don't know of any single person to blame for them."

He said there is no easy solution to the problem of school integration "and whoever would be governor would be plagued with it."

Faubus said he always had maintained the attitude of allowing local school districts to handle integration problems.

The case of Little Rock was different, he said, and he stepped in because of opposition to integration and because he felt he had to protect lives and property.

Arkansas National Guard troops he posted at Central High prevented the entrance of nine Negroes last September. Later he withdrew the soldiers after a federal court enjoined him from intefering with integration. A mob rioted at the school and federal troops were sent in to enforce the program.

Faubus causes Little Rock to lose $10 million center

"I was misquoted by the Arkansas Gazette.

"I did not say I would have nothing to do with a city or state where all American citizens are not treated equally.

"We (Feist and Feist, Newark realtors) canceled our plans for the erection of a $10 million shopping center in Little Rock, Ark., mainly because of economic reasons."

* * *

THIS STATEMENT was made to the AFRO here Friday by Stanley Silverman, an associate of Feist and Feist, real estate and insurance. 58 Park Pl., during an interview.

He was asked to verify the story in the Arkansas Gazette.

"We had a survey made," Mr. Silverman added, "and we found that the time was not right for a capital investment of this nature."

The realtor admitted, however, that the turmoil which Gov. Orval Faubus created when he called out the National Guard to prevent court-ordered integration at Central High School contributed to the decision to cancel plans for the shopping center.

"Insurance companies and big financial institutions," he emphasized, "are reluctant to move into an unstable situation.

"The integration problem and the conduct of families would make an investor think twice before going ahead with such a sizeable undertaking."

* * *

THE AFRO asked Mr. Silverman if Feist and Feist had canceled plans for the $10 million shopping center for good.

He replied:

"There are not sufficient purchasing dollars in Little Rock at this time — if economic conditions change we will re-examine the situation."

FAUBUS MAY DECIDE TO REVEAL 'EVIDENCE

Baltimore Md.
Appeal p.29

Compiled On Central High Integration Troubles

COULD COME TWO WAYS

Memphis Tenn

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

By KENNETH JOHNSON

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 26.—Gov. Orval Faubus said Wednesday there's a "possibility" he will make public the "evidence" he has said he compiled last fall on the Central High School integration trouble.

The Governor said his disclosure could come in one of two ways—either from developments on a scheduled March 11 Court of Appeals hearing in St. Louis, or by turning his information over to a Legislative Council committee.

Thurs 2-27-58

However, the Governor declined to say when such disclosures might come. That would depend "on a number of factors," which he also declined to discuss.

Called Out Guard

Governor Faubus called out the National Guard last September to block integration at Central High, and said one reason he did so was because an investigation he had conducted showed that real trouble and violence was in the making.

Since then, he has been hit with a Federal Court order against further "interference" with the Central High integration decree—an order which will be argued on appeal March 11 before the Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis.

The Governor has insisted on numerous occasions he has compiled "substantial" evidence that violence was in the making at Central High. State Police, as well as "other persons," made the investigation under his orders, and some of the evidence was turned over to the FBI, he has previously said.

But neither the Governor nor the FBI has yet made public any of the evidence.

Asked again Wednesday about the possibility of making it public, the Governor said he might consent to giving public testimony if the Court of Appeals should refer his appeal from the non-interference injunction back to Federal District Court here.

Hearings Indefinite

Or, there's a possibility he will allow at least part of his evidence to be made public by a special committee of the Legislative Council which has been investigating the Central High integration dispute, the Governor said.

That committee is headed by Representative Paul Van Dalsem of Perryville, who last conferred with the Governor about three weeks or a month ago. The Governor said he didn't know when the committee would start hearings on its investigation.

The Governor disclosed about two weeks ago he had authorized State Police to assist the committee in its investigation. One committee source said hearings may start next month, but Mr. Van Dalsem Friday said he didn't know when they would start.

Last Fall, in a hearing before Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies, Governor Faubus declared he was "immune" from giving testimony because he didn't believe the Federal District Court even had jurisdiction to question him.

"I still contend the court has no jurisdiction, but I haven't completely dismissed from my mind the possibility of going into trial on the merits of the case," the Governor said Wednesday.

Faubus For Party Civil Rights Unity

Herald Tribune
New York N.Y.

Backs Truman Stand on Issue

From the Herald Tribune Bureau

He said he had no desire to see a third party emerge in 1960, and he even made an approving comment on former President Truman's appeal in a speech tonight for a strong civil rights stand by the Democrats.

Gov. Faubus was shown an advance text of Mr. Truman's speech by a reporter in his suite at the Mayflower Hotel.

The former President said the party must stand firmly and forthrightly for full employment and protection of civil rights.

Sun 2-23-58

"I think," Mr. Truman added, "that firm and foresighted leadership might accomplish this without calling on the army for help. Indeed I know that patient and persistent action, coupled with firmness, can work wonders in the field of civil rights. But unless a President works at it day and night and shows the people where he stands, you can expect the demagogues to move in and make trouble. . . . For the Democratic party there can be no compromise which will deny to any of our people the enjoyment of their basic rights of citizenship."

p. 16

After reading the passage carefully, Gov. Faubus, storm center of the civil rights crisis in Little Rock last fall, said: "I think all Democrats can pretty well agree on this."

Gov. Faubus grinned but had no comment on the statement in Atlanta yesterday by Edgar Eisenhower, brother of the President, that the President had acted on "some bad legal advice" in sending troops to Little Rock in September to permit Negro students to enter Central High School there.

In fact, Gov. Faubus declined altogether to discuss Little Rock or the racial situation in the South.

Tribune

"I came here just to attend the dinner as an ordinary Democrat and to support the party and to honor one I think is a great man—Harry Truman," he said.

Mr. Truman, who disapproved of Gov. Faubus' course in the Little Rock affair, knew that the Governor was coming for the dinner. His attitude was that while he disagreed with him, Mr. Faubus is a Democrat and had as much right to attend as any other member of the party.

Silent as he was about the racial problem, however, there was no doubt that Gov. Faubus' presence symbolized in many minds the conflict that lies ahead of the Democrats when they come to draw up their 1960 platform and choose their ticket.

Sun 2-23-58

Gov. Faubus told a reporter today he thought it would be "possible" for the Democrats to reach workable understanding at least on a platform and candidates. He said:

"There is no inclination on my part to favor a third party or to have anything to do with formation of such a movement."

He indicated that during the first week of March he would announce whether he would seek a third term as Governor this year.

In Arkansas, he reported, the Democrats most favorably mentioned as Presidential candidates are Gov. Robert B. Meyner, N. J.; Sen. John F. Kennedy, Mass., and Sen. Stuart Symington, Mo. However, he said, if the people thought Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson, Tex., was interested in the nomination, there would be powerful support for him. Sen. Estes Kefauver, Tenn., does not appear "nearly as popular" as in previous years, he said.

Gov. Faubus reported great disillusionment with the Eisenhower administration in the South and said "Eisenhower Democrats" are hard to find nowadays. Resentment against the Supreme Court in the South has not abated, he said.

Gov. Faubus arrived by train from Arkansas with a group of the state's Democrats this morning and attended a breakfast in the Mayflower Hotel given by Mrs. Jack Carnes, Democratic national committee woman from Arkansas. He sat at a table with Sen. John L. McClellan, D., Ark., and Mrs. McClellan. At the dinner for Mr. Truman tonight in the Sheraton Park Hotel Gov. Faubus was seated at an Arkansas table.

Mrs. Bates Predicts:

More Violence in L. R. Next Fall

By CHESTER HIGGINS

DETROIT, Mich.—More tension, violence and the continued presence of U. S. troops are expected in the fall when more Negro children enroll at Central High in Little Rock, Ark.

This is the prediction of Mrs. Daisy L. Bates, dynamic NACP leader in the fight to integrate Little Rock's public schools.

Mrs. Bates made the prediction at a press conference here, where she was appearing in behalf of both the Detroit and the Inkster Spring NAACP membership drives.

"Kids in junior high schools are being propagandized by the White Citizens' Councils in preparation for their attendance at Central High School," she told the reporters.

"They will be ripe to harass the Negroes when they get in school," she added. "You know that the organized mobs have moved from the outside to the inside of the school. Here they do all kinds of things to Negro children. And they threaten white children who seem friendly to the Negroes."

MRS. DAISY BATES

LITTLE ROCK — A gang of white youths tossed stones and cursed four Negro girls as they were en route to classes at Dunbar Junior High School. The girls were attacked when a group of white girls called to six white boys and urged them to "come and get the n——rs." One boy hit two of the girls with rocks. There were no arrests.

SHE DECLARED that "most of this could be stopped if the principal and school superintendent applied firm discipline against the guilty children."

"I don't mean to say that these school officials actually conspire with the prejudiced mobs," she added. "But they are lax in exerting firm discipline."

She said there were 204 Negro children eligible to attend the former all-white high school last year," but I don't know how many are eligible this year."

At present, the Arkansas NAACP of which Mrs. Bates is president, is preparing to fight Superintendent of Little Rock Schools Virgil Blossom's petition to the Federal Court to delay integration of the schools.

The hearing is set for June 2.

She said "I'm not sure Minnie-jean Brown will return to Central High next year. Some of the white children are so mad about her getting the (New York) scholarship . . . it may not be wise for her to enroll there. However, she will return home in the summer vacation."

LITTLE ROCK—Ernest Green, slated to graduate from Central High School here in June, had his picture appear in the Central High annual which devoted four pages to the violence of last fall.

SAMMIE DEAN PARKER, the 16-year-old white girl "who has been labeled one of the leaders of the organized mob, is one of those particularly angry over Minnie's scholarship," Mrs. Bates said.

"She thought she should have got one when she was expelled from the school," she added.

The comely, 37-year-old woman, wife of the Arkansas State Press publisher, L. C. Bates, said the newspaper (a weekly) "hast lost $25,000 in advertising revenue since it began the militant fight for school integration . . . and in the last month we lost 20 per cent of our circulation."

■

PRESSURE on local agents by council members and other bigots has forced many of them to discontinue the paper's circulation, she said. "They threatened to bomb one store if it continued to handle our paper."

She said "our long range plan in Little Rock is to arouse the community — that large group of silent people—to speak out against intolerance and violence,"

Central High's teachers' attitudes "are good," she said, but Blossom has refused to permit the Negro children to participate in any of the school's extra-curricular activities. "He doesn't consider them regular students," Mrs. Bates said.

ASKED if the integration movement is getting support from the Little Rock labor unions, she laughed. "Most of the segregationists belong to the unions," she said.

"Presently the Arkansas NAACP is under fire in 20 cities in Arkansas to make public its records and membership lists," she disclosed.

Among other long range plans the Arkansas NAACP is pushing are the integration of Negro teachers in all the public schools, and the complete integration of Negro children on all levels in the school system including the integration of Negroes in the lily-white Hall High School, which is the school of the "wealthy citizens of Little Rock" and the integration of whites in the presently all-Negro high school, Horace Mann.

Judge Blocks Contract Pay To Blossom

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A state judge Thursday blocked payment of $19,741 to School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, whose contract was terminated Wednesday night prior to a mass resignation of five school board members.

Chancellor Murray P. Reed signed a temporary restraining order asked in a suit filed by John B. King, a fruit company employe with two teen-aged daughters.

Meanwhile, the city searched frantically for six responsible candidates willing to assume the task of administering the city's schools in the face of federal court integration orders.

All six board positions will be open in the Dec. 6 school election. The term of the sixth member, Dr. Dale Alford, is expiring and as a congressman-elect he is not seeking another term.

DISSENTING VOICE

Alford raised a lone dissenting voice when the five resigning members — President Wayne Upton, R. A. Lile, Dr. W. G. Cooper, Harold Engstrom and Frank Lambright—passed resolutions ending the superintendent's three-year contract effective Nov. 30, and agreeing to pay off the remaining 19 months of it.

King's suit alleged the payment would be an "illegal misuse and diversion of public funds" and amounted to collusion between the board and Blossom.

CONTROVERSIAL PLAN

The retiring board apparently took the action because it felt a new board would not deal fairly with the burly superintendent who has been blasted by segregationists as author of the controversial Little Rock plan for gradual integration.

King said he was not a member of any segregationist organization. His employer, Theo A. Dillaha Sr., is vice president of the Capital Citizens Council and a board member of the States Rights Council.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus Thursday turned aside newsmen who attempted to question him about the school situation with a terse, "No comment, no comment about anything."

James T. Karam, clothier and friend of the governor, is a candidate for the school board. He announced his bid before the board resigned.

Alford probably will be the only school board member until winners of the Dec. 6 election can be installed. Pulaski County Judge Arch Campbell, whose duty it would be to appoint an interim board, said that he did not believe it would be necessary to name one.

LITTLE ROCK COURT BLOCKS AIDE'S PAY

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 13 — A temporary injunction was issued Thursday in Pulaski Chancery Court to stop the Little Rock school district from paying $19,741 to dismiss Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom.

The payment to Mr. Blossom for the remaining nineteen months on his contract had been authorized by the school board yesterday just before five of the six members resigned.

Pulaski Chancellor Murray O. Reed signed the temporary injunction this afternoon after a taxpayer's suit was filed on behalf of John B. King of Little Rock.

Mr. King's suit, filed by James L. Sloan, said the board's action in terminating Mr. Blossom's contract had been "founded upon collusion calculated to pay moneys from public funds to the respondent, Virgil T. Blossom, for doing nothing and rendering no services in return therefor."

The five board members who resigned had supported Mr. Blossom throughout the Little Rock integration dispute and had endured with him the criticism of Gov. Orval E. Faubus and segregationist groups.

Dr. Dale Alford, the only board member who did not resign, voted against the dismissal of Mr. Blossom and against the buying of his contract. He said the matter should be left to the new board, which will be elected Dec. 6

SEEK CANDIDATES

Meanwhile, the city searched frantically for six responsible candidates willing to assume the task of administering the city's schools in the face of federal court integration orders.

All six board positions will be open in the Dec. 6 school election. The term of the sixth member, Dr. Dale Alford, is expiring and as a congresman-elect he is not seeking another term.

Alford raised a lone dissenting voice when the five resigning members — President Wayne Upton, R. A. Lile, Dr. W. G. Cooper, Harold Engstrom and Frank Lambright—passed resolutions ending the superintendent's three-year contract effective Nov. 30, and agreeing to pay off the remaining 19 months of it.

"ILLEGAL MISUSE"

King's suit alleged the payment would be an "illegal misuse and diversion of public funds" and amounted to collusion between the board and Blossom.

The retiring board apparently took the action because it felt a new board would not deal fairly with the burly superintendent who has been blasted by segregationists as author of the controversial Little Rock plan for gradual integration.

Suit in Little Rock Charges Collusion Between School Board and Official

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 13 (AP)—A state judge blocked the payment of $19,741 to Virgil T. Blossom, Superintendent of Schools in Little Rock. His contract was terminated last night before the resignation of five of six school board members.

Chancellor Murray O. Reed signed a temporary restraining order asked in a suit filed by John B. King, a fruit company employe with two teen-aged daughters.

Meanwhile, the city searched for six candidates willing to assume the task of administering the city's schools in the face of Federal court integration orders. The five members resigned in the hope that it would end the impasse over the opening of the high schools here.

Suit Bars Wages for Schoolman

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (AP) — A state judge Thursday blocked payment of $19,741 to School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom, whose contract was terminated Wednesday night prior to a mass resignation of five school board members.

Chancellor Murray O. Reed signed a temporary restraining order asked in a suit filed by John B. King, a fruit company employe.

Meanwhile, the city searched frantically for six responsible candidates willing to assume the task of administering the city's schools in the face of Federal Court integration orders.

Integration Crisis Left To Voters

Victor Over Hays — Only One to Stay

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)— Five members of the embattled six-man Little Rock School Board, asserting that the integration situation placed them in a "hopeless, helpless, frustrating position," resigned Wednesday night and dismissed School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom.

Board President Wayne Upton said the action would enable Little Rock voters to determine in the Dec. 6 school elections whether "we have public schools in Little Rock or not."

The resignations of Upton and members Harold Engstrom, R. A. Lile, Frank Lambright and Dr. W. G. Cooper Jr. left Dr. Dale Alford, an avowed segregationist, as the only remaining board member.

Shortly before the resignation announcement, the board terminated the contract of Blossom and agreed to pay him $19,741 for the remaining 19 months of the pact.

Alford opposed both resolutions on grounds that no action should be taken until a new board is chosen in the school election next month.

The resignations, widely rumored during the past three days, brought no display from a crowd of about 200 which packed the board room. The resignations are effective Friday.

All six board positions will be open in the Dec. 6 election. Alford's term is expiring and as a congressman-elect he will not seek another term.

Candidates have only until the end of this week to file for the offices. Only announced candidate is James T. Karam, Little Rock clothier and close friend of Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

The resigning quintet pointed out that any new board still will be bound by federal court orders to proceed with the court-approved voluntary plan of gradual integration.

The plan, which called for integration of only one high school — Central — last fall ran into immediate trouble when Faubus ordered national guard troops to the school to keep Negroes out.

Nine Negroes attended last year under protection of federal troops and this fall, after the board's bid for an integration delay was overruled by the Supreme Court, Faubus closed the city's four high schools as a last-ditch resistance measure.

Earlier Wednesday, segregationist Attorney Amis Guthridge promised court action against any move to buy up Blossom's contract. Blossom has been a principal target of segregationist as the author of the Little Rock integration plan which was adopted in May, 1955, two years after Blossom became superintendent.

Faubus, who frequently has criticized the board for "integrationist tendencies," was not available for a comment on the resignations.

A resignation statement said the five members felt "our removal from the scene may bring about an earlier solution to the present impasse."

Withdrawal Held Likely to Follow Decree

LITTLE ROCK, Ark (UPI)— The possibility arose Monday that a new school board and a new superintendent would fall heir to the tangled Little Rock school integration problem.

Five of the six members of the Little Rock school board threatened to resign as the United States Eighth circuit court of appeals in St. Louis directed the board to integrate the school district.

Wayne Upton, president of the board, said the members would decide within the next 24 to 36 hours if they would pull out.

The report also was current that the board would buy up the remaining 18 months of Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom's contract, releasing him for any other job he might wish to take.

MASS RESIGNATION

Upton verified an earlier report that five members of the board, under fire since nine Negro students integrated Little Rock Central High school under armed guard in September, 1957, were considering mass resignation. A meeting of the board was not possible Monday, Upton said, but a statement will be issued when the members decide on their course of action.

Blossom, author of the controversial gradual integration plan, has been under fire since the start of school in September, 1957. He draws an annual salary of $13,200.

A source close to the board said if it did not buy Blossom's contract, he might have difficulty getting paid by a new board. The source said Blossom did not ask for the action.

LEASING BANNED

The St. Louis court also made permanent an injunction that prohibited the high school board from leasing the four high schools closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus last Sept. 15 to a corporation for operation on a private, segregated basis.

Under state law, the Pulaski (Little Rock) county judge would appoint interim board members to serve until a new panel is elected at the Dec. 6 school board election.

Blossom refused to comment on the court's order until he had read it and conferred with school board attorneys.

Wiley Branton, chief attorney for Arkansas of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the next move appeared to be up to the school board or to the federal court.

"It looks like the next move is up to the school board or the courts, and I don't want to comment until I have read it (the order)," he said.

Ben C. Isgrig, secretary of the Little Rock private school corporation which has opened private, segregated classes financed by public subscription, said the order "will not affect us in any way."

10 DAYS ALLOWED

The order gave the Little Rock Private School Corporation 10 days to enter the case to show why the public school building should be used on a private, segregated basis. Leon Catlett, attorney for the corporation, said however, it was unlikely any intervention would be made.

"We're getting along so well like we are," he said, "I don't know if we will need to go to all that trouble."

Faubus ordered the high schools, accommodating almost 4000 students, closed under laws passed by a special session of the Arkansas Legislature last August. The Private School Corporation proposed to lease the four public schools for segregated classes, but that was stopped by an earlier ruling of the appellate court in St. Louis.

The corporation then leased a one-time Methodist orphanage and is conducting classes at three high school grade levels for about 750 white students. Other displaced pupils have transferred to schools as far away as Los Angeles and West Germany.

NOT CHALLENGED

In its opinion today, the federal court said the petition did not challenge the constitutionality of the Arkansas laws under which Faubus closed the high schools.

It criticized Little Rock school officials for "simply yielding to local desire or clamor and to the importuning of the governor" in cooperating with the private school corporation in its plans for segregated classes.

The court also criticized school officials for their "position of neutrality."

"What they have now done and threatened to do can hardly legally be viewed as a matter of neutrality in relation to the court decree against them," the order said.

"Complicating, inpeding and assisting to effect a frustration of the execution of the decree cannot be termed legal neutrality," the order said.

Negroes Are Ousted from Tennis Courts

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Three Negroes playing tennis at a Little Rock park were advised to leave the courts by city officers Monday.

Officers said the three — two men and a woman — left without argument. They were playing at the War Memorial courts.

Bill Amo, director of the city parks and recreation department, said his office received numerous telephone calls about the presence of the Negroes.

Amo said Negroes are permitted to go to the park zoo and to use the rides on a midway but they have not been allowed to use tennis courts or the swimming pool.

He said a Negro park here does not have a tennis court but previously there had been no reports of Negroes using the court at War Memorial Park.

9 Candidates File For Seats On Little Rock School Board

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Nine candidates filed Saturday for the six vacant positions on the integration - troubled Little Rock School Board.

Those who announced included James T. Karam, a clothier and friend of Gov. Orval E. Faubus; Traffic Judge Robert Laster; Atty. Ben. D. Rowland Sr., a former school administrator; Atty. Ed I. McKinley Jr., a former state banking commissioner and one-time city attorney.

Ted Lamb, owner of an advertising agency; W. F. Rector, an insurance executive; Everett Tucker Jr., a Chamber of Commerce official; Russell H. Matson Jr., a contractor; and Mrs. Charles W. Stephens, a housewife.

Karam said at a rally Friday night he would be opposed to integration at any time.

Rowland said Saturday that he endorsed Faubus' anti-integration legislative program and admired Dr. Dale Alford, an outspoken segregationist member of the school board who defeated Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) in the Nov. 4 general election after attacking Hays as too moderate on the integration problem.

Laster has made no flat declaration of how he would stand on integration if he won a place on the board in the Dec. 6 election. However, he has been sharply critical of the federal troops used to enforce integration at Central High School last year.

UNAVAILABLE

McKinley went on a hunting trip after filing and could not be reached immediately. Alford nominated him for a place on the school board several weeks ago to suceed Henry Rath, who had resigned. But the other board members rejected the nomination.

Five of the six board members resigned en masse this week, saying they hoped the action would help resolve the integration deadlock here. Only Alford stayed on the board.

It was announced that a group of seven Little Rock businessmen will serve as a local school board for the new Baptist high school, one of the private institutions established after Faubus closed Little Rock's four high schools to avert court-ordered integration.

Baptist High School is supported by tuition charges and donations. It has 373 students and holds classes in two church buildings.

PRIVATE SCHOOL

About 850 students are attending the Little Rock Private School Corp.'s high school and some 1,000 others have transferred to public schools outside the city. An interim Episcopal school provides classes for 60 more.

Some 3,000 whites and 700 Negroes were idled by Faubus' school - closing order. No private schools have been opened or are planned here for Negroes.

Board Eyes Resignation In Face Of New Order

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — The Little Rock High School Board decides at a meeting today whether to resign as a group in the face of a new federal court order that it proceed with plans to integrate the city's high schools.

The one Negro and three white high schools are already closed in defiance of integration rulings. Many white students are attending private segregated classes under a massive, state-supported resistance plan.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus told a cheering segregationist rally in New Orleans Monday night that the federal government "has not one continental thing to say about the private segregated schools in Little Rock" and they will continue to operate.

Wipey Branton, chief attorney in Arkansas for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the resignation of the school board would have little effect on the overall situation in the Little Rock schools because "any new board would be under the same court order to integrate."

The U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals Monday ordered the board to take positive steps to accomplish integration. The St. Louis court also made permanent an injunction which forbids the board from leasing out the schools for use by the private, segregated institutions.

If the board decides to resign, it was expected to do so Saturday, the deadline for candidates to file for the annual school elections, Dec. 6.

One of the six board members, Dr. Dale Alford, already has decided not to run for re-election. He will go to Congress as the write-in winner over Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark.) in last week's general election.

MANY LOSE JOB

It was considered likely that School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom would lose his job if the mass resignation occurs. It was reported that the board was planning to buy up his contract, which has 19 months to run at $1,100 a month.

Blossom has been under heavy fire from Faubus, Alford, and other segregationists since the Little Rock Central High School integration crisis in September of 1957.

If the board resigns either the Pulaski (Little Rock) County Board of Education or the Pulaski County judge would be required to name a new board pending the Dec. 6 election. But County Supervisor A. B. Wetherington said it was not clear to him just who does have the appointment power.

5 in Little Rock Race To Back Segregation

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. Nov. 18 (AP) — Five candidates for the Little Rock School Board issued a statement last night declaring that they were believers in segregation and would "not voluntarily integrate" the public schools.

The five, who filed as a group, added that they would "never initiate any action to implement or expedite integration."

The number of candidates for the Dec. 6 school election was cut from 15 to 14 by the withdrawal Monday of Mrs. John Wesley Clayton, whose husband still is a candidate.

In other developments:

- Alford, who unseated Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark.) in the Nov. 4 election, reaffirmed his stand that the U. S. Supreme Court in its desegregation decisions has usurped power and infringed on "our traditional constitutional rights."
- Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), speaking at Jonesboro, asserted that Gov. Orval Faubus merits consideration as a Democratic presidential nominee.
- The State Education Department began mailing transfer aid payments to school districts which have accepted students displaced by the Governor's order closing Little Rock's high schools to avoid desegregation. Officials estimated these payments will total about $25,000 a month.

No Timetable Set by Appeals Court

Little Rock Again Told To Integrate Schools

ST. LOUIS —(AP)— The Little Rock School Board was directed by a Federal Appeals Court Monday to take positive steps to achieve integration in its district where the four public high schools have been shut down.

The court did not establish a timetable for reopening the high schools. Nor did it spell out just how the integration order should be carried out. These matters were left up to Federal District Judge John E. Miller of Arkansas and the School Board itself.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas indicated the Little Rock Private School Corp. will continue operating a senior high school for white students in a private building with private funds.

The three-judge division of the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, in its unanimous opinion, also outlawed a plan for leasing the public high school buildings to the Little Rock private school group.

The court directed Judge Miller to order the School Board and Virgil T. Blossom, Little Rock school superintendent, to "take such affirmative steps as the District Court may hereafter direct to facilitate and accomplish integration in the district."

Under previous court orders, the court said, the School Board and Blossom have an obligation to act on their own initiative to accomplish integration. It is not enough, the court said, that they merely follow the specific orders of the District Court.

The appellate court assailed Gov. Faubus for closing the public high schools and the Arkansas State Legislature for approving the emergency measures under which Faubus acted.

The court rejected the School Board's claim of neutrality in the dispute over leasing public school buildings.

The three judges said they recognized the board members and Blossom previously had acted in good faith. But in leasing the buildings to the Private School Corp., the court said, they yielded to local clamor.

Faubus, in New Orleans to address a Citizens Council rally, noted he had anticipated the court's ruling. Faubus had said a week ago he had information the court would "attempt to force reopening of the public schools on an integrated basis."

In Little Rock, a member of the School Board who declined to be named said, "I don't see how we could open those schools on an integrated basis without a return of the 101st or other troops."

After rioting outside Little Rock's Central High School in September 1957, units of the 101st Airborne Division were flown in to enforce integration.

5 Little Rock School-Board Members Quit

Buy Up Contract Of Superintendent

Little Rock, Nov. 12 (AP)—Five of the six members of the integration-harassed Little Rock School Board quit Wednesday night after buying up the remaining 19 months of Superintendent Virgil Blossom's contract.

The move had been expected since Monday when the Eighth United States Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis ordered the board to take affirmative action to achieve integration.

A court challenge by segregationists is expected on the board's action in paying Blossom $19,900 for the remaining time his contract has to run.

Dr. Alford Stays

The only board member who did not resign was Dr. Dale Alford, a Little Rock eye specialist who defeated Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) for his Fifth District Congressional post as a write-in candidate in the November 4 election. Alford has been an outspoken segregationist.

Don't Like New Federal Court Order

But New Members Would Face Same Integration Rule

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI)— The Little Rock school board is considering resigning as a group in the face of a new federal court order that it proceed with plans to integrate the city's high schools.

The one Negro and three white high schools are already closed in defiance of integration rulings. Many white students are attending private segregated classes under a massive, state-supported resistance plan.

Board May Quit In Little Rock

School Group Meets To Study Decision

DR. ALFORD WILL STAY

By United Press International

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 11.—The Little Rock School Board met Tuesday in a Little Rock hotel to decide whether to resign following Monday's Federal order to proceed with integration. The board president said the group would announce its decision Wednesday night.

Wayne Upton, president of the six-member board, told newsmen "we're going to have a public meeting at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday. That's all I will say."

The board held a closed, two-hour meeting in a hotel room Tuesday. Just before Mr. Upton left the meeting to talk to reporters, another member, Dr. Dale Alford, left the meeting.

Alford Won't Quit

Dr. Alford, the only outspoken segregationist member of the board, was elected to Congress last Tuesday on a write-in vote over Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.)

Dr. Alford said he personally was not going to resign from the board. He refused to comment further. Claude Carpenter, Jr., a former aide of Gov. Orval Faubus who managed Dr. Alford's campaign, was with Dr. Alford.

Also at the meeting was Dr. Cary V. Stabler, president of Little Rock University. He told newsmen he was discussing "just unfinished business" with the board.

The United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis ordered the board Monday to take positive steps to accomplish integration. The Federal Court also made permanent an injunction forbidding the board from leasing the city's four public high schools for use on a private, all-white basis.

May Affect Blossom

Governor Faubus closed all the public high schools to keep them from being integrated. About 750 of the displaced students attend a private, segregated school operated by the Little Rock Private School Corp., Governor Faubus' answer to integration orders.

If the board does resign, it is felt that school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom may also be out of a job. A report was current that the board would buy up the remaining 18 months of Mr. Blossom's contract at $1,100 a month.

5 Little Rock School Unit Members Quit

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Five members of the embattled Little Rock School Board, asserting that the integration situation placed them in a "hopeless, helpless, frustrating position," resigned Wednesday night. Board President Wayne Upton said the action would enable Little Rock voters to determine in the Dec. 6 school elections whether "we have public schools in Little Rock or not."

BOARD ACTION

Shortly before the resignation announcement, the board terminated the contract of School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom and agreed to pay him $19,741 for the remaining 19 months of the pact.

Alford opposed both resolutions on grounds that no action should be taken until a new board is chosen in the school election next month.

The resignations, widely rumored during the past three days, brought no display from a crowd of about 200 which packed the board room. The resignations are effective Friday.

Candidates have only until the end of this week to file for the offices. Only announced candidate is James T. Karam, Little Rock clothier and close friend of Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

BOUND BY COURT

The resigning quintet pointed out that any new board still will be bound by federal court orders to proceed with the court-approved voluntary plan of gradual integration.

The plan, which called for integration of only one high school —Central—last fall ran into immediate trouble when Faubus ordered National Guard troops to the school to keep Negroes out.

Nine Negroes attended last year under protection of federal troops and this fall, after the board's bid for an integration delay was overruled by the Supreme Court, Faubus closed the city's four high schools as a last-ditch resistance measure.

Earlier Wednesday, segregationist attorney Amis Guthride promised court action against any move to buy up Blossom's contract. Blossom has been a principal target of segregationists as the author of the Little Rock integration plan which was adopted in May 1955, two years after Blossom became superintendent.

Faubus who frequently has criticized the board for "integrationist tendencies," was not available for comment on the resignations. Earlier, he said, "If I were a board member, I would resign."

A resignation statement said the five members felt "our removal from the scene may bring about an earlier solution to the present impasse."

Blossom's contract apparently was terminated because the outgoing members felt that a new board would not deal fairly with him in view of public criticism.

ALFORD'S EFFORT

Alford tried to block both a resolution to terminate the contract and a resolution to pay it off with substitute resolutions, calling for a delay in action until after a new board was constituted.

Both of Alford's motions failed 5-1 and the other resolution passed with Alford the lone dissenting voice.

Sharp words were exchanged between Alford and Cooper over the payoff resolution.

Alford said he felt the board had no right to spend public money for services it would not receive.

"We hired him and he's our responsibility," Cooper said. "It would be ungentlemanly to do otherwise."

The termination resolution praised Blossom's "competence and loyalty" as a school administrator. Blossom, who continues as superintendent until Nov. 30, said he has no other plans at present.

County officials will appoint an interim board to serve until a new board can be named in the elections next month.

MASS RESIGNATION?

Little Rock Board Meets in Secret

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 11 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board met in secret session today but members afterwards refused to reveal what was discussed.

Probable topics were yesterday's federal court order for the board to take positive action toward implementing integration, and a rumored mass resignation of five of the six members.

Board President Wayne Upton turned aside newsmen's questions, saying the board would hold an open meeting tomorrow night.

Newsmen speculated the board was seeking reconciliation with Gov. Orval E. Faubus, its fiercest critic, when Claude Carpenter Jr., a close friend of the governor, showed up for the meeting.

Carpenter remained throughout the session but said afterward he appeared only as legal counsel for Dr. Dale Alford, board member and congressman-elect.

Carpenter managed Alford's congressional campaign, leading to speculation that Faubus backed the doctor's successful write-in bid to unseat veteran Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark). Faubus consistently refused to confirm such an inclination on his part.

Alford said today he had no intention of resigning, but it was reported that Upton and board members Dr. William G. Cooper, R. A. Lile, Harold Engstrom and Frank Lambright held an informal meeting Sunday night and discussed the possibility of resigning en masse.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom attended the meeting but brushed past newsmen who attempted to question him. Blossom's contract with the board, which still has 19 months to run at $1,100 a month, apparently will be a bone of contention if the majority of the board resigns. It was reported that all except Alford favored buying up the contract. Alford said he would oppose any such move.

Alford, since he issued a public statement last year disagreeing with the board's gradual integration policy, has consistently voted against the board majority on integration matters.

Blossom and all board members except Alford have drawn constant criticism from segregationists since the school integration controversy erupted 14 months ago.

A mass resignation, if it occurred, would leave the board memberships open for only a short time. Regular school elections will be held here Dec. 6 and successors could be named at that time.

Five Members Of Little Rock Board Quitting

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Five of the six members of the integration harassed Little Rock School Board quit Wednesday night after buying up the remaining 19 months of Supt. Virgil Blossom's contract.

The move had been expected since Monday when the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis ordered the board to take affirmative action to achieve integration.

Court Challenge

A court challenge by segregationists is expected of the board's action in paying Blossom $19,900 for the remaining time his contract has to run.

The only board member who did not resign was Dr. Dale Alford, a Little Rock eye specialist who defeated Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) for his 5th District congressional post as a write-in candidate in the Nov. 4 election.

Alford has been an outspoken segregationist.

U.S. JUSTICE DEPARTMENT MAY OFFER PLAN FOR LITTLE ROCK SCHOOLS

U. S. May Offer Plan for Little Rock Schools

By Helen Thomas
United Press International

Justice Department officials said yesterday the Department "most probably" will offer definite recommendations to a Federal judge on how to reopen four Little Rock, Ark., high schools closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to block integration.

The officials said the Department was expected to file a brief with Federal District Judge John E. Miller spelling out what legal steps could be taken to bring about school integration at Little Rock.

A three-judge panel of the United States 8th Circuit Court of Appeals on Nov. 10 directed that positive steps be taken to facilitate integration at Little Rock's Central High School. Details were left up to Miller and the Little Rock School Board.

Expected to Act Soon

Miller was expected to hold a hearing soon on the Appeals Court order. Five members of the School Board have resigned since the order was handed down.

It was not clear what effect the ruling would have on a segregated senior high school set up in Little Rock in a building purchased from the University of Arkansas. The school is being operated with funds from private contributions.

Officials said the Justice Department probably would offer concrete guidance to keep the District Court "on the right track" in seeking a way out of the tangled school problem. But they declined to reveal what suggestions they had in mind.

'Friend of the Court'

The Department has intervened in the Little Rock case every step on the way as a "friend of the court." Attorrecently indicated at a news conference that further intervention was possible.

Meanwhile, the U. S. Office of Education is preparing a report on the "educational loss" suffered by students barred from schools in both Arkansas and Virginia as a result of the school integration crisis.

REOPENING SUGGESTIONS

U.S. Is Expected to Offer Little Rock School Plan

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23 (UPI) Justice Department officials said today the department "most probably" will offer definite recommendations to a federal judge on how to reopen four Little Rock, Ark., high schools closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to block integration.

The officials said the department expects to file a brief with Federal District Judge John E. Miller spelling out what legal steps can be taken to bring about school integration at Little Rock.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals on Nov. 10 directed that positive steps be taken to facilitate integration at Little Rock's Central High School. Details were left up to Miller and the Little Rock school board.

Hearing Due Soon

Miller is expected to hold a hearing soon on the appeals court order. Five members of the school board have resigned since the order was handed down.

It is not clear what effect the ruling may have on a segregated senior high school set up in Little Rock in a building purchased from the University of Arkansas The school is being operated with funds from private contributions

Officials said the Justice Department probably will offer concrete guidance to keep the district court "on the right track" in seeking a way out of the tangled school problem. But they declined to reveal what suggestions they have in mind.

Friend Of Court

The department has intervened in the Little Rock case every step of the way as a "friend of the court." Attorney General William P. Rogers recently indicated at a news conference that further intervention is possible.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Office of Education is preparing a report on the "educational loss" suffered by students barred from schools in both Arkansas and Virginia as a result of the school integration crisis. Virginia Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. has closed schools at Norwolk, Charlottesville and Front Royal to keep out Negro students.

Arthur S. Flemming, secretary of health, education and welfare, plans to make the study public at his next news conference. He already has noted that the loss to seniors who had planned to go to college will be much greater than that of students in the lower grades.

Government To Advise Judge On Mixing Steps

WASHINGTON (UPI) The government today was expected to advise a federal judge on the legal steps he can take to bring about school integration at Little Rock, Ark.

Justice Department officials said they "most probably" would offer some concrete guidance for District Judge John E. Miller in his efforts to reopen four Little Rock schools closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to prevent mixed classes.

These officials said the department was expected to file a brief with Miller. They declined to reveal the kind of advice it might contain.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals on Nov. 10 directed that positive steps be taken to facilitate integration at Little Rock's Central High School. Details were left up to Miller and the Little Rock School Board, five of whose members have since resigned.

ARKANSAS [illegible] 1958, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Ike's Little Rock Action Authorized By 3 Statutes

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, DC (NNPA)—The action of President Eisenhower in sending Federal troops to Little Rock to prevent obstruction of the enforcement of the Federal court order for desegregation of Central High School there was authorized by three Federal statutes, the Justice Department maintains.

The question was raised anew by Senator Sam J Ervin, Democrat, of North Carolina in cross examining W Wilson White in his appearance Tuesday before the Senate Judiciary Committee for questioning on his nomination by Mr Eisenhower to be the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the newly created Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department.

For answer to questions concerning the authority of the President in ordering 1200 tough aratroops of the Regular Army to Little Rock and federalizing the Arkansas National Guard, Mr White referred Ervin and other members of the Judiciary Committee to the brief filed by the Justice Department in an appeal from a Federal District Court order.

The appeal is pending in the United States Court of Appeals at St Louis. It was taken by two students who formerly attended Central High School in Little Rock, and their mother, who sued on their behalf and also as a "citizen, taxpayer and patron" of the Little Rock School District.

After the complaint was filed, however, the two students withdrew from Central High and their credits were sent to the Mabelvalde High School at Mabelvalde, Aak.

The complaint attacked the constitutionality of the three Acts of Congress, pursuant to which military forces were sent to Little Rock to enforce the Federal District Court orders for removal of obstructions to justice in the case of nine little colored children after Gov Orval E Faubus of Arkansas had called out the Arkansas National Guard to bar their admission to Central High.

The Federal District at Little Rock ruled that the complaint presented no substantial constitutional question, and dismissed it for lack of jurisdiction. The plaintiffs appealed.

In its brief, the Justice Department says both the President's proclamation of last Sept 23, and his executive order of Sept 24, which directed the Secretary of Defense to use military forces to enforce the Federal District Court orders for desegregation of Central High School, were issued pursuant to Title 10 of the United States Code, sections 332, 333 and 334.

Section 332 authorizes the President to use such of the armed forces and the state militia as he considers necessary to enforce "the law of the United States" whenever he considers that unlawful obstructions make it impracticable to enforce such laws by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings.

Section 333 authorizes the President to use the armed forces and the militia to surpress any insurrection, domestic violence, etc, if it opposes or obstructs the execution of "the laws of the United States" or impedes the course of justice under those laws.

The brief states, that troops were stationed at Central High School to remove and prevent forcible obstructions to the carrying out of the Federal District Court order that the school be integrated.

The court order, the Justice Department declares, "was an enforcement of the constitutional right of the colored children not to be denied by the authorities of the state of Arkansas the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment."

The Justice Department contends that the phrase "the laws of the United States," as used in the applicable statutes, "covers not merely acts of Congress but federal law in its broader sense, including the Federal Constitution and orders of a federal court enforcing constitutional rights," such as the Federal District Court order for integration of Central High.

The constitutionality of section 332 and 333, the Justice Department asserts, is confirmed by repeated and long continued executive practice of the Presidents, beginning with George Washington, in using troops to put down forcible resistance and obstruction to the execution of the laws.

The list of such instances, exclusive of those in which the President acted at the request of state authorities, include the slave insurrection of 1831, the Shadrach Case, disturbances in Kansas in 1856, John Brown at Harper's Perry, the South Carolina riots of 1871, and the race riots in Washington, DC, in 1919.

The Slave Insurrection of 1831; On the basis of reports of apprehended uprising of the slaves in various areas in the South, in 1831 contingents of the Army were, with the approval of President Andrew Jackson, sent to the areas in question.

Disturbances in Kansas, 1958; After the creation of the Territory of Kansas in 1858, the pro-slavery and anti-slavery slavery groups who emigrated there engaged in violent clashes.

President Franklin Pierce in February, 1856, issued a proclamation commanding all persons engaging in unlawful combinations against the Territory of Kansas or the United States to disperse and warning them that any attempted insurrection in Kansas or aggressive intrusion into that territory would be resisted by the armed forces of the government in addition to the local militia

Federal troops in Kansas were instructed to aid the Governor of the territory to suppress any armed resistance to the execution of the law. In response to requisitions by the territorial Governor, federal troops were several times furnished for that purpose.

John Brown at Harper's Ferry, 1859: When John Brown and his party seized the government armory and arsenal at Harper's Ferry, President James Buchanan signed a proclamation for the use of troops, which he gave to the officer commanding the federal troops which had been sent to Harper's Ferry, to be published there.

The troops speedily overcame John Brown's party, however, and the President's proclamation was not published.

South Carolina Riots, 1871: With the rise of the Ku Klux Klan after the Civil War, there were many riots and acts of violence in South Carolina.

In 1871 President Ulysses S Grant, issued a proclamation, specifying certain counties in South Carolina as places where armed combinations existed so powerful as to be able to defy the constitutional authorities and commanding persons composing such combinations to disperse and deliver their arms to Army officers.

When this command was not obeyed, the President stationed federal troops at various points in the states and arrested all known members of the Ku Klux Klan.

Race Riots in Washington, DC, 1919: Upon the outbreak of fighting between colored persons and whites in Washington, DC, in 1919, during President Woodrow Wilson's administration, the Secretary of War ordered the use of troops to maintain peace.

The Government's brief in the Little Rock case, on appeal, is signed by Assistant General George Cochran Dour, Osro Cobb, United States Attorney at Little Rock, and Samuel D Slade and Donald B MacGuineas, attorneys in the Justice Department here.

Judge Hails Ike's Little Rock Action

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — (INS) — A New York State Judge declared Saturday the Little Rock school crisis was a "freak incident" which "never should have been allowed to come to that point."

Justice Philip Halpern, U. S. expert on the United Nations Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, said however that members of his committee placed the incident in "perspective" to other American advances to end racial segregation in education.

The Buffalo Jurist told a news conference that President Eisenhower was right in calling in the Federal troops after Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus refused to control the situation arising from the admission of Negro students to Little Rock Central High School.

DEFIANCE NOTED

He declared the situation was similar to Lincoln's Declaration of War after South Carolina seceded from the union. In both cases, Halpern stated, there was a "defiance of the Federal Government."

He declared studies done by the Subcommission on Discrimination in Education and Religion were helping to end global restrictions against minority groups.

Halpern's suggestion that the next study be made on the right to immigration was accepted unanimously by the group at this session after heated Soviet objections.

He has served on the 12-nation group since 1954. Halpern is Associate Justice of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of N. Y., fourth division.

ERVIN DELIVERS RACIAL ADDRESS AT LITTLE ROCK

Says Integration Problems Cannot Be Solved by Legal, Armed Coercion

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UP)—Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. said Saturday night that Little Rock school integration proved "indelibly" that "racial problems cannot be solved by judicial or military coercion."

The North Carolina Democrat also said the incident showed "that such problems can be solved only by good will, and intelligence and patience on the local level where men and women live, move and have their being."

Ervin, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee which handles civil rights legislation, said the Little Rock trouble showed the rest of the nation that "the Southern states know something about the racial problem because they live with it day by day."

"Southern states should be allowed the same freedom to seek solutions of racial problems within their respective borders that is accorded to the other states for solution of their problems," he said.

In a Jefferson-Jackson Day speech here, Ervin said "the serious problems confronting the nation are in substantial part the result of a want of effective leadership" in the Eisenhower administration."

On Back Seat.

Most of the trouble, Ervin said, is that "the captains and kings of the Republican Party have forsaken the steering wheel for the back seat and, consequently, the executive branch of the federal government has lost its sense of direction."

Ervin said President Eisenhower "succumbs to the advice of bad counselors and struck a most serious blow at the constitutional doctrine of the indestructibility of the states by sending federal troops with drawn bayonets into Little Rock."

He said "Operation Little Rock" should "give pause to those people who seek at all hazards to convert the public schools of the South from educational institutions into sociological laboratries for experiments in race relations."

The Senator also blasted the administration's farm program. "No longer is there any question about a recession; debate now centers on how deep it is and what should be done," he said.

He told the Democratic gathering that " the recession is hardly news to the farmers of this nation. They have become well acquainted with it during the five years of Republican control."

Judge Requests 'More Definite' School Petition

Federal Jurist Tells Little Rock Board To Back Up Its Contentions

SEEN AS HOPEFUL SIGN

June 2 Is Set As Date For Hearing On Request That Integrated Classes At Central Be Postponed

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 28.—Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley Monday directed the Little Rock School Board to make "more definite" its petition that integrated classes be postponed at Central High School.

He hinted broadly that as the petition now stands, he could not grant it. But he went one step further and made several suggestions which, if carried out, apparently would strengthen the board's plea for reconsideration of the integration decree.

Tentative Trial Date Set

The judge set June 2 as tentative trial date.

"If the board makes a case for relief under the law and the evidence, then appropriate relief will be granted. . . . However, the Federal courts are not school boards. The burden of proof is upon the school board," Judge Lemley warned.

The judge, who last week was given jurisdiction of the dispute, met with Little Rock School Board officials and Negro attorneys representing Negro children and parents involved in the Central High controversy. The meeting was to outline a procedure he will follow in the latest litigation.

Basis of the latest action is a board petition filed in February asking that the integration decree issued last fall by Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D., be "realistically reconsidered in the light of existing conditions."

Judge Lemley cited an observation he made several years ago in a school suit, when the separate-but-equal doctrine still was in effect, in which he said "much must be left" to judgment of school officials, rather than to courts.

He said he felt that statement still represented "a basically sound principle," despite the separate-but-equal doctrine no longer being in effect.

The board asked for reconsideration after unrest broke out at the school last fall and resulted in President Eisenhower sending Federal troops to enforce integration. About 400 "federalized" Arkansas National Guardsmen still are on duty at the school.

Board Allowed 10 Days

The judge gave the board 10 days to amend its petition. He told attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People they could file additional briefs, and said other parties wishing to join could submit "friend of the court" pleadings.

Judge Lemley said the board should amend its petition to state whether it desires a "cooling off" period, or has a definite time in mind for which integrated classes should be postponed.

He said the board also must be prepared to offer proof backing up allegations as to teacher and pupil unrest and a decline in educational standards under racially-mixed classes.

Chairman Wayne Upton said the board was prepared to put on "quite a number" of witnesses backing up its contention that it has been impossible to conduct a normal schooling process.

FAUBUS LAUDS STATE FOR ITS ENTERPRISE

Says Other Sections Might Follow Example

NORTHERN PRESS HIT

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, March 7. — Gov. Orval Faubus said Friday that some sections of the United States might profit by "copying" some Arkansas community enterprise and handling of its public school system.

The Governor hit particularly at sections which have been critical of Arkansas as a result of the Central High integration dispute, in which he has been a target of what he described as "the Eastern and New York press."

Praises Efforts

The Governor's comments came during an appearance he made at the annual Community Accomplishment Contest.

Praising community initiative and effort represented in the contest, the Governor said:

"This is the time when the foreign press ought to be here. If some of those distant critics would look around in their own areas, they would find they have more problems and less initiative there than we do here in Arkansas."

He referred indirectly to troubles which have beset some of New York's public schools when he said that Arkansas has had "no rapes, knifings, or trouble of that sort in its public school system."

In Good Company

"We send our children to school here to be in good company," he said.

The Governor frequently has expressed resentment at the handling by out-of-state newspapers of the Central High integration dispute.

Faubus Faces Primary Threat

By Ray Moseley
Arkansas Gazette Reporter

LITTLE ROCK, March 29— Seven months ago an Eastern Arkansas judge told a college graduating class that the South had lost its battle against racial integration and must accept it as "the law of the land."

Chancellor Lee Ward of Paragould made the statement 22 days before Gov. Orval E. Faubus called out the Arkansas National Guard in an attempt to block integration at Little Rock's Central High School.

Today Judge Ward, who has hewed to his "law and order" stand, ranks as a formidable threat to the Governor's third-term ambitions.

He has achieved that position in less than two weeks.

Faubus Leaps to Attack

Judge Ward announced March 20 that he was considering entering the Governor's race in the summer Democratic Party primaries and promised to make his decision by April 4.

That announcement was enough for Governor Faubus. He leaped to the attack against Ward three days later and the subsequent skirmishing has made it appear that the gubernatorial campaign, which normally doesn't begin in earnest until mid-June, already is in full swing.

If Ward enters the race, and the odds are that he will, he has made it plain that he will stake his chances on a position diametrically opposed to that of Faubus on the integration issue.

Ward first made his views known in an Aug. 10 address to the graduating class of Arkansas State College at Jonesboro.

Calls for Obedience

The South must decide, he said, whether to obey the law or to abandon democratic principles so it can retain segregation.

He said he was not reprimanding those who merely voiced a disagreement with the United States Supreme Court's desegregation rulings but added:

"There is a vast difference between disagreement and defiance. I do believe for myself that every man, woman and child must obey the law —whether he likes the law or not."

Since then he has amplified his position with a proposal for an amendment to the United States Constitution which, he said, would preserve both segregation and the law.

It contains a provision under which school districts which had maintained segregated schools 50 years or more would have the right to determine by popular vote whether they shall desegregate.

This, he says, would protect Southern communities with serious desegregation problems without affecting the pattern in the rest of the Nation.

In this position Ward stands as something of an anomaly. He is from a section that has the heaviest concentration of Negro residents in Arkansas. It is a section in which politicians seem to find it expedient to advocate defiance of the law where the racial issue is concerned.

But Ward showed no hesitancy in reaffirming his position when Governor Faubus waded into him last week.

The Governor, in a speech to a segregationist audience at a cotton-growing community southeast of Little Rock, challenged Ward to say if he would use the National Guard to enforce integration at Central High School.

Ward retorted that he would not use the Guard to enforce integration or segregation at Little Rock "or anywhere else."

"I would remove the Federal troops by meeting the simple and reasonable demand that no order of the Federal courts would be defied or interfered with in any way by me as Governor," he added.

Issues 8-Point Platform

Ward has not limited his public statements to the integration issue. He has issued an 8-point platform indicating that he is prepared to go to the attack on such issues as economy in government and political influence of "a certain utility."

He has declined so far to name the utility but it is obvious that he refers to the Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co., which has received two multi-million-dollar rate increases from the state utility regulatory agency since Faubus took office.

The gas company has been one of Faubus' principal financial backers.

Ward has a reputation among politicians as a stem-winding orator and a sharp political in-fighter.

Last Race in 1956

He has made only one previous state-wide race—for chief justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court in 1956. He finished 12,449 votes behind the winner but did not campaign extensively.

Ward has been chancellor since 1954. In Arkansas chancery judges handle suits in equity.

He is a graduate of the University of Arkansas and is a Navy veteran. He was commander of the Arkansas Department of the American Legion in 1949-50 and was district governor of Lions International in 1951-52.

He is a Sunday School teacher at First Methodist Church of Paragould and has been a lay speaker and president of the Paragould District Methodist Men's Club.

He is 51 years old, married and has one daughter.

Faubus Says Reds Stirred Little Rock Row

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus charged Thursday that Communists helped foment and keep alive the Little Rock school integration dispute.

It was the first time Faubus had brought communism into the long-standing controversy over Central High School.

The governor said he possessed information about a tie-in between Communist party members and some Little Rock citizens who favor school integration.

Faubus named Lee Lorch, white mathematics professor at a Negro college here, and Lorch's wife as part of what he termed a "Communist apparatus" operating in Little Rock.

Both later declined detailed comment on the charge.

The governor told a news conference he mentioned the Lorches because of a magazine article which had been brought to his attention. He said it appeared in the Easter 1958 issue of the Christian Crusade magazine, published at Tulsa, Okla.

Faubus said the article was written by J. B. Matthews, former chief investigator of the House Un-American activities Committee. He said that at one point the article charged that Lorch, in past refusals to answer questions about Communism, had lent strength to allegations about his affiliations with the Communist Party.

The governor said Communists helped promote integration at Central High and accused the Lorches of having a role in the promotion.

"I think the Lorches are a part of the Communist apparatus," the governor said.

Faubus gave no further details about the information he said was in his possession.

FAUBUS DEFEATED IN APPEALS COURT

Fails in Move to Upset U.S. Judge's Dismissal of Suit to Block Integration

ST. LOUIS, April 28 (AP)— The dismissal of suits by Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas and others against Government actions to enforce integration in Little Rock was upheld today by the United States Court of Appeals.

The appellate court rejected Governor Faubus's appeal from an injunction against his use of Arkansas National Guard troops to keep Negro children out of Central High School.

Also rejected were parallel actions appealed by Mrs. Clyde Thomason and Mrs. Margaret Jackson, members of the Pro-Segregation League of Central High Mothers.

The three-judge Appeals Court held hearings on the three cases March 31, affirmed the rulings of Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies in each case.

In the Faubus case, the Court of Appeals held that the state of Arkansas could not lawfully use its forces to suppress "rights which it is the duty of the state to defend."

"The use of troops or police for such purposes would breed violence," the court said. "It would constitute an assurance to those who resort to violence to obtain their ends that if they gathered in sufficient numbers to constitute a menace to life the forces of law would not only not oppose them but would actually assist them in accomplishing their objective."

Mrs. Thomason has brought suit against officers in charge of Federal troops sent into Little Rock to enforce Judge Davies's order for the integration of the school.

The appellate court commented on conflicting rulings by state courts and Judge Davies in the Little Rock situation:

"A federal court should not, when prompt action is required, be compelled to indulge in useless formalities in protecting its judgment from behind emasculated by state court proceedings."

The opinions were written by Judge B. Sanborn of St. Paul, Minn., and were concurred in by Judges Joseph W. Woodrough of Omaha, Neb., and Harvey M. Johnsen of Omaha.

Faubus Appeal Killed by Court

ST. LOUIS — (AP) — Dismissal of suits by Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas and others against government actions to enforce integration at Central High School in Little Rock was upheld Monday by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

The Appellate court rejected Faubus' appeal from an injunction against his use of Arkansas National Guard troops to keep Negro children out of the Little Rock school.

Also rejected were parallel actions appealed by Mrs. Clyde Thomason and Mrs. Margaret Jackson, members of the pro-segregation League of Central High Mothers.

The three-judge appeals court, which held hearings on the three cases March 11, upheld the rulings of Federal District Judge Ronald Davies in each case.

In the Faubus case, the Court of Appeals held the State of Arkansas could not lawfully use its forces to suppress "rights which it is the duty of the state to defend."

"The use of troops or police for such purposes would breed violence," the court said. "It would constitute an assurance to those who resort to violence to obtain their ends that if they gathered in sufficient numbers to constitute a menace to life, the forces of law would not only not oppose them but would actually assist them in accomplishing their objective."

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas lost in the Federal Court of Appeals Monday his fight in the Little Rock integration dispute. He planned an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The appeals court censured the governor for calling out National Guard troops to keep nine Negro children out of Central High School there last fall.

If permitted to stand, the court said, such a course could lead only to a complete breakdown of government.

UNANIMOUS DECISION

Faubus' appeal from a Federal District Court injunction against interference with integration at the high school was rejected unanimously by the three - judge court.

The appellate court also rejected appeals in two parallel cases in which the federal government's use of troops to enforce integration was challenged.

INTERNATIONAL ATTENTION

The racial controversy drew international attention last fall, and the Arkansas governor became the storm center when school authorities sent the Negroes home in the face of mob action.

Faubus withdrew the Arkansas National Guardsmen under the federal court injunction. The Negro children were slipped into the school by a side entrance but were sent home the same day when whites rioted outside the building.

TROOPS FLY IN

President Eisenhower ordered paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division dispatched by plane to Little Rock. He also federalized the Arkansas guardsmen.

Troops, with fixed bayonets stood guard at the school, even escorting the Negro students into the building at first. Federal troops still are on duty at Little Rock.

Faubus had no comment on the decision, but his attorney, Tom Harper of Fort Smith, Ark., said the governor will appeal.

'TO THE END'

Harper added: "From the very first we had intended to take the thing to the very end and that's what we'll do."

In rejecting Faubus' argument that he acted only to suppress mob violence which he feared should the Negro children be admitted to the school, the Court of Appeals said: "A rule which would permit an official whose duty it was to enforce the law to disregard the very law which it was his duty to enforce, in order to pacify a mob or suppress an insurrection, would deprive all citizens of any security in the enjoyment of their life, liberty or property."

CITES RAMIFICATIONS

The court held that under such a rule "the banks could be closed and emptied of their cash to prevent robberies, the post office locked to prevent the mails from being robbed, the citizens kept off the streets to prevent holdups."

In each of the three cases, the court upheld the decisions of Federal District Judge Ronald E. Davies of North Dakota, then sitting in Little Rock.

MOTHERS APPEAL

The other appeals were brought by Mrs. Margaret Jackson and Mrs. Clyde Thomason, members of the segregationist League of Central High Mothers.

Atty. Kenneth Coffelt, representing Mrs. Jackson, said he would start another action in a state court in Little Rock. Griffin Smith Jr., attorney for Mrs. Thomason declined comment until he had read the court transcript.

U. S. Appellate Court Censures Arkansas Governor

MR. JOHN NETHERLAND HIESKELL, EDITOR
ARKANSAS GAZETTE

WON PULITZER MEDAL

Publisher 'Wouldn't Change' Stand

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A small, pixie-eyed man with gray hair parted in the middle sat before a cluttered oak desk Tuesday and declared "we have suffered severely but if confronted with the same situation, we would not alter our stand."

John Netherland Hieskell, 85-year-old editor of the Pulitzer Prize winning Arkansas Gazette, speaks in a small voice and has the look of a benign country parson. But to his hard-boiled managing editor, A. R. Nelson, "he has more guts than any man I know."

Heiskell watched carefully and sanctioned the editorial stand his 139-year-old newspaper took last fall during the explosive integration crisis here. This stand won the Pulitzer Gold Medal but turned the revered "Old Lady on Third Street," into a newspaper despised by ardent segregationists and castigated by hundreds with different views.

CIRCULATION LOSS

Heiskell, the owner and editor, while lamenting the loss of circulation and the wrath of some former friends, said it was impossible to avoid it and still be faithful to his editorial beliefs.

In a few short weeks after the newspaper spoke out against Gov. Orval Faubus' use of National Guard troops to defy a federal court integration order last fall, the Gazette — an institution to more than 100,000 Arkansas families—lost an estimated 10 per cent of its circulation.

Some who professed hatred for the Gazette were not willing to blame Heiskell, whose soft-voiced approach to any problem was virtually a legend. Many said Heiskell had given up the reins of the Gazette he had edited since 1902 to his son-in-law, Publisher Hugh B. Patterson Jr., 43, and Executive Editor Harry S. Ashmore, 42, who had translated the paper's policies into Pulitzer winning editorials.

But Heiskell did not let that thinking stand. "I can dispose of it," he said, "by saying that except for one day's absence, I read every editorial the Gazette published before it was printed."

BITING PROSE

Asked if he underwrote the tenor of Ashmore's biting editorial prose, Heiskell smiled and said: "Harry is a bold man. My editorials would have been more restrained but they would have stood for the same thing."

What was the Gazette's stand? "We have never advocated integration," Heiskell said. "We oppose Gov. Faubus' use of troops to defy a federal court order and we opposed mob violence. We have stood for better opportunities for Negroes but we have never advocated integration."

Heiskell is widely known for his dry humor. Old hands at the Gazette recall the time they found a notice tacked on the Bulletin board after an outbreak of crime in the city:

"Christian civilization in Arkansas has reached a low level when these horrible, revolting sex crimes continue to be committed on the Democrat's time. JNH."

The Democrat is the rival afternoon newspaper in Little Rock. Heiskell once owned it but disposed of it on the theory that newspapers thrive on competition.

The venerable editor, who neither smokes nor drinks, beyond an occasional glass of sherry, once said that "a newspaper is not a property but a community institution which grieves and rejoices with the people it serves. The supreme concern of the newspaper should be truth—in which we will find our enduring kingdom."

Troops At Little Rock Cost Nation 5 Million Dollars

By ROBERT MOONEY

WASHINGTON. — (INS) — The Defense department estimated that the cost of enforcing integration at Central High school in Little Rock, Ark., will be five million dollars or more when troops are finally withdrawn.

President Eisenhower ordered withdrawal of federalized National Guardsmen from the school on May 29, the day after summer vacation begins. He expressed hope that military enforcement of federal court decrees against racial segregation in public schools will never again be necessary.

Figures released after hearings before the House military appropriations subcommittee showed that about $700,000 of the total cost will include normal expenses of the active army troops used.

Air force costs are not included since they are listed as "normal" expenses. They were informally estimated at $432,712.

The Chief Executive federalized the Arkansas National Guard and Air National Guard on September 24, 1957, when racial violence erupted at the school. He also dispatched 1,000 regular army paratroopers shortly afterward.

Total cost of the operation from September 24, to February 28, 1958 was estimated at $4,542,478. Military personnel accounted for $4,093,007 and operation and maintenance costs were $449,471. Army figures estimate the cost for the fiscal year ending June 30 at $5,000,000.

Most of the costs were incurred in September and October, 1957, and were greatly lessened as active army and National Guard units were released. They dwindled from 9,681 on September 30, to 445 on February 28, with only a handful still remaining.

In his statement the President said he trusted that state and local officials and citizens "will assume their full responsibility and duty" for seeing that the federal court orders are not obstructed after the May 29 release date.

Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus is appealing the Federal District court order requiring the previously all-white institution to open its doors to Negro students. He is slated to win an unprecedented third ferm. Faubus' resistance to the integration order was a key issue in his renomination campaign.

Little Rock Cost To FBI: $86,700

Bureau Seeks Increase In Appropriation—Eastland Raps Expenditure

By MORRIS CUNNINGHAM
From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 5. — The FBI investigation of the Little Rock school integration dispute last year cost $86,700, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover revealed Monday.

Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, promptly called the Federal Bureau of Investigation expenditure evidence of "an attempt to intimidate the very fine people of Little Rock."

Number Not Disclosed

It was disclosed during the integration dispute that numerous FBI agents were in Little Rock. Newsmen reported their presence contributed to hotel room shortages.

The exact number assigned to Little Rock was never known. The Justice Department refused to say.

Mr. Hoover's revelation of the cost was made in testimony to a House Appropriations Subcommittee, the transcript of which was released Monday.

He cited the $86,700 cost figure in attempting to justify an increase in FBI appropriations for the forthcoming fiscal year.

He said civil rights cases "require an abnormally heavy expenditure of time, effort and investigative manpower," and added:

"For example, the estimated costs incurred in the investigative ramifications arising from the public school integration problem at Little Rock, Ark. (civil rights; contempt of court), have totaled approximately $86,700 through Jan. 3, 1958.

1,289 Rights Cases

Mr. Hoover said the FBI investigated 1,289 civil rights cases in fiscal year 1957, compared to 1,231 in the previous year.

"I should like to stress the fact," he added, "that our investigative policies in civil rights matters are governed entirely by orders issued by the Department of Justice."

Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker has estimated Army and Arkansas National Guard ground forces costs will amount to $4,333,000 by the end of the present school term.

The Air Force has estimated the Air Force "airlift" to and from Camp Campbell, Ky., plus the federalization of the Arkansas Air National Guard, cost $435,712.

Thus the combined total of known expenditures for integrating Little Rock's Central High School is $4,855,412.

The total school budget for the 1957-58 session at Little Rock is $5,222,297.

SCHOOL IS OUT MAY 28

Ike Orders Troops to Quit Little Rock High May 29

Soldiers Still Guarded Little Rock School Yesterday

WASHINGTON, May 8 (A.P.)—President Eisenhower has ordered the withdrawal, at least for the summer recess, of all federal troops stationed in Little Rock to enforce school integration.

The school term ends May 28; the troops are to withdraw May 29. They are still on duty at the city's Central High School, scene last September of violent outbreaks after the entry of nine Negroes into the formerly all-white school.

Mr. Eisenhower indicated in his withdrawal announcement, made today, that return of the troops will depend on whether state and local authorities support federal court orders for integration.

The President's press secretary, James C. Hagerty, was asked whether he could say that troops would not be sent back. He refused to go beyond the President's statement.

"I think it is quite clear where the responsibility lies. We will just have to wait and see," he said.

At Little Rock, Gov. Orval Faubus commented that state and local authorities are charged with enforcement of state and local laws and ordinances and not with enforcement of federal laws and orders.

He told reporters he was saying this merely as a statement of fact and did not consider it an invitation to Arkansas to disobey federal laws or orders.

Faubus also said that the withdrawal, "if carried out," would mark the end of a tragic occurrence. Later he said he expects the withdrawal to take place, but would not speculate on whether the troops will be sent back.

Last September the governor stationed units of the Arkansas National Guard at Central High. He said his intention was to preserve law and order; the effect was to keep out the nine Negroes seeking to transfer there from a Negro school.

1,000 Sent In

A short time later, under federal court order, Faubus removed the guard. Violence broke out and the Negroes were removed from the classrooms. Eisenhower thereupon federalized about 10,000 of the National Guardsmen and sent in 1,000 paratroopers from the regular Army.

As things quieted, the soldiers on duty here have been steadily diminished.

The Army has estimated the cost of the operation from the beginning to the end of the fiscal year next June 30 at about $3,693,000.

There are eight Negroes still in Central High; one was expelled.

Daisy Bates of Little Rock, Negro woman who heads the Arkansas branch of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and who has been a spokesman for the Negro pupils, said that as far as she knows none of the eight plans to attend summer classes at the school.

Eisenhower's use of troops was widely applauded by the NAACP and other critics of racial segregation; it aroused a storm of protest in the South.

Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark) said today that it was "a grave mistake to send them there and it is to be devoutly hoped that the mistake will never be repeated by this or any administration."

Sen. Fulbright (D-Ark) commented: "I have every confidence the local authorities in Little Rock will be able to preserve order in the community if they have the cooperation of federal and state officials."

President Orders Troops Out of Little Rock May 29

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8—President Eisenhower directed today that Arkansas National Guardsmen at Little Rock Central High School be removed when the school term ends in three weeks.

The President's statement strongly implied that Federal troops would be back in Little Rock next fall if state and local authorities do not prevent obstruction of school integration.

In Little Rock Governor Orval E. Faubus made a statement suggesting no change in his position. Governor Faubus posted the Arkansas Guard around Central High School last Sept. 3 with orders to keep out nine Negro children who were prepared to enter under a Federal court order. He said that he had acted to prevent violence.

Repeated negotiations did not move Governor Faubus from his refusal to use his powers to help enforce the Federal court orders. On Sept. 24 President Eisenhower sent in 1,000 Regular Army paratroopers and ordered 10,000 Arkansas Guardsmen into Federal service.

Statement Is Blunt

The White House statement today was brief and blunt. The President said:

"Since last September the Federal Government has stationed soldiers at the Little Rock high school to prevent obstruction of the orders of the United States District Court.

"Since the summer recess starts at the Central High School on May 28, and since there will be no further present need for guardsmen, I have directed that they be released on May 29.

"Following that date I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the Federal Court are not obstructed. The faithful execution of this responsibility will make it unnecessary for the Federal Government to act further to preserve the integrity of our judicial processes."

400 Guardsmen Remain

About 400 National Guardsmen remain on duty at Central High. They will automatically be restored to the state guard.

When the Little Rock crisis arose, President Eisenhower's first reaction was to ask for moderation and understanding. He told a news conference on the day that the Negro children were first excluded from the school:

"You cannot change people's hearts merely by laws."

The Justice Department began an investigation by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation the next day, Sept. 4. It acted at the request of the President and of the Federal judge sitting in the case, Ronald N. Davies.

On Sept. 5, from vacation headquarters in Newport, R. I., the President warned Governor Faubus that he woud use all his legal powers to uphold the Constitution.

On Sept. 8 Governor Faubus said that the Federal Government, not he, would have to yield. The next day Judge Davies asked the Justice Department to enter the lawsuit formally as a friend of the court and to seek an injunction against the Governor.

A hearing on the court move was set for Sept. 20.

Conference at Newport

On Sept. 14 Governor Faubus flew to Newport to meet the President. The conference ended with vague statements indicating some kind of agreement. But White House hopes that Governor Faubus would allow the Negro children to enter the high school came to nothing.

On Sept. 20 Judge Davies enjoined Governor Faubus from using troops to obstruct enforcement of the court's order to begin schoo integration. The Governor promptly withdrew the troops.

The following Monday morning, Sept. 23, the nine Negro children entered Central High School. But a violent, howling mob forced htem to leave.

The President issued a proclamation calling on the mob to disperse. The next day he took the step the Federal Government had ben trying to avoid—the dispatch of troops.

Even then, hope remained for some kind of agreement with Governor Faubus that would permit withdrawal of Federal forces.

That hope ended after a meeting of four Southern Governors with General Eisenhower Oct. 1. They worked out an agreement that they thought Governor Faubus had promised to support. But a statement he made was regarded by the White House as a violation of the agreement and it broke down.

Little Rock Not Surprised

By JOHN N. POPHAM
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, May 8—President Eisenhower's order brought no surprise or sense of urgency here today.

It had been widely assumed that when the school term ended there would be no reason for posting troops at the building and vicinity.

More than anything else, the President's action emphasized here the importance of the Democratic gubernatorial primary July 29, in which Governor Faubus is one of four contestants.

The prevailing opinion is that a Faubus victory would constitute a rallying point for Southern segregationists. It would also be expected to insure the Governor's likely adherence to the course he chose last September for meeting the admission of Negro students to Central High.

Governor Faubus is still regarded as a strong favorite to win a third term. However, some observers say that he is no longer a heavy odds-on favorite.

Troopers Missing From Central High

Absent For One Day In Test Withdrawal

LITTLE ROCK, April 26.—(AP)—Federal troops were absent from Central High School during class hours Thursday for the first time since the 2,000 pupil school was integrated last Sept. 25.

The Arkansas Military District revealed the temporary withdrawal and said it was part of the military policy to restore normalcy at the school as soon as possible.

A token force of soldiers was back in the halls Friday.

The Army said, however, that there may be further unannounced test withdrawals in the 23 days before Central dismisses for the summer May 28.

A military spokesman said there were no racial incidents while the soldiers were gone. There have been no reported incidents at the school for more than a month. Eight Negroes attend Central with about 2,000 whites.

Troops, either state or Federal, have been at Central most of the time since Sept. 2, when Gov. Orval Faubus ordered the National Guard to prevent integration there. Soldiers were absent for about three days between the time Gov. Faubus withdrew the Guard and when the school was integrated under guard of the 101st Airborne Division.

In November, the task of maintaining order was turned over to federalized Arkansas guardsmen and a token force—about a dozen men—has since been on duty during class hours.

scene last September of violent outbreaks after the entry of nine Negroes into the formerly all-white school.

Eisenhower indicated in his withdrawal announcement, made Thursday, that return of the troops will depend on whether state and local authorities support federal court orders for integration.

The Withdrawing Federal Troops From Little Rock

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower has ordered the withdrawal, at least for the summer recess, of all federal troops stationed in Little Rock to enforce school segregation.

About 400 are still on duty at the city's Central High School.

President issues statement—

U. S. soldiers ordered to leave Little Rock

WASHINGTON, May 8—(AP)—President Eisenhower today ordered withdrawal May 29 of all federal troops enforcing school intergration at Little Rock, Ark.

The president said in a statement he hopes it will be unnecessary to return the troops at the start of the school year next September.

EISENHOWER'S orders on withdrawal were relayed by Secretary of the Army Brucker to Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, commander of the troops which have been enforcing a court order for integration at Little Rock's Central High School since last September.

EISENHOWER'S statement said:

"Since last September the federal government has stationed soldiers at the Little Rock high school to prevent obstruction of the orders of the U. S. District Court.

"Since the Summer recess starts at the Central High School on May 28 and since there will be no further present need for the Guardsmen, I have directed they be released May 29.

"Following that date I trust state and local officials and citizens will assume full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the federal court are not obstructed.

"The faithful execution of the responsibility will make it unnecessary for the federal government to preserve the integrity of our judicial processes."

AT LITTLE ROCK, Asst. Adjutant General William C. Page said a few over 400 officers and men still were federalized in connection with the integration controversy.

May 28 is the last day of classes at Central High and other public schools in Little Rock. Graduation exercises will be held at Central High May 27.

White House Press Secretary James Hagerty told newsmen he had checked and had learned there had been no consultation with Faubus.

Hagerty also was asked whether he could say definitely that federal troops would not be sent back into Little Rock when Central High School opens for the fall term.

He replied that he was not going to attempt to project beyond the language of the president's statement.

"I think it is quite clear where the responsibility lies," the press secretary said, adding:

"We will just have to wait and see."

EISENHOWER ORDERED regular Army troops and federalized National Guardsmen into the area after outbreaks of violence at the high school when Negro students attempted to attend classes.

The president said at the time he was acting to preserve the integrity of the district court's attempt to uphold a 1954 Supreme Court ruling against race segregation in the public schools.

Asked whether Eisenhower's action today was taken after consultation with Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus, Hagerty replied, "Not that I know of."

Faubus ordered Arkansas National Guardsmen to Central High School last September. He said he did so to preserve law and order. The effect was to bar Negroes from the high school.

LATER FAUBUS traveled to Eisenhower's vacation headquarters at Newport, R. I., for a conference with the president. There were indications after that meeting an agreement on how to handle the situation had been reached.

But if there was such an agreement, it collapsed.

The president reportedly was under the impression the troops Faubus had ordered to the high school would be withdrawn shortly, but that did not happen.

A few days later the president federalized the Arkansas National Guard—which took the Guard from control of Faubus—and ordered that unit, plus Army regulars, to duty at the high school to enforce integration.

Although there have been racial incidents at the school since that time, there has been no marked violence and some Negro students have continued to attend classes.

AT LITTLE ROCK Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas branch of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and a spokesman for the Negro students attending Central High, said she had no comment on the president's order.

She said that as far as she knew none of the Negroes planned to attend the Summer session which will be held at the school.

Mrs. Bates said she didn't want to comment on the troop withdrawal order "because everytime I say something, rocks are thrown at my house."

She said rocks had been hurled at her residence three times in the past week, always from an automobile speeding by the house late at night.

Mrs. Bates said a barrage of rocks was thrown on her front porch last night and a window was broken. She reported that incident to police but said she didn't bother to tell them about similar rock throwings Tuesday night and last Saturday night.

Withdrawal Of Troops For Day Seen As Test Of Temper At Little Rock

We interpret the removal of troops last Thursday from Central High School in Little Rock as a test of the temper of the people over integration.

On the day the soldiers stayed home, nothing happened. For that we are thankful. We do not approve of tormenting the eight colored pupils who were forced by their elders into an embarrassing position for the sake of politics. We do not believe, however, that the public should gauge the depth of this problem by the amount of classroom violence, or the lack of it, that occurs when the troops depart. Whether the troops are present, and whether turmoil or peace prevails, racial mixing is against the interests of both races and lacks the sanction of the vast majority of Southerners.

When reporters asked military officials at Little Rock about the future disposition of troops, a spokesman referred further questions to the Pentagon. By the time our comment appears in print, further news may be released. In the absence of it at this writing, we must assume that the U.S. government is adopting a policy popularly known as "playing by ear." By that we mean that no plan exists, except as improvised to cope with events.

It becomes more obvious daily that the U.S. government has a bear by the tail at Little Rock. It would like to let go the bear. Especially, we suspect, it would like to remove troops before the end of school — and before the primary election in which Gov. Orval Faubus is a candidate to succeed himself.

If the government could point to a few peaceful days at Central High School, it might say that the dire consequences predicted by Gov. Faubus were pure fabrication. Should our reasoning be correct, partisans of Gov. Faubus might be tempted to stir up trouble in the classrooms to prove their point. In other words, we suspect that the old game of politics still is being played with school children's affairs. And that is the thing we resent most about the whole fiasco of Little Rock. Meddlers have interfered with peaceful race conditions for the sake of national ballyhoo.

Not long ago a respected Little Rock businessman proposed to a large group of Negro leaders a compromise plan to ease out of a bad situation. The Negroes turned down the proposal on the ground they did not want to lose their "gains." We can see nothing gainful about the use of troops to enforce mixing. Nor would we see gains in continuing the mixing after the troops have gone.

We suspect that permanent removal of the troops would result in gradual, and we hope peaceful, "de-integration" of Central High School —meaning a return to sound and sane educational principles. Whatever the outcome, we hope the government learns a more important lesson than anything to be taught this year at Central High School: Save U.S. bayonets for enemies of the country.

BROTHER CHIDES 'IKE' ON LITTLE ROCK CASE

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn Sat 2-22-58

Edgar Blames Poor Advice For Troop Order

ATLANTA, Feb. 21. — (AP)— Edgar N. Eisenhower says he believes his brother, President Eisenhower received some poor legal advice when he ordered Federal troops to Little Rock.

The President's brother, a Tacoma Attorney, is in Atlanta attending the convention of the American Bar Association.

In an interview Thursday he was asked if he thought the President did wrong in the troop episode.

"I'll just say he got some bad legal advice," Mr. Eisenhower said.

A question about "states' rights" launched the attorney into a fervent plea for a return of powers to the states.

"It's a sad thing that the Federal Government has taken away so many of the states' powers," he said. "I would certainly like to see us make an effort to get them back."

On a number of occasions, he said, President Eisenhower has expressed the opinion that certain rights and responsibilities should be returned to the states.

He was asked how to reconcile that with forced integration of Little Rock schools.

"It is a little hard to understand," he said. "The authority for enforcing a court decree rests with the Federal marshals, not troops," he added.

"I'd never have sent troops in unless the local authorities requested it."

At Thomasville, Ga., where he is vacationing, the President laughed off his brother's remarks, Press Secretary James C. Hagerty reported.

Last year Edgar criticized the Administration's spending budget as too large. At that time the President laughed and said only that Edgar had been criticizing him since they were small boys

President Misled on Use Of Troops, Edgar Says

Sat 2-22-58

ATLANTA, Feb. 21 (AP)— Edgar N. Eisenhower says he believes his brother, President Eisenhower, received some poor legal advice when he ordered Federal troops to Little Rock.

The President's brother, a Tacoma attorney, is in Atlanta attending the convention of the American Bar Association.

In an interview today with the Atlanta Journal he was asked if he thought the President was wrong in the troop episode.

"I'll just say he got some bad legal advice," Mr. Eisenhower said.

States' Rights Plea

A question about "States' rights" launched the attorney into a fervent plea for a return of powers to the States.

"It's a sad thing that the Federal Government has taken away so many of the States' powers," he said.

"I would certainly like to see us make an effort to get them back."

On a number of occasions, he said, President Eisenhower has expressed the opinion that certain rights and responsibilities should be returned to the States.

He was asked how to reconcile that with forced integration of Little Rock schools.

"It is a little hard to understand," he said.

Takes Part in Seminar

"The authority for enforcing a court degree rests with the Federal marshals, not troops," he added. "I'd never have sent troops in unless the local authorities requested it."

Mr. Eisenhower is a member of the American Bar Association committee on unauthorized practice of law. He took part in a seminar on the subject yesterday.

Last year, Edgar caused a stir by criticizing the budget that the President submitted to Congress. Edgar said it was too big, particualrly in view of the fact that everybody is crying for economy."

Asked about Edgar's statement, the President told a news conference with good humor:

"Edgar has been criticizing me since I was five years old."

Wed 2-26-58

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25 (AP)— Asst. Atty. Gen. W. Wilson White testified today the President has power to send troops into a state whenever resistance to a federal court order is "of such magnitude that state forces are powerless, or are not being used, to prevent a breakdown of law and order."

He maintained this position at a Senate Judiciary Cmmittee meeting in the face of sharp contrast by Southern members of the legality of President Eisenhower's dispatch of Army paratroopers to Little Rock, Ark., last September, in the row over court-ordered integration of Central High School there.

Sen. Langer (R-ND) joined the Southerners in questioning Eisenhower's constitutional or legal authority for the use of troops. Langer said the President acted on "very, very poor advice" in the school integration crisis.

Southern senators referred to "occupation" by federal troops and Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-SC) compared the situation to "fighting the Civil War over again."

Johnston said that "the President can take over everything in a state" if he has the power attributed to him by White to use federal troops.

"If there weren't any race issue in this, I'd take the same position," said Johnston, who declared he was interested in protecting individual rights and the rights of the states.

White, a Philadelphia lawyer, went before the committee for a second hearing on his nomination to be an assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's new Civil Rights division.

He already is serving under a recess appointment made last fall but his nomination, submitted Jan. 13, is subject to Senate confirmation.

Wed 2-26-58

The committee will hold still another hearing on the nomination at a date to be announced later by Chairman Eastland (D-Miss). Sens. McClellan (D-Ark) and Hennings (D-Mo) were among committee members who said they wanted White to return for further questioning.

White, questioned by McClellan, testified he knew of no plan to withdraw the federalized National Guardsmen who still are on duty at Central High School under Army command.

He also said that he hoped troops won't have to be sent to the school again next fall when it reopens but that he didn't know whether or not this would be done.

"Who would know?" asked Mc-

Ike's Little Rock Move Right, Dixiecrats Told

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA)— Under a grilling by Southern Senators, W. Wilson White of Philadelphia Tuesday held to his opinion that President Eisenhower, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, had authority to send Federal troops to Little Rock, Ark.

He further had the power to Federalize the Arkansas National Guard to enforce school integration, stated White, whom President Eisenhower has nominated to be the assistant attorney general in charge of the new Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department, held.

White drafted the proclamation President Eisenhower issued last Sept. 23 calling upon all persons engaged in the obstruction of justice in Little Rock to cease and desist and "to disperse forthwith."

SEN. SAM J. ERVIN then asked Mr. White a series of questions about specific statutes, designed to get from him an admission that none of them authorized the President to use Federal troops and the National Guard of any state to enforce court orders.

Mr. White insisted that the President had not used the armed forces to enforce the order of Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies for desegregation of Central High School.

He had done so to prevent a breakdown of law and order after the local authorities were unable to cope with mob action in Little Rock, Mr. White said.

* * *

HE MAINTAINED that there was ample authority for his action in both the Constitution and the Federal statutes, but declined to elaborate because the question is pending an appeal.

The appeal has been taken from the order issued by Judge Davies enjoining Governor Faubus and others from obstructing the carrying out of his order for desegregation of Central High School.

Senator Ervin asked Mr. White if he recognized that the United States marshal could have deputized every able-bodied man in the Federal judicial district to enforce the order.

* * *

MR WHITE replied that no marshals were out to try to break up the mob that had gathered.

He also told Senator Ervin that it was not quite accurate to say that an FBI report on conditions in Little Rock was never made public or available to Governor Faubus.

Mr. White said Judge Davis called upon the United States Attorney to make an investigation and to advise him as to the obstruction of his decree so that he could determine whether to take further action.

The only report Judge Davis received, he said, was the one he requested.

* * *

MR. WHITE also called incorrect a report Senator Ervin said he had read that counsel for Governor Faubus was not permitted to cross examine witnesses.

At the opening of court counsel for Governor Faubus, he explained, presented certain motions to dismiss the suit. After Judge Davies denied those motions, Mr. White said, counsel for Faubus announced they were leaving and would take no further part in the case.

IN A NUTSHELL

W. Wilson White, nominated by President Eisenhower as assistant attorney general for the new Civil Rights Division, faces hearing on his fitness.

Here he tells Sen. Sam J. Ervin (Dem., N.C.) he believes the President was right (constitutionally and legally) in sending troops to Little Rock, Ark.

out he wanted them to know that the hearing would go on, Mr. White explained.

* * *

THE BIG difference between Senator Ervin and Mr. White concerned the meaning of the term "laws of the United States." Senator Erwin contended that only laws enacted by Congress and treaties are "laws of the United States."

Mr. White insisted that court decrees also are laws of the United States. In addition to statutory power, he said he also believes there is constitutional power residing in the President.

He may use military forces when obstruction hinders the enforcement of the laws of the United States, and the term "laws of the United States" is broad enough to cover court decisions.

The hearing was continued for a week at the request of Sen. Olin D. Johnston (Dem., S.C.), who said he had been sick and unable to study the matter and that he probably would like to question Mr. White.

LITTLE ROCK LEADERS COOL TO 'IKE'S' IDEA

President Hopeful That Local Authorities Can Keep Order In School

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 15.— Little Rock officials reacted without enthusiasm Wednesday to a statement President Eisenhower made regarding the possibility of local authorities taking over soon in enforcing integration at Central High School.

The President in a morning press conference in Washington said he hoped Little Rock officials soon would be able to notify him they can maintain order. The President said if such notification were given, all troops could be removed from the school.

430 On School Duty

Four hundred and thirty "Federalized" Arkansas National Guardsmen still are being retained to enforce order at the school where nine Negro students entered under military protection in late September. The cost of keeping the Guardsmen on integration duty is about $100,000 a month.

The President was asked if he had had any word from Gov. Orval Faubus about local officials assuming control. He replied, "No, No," and added: "I don't know that the state office is the one responsible for the police duties and peace and order in the city. I think it probably belongs to the locality."

Mayor Sees No Change

Acting Mayor Werner C. Knoop, w hoheads the recently-installed City Manager Board of Directors, sai dhe hadn't been contacted by anyone in Washington on the subject.

"However, I see little change today from the situation as it exi s t e d last fall," said Mr. Knoop. He was referring to the opening of classes in September.

In September, Little Rock police battled mobs at Central High School for about two days ,and had to use all available men to keep what order they could before Federal troops were sent in. City police were used between the time Gov. Orval Faubus, under a Federal injunction, withdrew Arkansas Guardsmen and President Eisenhower ordered Federal troops rushed here.

"Of course, we're always ready to do what we can to maintain order," said acting Police Chief Gene Smith.

'Not Our Responsibility'

"But I don't think it's our responsibility to maintain order in the halls inside the school. That's up to school officials or others involved. If they think they have to have someone inside the school all the time, then I believe they ought to keep the soldiers here," he said.

Chief Smith declined comment when asked if he thought the situation had eased enough to permit soldiers to be removed without a resumption of disorders.

One school official, commenting anonymously, said the situation inside the school "isn't improving any." He said the board had failed to get "public support from responsible groups" in carrying out integration as decreed by a Federal court order.

Governor Faubus, vacationing in Arizona, was unavailable for comment, but Arnold Sikes, his executive secretary, said the Governor had received no communications from Washington on the dispute and has not changed his stand on the matter.

Further Resistance Urged

The Governor has expressed unwillingness to use National Guard troops to enforce an integration decree, and also has said he thinks troops will be needed at Central High so long as the Negro students remain in classes there.

The principal organized opposition to integration here has come from the Capital Citizens Council and the Mothers League of Central High. The council held its annual meeting Wednesday night, and heard several speakers urge continued resistance.

Roy V. Harris of Augusta, Ga., publisher and segregation leader, told the Citizens Council that "Little Rock has 'Ike' over a barrel."

"If the people of Little Rock stand pat and he is forced to keep troops here from now on, he soon will be the laughing stock of the nation and the world," declared Mr. Harris.

Mr. Harris appeared here last August with Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia at a Citizens Council rally. Some of his remarks at that time, along with those of Governor Griffin, were attributed by leaders here as having helped stir up the demonstrations against integrated classes at Central High.

Also present Wednesday night were Robert P. Patterson, executive secretary of the Citizens Councils of Mississippi, and John U. Barr, Louisiana segregationist.

Mr. Patterson declared that Little Rock had become a "battle cry" throughout the nation and had proved that "forced integration is impractical if not impossible."

NEGRO CASE UNDER STUDY

Three White Students Are Suspended 3 Days from Little Rock High School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 17 (AP)—Three white students were suspended from Central High School today for three days. The Little Rock School Board met later to decide whether to suspend permanently a Negro girl in a previous case.

The board held a closed hearing to act on Supt. Virgil Blossom's recommendation that Minniejean Brown be suspended for the remainder of this term.

The 16-year-old Negro girl and her parents testified at the hearing. As they walked out Minniejean told newsmen: "I don't know any more than I did when I went inside."

Blossom never has disclosed why Minniejean was suspended.

The Negro girl has maintained she was suspended for calling a white girl "white trash." Minniejean said the girl was harassing her.

Minniejean now is under a two-week suspension imposed by Blossom. The white girl's parents have withdrawn their daughter from Central High.

Shortly before the board met, Blossom disclosed three white students had been suspended—Howard Cooper, Billy Ferguson and Sammie Dean Parker.

Cooper was suspended for wearing a printed card with the words: "One down, eight to go."

The reference obviously was to Minniejean Brown. If she is suspended for the semester, eight Negroes would remain at Central.

Sammie Dean Parker was suspended for passing out the bill-fold-type cards. She is one of the segregationist students who recently told newsmen she had a change of heart and would not actively try to stop integration.

All the whites drew automatic three-day suspensions.

School Allows Return Of Girl in Little Rock

By the United Press.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 12.—A 16-year-old white girl, expelled from integrated Central High School for pro-segregation activities, won school board approval to return to classes today.

As a result a lawsuit brought by the father of the girl, Sammie Dean Parker, against the board has been dismissed by Little Rock Chancery Court.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said last night that the Parker girl had asked reinstatement and it had been approved by the school board.

She was expelled once for two weeks in connection with distribution of cards which read: "One down—eight to go." The cards referred to the expulsion of Minnijean Brown, one of the Negro students.

Last week the Parker girl was expelled for the semester. School officials charged that she and her mother had physically attacked a woman staff member.

INTEGRATION COSTS
LITTLE ROCK

To Integrate Cost Five Million Bucks

WASHINGTON (INS)—The Defense Department estimated today that the cost of enforcing integratiton at Central High School in Little Rock Ark. will be five million dollars or more when troops are finally withdrawn.

President Eisenhower yesterday ordered withdrawal of federalized national guardsmen from the school on May 29, the day after summer vacation begins. He expressed hope that military enforcement of federal court decrees against racial segregation in public schools will never again be necessary.

Figures released after hearings before the House Military Appropriations subcommittee showed that about $3,000,000 of the total cost will include normal expenses of the active Army troops used.

Air Force costs are not included since they are listed as "normal" expenses. They were informally estimated at $432,712.

The chief executive federalized the Arkansas National Guard and Air National Guard on Sept. 24, 1957, when racial violence erupted at the school. He also dispatched 1,000 Regular Army paratroopers shortly afterward.

Total cost of the operation from Sept. 24, to Feb. 28, 1958 was estimated at $4,542,478. Military personnel accounted for $4,093,007 and operation and maintenance costs were $449,471. Army figures estimate the cost for the fiscal year ending June 30 at $5,000,000.

Most of the costs were incurred in September and October, 1957, and were greatly lessened as active Army and National Guard units were released. They dwindled from 9,581 on Sept. 30, to 445 on Feb. 28, with only a handful still remaining.

In his statement the President said he trusted that state and local officials and citizens "will assume their full responsibility and duty" for seeing that the federal court orders are not obstructed after the May 29 release date.

Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus is appealing the federal district court order requiring the previously all-white institution to open its doors to Negro students. He is slated to win an unprecedented third term. Faubus' resistance to the integration order was a key issue in his renomination campaign.

SOUP DUMPED

News In Brief

Little Rock Soup

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 16 (UP)—A 16-year-old Central High School student dumped a bowl of soup on a Negro girl student at lunch today. He said the girl had called him "white trash."

The student, a junior, was identified by his sister-in-law and guardian, Mrs. Thomas Sontag, as David Sontag.

There was no official statement disclosing which of the nine Negro students in the school was the victim of the bowl of soup. Students leaving the building said it was Minnie Brown, who was suspended just before the Christmas holidays for dumping a bowl of chili on two white students.

The Brown girl left the building shortly before 2 p.m., books under arm, but refused to answer questions.

Supt. Virgil T. Blossom confirmed "a food-throwing incident" but refused to reveal the names of the students.

Soup Dumped On Negro Girl By Little Rock White Youth

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 16.—A 16-year-old white boy dumped a tray of food, including a boul of soup on one of nine Negro students attending integrated Central High School during the lunch hour Thursday.

Reports from inside the school said the Negro student involved was Minnie Jean Brown, who was suspended just before the Christmas holidays for throwing a bowl of chili on two white boys in the school cafeteria.

The white student involved in the Thursday incident was identified as David Sontag, a junior.

Minnie Jean Brown left the building at 3 p.m. but refused to answer questions. School officials were also mum on the subject except to verify the occurrence.

Says Girl Insulted Him

Young Sontag's sister-in-law, Mrs. Thomas Sontag, said the Negro girl called David "white trash" Wednesday, and the boy told her he did nothing at the time because "guards were breathing down my neck."

One unidentified student said the Negro girl "just sat there after she got the soup poured on her, and the whole cafeteria cheered."

Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said she was not surprised at the incident. She said she had heard certain white students were planning a "chili day" as a protest against attendance of the Negro students.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom would confirm only the incident, not the students involved. He said the incident occurred about 1:20 p.m. during the third lunch-hour shift, and that he had asked for a full report from Central High Principal Jess W. Matthews. Mr. Matthews wasn't available for comment.

Second Incident In Week

Mr. Blossom said he didn't know yet whether a suspension of either or both of the students would be ordered.

It was the second incident in a week. Friday, 17-year-old Darlene Holloway, daughter of Mrs. Fred Gist, was suspended after a shoving incident between her and a Negro girl student.

Mrs. Gist declared Wednesday she planned to go to court if necessary to force reinstatement of her daughter. Mr. Blossom said Mrs. Gist hadn't conferred with him Thursday, but that he was still willing to talk with her about a reinstatement at any time.

School policy calls for an automatic [illegible] absence from classes, once a suspension order is issued. For reinstatement, parents of pupils involved must confer with the school superintendent.

Patrol Policy Changed

Meanwhile, the Arkansas Military District announced that the 25 or 30 soldiers stationed daily at the school no longer will walk "fixed posts." Instead, an Army spokesman said they will be used as roving patrols in the school area. Soldiers will continue to be stationed inside the school building, he said.

"There is no change in the number of men on duty, only a change in the methods of patrolling," he explained.

Heretofore, the federalized National Guardsmen being used for guard duty at the school have been walking a fixed post or route around the school, in pairs. The spokesman said the Guardsmen stationed outside will use jeeps and work as "roving patrols."

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 16.—(AP) — Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) said Thursday the Little Rock situation is still too unstable ot permit withdrawdrawal of federalized National Guard troops.

"I'm convinced that the school board won't request withdrawal until it's obvious that things are back to normal. They wouldn't take a chance," he added.

He declined to say what steps might be necessary before normal conditions again prevail. Mr. Hays was here to address the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary commencement in his capacity as president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

He said he feels most Little Rock citizens would accept a gradual plan of integration now in effect, although he made it clear that, if given their own choice, the people "would prefer to live by the old pattern."

SEGREGATION LAWYER PLANS LEGAL ACTION

Fight On Little Rock School Board Hinted

BLOSSOM ALSO INVOLVED

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 22. — Segregationist attorney Amis Guthridge said Saturday he plans to "demand" Monday that Pros. Atty. Frank Holt file legal complaints against the Little Rock School Board for its refusal to reinstate two suspended white students at an early date.

Mr. Guthridge said he plans to take witnesses with him Monday morning to Mr. Holt's office "to present evidence" to the prosecuting attorney.

The evidence, he added, will be offered to back up a demand he plans to make that charges of malfeasance and nonfeasance be filed against the board and also school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom.

Warns Of Action

The Citizens Council attorney had earlier indicated that if Sammie Dean Parker and Howard Cooper weren't reinstated at once he would take legal action against school officials.

The board in a Friday night hearing, suspended the two until March 3. That amounted to a two-weeks suspension, since both had been held out of classes all this week.

The two students were given disciplinary action because school officials said they had distributed cards Monday bearing the lettering "one down . . . eight to go." That was a reference to the expulsion of Negro student Minniejean Brown, which left eight Negro students attending classes.

If Mr. Holt grants the "demand," Mr. Guthridge said the filing of charges would "automatically" remove the school officials from office until a hearing or later ruling reinstated them. However, Mr. Holt first would have to file the charges, he added.

Another Bomb Scare

Meanwhile, Minniejean Brown left Little Rock Saturday morning to attend a New York school but not before another "bomb scare" had occurred this time in connection with the plane on which she left.

Airport officials here said the plane which carried her and her mother was delayed on its departure flight for about 40 minutes, following an anonymous telephone call to the American Airlines reservation office.

Robert Bibby, district sales manager of the Little Rock office, described it as a "bomb hoax," the first the office here had ever experienced. Airline officials and Little Rock detectives searched the plane but found nothing.

Company officials reported that firecrackers were found in one passengers' luggage. The unidentified passenger said that he was a salesman returning from a meeting where he used the firecrackers "to wake up anybody who fell asleep." He was allowed to keep them.

Gets Send-off

The Negro girl was given a send-off by about 75 Negroes, including the eight remaining Negro students at Central High. She was expelled by the board following several incidents involving her during the school year, and early this week was offered a $1,050 scholarship to the New Lincoln School in New York.

She promised that she "will be back next year" to re-enter school in Little Rock.

The Negro girl, who claimed she was expelled largely because she refused to be "humble" to white students, was wiping tears from her eyes as she entered the plane. She claimed in an angry statement about a week ago that school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom had recommended her expulsion because she had broken a "condition" imposed on her when she was reinstated after the Christmas holidays from a previous suspension.

The condition was, she claimed, that she not "retaliate" to harassment, but leave incidents for school officials to handle.

Called Troublemaker

Some white students have claimed the Negro girl was a "troublemaker."

Board officials have steadfastly refused to discuss details of any incidents or reasons back of disciplinary actions, except with parents.

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—(AP)—Minniejean Brown, 16-year-old Negro girl expelled from integrated Central High School in Little Rock, arrived Saturday to enroll in a private inter-racial school.

Asked about incidents in Little Rock, Minniejean commented:

"This is all in the past. I'd like to forget it. My education is the important thing."

She was greeted at La Guardia Field by several Negro girls about her age who pinned pink orchids on her coat. She was accompanied by her mother.

School Board Files Petition In U. S. Court

Delay Is Requested 'In The Light Of Existing Conditions'

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 20 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board late today petitioned U. S. District Court for a stay of an order integrating Central High School.

Grady Miller, clerk of the court, said the petition was filed a few minutes before his office closed.

The petition, signed by all members of the school board and Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, said in part:

"Petitioners ask that the plan of integration heretofore ordered by this court be realistically reconsidered in the light of existing conditions and that in the interests of all pupils the beginning date of integration be postponed until such time as the concept of 'all deliberate speed' can be clearly defined and effective legal procedures can be obtained which will enable the district to integrate without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

Miller said he telephoned Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies, who retains jurisdiction in the integration case, at Davies' home in Fargo, N. D.

Davies told Miller that he would confer with Judge Arch Gardner of Huron, S. D., chief judge of the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, before making a statement on the petition.

SIGNIFICANCE IS SEEN IN NEW SCHOOL SUIT

Little Rock Board's Petition Raises New Issue

COULD SLOW UP MIXING

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 25.—The Little Rock School Board's latest suit in the Central High School integration controversy was viewed Tuesday as 'most significant.'

R. B. McCulloch Sr., Forrest City attorney, said the School Board's petition for a court review and reversal of the integration order raises a new issue in litigation in the fourth year of the integration controversy.

Only One Side So Far

Mr. McCulloch said for the first time a Federal court has been asked to apply what might be called the "other course" outlined in the Supreme Court's 1955 decree on how to accomplish integration.

"The court in its decree of 1955 said in effect if an integration plan isn't working out right, a district court not only has jurisdiction to speed up the schedule but also to slow it down."

Up to now, he added, Federal courts apparently have considered only the question of speeding up an integration order. District courts have the same authority to slow down an integration plan, he emphasized.

Helped Draft Laws

"And there is no question in my mind but what the Federal court here has good cause to take testimony and modify its integration ruling affecting Central High, in the light of what has happened here since last September," he said.

Mr. McCulloch has kept abreast of most top legal developments or decisions on integration in the South since the Supreme Court issued its 1954 ruling outlawing segregated classes. He helped draft the segregation legislation which the 1957 General Assembly adopted, and currently is attorney for the State Sovereignty Commission.

LITTLE ROCK LEADERS URGE SCHOOL BOARD SEEK COURT REVIEW

24-Member Civic Group Has Studied Plan Since Last Year

BLOSSOM BACKS IDEA

Federal Court May Be Asked Stay Of Compliance With Schedule Of Integration —Faubus Likes Statement

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 19.—The Little Rock School Board may ask Federal Court for a review of the school integration situation here in light of numerous incidents involving white and Negro students.

A source close to the board indicated late Wednesday it may act "soon" upon a recommendation made earlier in the day by a group of business and civic leaders that the courts be asked "for a stay of compliance with the adopted schedule of integration."

Organized Last Year

The 24-member civic group, which was organized late last year to make a study of the integration situation, said that "in the light of our experiences of the past several months," the school board's integration plan should have further court review.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, who received a copy of the businessmen's statement, said he could see "nothing wrong" with the suggestion for a court review, and that he thought the group had taken a "positive" approach to the problem in conducting a lengthy study.

School board chairman Wayne Upton said he also had received a copy of the statement, but declined immediate comment. He said the board might have a statement "in a day or two."

Davies Gave Order

The board is under orders from Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N. D., to carry out its "gradual" integration plan "forthwith." Judge Davies, who served here last fall in filling a court vacancy and who caught most of the litigation during the height of the integration controversy, said before he left late last year for his home district, that he would retain jurisdiction of the Little Rock integration dispute.

Judge Davies also has enjoined Gov. Orval Faubus from further "interference" with the integration order, and in the hearings which developed last year criticized a school board petition for delay as "anemic."

If the board goes into court again, however, it will have some five or six months of unrest inside the school to which it can refer in arguing for a court review or delay of the integration plan.

Faubus Approves

Gov. Orval Faubus, informed of the businessmen's letter to the board, said its contents "sound pretty much in conformity with what I have urged in the past."

"I think it's a very good statement," he said.

The statement was signed by Walter C. Guy, a printing company executive here who heads the 24-member group. The group is made up of some of Little Rock's most influential business and civic leaders.

Mr. Guy said the committee would not disclose a report it has prepared, but that the letter to the board represented a "summary" of the group's findings on an integration study it has conducted.

He said the businessmen, who at one time had sought to act as "mediator" between Governor

Faubus and other interests in seeking a settlement of the integration dispute had explored this difficult situation at state and national levels."

The Little Rock school board and local citizenry also had been consulted, he said.

Letter Quoted

The letter said in part:

"Our efforts have been directed toward seeking a solution to the problem that would restore normal conditions at the earliest possible date. We have endeavored to approach thep roblem from an impersonal, non-political, legal, and nonpartisan basis.

"We believe in government of law and order and in the use of democratic legal processes for the settlement of existing differences on the subject of segregation and integration. We find that a great many of our citizens, even though they believe in law and order and democratic legal processes, are not satisfied that all the legal avenues open to us have been fully explored, especially in light of our experiences of the past several months.

"We feel that the most logical avenue of relief is in the courts and that our school board should again go into Federal court with a petition asking for a stay of compliance with the adopted schedule of integration. In making its appeal to the Federal court for relief, the committee feels that the attorneys for the school board should make every effort to develop its case fully, contemplating possible appeal should the decision be adverse in the lower court."

LITTLE ROCK'S BOARD ASKS FEDERAL COURT TO RESCIND ITS ORDER

Request To Stay Integration Follows Action By 24 Civic Leaders

Petition Cites Race Incidents At Central High Despite Presence Of Federal Troops At School

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 20.—The Little Rock school board late Thursday asked the Federal Court to rescind its previous order of integration of Central High School.

The petition, filed in the district court clerk's office here about 4:20 Thursday afternoon, was signed by all school board members and School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom. A. F. House, the board attorney, filed the petition with Federal Court Clerk Grady Miller.

Followed Letter

The petition followed by about 24 hours the release of a letter by a group of Little Rock businessmen asking that the school board go into court again to ask for a "stay" of the integration order.

It also followed some five or six months of unrest and racial incidents which have occurred periodically inside Central High School since integrated classes started.

If the board's order receives a favorable Federal Court ruling, the eight Negro students now at Central would presumably be reassigned to the all-Negro Horace Mann School.

Under Davies' Order

The board is under orders issued by Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies on Sept. 4 to carry out its "gradual" plan of integration. The Fargo, N.D., judge also issued a Sept. 20 order enjoining Gov. Orval Faubus and the Arkansas National Guard from further "interference" with integrated classes at Central High School.

The board request, if granted, would overthrow or supersede both those orders.

Judge Davies was informed of the board's action at his Fargo home by Federal Court Clerk Grady Miller. Mr. Miller said Judge Davies told him he would confer with Judge Arch Gardner, chief judge of the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, before making a statement.

New Appointment Due

Reports circulated here and in Washington Thursday that a new Fereral judge for the Eastern Arkansas District, which includes Little Rock, will be nominated next week by President Eisenhower.

If such is the case, it is considered likely that the new judge would assume jurisdiction of the integration case here. The judgeshi phas been vacant since the retirement of Judge Thomas Trimble last June.

Many Republican attorneys in the state have been mentioned as possible choices for the judgeship. Prominently mentioned at various times during the past year have been Osro Cobb, now United States Attorney in the Eastern District, and Smith Henley, an Arkansas attorney with the Justice Department in Washington.

The school board said in its petition that despite Federal troops having been sent to Central High School, the Federal Government itself had done little to enforce the integration order.

"The district, in its respect for the law of the land, is left standing alone, the victim of extraordinary opposition on the part of the state government and apathy on the part of the Federal Government," the board argued.

The board asked that the court's earlier integration orders be "realistically reconsidered in the light of existing conditions and that in the interest of all pupils the beginning date of integration be postponed until such time as the concept of 'all deliberate speed' can be clearly defined."

Postponement Asked

The petition further asked that integration be postponed until "effective legal procedures can be obtained which will enable the district to integrate without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

The five-page petition cited unrest and incidents which have occurred at the school, the latest of which was suspension of three white students last week and expulsion of Minnie Jean Brown—one of the original nine Negro students—from the school.

The board claimed that "a small group, with the encouragement of certain adults," has succeeded in making a school program "exceedingly difficult for teachers to teach and for pupils to learn."

It also claimed that the Federal Government itself "apparently is powerless to enforce compliance with this court's order of integration," a reference to incidents having continued despite having Federal troops inside and outside the school.

"Federal officials have not applied penal sanctions to any of the persons who formed into groups near the school grounds, defied this court's order, and interferred with the plan of integration therein specified," the petition said.

District Unaided

"The judicial branch of the Federal Government has not aided the district by preventing or attempting to prevent interfeernce with the plan . . . (and) there has been no effort on the part of the Congress of the United States to strengthen old, or provide new, judicial procedures which will guarantee enforcement of the civil rights of the Negro minority," the petition added.

Board members are Wayne Upton, chairman, Dr. William G. Cooper, Harold Engstrond, Dr. Dale Alford, Henry Rath and R. A. Lile.

AWARDS- To;- NINE STUDENTS
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Negro Students To Get Awards

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 24 (AP) —The American Veterans Committee (AVC), a national organization, will present Americanism Awards next Sunday to the nine Negro students attending integrated Central High School here.

Presentation will be made at Little Rock's Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The AVC presents the awards annually to persons who in the opinion of the organization have made significant contributions to democracy.

In the past, AVC awards have been presented to Bernard Baruch, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Gen. Omar Bradley, Adlai E. Stevenson, Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan and Dr. Ralph Bunche.

Little Rock Students Among Russwurm Winners of 1958

Seven persons, one group and two organizations have been named winners of the 1958 Russwurm Awards, given annually by the National Newspaper Publishers association.

The citation states these awards are presented "in recognition of outstanding achievement in making possible a richer conception of democratic principles and in tribute for upholding those highest traditions considered as the ideals of the American way of life."

Included among this year's winners are the nine Negro students assigned to Central high school in Little Rock, Ark., "who braved violence, scorn, harrassment and insults to bake a living reality of the Supreme Court's desegregation order."

Five white and two colored individuals were cited. The National Broadcasting company and Religious Drawings, Inc. of Waco, Texas were the two organizations. Three women were among those named.

The winners, determined in a poll of member publishers, were announced by Frank L. Stanley, publisher of the Louisville Defender, and chairman of the association's public relations committee.

The complete list follows:

Miss Marian Anderson, for her memorable tour of the Far East and her convincing championing of the ideals of democracy.

Mrs. Sarah Patton Boyle, of Charlottesville, Virginia, who, since she came to realize that the "way of life" she inherited from a long line of Southern forebears was incompatible with her concepts of justice and Christianity, has worked tirelessly for understanding and tolerance throughout the state that would lead the South in defying the law of the land.

Dave Garroway, for his effective use of the medium of television to combat intolerance and bigotry.

Harry Golden, of Charlotte, N. C., publisher of the Carolina Israelite, whose sense of humor makes his sense of fair play a mighty weapon in his continuing battle against hypocrisy and intolerance.

Dr. Clarence Jordan, leader of Koinonia Farm in Georgia, who carried on there an experiment in Christian living notwithstanding violence and theats.

Negro Girl's Ouster Criticized by Faubus

By the Associated Press.

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 19.—Gov. Orval Faubus said today that Minnie Jean Brown should have been permitted to return to all-Negro Horace Mann High School here instead of being expelled from the Little Rock public school system.

The girl was expelled by the school board Monday from integrated Central High School as a result of racial incidents.

Gov. Faubus said that if Minnie Jean "preferred to go to New York, that is different. She probably had no choice because the school board expelled her from the entire Little Rock school system."

The girl's mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, confirmed today her

Negro youths held in cursing case

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 14—(AP)—Police picked up four Negro teen-agers yesterday after getting a report that rocks were thrown and curses shouted at Sammie Dean Parker, 16-year-old white girl expelled from integrated Central High School and later reinstated.

Officials said Mrs. J. D. Parker, the girl's mother, reported several Negroes yelled insults and hurled rocks at Sammie Dean as she approached her home after school.

Three girls and a boy were picked up in the vicinity of the Parker home and later were turned over to their parents, police said. No charges were filed.

Sammie Dean was not injured.

WARD OPPOSES STAND OF FAUBUS ON SCHOOL

Would End Defiance Of 'Ike' And High Court

MAY RUN FOR GOVERNOR

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau.

LITTLE ROCK, March 21. — Chancellor Lee Ward of Paragould, rumored as a gubernatorial candidate, declared Friday that if he were governor he would remove Federal troops from Central High School simply "by enforcing the law" of the United States.

"All the President has ever asked has been a pledge from the governor that he would maintain law and order in Arkansas. I would not defy an order of any United States Court," said the East Arkansas chancellor.

Opposed Faubus Stand

The statement put him in almost direct opposition to the stand Gov. Orval Faubus has taken on the Central High issue. Governor Faubus defied the Central High integration order last fall and also refused to go along with a suggested compromise by President Eisenhower that troops would be withdrawn if the Governor would agree to maintain law and order and not interfere with Federal integration orders.

Chancellor Ward was interviewed after speculation that he was thinking of entering this year's gubernatorial race. He said he was giving "very serious thought" to it and would have a definite decision "within 10 days or two weeks."

Chancellor Ward in a speech last August at Arkansas State College said he disagreed with the United States Supreme Court's desegregation ruling, but believed even more strongly the law should be followed even by those who disagree with it.

He said Friday if he runs, the integration question undoubtedly will be an issue and he is "ready to let my views on that be known." He said there were also other issues, in his opinion, and expressed eight others to an inquiring reporter.

Issues Are Set Forth

They ranged from tighter divorce laws to indirect criticism of Governor Faubus on his tax program.

He said that while he would follow the court ruling in the Little Rock school integration case, he favored giving local school districts the right to set their own policies on integration.

He said he has advocated amending the Federal Constitution to let each local school district vote its own wishes as to whether racially-mixed schools should be maintained, he said. Chancellor Ward added that if he were elected governor, he would:

Stop the "open and notorious dominance of the governor's office by a certain utility." He didn't name the utility.

Stop the waste of tax money.

Recommend adoption of a more severe drunken driver law, making a jail sentence mandatory for first conviction and second and subsequent convictions a felony.

Increase the minimum residence requirement for an Arkansas divorce from 90 days to a year and end "the idea that Arkansas is a Mecca for outsiders in obtaining divorces."

Other Issues Given

Stop the governor's office giving "encouragement" to spreading horse and dog race tracks in the state.

Sponsor legislation that additional tax programs should be referred to the people.

Stop activities of "irresponsible and fly-by-night insurance companies who are taking advantage of policyholders, particularly old people."

He ran third in a three-way race for the Arkansas Supreme Court in the 1956 election. He's a past state commander of the American Legion.

Governor Faubus, contacted in Booneville, said he wasn't surprised at speculation on Chancellor Ward.

"I know some of the people who have been to see a number of the candidates also have been to see him.

"Whoever they get into the race isn't going to change my plans," the Governor added.

Little Rock troop issue in 2 months

ST. LOUIS (NNPA)—A three-judge District Court Tuesday heard oral arguments in three cases appealed from decisions rendered last fall by Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies involving racial integration at Central High School in Little Rock.

After a day of argument, the judges took the cases under advisement. Opinions will be handed down at an indefinite future date, probably within two months.

Questions upon which the court must rule deal with the action of President Eisenhower in sending Federal troops to Little Rock to enforce a Federal court injunction ordering compliance with a racial integration plan adopted by the Little Rock Board of Education.

They also include the legality of an injunction issued by Judge Davies barring Gov. Orval Faubus from using the Arkansas National Guard to prevent nine colored children from attending Central High School and another injunction, also issued by Judge Davies, restraining enforcement of an Arkansas state court order forbidding integration.

Kenneth Coffelt appeared as counsel for Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of a segregationist mother's group, who sued in behalf of her two daughters and as a "citizen, taxpayer and patron" of the Little Rock school district.

After the suit was filed, however, the two pupils withdrew from Central and the record of their credits was sent to the Mabelvale (Ark.) High School.

Mrs. Jackson challenged the constitutionality of the acts of Congress pursuant to which troops were kept in the area of Central to enforce riders of the Federal District Court for the removal of obstructions to justice with respect to attendance of colored students at the high school.

DONALD B. MacGUINEAS, an attorney from the Justice Department in Washington, representing the U.S. Attorney General, replied that the term "laws" as used in the Constitution should be broadly interpreted to mean the general body of U.S. law, including court decisions, rather than restricted to statutory enactments.

Little Rock Expulsion Laid to Girl's Attack

By the United Press.

LITTLE ROCK, March 5.—The Little Rock School Board has charged the white girl expelled from Central High School and her mother "physically attacked" a woman staff member.

The girl, Sammie Dean Parker, 16, claimed on a television program last night that the school had never given her "any good reason" for expelling her Friday.

She also accused national guardsmen who patrolled the integrated school, of following her "up to the restroom door" and also asking for dates.

The school board replied "She was suspended for the remainder of the current school year following a series of events culminating in a physical attack by her and her mother on a woman staff member. The board feels this suspension was fully justified."

Earlier the girl had been given a two-week suspension after school officials said she distributed cards which read "One down—eight to go." The cards referred to the expulsion of Minnijean Brown, one of the nine Negroes who integrated Central under paratrooper protection Sept. 25.

LEADER WARNS OF SCHOOL BLOW

Arkansan's Racial Harmony Plan Rejected

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Segregationists must consider authority of courts or "we can only wait . . . for the next blow to strike," the author of a plan to restore racial harmony in Arkansas said Wednesday.

Herbert Thomas Sr., Little Rock insurance executive, made the statement to business, church and civic leaders from a number of Arkansas cities.

He submitted his plan to the state board of education here Monday. It would create a state interracial commission to advice individual school districts on the speed of desegregation. The process would be voluntary.

PLAN 'UNACCEPTABLE'

Both segregationist and integrationist spokesmen have said the "state plan of voluntary progress" is not acceptable to them.

On Monday, Thomas said, "I was speaking to the Negro race, letting them know that the problem is no easy one, that there is no fast solution."

Wednesday, he said, he was talking to segregationists "in terms of practical applications of the law."

"If there be in majority those who will concede no right of progress to members of the Negro race, then my efforts are in vain.

'CAN ONLY WAIT'

"If that be the attitude we can only wait with a feeling of uneasiness for the next blow to strike — not knowing when or where it will fall."

Discussing separate but equal facilities Thomas said:

"In my opinion had the South accepted the spirit of the law of separate but equal facilities . . . the principle of segregation could have been maintained in our public schools for an indefinite future and with an attendant spirit of good feeling between the races.

"Instead we adopted a passive resistance to that principle of law and we found that passive resistance did not pay . . .

"But despite our sad experience in that regard we are once again inclined toward passive resistance to the supreme court."

UNEMPLOYMENT BILL GIVEN HIGH PRIORITY

Mills' Committee Will Start Work After Holidays

LITTLE ROCK, April 6.—(AP)—The House Ways and Means committee will start work on an unemployment compensation bill immediately after the Easter holidays, Representative Wilbur Mills (D., Ark.) said here Saturday night.

Mr. Mills, chairman of the committee, arrived in Little Rock by air on the way to his home at Kensett.

He said the Democratic Party had instructed him to produce some kind of unemployment compensation measure as quickly as possible.

"The committee will go into executive session April 15," Mr. Mills said, "and it probably will be several days before we reach a decision."

He wouldn't speculate as to what form the measure would take.

President Eisenhower supports a temporary extension of unemployment benefits for jobless workers who exhaust their benefits under state laws. Recently he conferred with a committee of state governors, including Orval Faubus of Arkansas, on the extension of such benefits as an anti-recession measure.

Little Rock Incidents Snarl Gears In School Integration

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 3.—Has the school integration movement in Arkansas been brought to a standstill by the Central High integration controversy?

Figures in a summary of the state's integration status disclosed Thursday by the State Education Department, strongly suggest it has.

The report made no conclusions, but noted that the department doesn't know of an instance where schools, other than those where integration is in effect, are planning racially mixed classes next fall.

That's in contrast to a steadily-expanding integration movement in the state at the end of school last spring.

Delay At Pine Bluff

The report noted that the Pine Bluff School Board has rescinded plans to start integration on the first-grade level. Plans had called for Pine Bluff to integrate next September but the board announce dlast week it was postponing those plans in the light of developments at Central High School.

Litigation by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to force retention of the plan appears to be the next step at Pine Bluff.

The education department also note dthat although a Federal Court has requested the Bearden School District to develop an integration plan, nothing further has developed.

Education Commissioner Arch Ford, commenting on the report, said it shows that integration in some form is in effect in eight Arkansas schools, all of which had previously been reported in recent years. They are, in addition to Central High, schools at Fayetteville, Charleston, Hoxie, Fort Smith, Van Buren, Bentonville and Hot Springs.

Numbers Vary Widely

The number of Negroes attending schools with whites ranged from one at Fort Smith to 25 at Van Buren. Charleston, first school in Arkansas to be integrated, was listed as having 20 negroes out of 610 pupils.

Hoxie, only East Arkansas District to integrate, was listed with 20 Negroes when integration started there two years ago.

The number of Negroes has decreased about 50 per cent since integration was started, the report said.

The report said of next school year:

"The Department of Education has no knowledge of specific plans which have been approved by local boards for integration of the races in 1958-59 . . . It is probable that we would be aware of plans of local boards in this delicate area if such plans were in the making."

Board To Get Report

The report will be available to to the State Board of Education when it meets here Monday to confer with a Little Rock businessman, Herbert Thomas, on a "harmony" plan of integration for the state.

Mr. Thomas has asked the conference, but hasn't disclosed what his proposal will be. Mr. Ford said he wasn't familiar with details of what the insurance executive will present.

Gov. Orval Faubus earlier disclosed there was a "harmony" plan being discussed, that Mr. Thomas had conferred with him on it, but that he knows little about it.

Meanwhile, what of the situation at Central High?

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, recently urged Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker to provide more protection for Negro students inside the school, a plea he renewed Monday in New York.

Wilkins statement, indicating Negroes still were undergoing harassment from white students, contrasts sharply with an apparent marked decline in racial incidents at the school.

Central High Quiet

As of Thursday, there had been no reported incidents at the school in about six weeks. Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said none had been called to his attention, and that if there had been any, he would have made them public to newsmen. School Board Chairman Wayne Upton also said incidents had declined.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, Negro head of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP here, contended "harassment is still going on."

She said Negro students had reported to her that "a huge rock" was thrown at one of them "just a few days ago." She said Wilkins was getting much of his information from her on conditions inside the school and contended he was justified in asking increased troop protection.

Rock Hurled In Building

She said the rock was thrown at the Negro boy as he was standing near a locker in the school building.

A white student interviewed said he hadn't heard of any rock-throwing incident. He contended "things are just as quiet now as they were last year, before this integration thing ever came up."

Some officials lay the Central High "calm" to the fact that the school year is nearing an end and students are intent on making passing grades, also on the fact that the Little Rock School Board has asked Federal Court for a review and reversal of the integration order.

No hearing date has been set on the petition. Some spokesmen claim the suit has resulted in a "wait-and-see" attitude on the part of agitators and their parents.

Segregation Plan Author Warns Against Passiveness

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Segregationists must consider authority of courts or "we can only wait. . .for the next blow to strike," the author of a plan to restore racial harmony in Arkansas said Wednesday.

Herbert Thomas Sr., a Little Rock insurance executive, made the statement to business, church and civic leaders from a number of Arkansas cities.

He submitted his plan to the state Board of Education here Monday. It would create a state interracial commission to advise individual school districts on the speed of desegregation. The process would be voluntary.

PLAN SCORED

Both segregationist and integrationist spokesmen have said the "state plan of voluntary progress" is not acceptable to them.

Monday, Thomas said:

"I was speaking to the Negro race, letting them know that the problem is no easy one, that there is no fast solution."

Today, he said, he was talking to segregationists "in terms of practical applications of the law."

"If there be in majority those who will concede no right of progress to members of the Negro race then my efforts are in vain.

"If that be the attitude we can only wait with a feeling of uneasiness for the next blow to strike — not knowing when or where it will fall."

HITS PASSIVENESS

Discussing separate but equal facilities Thomas said:

"In my opinion had the South accepted the spirit of the law of separate but equal facilities. . . the principle of segregation could have been maintained in our public schools for an indefinite future and with an attendant spirit of good feeling between the races.

"Instead we adopted a passive resistance to that principle of law and we found that passive resistance did not pay. . .

"But despite our sad experience in that regard we are once again inclined toward passive resistance to the Supreme Court."

Joshua K. Shepherd of Little Rock, who sat at the spaker's table with Thomas, said copies of Thomas' speech Monday had been sent to 200 ministers in Arkansas

The ministers have been asked to explain and discuss the Thomas plan with community leaders, Shepherd said.

INTEGRATION DELAY REVERSED BY COURT

Little Rock Integration Delay Killed By Court

Arkansas Senators Take Dark View Of Decision

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Court of Appeals decision overruling a district court and ordering resumption of integration at Little Rock Central High School was described as a tragic and unhappy one Monday by Arkansas' Democratic senators.

Sen. John L. McClellan told reporters:

"It is rather tragic that the Circuit Court of Appeals has wholly disregarded the welfare of both races, and the will of the people in overruling the decision of the district court.

"It has substituted its judgment without exercising due respect for the equities and justice of the situation that prevails and the conditions that have been brought about in Little Rock, by reason, first, of the erroneous and unjust decision of the Supreme Court, and second, by the unwise, indiscreet and illegal actions that have been perpetrated against the Little Rock community."

Sen. J. William Fulbright, in a separate interview, declared:

"I deeply regret the court's decision. It presents the people of Arkansas with a very unhappy situation, and I am very unhappy about it."

Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark.), who represents the Little Rock district, said he hoped that a solution will be found.

"It seems to me," he said, "that under the 1955 decision the Supreme Court recognized the importance of allowing the judges closest to the situation the discretion of determining the time element.

"It is regrettable that the Court of Appeals overruled the findings in this case. It poses a difficult problem for the school board and the community leadership, but their resources are great and we can hope that a solution will be found."

Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga) called the court's decision unrealistic and unfortunate.

"The judges apparently felt that integration was much more important than education, despite the grim lesson of Little Rock that you can't have both there," Russell said.

All of the wisdom of all of the judges involved cannot possibly provide education for the 2,000 students in a school occupied by troops."

Sen. Clifford Case (R-NJ), an advocate of civil rights legislation, said "I hope the law abiding citizens of Little Rock will give active support to those who now have the responsibility of carrying out the court's decision."

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif), commented that the appeals court's decision "points up more than ever the need for the President to announce to the country what his policy is going to be on enforcing the law of the land in Little Rock and everywhere else."

There was no immediate comment from the Department of Justice.

Faubus Expected To Call Legislature Into Session

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus, closeted Monday night with advisors, is expected to issue a call Monday for a special session of the Legislature to deal with the prospect of a renewed integration crisis here when school opens Sept. 2.

The governor has not been available to reporters since the announcement that the 2½-year delay in integration had been set aside by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Faubus probably will have the lawmakers in Little Rock by Wednesday of next week, an administration source said.

Time is a big factor if the lawmakers hope to devise legislative means to prevent resumption of integration at Central High School two weeks from now.

Eight Negroes attended the entire last term after federal troops swept away opposition and maintained patrols at the school until classes were over in June. One of them, Ernest Green, graduated and received a Central High diploma. All of the undergraduates said they expected to return to Central Sept. 2.

What could the lawmakers do in the face of federal opposition and federal court orders for integration to proceed?

One source said Faubus has a plan in mind that "is not like that of any other state." He declined to spell it out saying "that is the governor's prerogative."

To a reporter's question of whether it would involve closing public schools, he said "only under certain conditions."

Presumably the condition would be intervention by federal troops such as were sent to Central High by President Eisenhower last September when Negroes were denied admittance and a mob rioted when they tried to enter.

It was apparent to most lawmakers that the Little Rock school board's announced intention to appeal Monday's ruling to the U.S. Supreme Court would not alter conditions before Sept. 2.

Supt. Virgil Blossom noted that he could not foretell whether an appeal could reach the now recessed high court before October.

Legislators contacted were reluctant to comment on possible legislation. Several of them said they doubted that legislation would be designed to close public schools and have them operate as private institutions, although one said he personally would favor it.

Schools Aid Bill Readied For Vote

WASHINGTON (AP) The House Rules Committee Monday cleared the way for the House to vote on getting together with the Senate on federal aid to education legislation.

Under the procedure, the House can debate for an hour and then vote on sending its bill to a House-Senate conference committee. The motion would carry by a majority vote.

The House passed a $910,000,000 blueprint of aid, minus scholarships. The Senate passed a similar measure, including scholarships, that would cost $1,300,000,000.

High Court Next Step, Says Board

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Monday set aside a district judge's order suspending integration in the Little Rock Central High School for 2½ years.

The 6-1 decision came just 16 days before the scheduled reopening Sept. 2 of the school where integration was ordered by troops last year.

The decision reversed the ruling of U.S. Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., who, at the school board's request, had suspended integration at Central to allow for a "cooling off period."

Only Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner of Huron, S.D., dissented in the case which the majority opinion pointed out could have far-reaching effect on school integration in the South.

PUBLIC RESISTANCE

Judge Marion C. Matthes of St. Louis, who wrote the majority opinion, said the issue boiled down to whether public resistance, including mob violence, constituted sufficient cause "to nullify an order of the federal court directing the (school) board to proceed with its integration plan."

"We say that the time has not yet come in these United States when an order of a federal court must be whittled away, watered down or shamefully withdrawn in the face of violent and unlawful acts of individual citizens . . ." Judge Matthes wrote.

Judge Gardner, at 90 the oldest active federal judge in the nation, said he felt the Little Rock school board had acted in good faith and that Judge Lemley had based his decision "on realities and conditions, rather than theories."

In Little Rock, Virgil Blossom, the superintendent of schools, called the appellate court's ruling a "disappointment," and added that from the first the school board had planned to appeal to the Supreme Court in event of a reversal.

The Supreme Court's regular term does not open until October, a month after the scheduled reopening of Central High School. The board could ask it or the appeals court for a stay of Monday's decision pending a review by the Supreme Court. If the stay is granted, Judge Lemley's order could continue in force after the start of the term.

The clerk of the appeals court will mail Judge Lemley a copy of Monday's opinion and it then becomes effective unless there is a stay.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus was closeted in Little Rock with advisers. He has not been available to reporters since the Lemley decision was set aside but sources close to him say he is expected to issue a call Tuesday for a special legislative session.

An administration source said he probably will have the legislators in Little Rock by Wednesday of next week. Time is a big factor if legislators hope to deal with the integration problem with new laws.

Judge Matthes said that delay of integration at the high school would amount to an "open invita-

Governor-nominate John Patterson declined to comment on the Little Rock decision until Tuesday "when I've had time to read the decision and see what they said." Contacted at his home late Monday night the attorney general said he had heard something about the decision but did not know enough about it at the time to comment.

tion" in other school districts to oppose integration with violence.

Judge Matthes, 52 and the youngest member of the court, was joined in the majority opinion by Joseph W. Woodrough of Omaha, John D. Sanborn of St. Paul, Harvey M. Johnsen of Hastings, Neb., Charles J. Vogel of Fargo, N.D., and Martin D. Van Oosterhout of Orange City, Iowa.

The ruling shifted the spotlight in the case back to Little Rock and to Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas. He has said he had an alternate plan in mind to fight integration if Judge Lemley's order was reversed.

On the eve of integration last year Faubus ordered out the Arkansas National Guard and told them to keep nine Negro students out of the high school. The nine had been selected for the start of what was called gradual integration of the Little Rock schools.

Faubus withdrew the Guard under orders of U. S. Dist. Judge Ronald A. Davies. Mob violence broke out at the school the next day and President Eisenhower sent federal troops to Little Rock to enforce the integration.

In all, the nine Negroes missed three weeks of classes. Since the integration began, one Negro was expelled and another was graduated last spring. Seven of the Negroes are eligible for the start of the fall term.

Faubus recently won the Democratic nomination for a third term. He called his overwhelming majority a mandate to continue his fight against integration. In Democratic Arkansas his renomination virtually means election.

At the time of the Lemley order, he said the Little Rock Negroes "would do well to accept" it. He termed the order "peaceful interlude."

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People immediately appealed the Lemley decision. It asked the Supreme Court to bypass the Court of Appeals here because of the fast approaching fall school term.

The Supreme Court refused but it did remind the appeals court of the need for haste. The decision came exactly two weeks after the court heard the arguments.

JUDGES SEE DIFFERENTLY

These two Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals judges wrote opposing opinions Monday as the court struck down a Little Rock integration suspension order. Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner, left, at 90 the oldest federal judge in the U.S., dissented from the majority opinion. Judge Martin C. Matthes wrote the majority opinion.—AP Wirephotos

LITTLE ROCK
VOTING SET SEPT.27,1958 ON RACIAL INTEGRATION

Voting Set Sept. 27 On Arkansas Mixing

By RELMAN MORIN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus Tuesday advanced by 10 days the date for a special school vote in Little Rock, but said the action was not taken because of any public clamor for reopening the high schools. In his announcement, he also lashed out at the school board for conducting what he called "a pressure campaign for integration."

Ten students came to Hall High in the morning, prepared, they said, to stage a sit-down protest against keeping the schools closed. They left when no others joined them.

Faubus set Sept. 27, instead of Oct. 7, as the date when Little Rock voters will cast ballots on whether they want to admit Negroes to the white high schools. Reporters asked whether he did this because he felt public sentiment to reopen the schools is increasing. He replied with a firm "No."

He said speedy action is necessary and that the September date permits using the current voters' lists. The voting period ends Oct. 1, whereafter new lists must be compiled and validated.

"The issue needs to be resolved as soon as possible so that we can find some means of educating the children," he said.

The referendum was authorized recently by a special session of the State Legislature. It is included in the bill giving Faubus the power to close the schools.

The ballots will read simply:

"For racial integration of all public schools within the Little Rock School District.

"Against racial integration of all public schools within the Little Rock School District."

Lawyers said they do not know what legal value the referendum will have, in view of the ruling last Friday by the U.S. Supreme Court denying further delay in permitting Negroes to enter the high schools.

They expect the government to challenge any effort by Faubus to reopen the schools on a segregated basis.

Faubus minimized the reports of growing opposition to the step he took when he closed the schools.

"I am aware of the opposition that I have always faced in this area," he said. It is no greater than usual, he said.

He hit out hard at the School Board.

"The Little Rock School Board is still working for integration just like they always have," he said.

"The board is using the children in its own pressure campaign in this cold war for integration."

It was "a cruel and unnecessary blow to the children," Faubus said.

No incidents were reported around the high schools on this second day of what would have been the regular fall term.

Rumors circulated that students and parents were organizing a demonstration to be held in the city's baseball stadium, but it did not materialize.

The school board called an afternoon press conference at which Supt. Virgil Blossom read a telegram sent Faubus.

It read: "Our sole motive in yesterday's action stopping extra-curricular activities (including football) at the Little Rock senior high schools was strict compliance with your proclamation closing the high schools which was presumed to close all activities.

". . . Will you please advise us immediately as to which high school activities you intended that your proclamation cover."

The board noted Faubus' blast at them regarding the halting of football, band and other extra-curricular activities.

Asked if there had been strong reaction to halting football, Blossom said "there has been reaction and disappointment just the same as there was at the closing of the schools."

Asked if a state of tension or feud existed between the school board and the governor, Blossom replied "not to my knowledge."

LITTLE ROCK
GOVERNOR FAUBUS ASKED SPECIAL SESSION OF LEGISLATURE TO GIVE HIM A LAW TO CLOSE ANY SCHOOL THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SEEKS TO INTEGRATE"BY FORCE

Faubus Asks Law To Close Schools

By BRYCE MILLER,
United Press International.

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 26.—Gov. Orval E. Faubus asked a special session of the Arkansas Legislature today to give him a law to close any school the federal government seeks to integrate by force.

He addressed a special session called specifically to prevent integration at Central High School if the Supreme Court insists on having Negroes attend it from the opening now postponed to Sept. 8.

He bitterly accused the federal courts of seeking forcible integration of white and Negro school children even if "a hundred people are slain in the streets or the corridor of a school."

He said Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies and the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals had put integration paramount to all other considerations.

Criticizes Court.

Gov. Faubus also criticized the U.S. Supreme Court which has been called into special session Thursday to hear arguments about setting aside a postponement of admission of Negroes to Central High.

He pointed out that a conference of the chief justices of the state supreme courts only last week warned that the Supreme Court has been usurping rights reserved to the states and "has been making hasty, impatient decisions without proper judicial restraint."

He also asked the legislature to provide for the calling of a state referendum within 30 days after the closing of Central or any other school.

Let People Decide.

"At the election, the people of the district may vote on the question of keeping the schools segregated or integrated," he said. "The election would be held in the usual manner by the same officials as would other state elections.

"If the people vote to integrate the school, it will be opened on an integrated basis, otherwise it will be kept closed and other provisions must be found for the education of the children who would otherwise attend such school."

Gov. Faubus also asked the legislature for measures to:

● Provide for the withholding of certain state funds from any schools closed under the provisions of the closure act. Each child's proportionate share of school funds would follow him to any other school in which he wished to enroll, public or private.

● Provide for the enrollment and attendance of a student in any other school in the same district or school in another district, under certain conditions.

● Provide that no student shall be refused the right to attend any public school because of his or her refusal to attend classes with a student of another race.

● Provide for an appropriation for the governor to carry out the program and to pay the expenses of any school district election he may call.

Also Asks Delay.

He asked finally for a law to postpone the opening date of "certain high schools," presumably Central, to Sept. 15.

The Arkansas Legislature met amid these other integration developments:

● In Richmond, Va., Gov. J. Lindsay Almond said he had received overwhelming favorable response to his statement that federal troops will patrol "empty schoolhouses" if they are used to enforce integration in Virginia.

● In North Carolina, the Charlotte school board rejected the 13 Negro pupils seeking admission to white or predominantly white schools for the fall term. It based its denial on the location of the Negro pupils' homes to the white schools in most cases and "the best interests of the students" in others.

● In Norfolk, Va., United States District Judge Walter E. Hoffman yesterday ordered the Norfolk School Board to reconsider all 151 of the Negro applications to white schools it rejected last week. The order put pressure on the school board to admit 12 to 30 Negroes to white schools next month or run the risk of a contempt citation.

● The Virginia State Pupil Placement Board at Richmond yesterday denied the applications of Negroes seeking entry at Arlington and Newport News.

● More than 100 Negro youths in Oklahoma City went into their third day of trying to break the color barrier at a department store luncheonette.

Gov. Faubus asked the legislature to provide for the closing of schools under three conditions:

The first would be to maintain the peace against "actual or impending violence" which endangers the citizens, students or teachers, and provide for the safety of building and property.

The second would be the ordering of a school to integrate by any court and the use of federal force on or about the school grounds to enforce the order.

The third would be the determination that "a general suitable and efficient educational system cannot be maintained in any school district because of the integration of the races."

Gov. Faubus spent almost half his nationally televised speech explaining his stand in the racial crisis.

"I do not challenge the right of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to attempt to bring about total and complete integration of the races," he said. "Regardless of whether good or bad for them, or others, they still have that right.

"My disagreement is with the methods now being employed and the unseemly haste that is being demanded."

In Race With Courts.

The lawmakers met in a race against time with the United States Supreme Court which has scheduled an emergency session at noon Thursday to hear oral arguments in the Little Rock crisis. Gov. Faubus hopes to have his legislative package enacted into law by Thursday morning.

Meanwhile, United Press International was informed by a reliable source the NAACP was "making a strong and determined effort" to have "quite a number of Negro students" appear at the school board offices this afternoon to attempt to enroll in Central. Three Negroes who graduated from junior high last year attempted to enroll yesterday, and "two more will definitely" try to enroll today, UPI was told.

Meet With Parents.

While Gov. Faubus addressed the legislature, School Superintendent Virgil Blossom met with Negro parents and several students who want to lower the racial barriers further at Central High.

Seven of the nine Negroes whose admission under court order touched off violence at Central last year, planned to return to Little Rock today and try to get back into Central. They received a $1000 scholarship from a national Negro Elks convention last night.

Gov. Almond said letters and telegrams since his statement last Thursday "demonstrate anew the feeling of the people of Virginia" on the segregation stand. He also said the responses "reaffirm at the grass roots the firm resolution of our people to live by the Constitution."

Gov. Almond said Thursday in a press conference there will be no enforced integration in Virginia, despite federal court desegregation orders against three localities—Arlington, Norfolk and Charlottesville.

A Virginia law enacted by the assembly this year would close any school patrolled by federal troops to enforce integration orders.

Faubus Has Measure to Shut Schools Drafts Bill As Integration Bar

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug 24 (AP).—Gov. Orval Faubus office today worked on legislation to close Central High School completely if Negro students are returned to its classrooms, either by court edict or by Federal force.

It was learned such a bill definitely will be submitted to the 126-man Arkansas State Legislature later in the week. Gov. Faubus yesterday summoned the legislators into emergency session on Tuesday at 11 a.m.

The Governor was in a weekend round of conferences with key state and legislative aids. Among those being contacted were members of the potent Pulaski County delegation, which includes eleven Senators and Representatives from Little Rock.

"No Troops, No Negroes"

Support of any bill the Governor offers the Legislature seemed assured. Attorney General Bruce Bennett predicted to a newsman: "Come Sept. 2 there will be no troops around the school and the seven Negroes will not be inside."

Gov. Faubus hopes special legislation will counter any last - minute Supreme Court mandate for the return of seven Negro pupils to Central High when it reopens. A year ago, when Negroes first entered, white rioting occurred and President Eisenhower sent Federal troops into this Southern capital.

Faubus Readies Bill to Shut School

From Our Wire Services

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 24—Gov. Orval Faubus' office today worked on legislation to close Central High School completely if Negro students are returned to its classrooms, either by court edict or by Federal force.

It was learned that such a bill definitely would be submitted to the 126-man Arkansas State Legislature later this week. Faubus yesterday summoned the legislators to an emergency session on Tuesday.

CONFERS WITH OFFICIALS

The Governor was in a weekend round of conferences with key State and legislative aides. Among those being contacted were members of the potent Pulaski county delegation, which includes 11 Senators and Representatives from Little Rock.

Support of any bill the Governor offers the Legislature seemed assured. Attorney General Bruce Bennett predicted to a newsman: "Come Sept. 2 there will be no troops around the school and the seven Negroes will not be inside."

Meanwhile, in Washington, Rep. Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) said the people of Little Rock would rather have their schools closed than face renewed anti-integration violence at Central High School.

Hays also said he believed Faubus would get a special session of the Arkansas Legis-lature to approve a new State law closing the schools to keep Negroes out of the classrooms.

AFRAID OF VIOLENCE

Hays said Little Rock citizens "are looking for every possible method to save their school system." But he added "they would rather see the schools closed than to have violence."

He said he assumed Faubus would ask for and get from the forthcoming special session of the Legislature a law requiring integrated schools to close. But he said he felt the people of Little Rock "ought to have a chance to express their will on that."

'BREATHER' NEEDED

Hays said in answer to questions on a television interview (CBS—Face of the Nation) that Little Rock needed a "breathing spell" to marshal its moral resources for a settlement of the school integration problem.

He said such a delay might be forthcoming Tuesday when Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Whittaker may rule on a petition by Negro students to remove barriers to their entering Central High School this fall.

Whittaker was asked to set aside an order by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals staying its previous order against segregation at Little Rock's Central High School. The delay would mean Negroes could not enter Central at the opening of the fall term.

HOPES TO BLOCK COURT

Faubus hopes special legislation will counter any last-minute Supreme Court mandate for the return of seven Negro pupils to Central High when it reopens Sept. 2. A year ago, when Negroes first entered, white rioting occurred and President Eisenhower sent Federal troops into this southern capital.

Faubus claims he repeatedly has been tipped off that the mood of local segregationists is even more violent this year than it was last.

3 Alternatives Are Outlined By Governor

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 19 (UPI)—Gov. Orval Faubus announced today that he will not intervene immediately in the new Little Rock integration crisis.

He said Little Rock School Board officials, NAACP leaders and Negro parents should try first to peacefully settle the crisis before the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals has refused an integration suspension.

"Any action taken by the chief executive, the Legislature or the people before the attitude of these people is known might prove to be premature and unnecessary," he said.

School Supt. Virgil E. Blossom called a meeting of the school board and its lawyers for tonight to "examine the governor's statement and decide what action it is possible to take."

He said he will answer questions Faubus raised and perhaps announce a plan of action "maybe before the week is out, but you understand I can't promise that."

Nine Negroes integrated Central High School last September after President Eisenhower sent in 1000 troops from the elite 101st Airborne Division to protect them from mobs of segregationists.

But last June 21, U. S. District Judge Harry Lemley granted Central a two-and-a-half year suspension of integration because of continued violence by white students inside the school through the 1957-1958 term.

The Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis reversed Judge Lemley yesterday. Faubus said today that this was "most regrettable."

"The higher court's decision indicates an indifference and disregard for the will of the people that is most alarming and dangerous," he said.

Faubus outlined three alternatives to action by himself and the Legislature:

—The school board can invoke the school assignment law, under which a student is allowed to change schools if he doesn't like the school nearest him.

—The school board can meet with parents of the Negroes who attended Central last year and with NAACP leaders. He said the board can discuss with the Negroes what an insistence on integration may bring about and the Negroes might withdraw the students from Central.

—"Failing in the above, the school board could resign . . . and allow the people to select a new board which would have the courage to act in conformity with their wishes."

In any case, he said, the situation requires immediate action, because the opening of Central High School is less than two weeks off. It opens Sept. 2.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas Chapter of the NAACP, would comment only on Faubus' suggestion of a meeting between the school board, NAACP leaders and Negro parents.

"As far as I am concerned, that is nothing more than an observation on the part of Mr. Faubus," she said. "As for the rest of it, no comment."

Richard C. Butler, a school board attorney, said it was still an unanswered question as to whether Negroes will attend Central this semester.

He said the school board won't know exactly where it stands until it receives a mandate from the appeals court's decision and that could take as long as 20 days.

Although Blossom said the school board will explore "every legal avenue, including appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court," experts in Washington said appeal, in itself, would not restore Judge Lemley's suspension order.

That, Washington experts said, would require a specific order by the Circuit Court of Appeals or by a supreme court justice, staying the circuit court's judgment.

Department of Justice sources indicated that the appeals court ruling opens the way for the Negroes to reenter school next month.

Faubus was expetced to call an immediate special session of the Legislature to draft anti-integration legislation. But he decided against it in a long conference with his advisers.

He read a long statement, containing his thoughts and suggestions on the situation, at a news conference and then told newsmen he hoped a special session would not be necessary at all.

Sixty repotrers and photographers, many just arrived from Northern and Eastern newspapers, attended Faubus' news conference. One man asked whether his statement was an appeal to moderation.

"I think that's possible," Faubus said.

He said he has not set an "actual date" at which he will step into the crisis, if the school board and Negro leaders don't act.

He refused to discuss whether he would call out the National Guard again, thus making himself liable to citation for contempt of Federal Court.

"AWAITS DEVELOPMENTS—Gov. Orval Faubus.

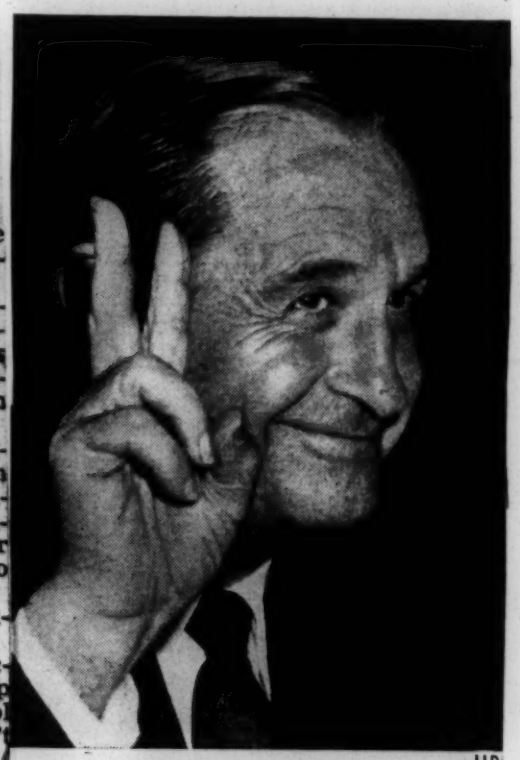
ARKANSAS

Turmoil Ahead

"Mr. Faubus has baldly drawn the line between defiance of the law and orderly adjustment of our difficulties," said the Arkansas Gazette two days before the Arkansas Democratic primary last week. "In effect, he is asking the people of Arkansas to endorse armed rebellion against the United States."

Orval Faubus got his endorsement. In a landslide that rattled the nation's teeth —much as they were rattled when the troops landed in Little Rock last September—Faubus won the primary, thus is slated to be the second man ever to spend three terms in the Arkansas Governor's chair. In a record turnout he defeated two opponents, won a historic 68% of the vote, carried every one of the 75 counties, from the rich, black Delta, heavily populated with Negroes, to the northwestern mountain counties, where Negroes make up only a tiny minority of the population.

As the returns cascaded into his headquarters in Little Rock's Marion Hotel,



UPI

DEMOCRAT FAUBUS
An endorsement of "bullet and bayonet."

Faubus paraded his pleasant smile before the Dixie-singing, button-wearing hundreds on hand to celebrate his certain victory. "Don't leave now, Governor," cried a hanger-on as Faubus started off to make a victory statement somewhere else. "Ike's on the phone." Faubus' cocky answer brought cackles and rebel yells out of the sultry night. "Tell him to call back later," he drawled.

Yankee Go Home. Orval Faubus' two opponents had tried first to run against the third-term issue, found that voters had accepted the calculated Faubus definition of the campaign: show the "outsiders," including President Eisenhower and "the Yankee press," that Arkansas does not want integrated schools. With the courage to win or lose on horse sense, Chancery Judge Lee Ward of Paragould (pop. 10,000) grimly contrasted his own law-and-order segregationism with the "bullet and bayonet approach" taken by Faubus. "Orval Faubus stands today on the brink of treason," said he in an election eve TV speech. "Is it war between Arkansas and the United States?" But early election night Judge Ward conceded, wished Faubus "and the people of Arkansas a happy and prosperous administration" and went back to his bench.

Around the South, politicians felt the rumbling landslide, scurried to get with it. Georgia's Governor Marvin Griffin, who had pushed Faubus toward making a big issue of integration at Central High School last fall, weighed in quickly with an expected telegram on the "splendid victory." Mississippi Democratic Chairman Bidwell Adams wired: "Northern Democratic leaders should scrape the wax out of their ears." Louisiana's Governor Earl Long thought it was "a pity there are not more people like him at the helms of government." Florida's LeRoy Collins saw the results as reflecting "overwhelming resentment" against federal troops; North Carolina's Luther Hodges said they were a measure of the "intensity of feeling" against Ike's dispatch of troops. Virginia's J. Lindsay Almond Jr., who may soon decide for law or violence in communities (at least three, one pending) facing school-integration orders effective next month, wired: "You have my cordial good wishes."

"A Pretty Good Governor." In Washington, Democrats, with one strike against them because they voted to water down the Administration's civil rights bill last year, were stunned into temporary silence by the realization that they would go into the fall and the 1960 campaigns with Orval Faubus around their necks. Finally, Democratic Chairman Paul Butler found his voice to deliver an odd defense of Faubus: "His election was not determined on the question of segregation as opposed to integration. The issue was largely on the use of troops in Little Rock. Further, without endorsing his action at all—actually I'm against everything he did in that instance—Governor Faubus has been a pretty good governor."

Faubus' landslide raised points far more serious than politics. A Federal Court of Appeals is reviewing Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley's decision to delay for 2½ years integration at Little Rock Central High; if the delay is refused, it will take a brave Negro to claim his rights at school's opening. Most Arkansans also expect trouble in the seven other communities that have already begun integration. In seven Southern states—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia—there is no integration at all, and the newly emboldened anti-integration forces are waiting to see the outcome of next month's tests of Virginia's "massive resistance" laws, designed to close public schools that obey a court order to integrate.

Summed up the Gazette's Executive Editor Harry Ashmore: "The moderate position formerly espoused by many Southern political leaders, and by this newspaper as a matter of principle, has been rejected by the mass of voters in this upper Southern state and is now clearly untenable for any man in public life anywhere in the region. A period of struggle and turmoil lies ahead."

Governor Faubus Loses Federal Court Battle

ST. LOUIS — The Federal Court of Appeals here strongly censured Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas for his segregation stand and calling out the National Guard to prevent nine Negro children from attending Central High school in Little Rock.

The three-judge court said:

"...An official whose duty it is to enforce the law" would actually be breaking the law he "is trying to enforce if he disregarded the law."

They ruled that under such a rule "the banks could be closed and emptied of their cash to prevent robberies and the citizens kept off the streets to prevent holdups."

The famed governer, who first came into the limelight when he instructed guardsmen to send the Negroes home in the face of "mob action," had appealed a federal district court injunction against interference with integration at the high school.

The appellate court also rejected appeals in two parallel cases in which the federal government's use of troops to enforce integration was challenged.

After Faubus had ordered the Arkansas National Guard to "keep peace" and segregation at Central High school, President Eisenhower federalized the guardsmen and sent U.S. Army paratroopers into the Arkansas capitol city.

Only eight of the original nine Negro students are still enrolled in the school. The ninth, Minnie Jean Brown, was expelled and is currently attending the New Lincoln school in New York City.

LET BALLOT DECIDE, FAUBUS TELLS GROUP

Says School Integration Is Local Issue

MAKE OWN DECISIONS

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 18. — Gov. Orval Faubus suggested Saturday that the Federal Government let the Little Rock integration controversy be decided "at the ballot box."

Blasting the continued use of Federal troops to enforce an integration decree at Central High School, the Governor said "the people of each area" should be allowed to make their own decisions regarding race-mixing in the public schools.

"There is a time-honored process of democracy through which the people decide for themselves such controversial issues. That is the exercise of the franchise at the ballot box. By such a method the people of each area could make their own decision.

"Such a method will be a new and untried approach to the problem," the Governor added.

Little Hope Is Held

At the same time, he held out little hope for a quick solution to the continuing controversy. He charged that the Federal Government had "usurped" states rights in the Little Rock incident, and would not easily be persuaded to surrender its "usurped powers."

The Governor did not specifically call for removal of Federal troops from the school, but he has criticized their use in previous statements and re-emphasized his views Saturday.

To leave the settlement of integration problems to local vote would be to "remove all fear of Federal coercion and military occupation," he said.

Governor Faubus spoke at the conclusion of the annual convention of the Independent Magazine Wholesalers Association of the South, which is made up of distributors from Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico.

Several Arkansas television stations carried his speech and two networks shot portions of it for possible national re-run Sunday night, it was announced.

Visit Not Mentioned

Several weeks ago the Governor said the speech probably would present some "new thoughts" on the integration question, and there also had been speculation he would discuss his visit with President Eisenhower last fall at Newport, R. I.

The Governor didn't mention the Newport visit, and most of his major points had been raised before. However, he did emphasize more heavily than before the states rights theme, and explained his role in the controversy as being neither segregationist nor integrationist, "but as a defender of democracy and our republican form of government."

An audience of about 200 gave the Governor brief applause at conclusion of his 30-minute speech.

The teachings of Jefferson, the Governor emphasized, are in direct contradiction to the actions of the Federal Government in the Little Rock dispute.

"The integration - segregation battle has been disproportionately publicized in this struggle between those who seek to set up an all powerful central government and those who seek to maintain constitutional government. There are other issues equally important which must be properly decided if we are to maintain the freedoms and the democratic processes under a republican form of government," the Governor declared.

Will Of Majority

"The will of the majority should prevail . . . The true barriers of our liberty in this country are our state governments.

"It is . . . clear that the founding fathers meant to forbid the use of Federal force within a state unless there was invasion, or conflict between the states. And even then troops were never to be quartered in a state, as they are now in Little Rock, without the consent of the Legislature or, as provided in the Arkansas constitution, the Governor when the Legislature was not in session.

The Governor said that, since he entered the controvery, he has read "dozens of legal documents, and thousands of opinions, suggestions and letters." Included, he said, were some writings of Justice William C. Douglas of the United States Supreme Court.

The governor said Justice Douglas, in a book he has written entitled, "The Right of the People," expresses disapproval of the use of military force in Little Rock, "even though it came about as a result of a Supreme Court decision in which he participated."

Viewed As Candidate

States rights will have to be regained "by an arounsed people through political action and by vote of their elected representatives in the Congress and the several legislatures," Governor Faubus declared.

Viewed generally as a third term candidate this summer, the Governor said he wanted to see a return to "majority rule" in this country, and "the power to govern to remain in the hands of the people."

"In these principles of government I have believed and do still believe. For them I have fought and for them I will continue to fight regardless of the outcome, and regardless of the consequences to my political fortunes," he said.

FAUBUS ASKS LOCAL HELM FOR SCHOOLS

Urges Handling Integration Issue At Ballot Box

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 18 (AP)—Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus suggested Saturday that the control of schools be handled on a local level through the ballot box. This was his "new thought" for solving the integration question.

PRESENTS IDEA—Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus suggested in a television address yesterday in Little Rock that the Government let people of each area decide integration problems at the ballot box.

"Such a plan would remove all fear of federal coercion and military occupation and restore to the people the basic right to govern themselves, as intended by Jefferson and the founding fathers," he said.

* * *

THE GOVERNOR, in effect, suggested that federal authority remove itself from the school question in favor of "a time-honored process of democracy through which the people decide for themselves such controversial issues."

The governor scorned those who he said simply criticize and add nothing to the solution.

"It may well be," he warned, "that the thunder of conflict from clouds darker than those at Little Rock will jar them to a realistic earth where, drenched in the rain of public disapproval, they will find how little they have done to help solve the problem.

"What good can possibly come from the political or literary crucifixion of a Southern governor or legislator . . . or of those who sincerely believe that segregation is in the best interest of both races and society at large?"

* * *

HE SAID such a method "will be a new and untried approach to the problem."

Faubus, addressing a convention of publishers representatives and magazine wholesalers, said an attempt had been made "to leave the impression that I have created opposition to integration. This is not true. Should I have never lived, or should I pass from the scene today, the opposition would be no less and the situation unchanged."

The governor said, "I have fought, not as a segregationist nor an integrationist, but as a defender of democracy and our republican form of government, as set out by the greatest document of our time, the Constitution."

Faubus Sees School Battle Just Part Of Vast Struggle

(Picture on Page 17)

By RICHARD T. ALLEN

The integration versus segregation battle in Little Rock is only one issue in the "greatest domestic struggle of our time," Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas said here yesterday.

The main issue, he declared, is a struggle between advocates of constitutional government and those who seek to establish an all-powerful, centralized government.

That is why he has fought the Federal Government in its so-far successful effort to enforce integration at Little Rock Central High School, he said.

'Affair Wasn't Planned'

"The Little Rock affair was not planned and it was not wanted," Governor Faubus told members of the Memphis Rotary Club at the Peabody. "There are those who have sought to leave the impression that I have created opposition to integration. This is not true. Should I have never lived, or should I pass from the scene today, the opposition would be no less and the situation unchanged.

"I have fought, not as a segregationist or an integrationist, but as a defender of democracy and our republican form of government as set out by the greatest document of our time—the Constitution."

More than 100 visitors from Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee joined the Memphis Rotarians in overflowing the hotel ballroom to hear Governor Faubus. More than 30 members of the Osceola, Ark., Rotary Club, which sponsored yesterday's program, attended.

Roundly Applauded

Governor Faubus, roundly applauded both before and after he spoke, was in a jovial mood and frequently referred to the tense Little Rock situation—which has put his name in headlines throughout the world—as "the Little Rock affair." He said "chance and circumstance cast me before the public eye."

"The integration - segregation battle has been disproportionately publicized. There are other issues equally important which must be properly decided if we are to maintain the freedoms and the democratic processes under a republican form of government."

Uppermost among the issues, he said, are states' rights.

Governor Faubus quoted at length from the writings of Thomas Jefferson and the principles of government advocated by him. He said Jefferson was a firm advocate of constitutional government and the right of the will of the majority to rule.

However, Governor Faubus said, there is more and more evidence toward consolidation of government. He cited various rulings of the United States Supreme Court which he said "struck down" laws of the various states.

Refers To Douglas' Views

Referring specifically to use of Federal troops to enforce integration at Little Rock, Governor Faubus commented on a recent book written by Justice William Douglas of the Supreme Court. He said Justice Douglas wrote that the military should be entrusted only with military tasks.

"But in Little Rock we had some experience with the military and the short cuts they use," he said. "The short cuts were taken with bayonets."

The Governor said the field of education was reserved to the states under the Constitution.

"Evidently there are those who do not wish to trust the states with this power, else there would not have occurred this unwarranted invasion of this fundamental state right. There was purpose in the Tenth Amendment which reads—'The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.'

"All power is derived from the people. Clearly, then, in a democracy, under the Constitution, the control of the schools can be safely delegated to the people. There is a time-honored process of democracy through which the people decide for themselves such controversial issues. That is the exercise of the franchise at the ballot box. By such a method the people of each area could make their own decision. Such a method will be a new and untried approach to the problem.

Would Remove Fear

"Such a plan would remove all fear of Federal coercion and military occupation and restore to the people the basic right to govern themselves.

The Governor had little comment on the siutation in Little Rock, where an uncapepd and unfused stick of dynamite was found in the basement of the school Monday.

He said use of Federal troops in Little Rock was clearly unconstitutional and that they were sent there thorugh an illegal usurpation of power by the Federal Government. He said this usurpation of powe was contrary to an expression of the last session of Congress.

"According to the Dallas Morning News, this is a quote: 'If you turn to Title 18, Section 1385, United States Code annotated, you will find that, as amended in 1956, it reads: Whoever, except in cases and under circumstances expressly authorized by the Constiution or act of Congress, wilfully uses any part of the Army or Air Force as a posse comitatus (a group to enforce law) or otherwise to execute the laws, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both. This section does not apply in Alaska.' "

Who'll Arrest Him?

The Governor said this was approved at the last session of Congress as part of the Civil Rights Bill, but the national Administration's attitude is "Who's going to arrest the president?"

Governor Faubus sai dhe did not see an early end to the Little Rock situation.

He said he would continue his fight for "these principles of government, regardless of the outcome, and regardless of th consequences to my political fortunes.

"I do not want an all powerful central government making all our decisions for us from afar. I want to continue to look upon soldiers and Federal agents as the defenders of our rights and not their destroyers, as the protectors of the people, not their oppressors. I want the power to govern to remain in the hands of the people and that power to be expressed through the democratic processes. I want again to see respect and regard for majority rule as being indicative of the will and desires of the people."

FAUBUS ASSAILED ON LAW DAY HERE

His Use of Troops Offended U. S. Tradition, Harriman Says at Court Fete

By MURRAY ILLSON

Governor Harriman assailed a fellow Democratic Governor yesterday for having defied the Constitution and the United States Supreme Court. His target was Orval Faubus of Arkansas.

Mr. Harriman's attack was made at a "Law Day—U. S. A." ceremony attended by Mayor Wagner and members of the state and Federal judiciary in the New York County Court House at Foley Square. The ceremony was part of the first national observance of Law Day as proclaimed by President Eisenhower on Feb. 3.

In his proclamation, the President had observed that it was "fitting that the people of this nation should remember with pride and vigilantly guard the great heritage of liberty, justice and equality under law which our forefathers bequeathed to us."

Speaking in the flag-bedecked rotunda of the courthouse, Governor Harriman did not mention Mr. Faubus by name, but his allusion to the Arkansas Governor and the racial integration disturbances at Little Rock's Central High School last fall were unmistakable.

After tracing the development of voting rights in the United States and observing that "now, public schools for all are a recognized responsibility of the state and our communities," Mr. Harriman said:

"In our generation, it is shocking to see a Governor of one of the states calling out the National Guard, not to uphold the Constitution and orders of the Supreme Court, but to defy them.

"Such action cannot be tolerated. It offends the concept of law on which our society is based. It undermines our influence among the free peoples abroad, and it weakens our leadership in the world-wide struggle against Kremlin-led communism."

Wagner Calls for Leaders

Mayor Wagner called on the legal profession to "redouble its efforts to serve the general good." He said that lawyers in this country had been traditionally "the leaders in the solution of the great social problems of their time." He declared that "in the field of the criminal law and in the prevention of juvenile delinquency there is much to be done."

Other speakers at the meeting included Bernard Botein, Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division, First Department; Bruce Bromley, representing the New York bar; David Sarnoff, chairman of the board of the American Heritage Foundation, and Charles E. Clark, chief judge of the United States Court of Appeals, Second Judicial District.

At another meeting marking Law Day, Federal Judge Irving R. Kaufman told faculty members and students of Fordham Law School that the space age would demand increasing concession of national sovereignty to international agencies.

Judge Kaufman spoke at the New York County Lawyers Association, 14 Vesey Street. The judge, an alumnus of Fordham Law School, said that the "determination of the point at which national jurisdiction should end and international jurisdiction commence represents difficult problems which will require resolution."

Faubus Says Withdrawal Key To Central Peace

By SHELBY SCATES

DALLAS, Texas — (INS) — Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus said troops would be needed at Little Rock's integrated Central High school until there is a "significant change in the attitudes of the people."

Faubus, enroute to a Phoenix, Ariz., vacation told newsmen in Dallas "most of the people don't expect to see the Negroes stay in school if the troops (federalized Arkansas National Guard) are removed."

He reiterated his stand that under present conditions the only solution to the Little Rock situation is the withdrawal of the nine Negro students from Central High school.

The Arkansas chief executive, key figure in an historic conflict between a federal court order and state's rights, said the use of federal troops in Little Rock was an instance of "law imposed against the will of a majority for the will of a minority."

He added that other "Little Rocks" would ensue in the South if integration were pursued by the same methods that were used in the troubled Arkansas city.

"Little Rock integrationists failed to promote their own cause," Faubus said. "It was their responsibility to create an attitude of acceptance in the community through democratic processes.

"But instead they wanted to get their way through the use of federal troops."

Faubus said the integration issue will be a central issue in the 1960 national elections but that he had not discussed the issue with national political leaders who he says are "afraid to face the issue realistically."

He added that he has had no indication of the formation of a third, presumably, state's rights, party but said this would be "determined by the actions of Democratic national leadership."

He warned, however, that the "people of the South are not going to be dictated to by this self-styled liberal leadership which has made an effort to play to the will of the minorities.

"The danger in this is yielding too far to the minority so that you lose the majority."

The governor, looking hail and chipper after a recent illness, said he had not yet decided whether or not to run for a third, unprecedented term, but added laughingly:

"After I get out of politics I'll probably end up like you (the newsmen) — in the newspaper business.

Faubus Admits Possible Mistakes In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (ANP) — Controversial Gov. Faubus of Arkansas got into the news picture again last week with an announcement that he plans to reveal a "new thought" on the school integration problem, and admission that he might have made a few mistakes during the Central High controversy.

Interviewed at a news conference here — Faubus tried to minimize his own public mistakes in comparison to what he termed the governments major blunder in calling out federal troops to enforce integration at the school. The government made the biggest mistake by using the troops, he said.

Back from a vacation trip in North Arkansas, the governor appeared to be acting the part of a prima donna, as he kept reporters guessing on what his "new thought" will be. He said, however that he might reveal it in an address before the Independent Magazine Wholesalers convention here Jan. 18.

He refused also to say whether he would run for a third term as governor. He would say only that he thought the integration issue would be a major issue in the 1958 campaign.

Asked if he thought the National Democratic Party would support him in the campaign, Faubus said: "I think that I am not in any sort of disfavor with the Party. I may be with some Party officials but these are only a few. National Democratis chieftain Paul Butler, who usually speaks for the party, has criticized Faubus on his stand in the Little Rock controversy.

FAUBUS STIRRED BY MANN SERIES

Sees Move to Discredit Me Nationally

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 23 (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus today said he thought former Mayor Woodrow W. Mann of Little Rock was trying to "discredit me nationally" in a series of syndicated newspaper articles on the Little Rock integration controversy.

Mann countered that he didn't think there was any way to further discredit Faubus "because he has done that so tragically himself."

Mann, who went out of office with a change in the form of city government here, has written the series for the New York Herald Tribune. It is being published nationally through syndication.

Will Comment Later

Faubus withheld detailed comment on the series.

"I think I will have something to say about the articles, but it is better that I reserve my comment until I have seen them all," Faubus said.

Mann has been one of Faubus' most bitter critics in the months-old controversy, which once saw the governor use the National Guard to prevent court-ordered attendance of nine Negro pupils at Central High school.

Central, which the Negroes now are attending under tropp protection, twice again was futilely searched for explosives, police reported today.

Anonymous telephone reports — one to the Arkansas Gazette and the other to television station KTHV — touched off the searches. Both the Gazette and KTHV said the caller's voice seemed to be that of a teen-aged white boy.

Series of Searches

There have been a series of such searches since a week ago, and on Tuesday an uncapped, unfused stick of dynamite was found in an empty locker. The other hunts have disclosed nothing.

School Supt. Virgil Blossom said that David Sontag, 17-year-old white student, who was suspended a week ago after soup was spilled on a Negro girl in the school cafeteria, had bee reinstated and would return to classes Monday

Blossom said 113 pupils were absent from the 1900-pupil school today.

Wouldn't Guard Negroes—Faubus

PHOENIX, Ariz. — (INS) — Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, key figure in the Little Rock school integration crisis last year, said last week he will not protect Negro pupils if federal troops are removed from Central high school.

In Phoenix attending the 20th annual meeting of the National Cotton Council, Faubus declared: "It is improper to put police force in the schools."

Stating "it isn't my role to promote social change," the Arkansas Chief Executive said 80 to 85 percent of his state's citizens are behind him on his integration stand and added that reports that violence would break out if federal soldiers were removed come from both "parents and students" at the school.

Faubus would not say whether he plans to seek re-election this year, although he said "nothing stands in the way" of his running again.

FAUBUS IS HONORED BY ARKANSAS LEGION

Given Americanism Award At Conference

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 25. — A former national commander of the American Legion, speaking here Saturday night, saw some "benefits" coming from the Soviet Union having beaten this country to the punch in launching a satellite.

Erle Cocke Jr. of Atlanta, who is now an official with Delta Air Lines, told Arkansas Legionnaires that although Sputnik was a tremendous "morale booster" for Russia, it also had reacted against that country.

One of Russia's biggest objectives, he said, is to "split" the United States and its allies.

Instead, Sputnik has "re-forged the bonds strained by Suez and now instead of a split, we see the United States moving to a new and stronger partnership," he said.

Mr. Cocke spoke at the mid-winter conference of the Arkansas Department of the American Legion. Guest of honor was Gov. Orval Faubus, who was presented an award by the Arkansas Legionnaires.

The Governor was presented the Arkansas department's annual Americanism award. Making the presentation was Dr. Garland Murphy Jr. of El Dorado, national executive committeeman for the department.

The award, in an apparent reference to the Governor's role in the Little Rock integration controversy, commended him for "preserving rights of individuals and states in keeping with the Constitution of the United States . . . and with the ideals of the founding fathers."

Faubus Says Former Mayor's Articles 'Try To Discredit Me'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 23 (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus today said he thought former Mayor Woodrow W. Mann of Little Rock was trying to 'discredit' me nationally" in a series of syndicated newspaper articles on the Little Rock integration controversy.

Mann countered that he didn't think there was any way to further discredit Faubus "because he has done that so tragically himself."

Mann, who went out of office with a chance in the form of city government here, has written the series for the New York Herald-Tribune.

Mann has been one of Faubus' most bitter critics in the months-old controversy, which once saw the governor use the National Guard to prevent court-ordered attendance of nine Negro pupils at Central High School.

Central, which the Negroes now are attending under troop protection, twice again was futilely searched for explosives, police reported today.

Anonymous telephone reports touched off the searches.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP) — Rep. Hays (D-Ark) said after a conference with Sherman Adams today that it still isn't possible to fix a schedule for withdrawal of troops from Little Rock.

FAUBUS LAMBASTES RECTOR STATEMENT

Insurance Man Says Racial Dispute Lost Center

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 14. — Gov. Orval Faubus and a Little Rock insurance man Friday swapped angry verbal blasts over whether the Central High integration dispute cost Little Rock a 10-million-dollar shopping center.

The Governor reacted angrily to a statement attributed to W. F. 'Billy' Rector and appearing in a Little Rock newspaper, which quoted Mr. Rector as saying financing had been withdrawn from the shopping center because of the "integration fracas."

Interest In Project

Mr. Rector's insurance and real estate firm had had an interest in the project. Mr. Rector said Stanley Silverman of Newark, N. J., who was promoting the project with a Newark realty firm, had informed him financing had been withdrawn because of the integration dispute.

Angered at the statement, Governor Faubus told newsmen that Mr. Rector hadn't stated the facts.

"This is just an excuse on their part becuase there's a recession on and Rector is financially interested in the project," the Governor said.

Inferring that the insurance official might be carrying a political grudge, Governor Faubus added that "he lost some insurance business with the state in 1955 . . . also he's an integrationist."

The Governor also said Mr. Rector had supported Republican candidates and "is a Republican himself."

In a two-page prepared statement drawn up later in the day Mr. Rector fired back.

'Irresponsible, Untrue'

"I am sick and tired of Orval Faubus making irresponsible and untrue statements without someone calling his hand about it," he said.

"Whether the shopping center was built or not built was not under our direction or control. . . . On two different occasions they (the Newark firm) very plainly stated that the integration crisis was going to stop the center and in the final analysis stated this was the reason they did not exercise their option."

Mr. Rector denied he was an integrationist, and challenged the Governor's own status. He said Mr. Faubus, despite his strong segregationist role in the Central High dispute, had sent his son to an integrated college. Farrell Faubus, the Governor's son, is attending Arkansas Tech at Russellville.

The insurance man freely admitted he had supported a Republican candidate in 1954.

"And I will support another Republican candidate or anyone else who runs against him (Governor Faubus) as long as he is in public life in Arkansas," he added.

As to losing any state insurance business, Mr. Rector said he had lost some business in 1955 when the Governor took office, but that the total commission on the policy to which he referred was "only $92."

'Opportunity To Prove It'

He also indicated that if the Governor "legally has called me a liar, I am going to give him an opportunity to prove it or apologize publicly."

Mr. Rector was one of the earliest litigants in the numerous lawsuits which have arisen following the Central High dispute. Several months ago he asked Pulaski Chancery Court for a declaration judgment on the state's segregation acts, but the case is still pending, with no hearing date set.

Mr. Silverman in Newark wasn't available for comment, the Associated Press reported.

'Alarming,' says governor—

Some Central students trailed by Guard: Faubus

FORREST CITY, Ark., Feb. 4 —(AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus last night said that National Guardsmen have been assigned to follow certain white students everywhere they go in Little Rock's integrated Central High School.

He said the federalized soldiers follow the pupils because Supt. Virgil Blossom had termed the youngsters potential troublemakers.

"I guess they stop at the restroom door," the governor said with a laugh.

He called the reported surveillance "an alarming thing."

Faubus, who spoke at a civic club meeting here, gave no additional details and did not specify whether he had only male students in mind.

Several months ago Faubus once charged that paratroopers, then on duty at the school, had followed girls into their dressing rooms. This was denied by school and military authorities.

Blossom today declined to comment on Faubus' latest statement.

BLASTED BY GOVERNOR—Mrs. Grace Lorch, wife of a teacher at Philander Smith College in Little Rock, was named yesterday by Gov. Orval Faubus as part of a "communist apparatus" which agitated the Little Rock integration situation. The Governor also singled out her husband, Lee Lorch.

FAUBUS SEES REDS BEHIND INTEGRATION

Claims Communists 'Agitating' In Little Rock

LORCHES SINGLED OUT

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 10.—Gov. Orval Faubus charged Thursday that communists have helped promote and "agitate" the Little Rock integration controversy.

The Governor singled out Lee Lorch, white mathematics professor at a Negro college here, and his wife, Mrs. Grace Lorch, as part of a "communist apparatus" operating here.

It was the first time he had inserted the communist issue into the integration dispute. The Governor said he mentioned Mr. Lorch and his wife because of an article in a magazine which had been brought to his attention.

The article he referred to appeared in a magazine called "Christian Crucade," written under the byline of J. B. Matthews, former chief investigator of Martin Dies, House Un-American Activities Committee and of the Joseph McCarthy Senate subcommittee. The magazine was listed as the Easter, 1958, issue.

Lorches Cited

The Governor charged that communists have been "promoting" integration at Central High, and that Mr. Lorch and his wife have been active in that movement.

Asked if the Arkansas State Police werec onducting an investigation into communist activities, the Governor replied in the negative. But he claimed that he has information of a tie-in between communists and integrationists here in promoting racially-mixed classes at Central High.

Asked why he hadn't brought out the charges before, the Governor said the magazine article to which he referred prompted him to do so.

The article attributed to Mr. Matthews charged at one point that Mr. Lorch in refusing to answer questions about communism in a congressional hearing two or three years ago lent strength to "allegations" that he was a member of the Communist Party.

Won't Comment

Mrs. Lorch, reached by telephone at her home, said she didn't caret o comment at length on the Governor's charges.

"I don't consider myself a person who's trying to overthrow the government. That has been done by someone else here, and Governor Faubus has done as much in that direction as anyone else," she observed.

Mr. Lorch said he had nothing to add to his wife's statement.

Mr. Lorch was cited for contempt in 9154 at Dayton, Ohio, for refusing to answer questions put to him by the House Un-American Activities Committee, but was acquitted on Nov. 27 last year by a Federal district court.

Mr. Lorch is a teacher at Philander Smith College here, a Negro institution. Mrs. Lorch figured in a hearing last October in Memphis, when she defied members of a Senate subcommittee who tried to question her about communist activities in the Mid-South.

Nothing Further Heard

She said Thursday she had heard nothing more from the committee, which indicated at the conclusion of the hearing that it might consider indicting her for refusing to answer questions.

Former State Senator Jim Johnson of Crossett, a segregationist leader who this year is sponsoring a states rights amendment, recently also came out with a charge that there was a "communist cell" operating in Arkansas on the integration issue.

Faubus Is Against Abolishing Guard

To Oppose Proposal 'With Everything I Have'

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 14. — Gov. Orval Faubus Monday strongly criticized proposals that the Arkansas National Guard be abolished.

"I am going to oppose it with everything I have," he said. "Whether by design or not, it is just another method of further distributing Federal authority down through the states."

He was referring to the possibility that the 39th National Guard Division, made up of Arkansas and Louisiana troops, would possibly be eliminated in an Army revision of divisions.

Governor Faubus said he didn't think a single governor approved of the plan, and that he had no thought of "co-operating" as suggested by a March 28 letter he said he had on file from Army Secretary Wilber Brucker.

The Army has indicated that the 39th Division would be one of about half a dozen divisions abolished. Military officials here say "abolish" isn't quite the correct word — that under the plan, there would still be Guard units in the state, but they might be given new training and organized under a different setup.

Turning to other matters in a press conference, the Governor said he had no plans to extend further clemency to Emmett Earl Leggett, Pulaski County slayer awaiting the death sentence. Leggett, who about two weeks ago lost in a second appeal to the Arkansas Supreme Court, is awaiting execution for the December, 1955, slaying of a 14-year-old youth, Joe King, at Jacksonville.

GOP Opponents Of Faubus File

G. W. Johnston, D. D. Layne To Seek Governorship

FIRST UNDER NEW LAW

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 14.—Two Republican candidates for Governor signed official pledges Monday to be the first to qualify under a law requiring the Republican Party to conduct party primaries.

They were George W. Johnson, a Greenwood attorney, and Donald D. Layne, Southfork civil engineer. Both filed in the office of Secretary of State C. G. Hall.

Sees Little Chance

Mr. Layne, 34, and a newcomer to politics, conceded that as a Republican running in Arkansas, he has little chance of winning. "But I'm going to give it a try, anyway," he declared.

Mr. Johnson, who filed his pledge through a GOP party official, has campaigned twice before on the GOP ticket. In 1952 he ran for attorney general against the Democratic nominee, Tom Gentry. In 1936 he opposed Mr. Hall for secretary of state. He lost both races. Mr. Johnson is in his "early 60s."

Mr. Layne, who appeared personally to file his corrupt practices pledge and later pay the $37.50 party filing fee, endorsed the "voluntary" school integration plan of Herbert Thomas, but said he wasn't sure what his campaign platform would be.

Solution To Crisis

The plan was offered by Mr. Thomas, Little Rock insurance executive, last week as a solution to the Little Rock integration dispute. Under its provisions, racially mixed classes would be left largely to decisions of individual school districts.

"That's the only thing workable that I've seen so far," said Mr. Layne. "It would work if hotheads on both sides would let up and give it a chance."

He described himself as "neither an integrationist nor a segregationist."

Mr. Layne, born in Little Rock, said he saw service in the Marine Corps in World War II. He said he was running without any organized backing.

He emphasized that he was "not an Eisenhower Republican."

"In fact, I even voted for Harry Truman," the young civil engineer said.

Racial Harmony Restoration, Aim

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A new plan to restore racial harmony in Arkansas was presented to the state board of education at its meeting here April 7.

The plan was first mentioned by Gov. Orval Faubus March 19 but he disclaimed knowledge of its details.

Marvin E. Bird of Earle, Ark., chairman of the education board, and state education commissioner Arch W. Ford Sunday said the plan would be submitted but neither would give details of the proposal.

Herbert L. Thomas Sr., Little Rock insurance man, will present the plan. Although no information about it was available from Thomas, the proposal reportedly would bring about a legal resolution of the Little Rock school integration problem and would create a statewide school integration policy.

Faubus has said that a representative of a citizens group mentioned the plan to him. The governor said this group was working quietly "to bring the extremists on both sides together."

Faubus Ready To Face Race Issues Anew

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) The next governor of Arkansas is going to be "plagued" by school integration problems, Gov. Orval Faubus said Tuesday.

Faubus, a key figure in the Little Rock integration dispute, is a candidate for a third term in this year's elections.

The governor told an Optimist Club luncheon meeting that his role in the federal-state clash over integration of Little Rock Central High School had been a consistent one.

"The sea of democracy is never smooth," Faubus declared. "There have been quite divergent views in this state over the issue and of course we regret some of the occurrences, but I don't know of any single person to blame for them."

He said there is no easy solution to the problem of school integration "and whoever would be governor would be plagued with it."

Faubus said he always had maintained the attitude of allowing local school districts to handle integration problems.

The case of Little Rock was different, he said, and he stepped in because of opposition to integration and because he felt he had to protect lives and property.

Arkansas National Guard troops he posted at Central High prevented the entrance of nine Negroes last September. Later he withdrew the soldiers after a federal court enjoined him from intefering with integration. A mob rioted at the school and federal troops were sent in to enforce the program.

INTEGRATION STAND DEFENDED BY FAUBUS

Says Issue To Plague Next Arkansas Governor

HIS ROLE 'CONSISTENT'

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 8.—The next governor of Arkansas is going to be "plagued" with the integration problem, Gov. Orval Faubus declared Tuesday.

The Governor, a third term gubernatorial aspirant in this year's elections, contended that his role in the Central High School integration dispute has been "consistent." And he challenged claims in some quarters that Arkansas has been discredited by the wide publicity resulting from the Central High controversy.

"The sea of democracy is never smooth. There have been quite divergent views in this state over the issue and, of course, we regret some of the occurrences; but I don't know of any single person to blame for them."

No Easy Solution

"There is no eas ysolution to the problem, and whoever would be governor would be plagued with it," he added.

Hititng often on somber and even gloomy notes, the Governor spoke to the Little Rock Optimist Club.

He avoided specific mention of the "voluntary" integration plan outlined Monday by Herbert Thomas, Little Rock insurance official.

However, he said he had always held to the view of letting local school districts handle integration problems, which is one phase of the Thompson plan. Mr. Faubus added that since he has been Governor, he has met criticism from some segregationists who disagree with his view of not interfering with integration "if that's the will of the people in that school district."

Little Rock was different, he said, because of opposition to integration and because he felt he "had to protect the lives and property" of people in the district.

Wouldn't Change Stand

As he has stated before, the Governor emphasized that he wouldn't change his stand on the Central High question, even if he had to do it again.

Reviewing accomplishments of his Administration, the Governor gave "full credit to the Legislature." No governor could put across a program without the support of the General Assembly, he observed.

The Governor left after the speaking for another round of turkey hunting in East Arkansas. Wednesday night he will address a group of civic clubs at Hughes. He bagged a turkey while hunting in the Hughes area last week.

Faubus Warns Against Forced Desegregation

HUGHES, Ark. (AP)—Forced integration is jeopardizing the good relations of the white and Negro races, Gov. Orval Faubus said Wednesday night.

He told a civic meeting that "if compulsion continues it will jeopardize the progress being made by Negroes in all fields."

Faubus said of the 10 Negro banks in the United States, 12 are in the South and of 124 Negro business leagues and Chambers of Commerce all but 10 are in the South.

"The greatest progress of the Negro has not been made in Africa, the North, the East or the West, but in the South," he said.

Faubus said that integration has failed in Little Rock despite the fact that in the beginning it "had everything in its favor."

Gov. Faubus Plans Reversal Appeal To U.S. Supreme Court

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The decision of the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in upholding dismissal of a suit filed by Gov. Orval Faubus will be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, an attorney for the governor said Monday.

The appellate court turned down Faubus' appeal from a district court injunction against his use of Arkansas National Guardsmen to prevent integration at Central High School.

Other appeals filed by Mrs. Clyde Thomason and Mrs. Margaret Jackson, members of the Segregationist League of Central High Mothers, also were rejected by the St. Louis court.

Tom Harper of Fort Smith, Ark., attorney for Faubus, said when informed of the appellate court's action: "Well, that's that."

Harper added:

"From the very first we had intended to take the thing to the very end, and that's what we'll do."

He said the next step would be an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Faubus himself declined comment.

Kenneth Coffelt, representing Mrs. Jackson, said he would start another action in a state court here Tuesday. Mrs. Jackson had challenged the constitutionality of President Eisenhower's order stationing troops at Central High to enforce court-order integration.

Coffelt said he learned in a telephone conversation with the clerk of the St. Louis court that the ruling did not concern the validity of Eisenhower's order.

Mrs. Jackson contended in her suit that the presences of troops at Central High violated the constitutional rights of her two daughters. They voluntarily quit the school last fall.

Griffin Smith Jr., attorney for Mrs. Thomason, said he would not comment until he read a transcript of the St. Louis court proceedings. Mrs. Thomason was enjoined by a federal court from interferring with integration.

HE'LL APPEAL

Arkansas' Faubus

Court Raps Faubus Use Of Troops

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Gov. Faubus of Arkansas Monday lost in the U.S. Court of Appeals his fight in the Little Rock integration dispute but planned an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The court censured the governor for calling out National Guard troops to keep nine Negro children out of Central High School last fall.

If permitted to stand, the court said, such a course could lead only to "a complete breakdown of government."

THREE-JUDGE COURT

Faubus' appeal from a federal district court injunction against interference with integration at the school was rejected unanimously by the three-judge court.

The appellate court also rejected appeals in two parallel cases in which the federal government's use of troops to enforce integration was challenged.

The racial controversy drew international attention last fall and the Arkansas governor became the storm center when school authorities sent the Negroes home in the face of an angry crowd.

SLIPPED INTO SCHOOL

Faubus withdrew the Arkansas guardsmen under the federal coure injunction. The Negro children were slipped into the school by a side entrance but were sent home the same day when whites gathered outside.

President Eisenhower acted quickly. He ordered troops called out. Paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division were dispatched by plane to Little Rock. The President also federalized the Arkansas guardsmen.

Troops, with fixed bayonets stood guard at the school, even escorting the Negro students into the building at first. Federal troops still are on duty at Little Rock.

Faubus had no comment on the decision, but his attorney, Tom Harper of Fort Smith, Ark., said the governor will appeal.

Harper added: "From the very first we had intended to take the thing to the very end, and that's what we'll do."

In rejecting Faubus' argument that he acted only to suppress mob violence which he feared should the Negro children be admitted to the school, the Court of Appeals said:

"A rule which would permit an official whose duty it was to enforce the law to disregard the very law which it was his duty to enforce, in order to pacify a mob or suppress an insurrection, would deprive all citizens of any security in the enjoyment of their life, liberty or property."

The court held that under such a rule:

"The banks could be closed and emptied of their cash to prevent robberies, the post office locked to prevent the mails from being robbed, the citizens kept off the streets to prevent holdups . . ."

In each of the three cases, the court upheld the decisions of Federal District Judge Ronald E. Davies of North Dakota, then sitting in Little Rock.

The other appeals were brought by Mrs. Margaret Jackson and Mrs. Clyde Thomason, members of the segregationist League of Central High Mothers.

Attorney Kenneth Coffelt, representing Mrs. Jackson, said he would start another action in a state court in Little Rock Tuesday.

Griffin Smith Jr., attorney for Mrs. Thomason, declined comment on any course of action until he had read the court transcript.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
EIGHT(8) NEGROES WHO HAVE ATTENDED CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL MADE PASSING GRADES

Central Negroes All Are Passed

One Of Eight At Little Rock Recently On Honor Roll

GRADUATE AMONG GROUP

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, May 24.—All of the eight Negroes who have attended Central High School this year have made passing grades, Central High Supt. Jesse W. Matthews said Wednesday.

Mr. Matthews, however, declined to give out individual grades. He said regulations forbid making public the grades of any student except to the student or to his parents.

Only one of the eight Negroes who have completed the school year is a senior. He is Ernest Green, who will be in Tuesday night's graduation parade of about 600 seniors.

Board Seeks Suspension

If the remaining Negro students are allowed to return to Central High next year, there will be three seniors and four juniors. The Little Rock School Board is asking that the integration plan be suspended for two and a half years, which if allowed by Federal Court would necessitate the Negro students returning to an all-Negro school next fall.

Mr. Matthews didn't explain which grades the Negro students are in. Besides Green, those who have finished this school year are Gloria Ray, Jefferson Thomas, Thelma Mothershed, Carlotta Walls, Terrance Roberts, Elizabeth Ann Eckford and Jane Hill.

Minniejean Brown, the ninth Negro student who was expelled about the start of the second semester, has said she hopes to return to Central next year. A junior this year, she went to New York after her expulsion.

One On Honor Roll

One report indicated that one of the eight Negroes who completed the year had made a recent honor roll. Mr. Matthews indicated that was true but said again he wasn't at liberty to disclose any names or scholastic marks.

Asked about Sammie Dean Parker, white 11th grader who was suspended following racial incidents several months ago, Mr. Matthews said so far as he knows she also will pass into a higher grade. That would make her a senior next year.

Miss Parker went on television with her parents to protest her suspension, and later was reinstated after agreeing to comply with all school regulations.

Little Rock Nine Breaks Tradition

Earnest Green, one of Little Rock Nine, is pictured as a member of the senior class, while the expelled Minniejean Brown is pictured as a member of the Glee Club. Three other students are sho n in homerooms. They are Gloria Ray, Carlotta Walls and Jefferson Thomas.

'Little Rock Nine are making good grades'

KANSAS CITY, Kan. —Some 1,500 persons attending an NAACP meeting here Sunday heard Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP state:

"All the colored children attending Little Rock's Central High School with the exception of one, are making A and B grades."

The noted civil rights leader said the exception is making "C" grades.

The overflow audience filled the aisles of a church to hear Mrs. Bates and hundreds were turned away.

Solomon Cates, Kansas NAACP president, said the crowd donated more than $2,100 for use by the Little Rock NAACP chapter to help families victimized by economic reprisals in Arkansas.

LITTLE ROCK
U.S. MARSHALLS RECRUITED

Arkansas Bishop Called to Capital For School Talks

U.S. Marshal Recruit Push Is Reported

Episcopal Head Flies to Conference with Aides of Ike

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 3 (UPI)—A Little Rock church leader answered a summons to Washington today to confer with White House and Justice Department officials on the Central High School integration crisis.

The Right Rev. Robert R. Brown, Episcopal bishop of Arkansas, left by plane for Washington after a telephone conference with Sherman Adams, assistant to President Eisenhower, and an assistant to Atty. Gen. William Rogers.

United Press International learned of the high-level talks with the churchman amid reports that the Justice Department is recruiting deputy U.S. marshals for duty at Central High if it opens integrated.

"I have no comment," Bishop Brown said. "I have always tried to get along with the newspapers, but at this time I can say nothing."

Plans Unknown

Reliable sources said the bishop did not know when he left with whom he would confer in Washington or what could come from the meetings. It was presumed he would talk with White House aides and officials from the Justice Department.

Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark), president of the Southern Baptist Convention, confirmed that Bishop Brown conferred with him before leaving for Washington.

"I am not authorized to make any statement about Bishop Brown's movements," Hays said. "I told him that the Baptists and other church organizations will be happy to work with him in what we call the 'mission of reconciliation' which is designed to do two things:

"1—Find a non-violent solution to the problem and

"2—Plead with men to love and respect each other while differing in opinions."

The representative, head of several million Southern Baptists, said, "Underlying this whole conflict is a devotion to Christian ideals that in time will be more powerful than any government, state or federal."

Hays was mediator in talks last fall between Arkansas Gov. Faubus and Eisenhower.

Eisenhower is in Newport, R.I., and not expected back in Washington until Saturday.

Brown was one of the leaders last year in a movement to weld churchgoers of Little Rock into a moral force for peace and order in the integration crisis.

Eisenhower praised the movement. It came during the time when paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division were at Central High. The objective at that time was to make it possible for the paratroopers to move out of Little Rock and insure peace with their departure.

Reports came from half-a-dozen points in Arkansas today that the federal government is recruiting deputies for possible use at the school.

Contatc Disclosed

William Mahan of Damascus, Ark., said a relative of U.S. Marshal R. Beal Kidd of Little Rock contacted him through a relative. He said he was not told specifically that he was wanted for duty at Central High.

"But there was no doubt in my mind that it was what they wanted," he said. "They just said it would be secret.

"They offered $28 per day. I don't know how they got my name. But I didn't want any part of it."

A newspaper editor at Batesville, Ark., Paul Buchanan, said two businessmen were quietly contacted there.

"One is a sergeant in the National Guard, and his unit had duty at Central last fall," Buchanan said. "Both men refused to be identified. They said they did not want to get mixed up in it, because both of them have businesses and they can't afford to."

At Jonesboro, Ark., the office of Deputy U.S. Marshal E. E. (Bert) Frazier was a beehive of activity. Frazier would answer no questions.

Applications Made

But a former peace officer who was seen at Frazier's office today said he applied for temporary duty as a deputy marshal and said eight or nine others from Northeast Arkansas also made applications today.

One man said the application blank was short and was for temporary duty. He said he was informed that he "probably" will not be needed if Faubus closes the school down.

"But there was no doubt about what I was signing up for; it is for duty at Little Rock Central in case they reopen integrated," he said.

Federal Judge Denies Norfolk Racial Stay

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 3 (AP)—Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman today denied a requested one-year postponement of school integration in Norfolk. He said however he would take another look at the school board motion after the Supreme Court rules on the integration delay granted in Little Rock, Ark.

U.S. Recruiting Deputies for Duty at Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Artk. (AP) — The federal government was recruiting deputy U.S. marshals in Arkansas Wednesday for possible use at Central High School if it reopens on an integrated basis.

The question of whether the school opens Sept. 15 with a court order to integrate or with a 2½-year-delay in integration rests with the U.S. Supreme Court. The high court will presumably rule on the question shortly after Sept. 11 when it hears oral arguments in Washington.

Reports of the recruiting came from Batesville, Jonesboro, Conway and Damascus.

Mrs. Bill Mahan of Damascus said a relative of U.S. Marshal Beal Kidd of Little Rock had contacted her husband through his sister asking if he would be interested in a temporary deputy marshal's job.

JOB IS 'SECRET'

Mrs. Mahan said her farmer husband asked what the job would be and was told that it was secret.

"We knew what it was, and Bill said he didn't want any part of it."

Kidd was reported out of Little Rock and not available for comment.

The Jonesboro Sun reported it had interviewed a man in Jonesboro who had an application for the job who said it paid $16 a day, with $12 living allowance.

While the application blanks did not mention the Central High crisis or Little Rock, the applicant interviewed by the Sun said "there was no doubt about what I was signing up for—it is for duty at Central High in case it reopens."

STAND-BY BASIS

The applicant said it was explained to him that if the school is closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus the deputies probably would not be needed. They were put on a stand-by basis.

The applicant said the blank was short that he filled out, asking simply if he had ever been arrested or was a user of alcohol or narcotics.

At the office of Dep. Marshal E. E. Burt Frazier in Jonesboro, another eight or nine applicants from northeast Arkansas were signing up when a reporter arrived. Frazier replied "No comment" to all questions.

Similar reports came from reliable sources in Batesville and in Conway.

Deputy U. S. Marshals Are Recruited in Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 3 (AP)—The Federal Government was recruiting deputy U. S. marshals in Arkansas today for possible use at Central High School if it reopens on an integrated basis.

The question whether the school opens Sept. 15 with a court order to integrate or with a 2½ year delay in integration rests with the U. S. Supreme Court. The Court will presumably rule on the question shortly after Sept. 11, when it hears oral arguments in Washington.

Reports of the recruiting came from Batesville, Jonesboro, Conway and Damascus.

Mrs. Bill Mahan of Damascus said relatives of U. S. Marshal Beal Kidd of Little Rock had asked her husband, through his sister, if he would be interested in a temporary deputy marshal's job.

Mrs. Mahan said her farmer husband asked what the job would be and was told it was secret.

"We knew what it was and Bill said he didn't want any part of it," she said.

Marshal Kidd was reported out of Little Rock today.

Year's Delay Request By Norfolk Rejected

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 3 (UPI)—U. S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman today rejected a Norfolk School Board request for a one-year delay in the integration of 17 Negro students into six white schools.

School Board attorneys said they had not decided whether to appeal.

A Virginia law will close the integrated schools, including all of Norfolk's white high schools and white junior high schools, if the students are enrolled.

The School Board filed the motion for a delay Friday, minutes after reluctantly announcing it would integrate the students in compliance with Hoffman's desegregation order.

Hoffman, in denying the request today, said he reserved "the right to reconsider" the motion after the U. S. Supreme Court rules on the Little Rock integration case. He has said in the past he would reconsider his whole approach to the Norfolk school case and possibly allow continued segregation if the Supreme Court upholds Federal District Judge Harry Lemley's 2½-year stay of integration at Central High School in Little Rock.

The motion Hoffman denied today asked for a deferment of integration until September, 1959.

Norfolk schools are scheduled to open Sept. 22. Originally they were to open next Monday, but the School Board postponed the openings because of the integration dispute.

U. S. Marshalls Recruited As Integration Pot Boils

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The federal government has enlisted civilians to serve as deputy marshals if needed at Little Rock.

Several Southern schools integrated peacefully. Trouble, however, was reported at two points.

[illegible] went to high school without apparent incident Wednesday. But Wednesday night 16-year-old Larry Bell said he and two other Negroes left the building during the morning because white boys in their classes threatened to beat them after school.

Bell said neither he nor seven other Negroes enrolled planned to return to school today. School officials have refused to comment.

At Greensboro, N. C., a small group displaying a Ku Klux Klan banner and a Confederate flag met at a school. Even so five Negro children, three of whom entered the school last year, attended the opening session without trouble.

Application blanks for deputy U. S. Marshal did not mention the racial situation at Little Rock's Central High School but one applicant said there was no doubt he was signing for duty at Central if it reopens as an integrated school.

The U. S. Supreme Court meets Sept. 11, four days before the school opens, to hear the Little Rock school board's plea for a 30-month breathing spell. The NAACP will ask that integration be resumed at once.

The Arkansas cities of Hoxie, Fayetteville and Charleston also went ahead peacefully with integration.

Four Kentucky high schools desegregated for the first time. There were no incidents as two Negroes attended white schools in Charlotte, one of the cities in which North Carolina's first school integration took place last year.

Four Negroes plan to enter white schools opening today at Winston-Salem, N. C.

U. S. Dist. Judge Walter Hoffman rejected the Norfolk school board's plea for a delay until next year in desegregation. The jurist said he may reconsider his decision if the U. S. Supreme Court grants a delay at Little Rock or a review of that cose.

A member of the Arlington County school board told another federal judge that six Negroes applications to attend a white school were rejected because of low acheivement.

The testimony came at a hearing to determine if 30 Negroes must be admitted to the Virginia county's white schools. The county board advised teachers that school openings, postponed from today to Monday, may be further delayed.

Disorders occurred at Birmingham, Ala., as a result of fears that Negroes would try to enroll at a high school, but no Negroes attempted to register at that school or at any other white school. A policeman was slugged in the demonstration, one student was hit on the head with a brick and three men were arrested. All are white.

Elsewhere in Alabama, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., who led the Montgomery Negro bus boycott two years ago, was arrested there on a charge of loitering.

After being held for 15 minutes he was released in bond. He accused police of brutality, a charge the police commisisoner denied sharply. Officers said King refused to move when he and a crowd of Negroes were ordered away from City Hall, where another Negro integration leader was accusing a Negro of attacking him.

At Van Buren, Ark., a Negro said he and seven others of his race couldn't take any more threats and insults from white classmates at integrated Van Buren High School.

"I don't plan to return Thursday," declared Freddy Bell, a 16-year-old junior, "and neither do seven others."

Thirteen Negro boys and girls are enrolled at the high school which has about 650 white pupils.

Bell said he and two other Negro youths walked out of classes yesterday after white boys threatened to get them after school.

FAUBUS HANDS UNWANTED TAG ON MARSHALS

Governor Says Government Mustering Force; Klan Chapter Planned

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Federal marshals and troops have no business around any state supported school in Arkansas, Gov. Orval E. Faubus said Tuesday.

At almost the same time, plans were reported for chartering the state's first Ku Klux Klan chapter since the 1920s in Little Rock, the nations hot spot of integration turmoil.

Earlier, Faubus said he had information the federal government is mustering a force of deputy marshals to force integration. In Washington, the Justice Department would neither confirm nor deny it.

Ten Negro children and 873 white pupils went quietly to mixed classes at Clinton, Tenn. National Guardmen were called to quell rioting segregationists there just two years ago.

Postponed.

In Arlington County, Va., just across the Potomac from the nation's capital, the school board, deep in litigation over efforts by Negroes to enroll in white schools, postponed the opening of the fall term from Thursday to Monday.

The decision was taken unanimously in an emergency meeting at the end of a day of arguments before U.S. Dist. Judge Albert V. Bryan.

Judge Bryan heard arguments for and against the admission of 30 Negroes into white schools. He indicated he would try to dispose of the case Wednesday.

An attorney for the Virginia Pupil Placement Board told the judge that pupils are not assigned to particular schools solely on the basis of race or color.

Faubus told a news conference he will close Central High School in Little Rock if federal authorities try to enforce U.S. Supreme Court desegregation orders this fall. School authorities have delayed the opening of Little Rock's fall term until Sept. 15. President Eisenhower flew in infantry units to enforce integration at the school last fall.

Klan Chapter.

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, president of the segregationist Capital Citizens Council, said a Klan charter would be chartered in Little Rock this week. Pruden, a Baptist minister, voiced neither approval or disapproval of the development. "The council movement stands for racial integrity and states rights and endorses only those methods that are nonviolent and honorable," he said. A 1909 Arkansas law provides up to five years in prison on any conviction of night riding for unlawful purposes "while wearing any mask, white caps or robes. . . ."

Faubus left Little Rock for a few days rest at an undisclosed location before he could be contacted for comment on the Klan report. A lull in the Little Rock school crisis is expected to hold until the Supreme Court rules on Central High's request for a 2½-year delay of integration.

At Arlington, Va., Atty. A. B. Scott told Judge Bryan there is only an assumption — not evidence — that race is the governing consideration of the board in assigning pupils to schools.

But Frank D. Reeves, attorney for 30 Negroes seeking admission to Arlington County white schools, said the Negro children were asked whether they sought to enter white schools on the basis of "your so-called constitutional rights." Reeves said the children were asked no questions relating

U.S. Bolsters Its Deputies For Stand-by

By JAMES RESTON

(Copyright 1958, The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—The administration is ready with two plans to carry out any United States Supreme Court order insisting on the integration of Little Rock Central High School Sept. 15.

A responsible official said Tuesday that the Department of Justice preferred to use deputy U.S. marshals to carry out integration orders of the court and already had recruited a "considerable number" for possible use in Little Rock.

He added that while the administration would use the marshals and seek federal court injunctions against anyone illegally opposing the carrying out of court orders, federal troops already had been alerted to be ready in case local police and the marshals could not maintain order.

FAUBUS STATEMENT

These comments were made in response to inquiries about a statement by Gov. Faubus of Arkansas, who Tuesday quoted the New York Times as saying the federal government was ready to use federal marshals to carry out federal court integration orders.

Deputy marshals of the federal courts, it was conceded in official quarters, are handicapped in any effort to exercise police powers. Their normal duty is to maintain order in courtrooms.

They also have the power to arrest persons in contempt of court, and would have the power to arrest anyone interfering, say in Little Rock, with any court order instructing the racial integration of Central High School in the Arkansas capital.

UNDER HANDICAP

In dealing with mob action, however, they are greatly handicapped, and no official here is under any illusion that they could, by themselves, substitute for the police of Little Rock in the face of violent opposition to Negroes entering the school.

However, the administration is emphasizing that the primary responsibility for maintaining order in Little Rock and elsewhere lies with the police on the spot. This has been made clear both by President Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Rogers in the last two weeks.

Forewarned by the outcry in the South against the sudden appearance of the federal troops last year, the Jutice Department is following each local integration crisis more carefully and proposing the use of all intermediary steps for gaining acceptance before recommending the use of the troops.

Influential Southern senators, whose support is necessary to the President's legislative program, have been emphasizing for a year that the sending of troops was "a drastic and illegal action" taken before other "legal" courses of action were attempted.

For example, Sen. Sparkman (D-Ala), a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Tuesday drew this distinction between the use of federal troops and the use of federal marshals in such cases as the enforcement of the integration order in Little Rock.

Sparkman

"The exclusive power to provide the method of execution of federal court decrees," he said in Mobile, "Is . . . given to Congress by the Constitution.

"By law, Congress has stipulated that enforcement of federal court decrees is to be performed by U.S. marshals and their deputies. Title 28, Section 547, specities that the U.S. marshals of each district shall execute all lawful writs, processes and orders issued under authority of the United States, and command all necessary assistance to execute his duties."

"This assistance which U.S. marshals may command is the authority to deputize members of the male population to assist the marshals and their regular staff. No effort was made by the President to have this authority used in the enforcement of the District Court decree in Little Rock."

RIGHTS ACT

The administration concedes that it made no such attempt in 1957. It insists, however, that it had the power to use the federal troops in Little Rock, under Chapter 15 of Title 10 of the U.S. Code, particularly Sections 332, 333 and 334.

For example, Section 333, which is a codification of an act of Congress passed in April, 1871, as one of the civil rights acts passed during reconstruction days, provides that:

"The President, by using the militia or the armed forces, or both, or by any other means, shall take such measures as he considers necessary to suppress, in a state, any insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combinations, or conspiracy, if (it)

"(1) So hinders the executions of the laws of that state, and of the United States within the state, that any part or class of its people is deprived of a right, privilege, immunity, or protection named in the Constitution and secured by law, and the constituted authorities of the state are unable, fail, or refuse to protect that right, privilege, or immunity, or to give that protection; or

"(2) Opposes or obstructs the execution of the laws of the United States or impedes the course of justice under those laws. In any situation covered by Clause (1), the state shall be considered to have denied the equal protection of the laws secured by the Constitution."

LAWS OF U. S.

The argument of Gov. Faubus, and for that matter of Sen. Sparkman and many others opposed to the Supreme Court's intergration order (and the use of federal troops to enforce that order) is that the President could use the troops only if he were enforcing "the laws of the United States."

This is the heart of the legal argument against the Supreme Court and the administration: That the orders of the Supreme Court are not the "laws of the United States"—though this, of course, is rejected by the court and by the administration.

Nevertheless, the decision here now is to avoid the use of troops, if at all possible, and rely in the first instance on the authority of the federal court marshals.

DETERMINED EFFORT

The administration believes it has the assurance of police in Little Rock that a determined effort will be made by the police department to maintain order. It also hopes that the new principal of Central High School will make a more spirited effort to maintain discipline within the school.

The decision to rely on marshals and on federal injunctions, however, is more of a hope among officials here than a conviction that these devices will be equal to the problem. Even while they are recruiting the marshals, they fear a situation beyond the control of such court officials. For this reason they are reluctantly altering the troops and preparing for the worst.

U. S. Hunts Deputies For Possible Little Rock Use

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The federal government Wednesday was enlisting Arkansas civilians to serve as deputy U.S. marshals if needed at Little Rock Central High School.

While the application blanks did not mention the racial crisis here, one applicant said, "There was no doubt about what I was signing up for—it is for duty at Central High in case it reopens" integrated.

The U.S. Supreme Court will meet in extraordinary session Sept. 11—four days before Central's opening—to hear the plea of the Little Rock School Board for a 2½-year breathing spell. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People will ask that integration be resumed immediately.

Thirteen Negroes had to walk past a throng of jeering white boys and derisive signs when they entered Van Buren High School in the second year of integration there. No outbreaks were reported Wednesday, and none occurred at Van Buren Junior High School which admitted Negroes for the first time.

A Negro boy who completed the first grade last semester with white classmates in Fort Smith registered for the second grade in the same school Wednesday. Fort Smith is in west Arkansas, just across the Arkansas River from Van Buren.

The Fort Smith Elementary School also admitted a Negro girl to the first grade.

Fort Smith School Supt. Chris Corbin said there was no trouble.

Racially mixed education also proceeded peaceably at the Arkansas cities of Fayetteville, Charleston and Hoxie.

Opening of all Little Rock high schools was delayed until Sept. 15, pending a Supreme Court ruling, but other schools here begin their fall term Thursday. Little Rock's elementary and junior high schools still are segregated.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus charged Tuesday that deputy U.S. marshals were being mustered for duty in Little Rock. He declared that he would close Central High School before permitting either marshals or federal troops to forcibly integrate the school.

Reports of recruiting of deputy marshals came from Jonesboro, Batesville, Conway and Damascus.

Mrs. Bill Mahan of Damascus said a relative of U.S. Marshal Beal Kidd of Little Rock had contacted her husband through his sister asking if he would be interested in a temporary deputy marshal's job.

Mrs. Mahan said her farmer husband asked what the job would be and was told that it was secret.

"We knew what it was, and Bill said he didn't want any part of it."

The Jonesboro Sun reported it had interviewed a man in Jonesboro who had an application for the job who said it paid $16 a day, with $12 living allowance.

While the application blanks did not mention the Central High crisis or Little Rock, the applicant interviewed by the Sun said "there was no doubt about what I was signing up for—it is for duty at Central High in case it reopens."

NEGRO STUDENT
MINNIE JEAN BROWN

Minnie Jean Splattered In New Incident

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UP)—The parents of a white girl whom a Negro student called "petty white trash" refused today to let her return to Central High School where bomb threats and other incidents disrupted classes.

The name-calling and another clash involved Minnie Jean Brown, 16, a Negro student who had been involved in two previous incidents shortly before the Christmas holidays.

Minnie Jean was hit with a thrown purse Thursday after she called a white girl "petty white trash." Later a bowl of soup was poured over her head as she ate lunch in the cafeteria.

STUDENTS CHANT

In December, the Brown girl was suspended from school for pouring chili on two white students. After she was reinstated, a white student, David Sontag, 16, poured soup over her head during a lunch period because she called him "poor white trash."

In another incident Thursday another Negro girl, Carlotta Walls, charged that white student Herbert Blount and "several other trouble-makers" kicked her in a corridor.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom confirmed the incidents, but would not release the names of the students involv

INTEGRATION FUSS OVER IS SETTLED

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (INS)—A school integration problem with a new twist has been peacefully resolved in Little Rock.

A group of negroes at suburban Sweet Home objected to their children being "integrated" with negro children in a consolidated school at suburban College Station on the grounds that——It would involve transporting their children approximately 2½ miles to and from classes aboard a school bus.

—It would expose their children to children in a lower economic category. They claimed that most negroes living at College Station are on welfare while negroes at Sweet Home are employed in well-paying jobs.

The Pulaski County School Board settled the matter yesterday by cancelling a proposed consolidation and allowing the negro children to continue attending separate schools.

Dynamite In School at Little Rock

Plot to Stop Classes Seen

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 20 (AP).—A stock of dynamite, uncapped and unfused, was found in an empty locker at integrated Central High School today. Superintendent Virgil Blossom called it a weapon of terror "to force us to close the schools."

The dynamite, relatively harmless in its unfused, uncapped state, was found after an hour and a half search by city police and federalized National Guardsmen. An anonymous telephone call to a local radio station manager, Ray Bartlett, started the search.

Mr. Bartlett said the caller asked for him by name and told him there were two sticks of dynamite planted in the basement of the 2,000-student school "in a locker." No second stick was found.

Negro Student Punched

The discovery of the dynamite climaxed a hectic first day of the new semester that was filled with rumors and tension. Earlier in the morning a Negro student—one of the nine whose integration into Central High touched off the Little Rock crisis—was knocked down by a white boy. Both were sent to the principal's office and Mr. Blossom said an investigation of the incident is pending.

The search for the dynamite was carried out while some students were attending classes and others were lunchingg in the basement cafeteria, just a few yards from where the stick was found.

Hysteria Campaign

Acting Police Chief Eugene Smith said he believed the dynamite was put there "not to blow up anything but to create hysteria." Mr. Blossom commented:

"It appears that this is a part of a campaign t otry to force us to clase the school. This is an opinion on which the police, F. B. I. and military agree.

"We further feel that no one in this community would actually carry out anything of this sort that would result in harm to the children.

"Every precaution is being taken for the safety of the children and at the same time carry on their educational program."

SCHOOL WELCOMES LITTLE ROCK GIRL

Director Greets Expelled Negro Pupil Here—She Hopes for Calm Stay

New York, N.Y.

By MILDRED MURPHY

Minnijean Brown attended school here for the first time yesterday since her expulsion a week ago from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark. She expressed the hope that her life during the coming months would be calm.

"I'll be so glad when I am just an ordinary student," the 16-year-old Negro pupil said.

Her wish was temporarily ignored by a large contingent of photographers and reporters on hand to witness her arrival at the New Lincoln School, 31 West 110th Street. The school offered her a scholarship after Central High had barred her for the remainder of the school year. She submitted with poise and resignation to the newsmen, and said: "This has gone on since September."

Students and faculty members watched from windows as the girl, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, was formally welcomed at the school's entrance by Dr. John J. Brooks, director of the interracial, international institution.

She was expelled after incidents that culminated when she called one of her harassers "white trash." Yesterday, she repeated her belief that she was "not a troublemaker."

She said she considered her loss of control toward the "fifty hard-core segregationist students right, just as they thought they were right."

She would not comment on whether she planned to re-enter Central High School next fall. She arrived here Saturday as the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth B. Clark of Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y.

Dr. Clark is a professor at City College and a trustee of the New Lincoln School.

Pot Boils At Central High And Minnie Jean's In It

'It's tough to be hated,' she says

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Political observers here this week attributed a recent wave of violence at Central High School to "Faubus forces" conscious of the Arkansas gubernatorial primaries this summer.

The stepped up violence campaign inside the school has resulted in:

1. The second suspension of Minnie Jean Brown for three days.

2. The kicking of Carlotta Walls by a white pupil.

* * *

3. AN ORGANIZED drive to force colored children out of the school.

Increased bomb threats to the school and accelerated threatening phone calls to individuals.

In the renewed and vigorous campaign of harassment last week, violence broke out frequently at the school with Minnie Jean the central, but not sole, target.

* * *

CARLOTTA WALLS reported that she was kicked on the same day Minnie Jean was doused with scalding hot soup in the school cafeteria by a youth identified as Lester Judkins Jr.

Earlier, Minnie Jean reported she was beaten over the head by Frankie Ann Gregg with a pocket book in another incident.

Minnie Jean and the Judkins boy were suspended three days by Principal Jess Matthews and the Gregg girl's parents voluntarily withdrew her from classes following the incidents.

The Gregg girl's parents said they withdrew her from school because Minnie Jean called her "white trash."

Young Judkins has repeatedly been involved in harassing the colored pupils at Central High, a source close to the school reported.

Carlotta Wall's assailant has allegedly been identified, but no action yet has been taken against him.

Shortly before learning of her suspension Friday, Minnie Jean stated:

"It's pretty tough to feel that you are the most hated person, the most hated colored person in all Little Rock.

* * *

"ESPECIALLY when you don't know why they hate you so. But how else can you feel when things like this keep on happening?"

The Gregg girl followed Minnie Jean from classroom to classroom for a full week shouting:

"N---r, I just hate you; I just hate your guts." Then she attacked her with the pocketbook, a source revealed.

Observers here speculated that the school violence was the work of forces favoring Gov. Orval Faubus' success in the coming gubernatorial primaries.

Faubus hasn't yet announced his candidacy for a third and precedent setting term for governor, but there is feeling that he soon will toss his hat in the ring.

Local observers view the racial incidents at Central High School as a new means of politicking by Faubus forces.

They speculate that Faubus wants to become the first governor of Arkansas elected three times on grounds of "having things in such a mess, no one else will want the job."

"Keeping the pot boiling" at Central High School is seen as Faubus' strategy for reelection and sufficient reasons to call a session of the state Legislature with an eye for more segregation bills.

* * *

IN A press conference Fridy, School Supt. Virgil Blossom was asked by an interviewer:

"Minnie Jean gets hit with a purse, gets soup spilled on her and then gets suspended. Why? I'd like to know what she did to get suspended."

Blossom attempted to place the blame for the tension at Central High School on both white and colored children until asked to find an episode prompted by colored children.

He failed to find an instance where the colored children were to blame.

Parents of the children suspended are scheduled to confer with Principal Matthews after the three-day expulsion period to ascertain when the children will be readmitted to classes.

An informant to the AFRO blamed the school violence on Faubus' desire for a third term, the failure of the school board, superintendent and principal to take firm action against the troublemakers;

And the failure of the Federal Government to prosecute mob members who originally initiated the trouble last fall.

* * *

THE SOURCE stated:

"Not even contempt of court charges have been brought against the well-known persons who precipitated violence in the beginning, despite ample evidence."

At the news conference, Blossom admitted that none of the Little Rock Nine had requested to be withdrawn from school, despite rumors to that effect.

The AFRO spokesman said that a mob of 40 to 50 white pupils inside the school are leading the harrassment of colored pupils, but that nothing has been done about it.

The source indicated that the purpose here was to provoke the children, individually or collectively, into acts that could lead to suspension or expulsion.

Minnie Jean is the only colored pupil ever suspended from the school. In failing to take action on the kicking incident involving Carlotta Walls, Blossom stated that:

No official report from the principal had been filed with his office, the AFRO source declared, adding:

"A steady flurry of petty harrassment, strategy worked out by the guiding whites, has been going on inside the school."

The source said Arkansas Attorney General Bruce Bennett, in another action, assailed the NAACP and promised to wipe it out in a speech here.

The informant quoted Bennett as saying:

"We all have a general affection for the colored race in Arkansas. We want them to have better homes and pay their taxes, but not over the prostrate bodies of those people who for 150 years have tried to help them."

Accompanied in his spee to Shrine Luncheon Club, the source said Bennett emitted the usual "Red - baiting, anti-NAACP" denunciations, when he declared:

"I am devoted to wiping out the NAACP."

In other actions two bomb threats and clamors of "down with the n---ers," hit Central High School.

A charge by Governor Faubus that troops at the school were following white pupils wherever they went, drew no comment from school officials and the Arkansas Military District.

Editor C. H. Jone's suggestion that Faubus create a biracial panel to work for improved race relations last week did not even get a reply from the governor.

In still another action, Rep. Brooks Hays (D. Ark.) said he would introduce a bill to Congress to develop all the facts in connection with the effect on the South of the U.S. Supreme Court's 1954 school decree.

Negro Student At Little Rock Is Suspended

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 12 (AP). — Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students at Central High School, was suspended today for two weeks and Superintendent Virgil Blossom recommended that she be expelled from the school for the rest of the year.

If the school board follows the superintendent's recommendation, the girl could enter the all-Negro Horace Mann High School, a spokesman said, or reapply for entrance at Central next year.

The girl's mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, said she would resist any order removing her daughter from the previously all-white school.

Miss Brown, a sixteen-year-old junior, has been involved in a number of incidents with white students. She was first suspended prior to the Christmas holidays for throwing soup at a white boy.

Later a white boy was suspended for throwing soup on Miss Brown. The latest suspension grew out of a name-calling, purse-weilding incident with a white girl. The white girl withdrew from school.

Minnie Jean Brown Ousted From School

Incident of Feb. 6 Leads to Expulsion

LITTLE ROCK.—The Little Rock school board decided Monday night, Feb. 17, to expel Minnie Jean Brown from Central high school for the remainder of the term.

The move was recommended by Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent. Minnie Jean claims she has been a main target of segregationists students during her five months at the school. She had been suspended twice and several white students also have been suspended in incidents involving Minnie Jean.

Blossom said the decision means the girl cannot attend any school, white or Negro, in the Little Rock district for the rest of this year.

Expelled Little Rock Student Welcomed

NEW YORK.—The New York Post said Tuesday that Minnie Jean Brown, expelled from Little Rock Central high school, will complete her year's education here.

The newspaper said it learned the 16-year-old girl will accept a full scholarship from the new Lincoln school, a private interracial institution with 432 students on W. 110th street.

On February 6, a white mother said her daughter struck a Negro girl with a purse at integrated Central high school after a name-calling incident.

Mrs. Frank B. Gregg jr. said she was withdrawing Frankie Ann Gregg from school because "I don't think she should have to put up with that sort of thing."

Mrs. Gregg quoted her daughter, a 10th grade pupil, as saying that she and Minnie Jean Brown, Negro, bumped into each other in a corridor. Mrs. Gregg said Minnie Jean then called Frankie Ann "white trash." Frankie Ann struck the other girl with a purse and the two scuffled briefly, Mrs. Gregg said her daughter told her.

Thursday night, Principal Jess Matthews said he had drawn up suspension notices for Minnie Jean and for Lester Judkins, a white boy. Judkins reportedly threw soup on the Negro girl in the cafeteria after the purse-slinging incident.

Negro Pupil Faces Little Rock Expulsion

By the United Press.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 13.—The superintendent of Little Rock schools today sought permanent expulsion of Negro student Minnie Jean Brown from integrated Central High.

Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom at the same time said he had suspended the 16-year-old girl for two weeks for her part in two separate racial incidents last week at the forcibly-integrated school.

Mr. Blossom appealed to the school board late yesterday to expel the girl because of the incidents in which she has been involved.

No reason for the action was announced.

Minnie Jean Gets Yankee Scholarship

NEW YORK (AP) — Minnie Jean Brown, 16-year-old Negro girl expelled from the Little Rock Central High School, was reported here today to have accepted a $1,050 scholarship to the New Lincoln School in New York City.

The offer was made for the private school by Dr. John J. Brooks, its founding director. It is believed that the girl will move to New York next week.

Minnie Jean was expelled in Little Rock Monday. School officials declined to give reasons. She had been involved in racial incidents.

"Our kind of school just can't sit by and not make some sort of gesture in a case like this," Brooks said.

"We are known as an interracial, intereconomic and experimental school," he said. "We're trying to do something for equal opportunity and to relieve the interracial situation."

Minniejean's tuition would be free. The school is a private inter-racial institution with an enrollment of 432.

Minnijean Brown To Enter Private New York School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 19 (AP) Expressing mixed feelings, Mrs. W. B. Brown today announced that her daughter who was expelled from Central High School will leave Saturday to attend an integrated private school in New York.

She confirmed an earlier report that Minniejean Brown, the 16-year-old Negro girl, would attend the New Lincoln School near Harlem.

Minniejean was offered a $1,050 scholarship by Dr. John J. Brooks, the New York school's founding director.

Gov. Orval Faubus remarked at a new conference today that Minniejean should have been permitted to return to all-Negro Horace Mann High School instead of being expelled from the Little Rock public school system.

Gets Free Tuition After Expulsion From Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 19 (AP) — The mother of Minniejean Brown, 16-year-old Negro girl expelled from Little Rock Central High School, said today her daughter will leave Saturday for New York to attend New Lincoln School there.

In confirming a report that Minniejean will accept a $1,050 scholarship to the school, Mrs. Brown said that "while I'm grateful I'm not happy.

"I'm not happy that our daughter must go away at this time to attend school," Minniejean's mother said. "I'm not happy that our own home town is permitting this to happen to us. I am not happy that children of both races are being hurt by selfish and hateful men."

Mrs. Brown said "It is my hope that Minniejean can leave Saturday so as to be able to begin school Monday."

Minniejean's tuition would be free. The school is a private interracial institution with an enrollment of 432.

Expelled Girl Leaving For N. Y. School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 19 (AP) — Expressing mixed feelings, Mrs. W. B. Brown today announced that her daughter who was expelled from Central High School will leave Saturday to attend an integrated private school in New York.

She confirmed an earlier report that Minnie Jean Brown, the 16-year-old Negro girl, would attend the new Lincoln School near Harlem.

Minnie Jean was offered a $1050 scholarship by Dr. John J. Brooks, the New York school's founding director.

The Little Rock School Board expelled her for the semester last Monday. It has not announced why. Minnie Jean contends she was suspended several weeks ago because she called a white girl "white trash."

Mrs. Brown said today in regard to the scholarship that "while I'm grateful, I'm not happy."

Gov. Orval Faubus remarked at a news conference today that Minnie Jean should have been permitted to return to all-Negro Horace Mann High School instead of being expelled from the Little Rock public school system.

Little Rock Girl Accepted At New York City School

NEW YORK—Minnie Brown, one of nine Negroes admitted to Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., has accepted a $1,050 scholarship to the New Lincoln School in New York City and is expected to enroll here soon.

The 16-year-old girl was expelled from the Little Rock school Monday. School officials refused to give the reason.

The offer to the private school was made by Dr. John J. Brooks, founding director, who said, "Our kind of school just can't sit by and not make some sort of gesture in a case like this."

Central High has been under federal troop protection since last September 25. A number of racial incidents flared in the school after the first day of integrated classes. It was reported that the expelled youth had been involved in several incidents.

Mrs. Brown said "it is my hope that Minniejean can leave Saturday, so as to be able to begin school Monday."

Minniejean's tuition would be free. The school is a private inter-racial institution with an enrollment of 432.

A spokesman for the school said today that the girl probably would live at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth B. Clark. Clark, a Negro, is professor of sociology at City College of New York and is a trustee of New Lincoln.

The offer was made for the private school by John J. Brooks, its founding director.

Minniejean was expelled in Little Rock Monday. She had been involved in racial incidents.

"Our kind of school just can't sit by and not make some sort of gesture in a case like this," Brooks said yesterday.

Negro Girl Goes To N.Y. School

Minnijean Brown resumed her education yesterday in an integrated Northern high school, outwardly rid of the tensions that pervaded her former Southern classrooms.

Said the 16-year-old Negro girl as she entered the New Lincoln School in New York City:

"Oh, it's just marvelous, it's lovely. I don't expect to have any trouble here."

After her expulsion, she accepted a $1010 a year scholarship from the New Lincoln School, a private, interracial institution.

Arkansas Girl Enters Class In New York

NEW YORK, Feb. 24 (AP) — Minnijean Brown resumed her education today in an integrated northern high school, outwardly rid of the tensions that pervaded her former southern classrooms.

"Oh, it's just marvelous, it's lovely. I don't expect to have any trouble here," said the 16-year-old Negro girl as she entered New Lincoln High School on West 110th St.

After her expulsion, she accepted a $1,010-a-year scholarship from New Lincoln, a private, interracial institution.

She was welcomed with a handshake by the school's white director, Dr. John J. Brooks.

Minnijean ascribed her Little Rock troubles to a campaign against the Negro nine by a hard core of about 50 among Central High's 2,000 white students.

"There was a campaign to get everybody out and I was first," she said. "I'm sure they'll get another one."

But she added of the segregationist students there: "They felt as right as I did. I don't hate them. They felt they were right and I felt I was right."

Ousted Negro Girl Arriyes In New York

NEW YORK, Feb. 22 (AP)—Minniejean Brown, 16-year-old Negro girl expelled from integrated Central High School in Little Rock, arrived today to enroll in a private interracial school.

Asked about incidents in Little Rock, Minniejean commented: "This is all in the past. I'd like to forget it. My education is the important thing."

She was greeted at LaGuardia Field by several Negro girls about her age who pinned pink orchids on her coat.

The plane which brought Minnijean, among the nine Negroes first to enter Little Rock's Central High School last September, was checked carefully before it left Little Rock. American Airlines had received a report that a bomb had been placed aboard the craft. No bomb was found.

"I'm praying constantly for the other eight kids," Minniejean said after arriving here. "They need it."

Expelled from Central High after being involved in a series of racial incidents, she has received a full scholarship from the New Lincoln School, a private interracial institution here. She plans to begin classes Monday.

Minniejean was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Imogene Brown.

Minnijean Gets Big Welcome In New York

The 16-year-old Negro girl, expelled from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., begins classes today at the New Lincoln School, a private interracial institution.

"My education is the important thing," the girl said on her arrival here.

BECAME A CELEBRITY

Until a few months ago she spelled her name "Minnie Jean." She changed it to "Minnijean," she said, "when I became a celebrity."

One of nine Negro students attending Central High under the protection of federal troops, she was expelled after a series of racial incidents.

She acknowledged calling a white girl "white trash." She said the girl had stepped on her heels and called her names.

"It was the first time I ever really got mad enough to say anything like that. I just let go," she said.

She added: "This is all in the past. I'd like to forget it."

The plane which brought the girl and her mother Imogene Brown was met by about 50 persons, members of the National Conference of Christians and Jews and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

"I'm praying constantly for the other eight kids," the girl said. "They need it."

Minnijean said she will decide later whether to return to Little Rock for her senior year of high school.

Expulsion Of Minniejean False Rumor —Dr Brooks

NEW YORK (ANP) — Rumors that Minniejean Brown, 16-year-old former student at Little Rock Central High School, faces expulsion, were branded false this week by Dr John R. Brooks, director of the New Lincoln School.

Dr Brooks said: "We have heard these rumors with astonishment, inasmuch as Minniejean Brown has made an excellent adjustment, is doing satisfactory work and has earned the friendship and respect of us all."

"It is astonishing to me," he added, "that this girl is able to do satisfactory work despite her impoverished academic background and the emotional impact of her prior situation and removal to New Lincoln School."

He said the faculty and the entire 433 student body — about 50 of whom are Negroes — are "delighted at the way this thing has worked out, and Minniejean has made it very easy for us in the whole situation through her poise and character.

The girl entered the experimental demonstration school on Feb 24, under a scholarship for the term ending June 8. Dr Brooks said her future plans so far "extend only through the summer during which she plans to visit her home."

Expulsion Of Negro Girl For Misconduct Recommended

Daily Home, Talladega Ala. Thurs. 2-13-58 p. 1

LITTLE ROCK, Ark —(AP)— Gov. Orval Faubus revoked the state franchise of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People yesterday.

And Supt. Virgil Blossom recommended the expulsion of a Negro girl from the trouble-ridden school. He said she violated an agreement not to fight back against white students' harassment.

Faubus signed a proclamation taking the NAACP and about 300 other corporations off the roll of chartered organizations because they failed to pay 1957 franchise taxes by a Feb. 1 deadline.

Under a 1953 state law, the NAACP could regain its franchise by paying delinquent taxes and applying for reinstatement.

The Little Rock school board heard Blosom's recommendation for expulsion of 16-year-old Minnie Jean Brown in a closed session. Blossom also extended a three-day suspension that she got Friday to two weeks.

Only the school board can expel a student but it usually follows a superintendent's recommendation.

Minnie Jean got the suspension —her second—for her part in a scuffle with a white girl student. The white girl quit school.

Last December Minnie Jean was suspended for throwing chili on two white boys in a cafeteria incident.

She has been involved in several other racial clashes at Central High.

Florence Callaway, 15, told newsmen that she was kicked in the knee by the heel of a Negro girl's shoe as they climbed a stair.

The white girl said Thelma Mothershed, 16-year-old Negro, laughed and continued on her way. The Negro girl later offered to apologize, the white girl said but she refused to accept the apology.

Jefferson Thomas, 15, Negro reported that an unidentified white boy seized him by the throat near the school gymnasium and threatened him. The Negro boy said the white student accused him of "bumping into me in the hall."

Principal Jess Matthews said he had no details on either reported occurrance.

Minnie Jeans' enrollment at Central High has been interrupted by her account, because of two words: "White trash." p. 3

The Negro girl said she hurled the invective at a white girl she contends was harassing her.

School officials sent a letter to the girls' parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Brown, which said in part: "Minnie Jean Brown was reinstated on probation Jan. 13 from a previous suspension with the agreement that she would not retaliate verbally or physically to any harassment, but would leave the matter to school authorities.

"After provocation of the white girl student she called the girl 'white trash' after which the girl threw her purse at Minnie Jean."

Minnie Jean showed a newsman the letter.

Thurs. 2-13-58

For five months, Minnie Jean said, the situation for her has been almost unbearable.

"I don't think people realize what goes on at Central," she said. "They throw rocks, they spill ink on your clothes, they call you 'nigger,' they just keep bothering you every five minutes."

Minnie Jean said she and the eight other Negroes who still attend the 1,900-pupil school were ordered to be humble to white pupils.

Expel Negro, Little Rock Board Asked

Constitution Atlanta Ga. Thurs. 2-13-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 12 (UP) — Supt. Virgil T. Blossom asked the Little Rock School Board today to expel permanently from Central High School a 16-year-old Negro girl who has been involved in five racial incidents.

Blossom also announced he has suspended the girl, Minnie Jean Brown, for two weeks for her part in two separate incidents at the integrated school last week.

Blossom, who does not have the authority to expel students but only to suspend them, made the decision after meeting with the girl and her mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, today. p. 2

In a letter to the girl's parents, Blossom said Minnie Jean had violated an agreement under which she was re-instated from a suspension Jan. 13 which followed a soup-dumping incident.

Blossom said that when she was reinstated, she agreed not to "retaliate either verbally or physically to any harassment by other (white) students but to leave such things entirely up to school authorities to handle."

Negro Girl's Expulsion Asked at Little Rock

Courier Journal Ky Louisville Ky Thurs. 2-13-58

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 12 (UP)—Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom asked the Little Rock School Board Wednesday to expel permanently from Central High School a 16-year-old Negro girl who has been involved in five racial incidents.

Blossom also announed he has suspended the girl, Minnie Jean Brown, for two weeks for her part in two incidents at the integrated school last week.

Blossom, who does not have the authority to expel students, but only to suspend them, made the decision after meeting Wednesday with the girl and her mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown. Any expulsion from the school must be decided by the School Board.

In a letter to the girl's parents, Blossom said Minnie Jean had violated an agreement under which she was reinstated from a suspension January 13 that followed a soup-dumping incident.

Tells of Agreement

Blossom said that when she was reinstated she agreed not to "retaliate either verbally or physicially to any harassment by other (white) students, but to leave such things entirely up to school authorities to handle."

The girl was involved in a purse-throwing incident with Frankie Ann Gregg, 15, and had soup poured on her the same day in the school cafeteria by a white boy, Lester Judkins, Jr.

The Gregg girl told school authorities Minnie Jean called her "white trash." The white boy was also suspended; the white girl was not.

Last week's incidents were the fourth and fifth racial entanglements in which the Brown girl had been involved since she and eight other Negroes entered integrated Central High September 25 under paratroops' protection.

The Negro girl's mother said she would protest Blossom's request for permanent explusion.

Legislature Investigating

Minnie Jean was first suspended December 17 for dumping a bowl of chili on two white boys in the school cafeteria.

Police said they had turned a threatening letter written to a white girl student at Central over to the F.B.I. Officers said the girl was involved in one of the racial incidents at Central.

Director Herman Lindsey of the Arkansas State police revealed that more than 50 persons have been questioned recently in an Arkansas legislative subcommittee investigation of the Central High racial trouble.

Times Union Thurs. 2-13-58 Jacksonville Fla.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 12 (AP) —Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students at Little Rock Central High School, was suspended today for two weeks and Supt. Virgil Blossom recommended that she be expelled from the school for the rest of the year.

If the school board follows the superintendent's recommendation, the girl could enter the all-Negro Horace Mann High School, a spokesman said, or reapply for entrance at Central next year.

Minnie Jean's mother told reporters of the suspension and recommendation following a closed hearing at the school board office. Blossom later confirmed it.

The woman said she would resist any order removing her daughter from the previously all-white school.

Minnie Jean, a 16-year-old junior, has been involved in a number of incidents with white students. She was suspended first prior to the Christmas holidays for throwing soup at a white boy in what Blossom called "a fit of temper."

Later a white boy was suspended for throwing soup on Minnie Jean. The latest suspension grew out of a name-calling, purse-wielding incident with a white girl. The white girl withdrew from school.

If the suspension is ordered, the board may be acting in defiance of a federal court order directing integration of the nine Negroes.

Minnie Jean was suspended for the minimum three-day period pending Wednesday's hearing at which it was extended for two weeks.

Since the superintendent does not have the power to expel, it will be up to the school board to determine whether his recommendation is followed.

NAACP Urged Little Rock Board To Halt Ousting of Minnie Jean

NEW YORK.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on February 13, urged the Little Rock Board of Education to "reject the recommended suspension" of Minnie Jean Brown ,16-year-old Negro student of Little Rock's Central high school.

In a telegram to Wayne Upton, president of the Little Rock board, Roy Wilkins NAACP executive secretary, cited the harassment to which Miss Brown and other Negro students at the school have been subjected. The suspension of Mi. Brown on the charge of "talking back to a white girl," Mr. Wilkins pointed out, "is an absurdity which your board cannot accept . . . in the extraordinary situation obtaining at Central high school."

The complete text of Wilkins' telegram follows:

"Your records will show that the New York office of NAACP has refrained from injecting itself into the Little Rock situation. However, the threatened permanent suspension of Minnie Jean Brown immediately suggests that in the interest of fair play in which Americans everywhere have a stake the board of education reject the recommended suspension. Minnie Jean Brown is formally charged in a letter from her principal with 'talking back to a white girl.' We submit that in an ordinary situation this would be an unthinkable basis for expulsion and that in the extraordinary situation obtaining at Central high school it is an absurdity which your board cannot accept. Making due allowance for the pressures under which you are operating we nevertheless feel that as responsible citizens you cannot approve of this tactic.

"In his letter the principal admits by inference that there was provocation in the Brown case, yet the provocateur has not been penalized in any fashion while the most drastic punishment has been recommended for Minnie Jean.

"It has been evident for several months that the continuing harassments at Central high have been the work of a very few individual students. Reasonable Americans who sympathize with your board as it wrestles with a situation made more difficult than it actually is, nevertheless wonder why the usual disciplinary measures inherent in firm administration have not been taken to curb the tiny minority and thus permit the more than 1,900 students to tatend classes in peace. Instead, the persecuted Negro students have been told in effect to grin and bear it and in silence, with the penalty of expulsion to be imposed for even 'talking back.'

"The overwhelming majority of white students at Central high has been fair. The substantial and thoughtful white citizens of Little Rock have been fair. The nine Negro students have conducted themselves admirably under trying circumstances. We express confidence that the board of education in considering the Brown matter will match this record."

W. B. Brown, father of the Negro girl who claims she has been the main target of segregationist students during the five months the Negroes have attended Central, promptly labeled the action as "very unfair."

The announcement came about two hours after Minnie Jeaen and her parents met with the board in a closed session.

Mrs. Brown said: "I shall consult my attorneys immediately and be governed by theier advice."

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, declined comment.

But Clarence Laws, NAACP field secretary at Little Rock, termed the decision "a clear abandonment of justice and fair play." He said, "It is difficult to believe that responsible school officials could . . . defend a situation where a mere verbal retort justified their sternest discipline."

School officials have declined to comment on reasons for Minnie Jean's latest suspension, which led to the expulsion order. Minnie Jean previously was suspended for about two weeks for throwing food on two white boys in the school cafeteria.

Last week Minnie Jean showed newsmen a letter which officials had sent to her parents. It sai din part:

"Minnie Jean Brown was reinstated on probation January 13 (from a previous suspension) with the agreement that she would not retaliate verbally or physically to any harassment, but would leave the matter to school authorities.

Supt. Blossom identified the white students suspended yesterday as Howard Cooper, Billy Ferguson and Sammie Dean Parker. In accordance with board policy, he declined to give details.

A. E. Cooper, father of the 16-year-old Howard, said his son was punished for wearing a billfold-sized card bearing the words, "One down, eight to go." The reference obviously was to Minnie Jean as the board was expected to sustain Supt. Blossom's recommendation.

Negro Student Expelled At Little Rock School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 18 (AP).—The Little Rock School Board last night expelled Minnie Jean Brown, one of nine Negroes admitted to Central High School last fall, for the remainder of the school term.

Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, who recommended the action against the 16-year-old girl, said Minnie Jean could not attend a public school, white or Negro, in the Little Rock district until next September.

The decision to expel Minnie Jean, who already was under a two-week suspension, came a few hours after Supt. Blossom revealed that three white students—two boys and a girl—were suspended after racial incidents yesterday at the 2,000-pupil school.

Called a wise decision—

Dixie hails suspension of Little Rock mixing

Birmingham News

Birmingham Age-Herald

By The Associated Press

State officials in the Deep South Saturday had warm words for a federal judge's action in postponing school integration at Little Rock, Ark.

In Louisiana, where segregated schools are under court attack, Sen. W. M. Rainach said the decision means the South can escape further Little Rocks.

"If the federal courts will recognize the fact of massive public opposition to the Supreme Court decision," said Rainach, "they will follow the pattern set by Judge Lemley and avoid future Little Rocks."

U. S. District Court Judge Harry J. Lemley granted the Little Rock School Board's request for a 2½ year suspension of a gradual integration plan for public schools.

'It won't work'

"I THINK IT is a very wise decision," added Rainach. "Integration just won't work where Negroes make up a substantial percentage of the total population.

"The flight of white residents from cities of the North to the suburbs in the face of growing Negro populations is evidence of this fact."

Sen. Stom Thurmond (D., S. C.) said "the damage done by the federal action at Little Rock cannot be undone by this or any other decision, but it is an indication that the federal court may have become wiser from this experience.

"Judge Lemley has at least indicated that a judicious approach and a consideration of the evidence was made.

"Even though Judge Davies erred in assuming jurisdiction in the original instance, had he considered the evidence and used such a judicious approach, the greatest domestic tragedy of modern times could have been averted. (Judge Davies ordered the high school to integrate last Fall).

"THE CONTRAST between Judge Davies' and Judge Lemley's decisions and actions emphasizes the necessity for adhering to the law requiring that locally resident judges be appointed to vacancies on the federal courts.

"It further illustrates the fallacy of allowing non-resident judges to sit in judgment on cases where local questions arise."

Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin was away from home and could not be reached for comment.

Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver of Georgia, now campaigning for governor in next September's primary, said the attempt to integrate the Arkansas school resulted in utter chaos and miserable failure.

"It did irreparable harm to the children involved and the teachers who tried to teach under bayonet rule," he said. "This latest action by the district judge . . . adds further proof to the fact that the social customs and long established traditions of any people cannot be altered by a court edict or federal troops if the people themselves are unwilling to submit."

HE ADDED THAT the people of Georgia will never "hand over our children to outsiders or anyone else for sociological experimentation."

Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison of South Carolina said, "I'm glad to see it. It will serve the useful purpose of giving the people a chance to get their feet on the ground and see just what may be ahead of them. Then they can make the decisions that are up to the people who pay for and operate the schools." Gov. George Timmerman could not be reached.

In Virginia, where some classrooms are threatened with being closed next September if they follow court orders to integrate, Gov. J. Lindsay Almond said the situation at Little Rock will be no better two years hence than it is now.

"The Little Rock case," he added, "is living proof that education will be destroyed through the mixing of the races in the public school system of that city . . .

"The testimony in the proceeding before Judge Lemley convinces me that the mixing of the races, even to the degree appearing at Little Rock, accomplished nothing but total destruction of the processes of education."

A former governor of Virginia, John S. Battle, termed the ruling "a tremendously interesting decision . . . It would appear the courts are beginning to realize that the attitudes and habits of a people cannot be changed by judicial decree." Battle is a member of the Federal Civil Rights Commission and formerly was an attorney for Charlottesville, Va., in a desegregation case.

Arkansas' governor, Orval Faubus, said the Negro citizens "would do well to accept today's ruling, which will do much to re-establish the normal and friendly relations which prevailed here before."

In Oklahoma City, Okla., the superintendent of city schools Dr. Melvin W. Barnes, said Lemley apparently felt his decision was proper in the light of a local situation.

"IT HAS BEEN my opinion that the federal courts have carefully studied the integration problem in Little Rock and have given much consideration to both sides," said Barnes. "Apparently the judge's ruling was made because he felt it was the proper thing in the light of a local situation."

W. T. White, Dallas, Tex., superintendent of schools, said the decision to delay integration of the original Supreme Court decree."

Little Rock citizens keep stony silence

Of more than 50 downtown shoppers queried about their feelings on the two and a fourth year suspension, a majority refused to comment.

Many parried questions by saying they didn't want to be quoted because of business reasons, friends or just personal reasons.

"Go peddle your papers," said one man—one of the few who would even answer.

"What I have to say you couldn't quote," snapped a young woman scurrying across the street with a small child.

'Never will work'

JOHN A. CASE, a white man, said the Negro students don't belong in the same schools with the whites. "It won't work now and it never will work. The court did the right thing."

Nineteen-year-old Nancy Newsom, a sophomore at Little Rock University, said "I just don't know if it will do any good to delay integration. It may give people a chance to work out a more sensible solution."

Little Rock Negroes Asking Judge Today To Reopen Schools

Plea To Stay 'Recess' Plan Before Court

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Negro attorneys, bracing for a possible summer-long legal fight to maintain integration at Central High School, will ask a federal judge Monday to stay his own order delaying integration.

"We may learn whether the Negro students return to Central High this fall," said Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, who filed notice of appeal from the ruling by U. S. Dist. Judge Harry Lemley of Hope.

If Lemley rejects a stay—pending the appeal—the case eventually could be carried to the Supreme Court, Branton said.

Lemley, a 74-year-old jurist who also is a respected amateur archaeologist, Saturday suspended integration for 2½ years as requested by the Little Rock School Board.

HELD 'UNWORKABLE'

At a hearing under Lemley two weeks ago the board said tension, violence and the presence of troops at Central had made integration unworkable.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People opposed the move. It said the constitutional rights of the seven Negroes still enrolled at the school would be abridged by postponement.

In a 35-page opinion Lemley agreed with the school board that the time for Negroes to enjoy their rights was not quite at hand.

This does not mean the court is yielding to unlawful force or violence, Lemley added. He said the delay could be a breathing spell in which a change in personalities and easing of racial tensions might help smooth integration at midterm, 1961.

PREDICTABLE REACTION

The reaction to Lemley's ruling in this city, which has almost become accustomed to the ebb and flow of racial bitterness, was fairly predictable.

Integration spokesmen were grimly silent or openly indignant. Segregationists were pleased but subdued. Both sides agreed one round was over but not the fight.

They were not talkative. A newspaper reporter who tried to question 50 persons at random got only 10 quotes but plenty of advice to mind his own business.

Gov. Orval Faubus, perhaps the most controversial figure in the integration controversy, said a delay might improve race relations even if it was not a real settlement.

TOUCHED OFF SEPT. 2

The racial crisis was touched off last Sept. 2 when Faubus called National Guardsmen to Central and ordered them to turn away nine Negroes from the school. He said he did this to prevent imminent violence. His opponents say he did it to ensure a third term as governor.

The seven remaining Negro students, whose mixture of triumph and ordeal at Central may be cut short by Lemley's decision, had no comment. They were told by NAACP leaders to remain silent about the suspension of integration.

Branton said that if Lemley granted his request for a stay the situation would remain as it was until Saturday—which means the Negroes still are enrolled at Central while the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals handles Branton's appeal.

If Lemley rejects the stay, Branton said, "we could present the motion to the 8th Circuit Court at St. Louis whether or not it is in recess, and they could act on it separately from the appeal."

Branton said the Supreme Court would be the next—and last—stop if the appellate court also rejected the request for a stay.

U.S. Judge Orders 2½-Year Suspension

Jackson Mississippi

Sat. 6-21-58

P. 1

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley today ordered integration suspended at Central High School here until midsemester of the 1960-61 school term.

Lemley granted a request of the Little Rock School Board, which had cited numerous troubles brought on by the admission of nine Negro pupils to the school last September.

Negroes attended throughout the school year under guard of paratroopers sent here by President Eisenhower and state National Guardsmen who were ordered into federal service.

Gov. Orval Faubus earlier called out the National Guard to prevent integration, but the troops were taken from his control.

TO AVOID FAUBUS

Testimony at the hearing which led to today's order indicated that one reason the board wanted the suspension for two years and a half was that Faubus presumably would not be in office at that time. He is now running for another two - year term as governor.

Lemley said, "It is by the court considered, ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendants be, as they hereby are, granted permission to suspend the operation of (the) plan of integration until mid - semester of 1960-61 school year without being considered, either collectively or individually, in contempt of this court."

"The court retains jurisdiction of this case for such other and further proceedings as may hereafter become necessary or appropriate," Lemley said.

The school board brought the case to federal court early this month, asking that the plan of integration be suspended.

VIOLENCE CITED

Witnesses for the school board testified that at least 40 fires were set in Central High lockers and told of other violence in the school which handed a diploma to its first Negro graduate on May 27.

Of the nine, Ernest Green graduated, Minnijean Brown was expelled and the other seven were underclassmen.

Several white students were suspended for anti - Negro actions and then reinstated. Minnijean was involved in five incidents before she was expelled — several of them food - throwing affairs in the school cafeteria.

Lemley's opinion was received in the mail today by Federal Clerk Grady Miller. Lemley said he issued the stop - integration order because of tension and violence in the school.

IMPOSSIBLE TO LEARN

School Supt. Virgil Blossom charged in the hearing of the stop-integration plea that it was impossible for students to receive a decent education in the tense atmosphere surrounding central.

In addition to the fires, there were about 37 bomb threats at the school and several incidents of pushing and food-dumping.

Little Rock Case Judge Is Old South Product

Jackson News

Jackson, Mississippi

Sun. 6-22-58

HOPE, Ark. (UPI)—The 74-year old judge who granted permission today for a delay in integration of Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., is a product of the Old South.

Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley was born in 1883 at Upperville, Va., and spent most of his early days in the atmosphere of southern tradition.

He received his formal education at Randolph-Macon Academy, the University of Virginia and Washington and Lee University.

After graduation, he and a brother moved to Hempstead County, Ark., and bought a plantation near Blevins, about 1912.

The two Lemley brothers set themselves up that year in law practice and were partners until the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt appointed Harry a roving federal judge.

In his earlier days, and before he chose a legal career, Lemley studied pre - medical courses, worked on a railroad and taught school. While in the private practice of law, he formed and served as vice president of a bank.

Federal Judge Orders Delay Of 2½ Years at Central High

Sun. 6-22-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 21 (AP)—"In the public interest, including the interest of both Negro and white students," U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope Saturday granted Central High School a breathing spell from racial integration.

The veteran Arkansas jurist granted a school board request for a 2½-year suspension of its gradual plan for public school desegregation.

Judge Harry Lemley

Under Lemley's ruling the seven Negro students still enrolled at Central at the end of the past school year would be barred from the 2,000 pupil high school this September.

In New York, spokesmen for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said an appeal would be filed promptly.

Gov. Orval Faubus, whose National Guardsmen last September turned away Negroes seeking to enroll in Central, commented:

* * *

"THE NEGRO citizens of the community would do well to accept today's ruling, which will do much to re-establish the normal and friendly relations which prevailed here before . . . this is not a final settlement of this problem, but it can prove a peaceful interlude."

The school board last Feb. 28 asked Federal District Court to suspend integration at Central High School until midsemester 1961 on grounds that incidents and tensions stemming from the presence of the Negro students had adversely affected the educational process.

The board said it could see no improvement in the situation if the Negroes were permitted to return this fall.

In reaching his decision, Lemley wrote in a 35-page opinion:

"The importance of maintaining education standards today is certainly no less than it has been in prior years; in fact it is more urgent. And while the Negro students at Little Rock have a personal interest in being admitted to the public schools on a non-discriminatory basis as soon as practicable, that interest is only one factor of the equation, and must be balanced against the public interest, including the interest of all students and potential students. . . .

"There is also another public interest involved, namely, that of eliminating, or at least ameliorating, the unfortunate racial strife and tension which existed in Little Rock during the past year and still exists there."

Constitution

LEMLEY SAID the granting of the board's petition did not constitute a yielding to unlawful force or violence, but was simply an exercise of equitable discretion and good judgment so as to allow a breathing spell in Little Rock and preserve educational standards.

Mon. 6-22-58

His decision was another chapter in the Little Rock crisis which began last September when, on the eve of the first year of in-

Miami Herald

FAUBUS

"The name of Faubus will go down in history with 'lynch' and 'Quisling' as a man who failed to do his duty and use his office to uphold the public interest," Harriman declared.

Vidkun Quisling was a Norwegian traitor during the occupation of his country by the Nazis in World War II.

At Little Rock, Faubus replied to Harriman by charging that "Harriman's speech is the first such statement which will be used along with left wing Eastern newspapers and magazines in a propaganda campaign that will become an avalanche before election day in Arkansas July 29."

Faubus is a candidate for third term nomination July 29

Harriman, who like Faubus is a Democrat, spoke at a reception sponsored by Local 6, Hotel and Club Employes Union. The local presented the nine students a race relations award and contributed $500 to a fund for their education.

One of the students, Ernest Green, who was graduated from Central High, spoke for the group. He thanked the people of New York for their support. But he added: "We found out that we did have some friends in Central High School."

"I am delighted as mayor of this city and humble New Yorker to welcome you young men and women from Little Rock," said Mayor Robert Wagner in a ceremony at City Hall. He shook hands with the nine youngsters.

Gov. Faubus Claims He Was Misled By Supt. Blossom

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas charges that Virgil Blossom, superintendent of schools at Little Rock and the secretary of the Little Rock Board of Education led him to believe that they wanted desegregation of Central High School postponed to avoid trouble.

The charge is made in a copyrighted interview in U. S. News and World Report, in which Faubus tells his own story of why he sought to obstruct the Federal court order for integration at Central High, making it necessary for President Eisenhower to send Federal troops to Little Rock and federalize the Arkansas National Guard.

Blossom told him of two or three organizations within the school, one with at least 70 members headed by an unidentified carpenter, that were determined to stop integration. These organizations, Faubus said, were in addition to the White Citizens Council and the Central High Mothers League which spearheaded the fight against desegregation of the school.

Faubus said he was "completely amazed" when Blossom testified in court that he had never given a thought to any disorder and violence after the superintendent had been talking with him for 30 days or more before school opened last September.

His decision to call out the Arkansas National Guard to block nine colored children from attending Central High was based on "a lot of information" he got from Blossom, Faubus said, but the governor admitted that the superintendent did not ask him to call out the National Guard.

Faubus Declares Ruling Not Likely To Affect Race

Little Rock Gazette

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus told a special news conference Saturday the court-ordered delay in Central High School integration would not affect his campaign for a third term.

With newsreel cameras and microphones before him, Faubus read a prepared statement lauding the decision of U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley granting the school board's petition for a 2½ year delay in its plan for gradual integration here.

Had the delay been granted before school opened last fall, Faubus said, "nine months of tension and turmoil would have been avoided."

Faubus referred to rioting and unrest which accompanied efforts to integrate Central High last September and minor incidents which broke out at the school throughout the year of troop-enforced integration.

In answer to questions, Faubus said Judge Lemley's decision "won't change my campaign as a whole."

School board officials said they asked specifically for a delay of 2½ years because even if Faubus wins a third term it would expire before time for integration to be resumed again.

Sen. Sparkman Says Judge Acted Wisely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John Sparkman (D-Ala) said Saturday tha the believed Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley acted "wisely and correctly" in suspending integration at the Little Rock, Ark. Central High School.

"The experience at that school shows clearly the fultility and danger of the federal government trying to legislate people's habits and customs at the state and local levels," Sparkman said in a statement.

"It would be far better for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and other sources of outside pressure to leave the South alone to work out its own racial problems."

Little Rock citizens keep stony silence

Birmingham News

Of more than 50 downtown shoppers queried about their feelings on the two and a fourth year suspension, a majority refused to comment.

Many parried questions by saying they didn't want to be quoted because of business reasons, friends or just personal reasons.

"Go peddle your papers," said one man—one of the few who would even answer.

"What I have to say you couldn't quote," snapped a young woman scurrying across the street with a small child.

JOHN A. CASE, a white man, said the Negro students don't belong in the same schools with the whites. "It won't work now and it never will work. The court did the right thing."

Nineteen-year-old Nancy Newsom, a sophomore at Little Rock University, said "I just don't know if it will do any good to delay integration. It may give people a chance to work out a more sensible solution."

School Board Hits Faubus Statements

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)— The Little Rock School Board, crossing verbal swords with Gov. Orval Faubus for the first time, says the governor last fall had praised its integration plan and had only minor incidents at Central High School.

BLOSSOM

Two statements issued by Superintendant Virgil Blossom and the board differed sharply from what Faubus said in a copyrighted interview published by U.S. News and World Report this week.

One statement was by the board. The other was in the form of excerpts from a statement Blossom said he gave to the FBI nine months ago.

The Blossom reply denied he told Faubus something had to be done to stop integration, that he feared violence at Central High, or that he asked Faubus for protection the day before school opened.

Blossom said he did get a telephoned threat that day and later told a police officer: "I think Gov. Faubus himself is behind this campaign of intimidation."

In the magazine article Faubus quoted Blossom as telling him before Central High opened: "We've got to get something done to stop school integration because there's going to be too much trouble."

Blossom said he never felt that way.

Faubus had said that on the day he ordered Arkansas National Guardsmen to surround Central, Blossom had asked him for protection. Blossom said he merely wanted to know where to reach the state police director if he needed him.

Blossom also denied Faubus' assertion that Blossom had a desk drawer full of pistols and revolvers taken from teen agers of both races.

He also denied — as Faubus had charged — telling the governor he had evidence of a secret society of 70 men who would be ready to take the law into their own hands to prevent integration.

Blossom said he told Faubus before school started:

"I implore of you that you do nothing which would cause the Little Rock School District to lose its court-approved plan of school integration."

Blossom said Faubus told him he had a "basic commitment and obligation to use state law to prevent integration."

Blossom said he was asked by FBI agents if he had made a statement to the effect: "If we don't stop this thing the blood of these children will be on my hands."

"Absolutely false," Blossom said he told the FBI.

The school board version was that it unsuccessfully sought a statement by Faubus that he would use his powers to preserve law and order if necessary.

The board said it never got such assurance but that Faubus praised its integration plan. In Blossom's words:

"He felt that most schools in the state would be wanting to use the Little Rock plan of integration as he personally felt that it was the best solution that had been offered in the U.S."

Ths school board had never replied to charges made by Faubus since the racial crisis began Sept. 3, 1957. The Blossom excerpt is believed to be the first public release of any of the FBI report.

The report was drawn up after a federal judge ordered an investigation of the integration controversy.

Troops called out by Faubus prevented nine Negroes from entering Central High. After the troops were withdrawn by the governor the Negro students entered the school and rioting erupted outside. President Eisenhower then sent federal soldiers to enforce the court-ordered integration.

Patterson Hails Arkansas Decision

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, Democratic nominee for governor, praised Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley Saturday night as one of the federal judges "finally coming to realize that intergation of the races in public schools of the South will not work, and that the people of the South will not tolerate it."

PATTERSON

"I was pleased to hear that Judge Lemley cancelled the order to integrate Central High School in Little Rock," the attorney general continued. "Apparently, his action was taken on the grounds that students could not get an education — a worthwhile one, at least — in such a tense atmosphere."

"As for Alabama, I don't believe the people of this state will ever tolerate integration of their schools, and if the federal government were to attempt to bring integration upon us by force, there would be chaos and disorder which well might cause us to see the destruction of our school system as we know it today."

LEGAL TOOLS

The nominee for governor said that he felt sure he had the legal tools in Alabama to maintain segregation of the races without violence and "to preserve our fine public school system."

Patterson described the ideal of integration in Alabama schools as "unthinkable," and he vowed that "we are going to win out in this fight and maintain segregation in Alabama!"

Patterson's ex-chief assistant, MacDonald Gallion, Democratic nominee for attorney general, described the federal decision as "gratifying."

Gallion said he was "indeed gratified to see a federal judge shake the mystic cloak of domination from Washington and the NAACP, and, for a change, act with some degree of common sense in dealing with the practical aspects of the integration problem."

GALLION VIEW

Referring to the phraseology of the May, 1954, Supreme Court decision requiring "integration with all due deliberate speed," Gallion said that it "should be construed from the standpoint of the time element involved with due consideration given to the prevading customs and beliefs of the areas to be affected by the ruling."

"A suspension of the order is hardly questionable after the Little Rock turbulence," the attorney general nominee continued. He added that "even another extension of time might be in order after the current one runs out."

He said that Lemley was to be congratulated for his "down-to-earth approach in viewing the situation in the light of the problem of dealing with human beings and reality, rather than a lot of high-sounding sociological and psychological theories."

GALLION MEADOWS

When asked for his opinion of the Little Rock decision, Supt. of Education Austin R. Meadows said that the decision "Shows consideration for peace and order in the school."

He described the lifting of the integration order as "most encouraging," and reaffirmed a previous statement that "I don't think education is possible without that peace and order."

The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., described the order as "an unfortunate decision which is naturally disappointing to all people of good will."

"It can only aid those people who approve of and live on violence," the Negro leader continued. "If such decisions continue to be rendered by the Federal Courts, the whole South will be plunged into an abyss of anarchy and mob rule."

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE HARRY J. LEMLEY

Federal judge orders delay—

Little Rock integration is suspended 2½ years

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 21—(AP)—Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., Saturday granted the Little Rock School Board permission to suspend racial integration at Central High School for 2½ years.

The decision, received by mail in the U. S. District Court clerk's office here, permits the school to remove the seven Negro students still enrolled at Central.

In New York, the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said it would file notice of appeal promptly.

Lemley heard the board's petition for delay in a three-day hearing here June 3-5. The proposed suspension was opposed by attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Nine Negroes were enrolled under protection of federal troops at Central High last September. One was expelled and another graduated this Spring.

LEMLEY SAID in his order that Central integration might be suspended until mid-semester of the 1960-1961 school year without the school board "being considered, either collectively or individually, in contempt of this court."

Gov. Orval Faubus cordoned the 2000-pupil high school with National Guardsmen last Fall and ordered the state troops to turn away nine Negroes despite a federal court order decreeing that the Little Rock gradual plan for desegregation begin.

He withdrew the troops in face of a U. S. District Court injunction that he and other state officials cease interference with desegregation.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER then ordered federal soldiers here and federalized the Arkansas National Guard to quell rioting that broke out on the Central High campus and to enforce the court order for desegregation.

In the hearing before Lemley this month, school board witnesses asked the suspension on grounds that the situation would be the same during the 1958-59 school year as it was the past year. The first year of the integration at Central was marked by harassment of the Negroes in the school halls and threats to bomb the building.

Wayne Upton, president of the School Board, quoted Faubus as saying he might again call out the Guard as he did last year and, Upton added, Faubus might not be the governor in 1961.

School Supt. Virgil Blossom told Lemley a suspension was needed to permit an improvement of community feeling toward the integration.

The NAACP attorneys sought to show that school authorities had not properly enforced discipline at the school and maintained that a breakdown in integration would violate the rights of the Negro students.

Judge Lemley Was Reared in Virginia

By Sy Ramsey

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 21 (AP)—Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley, whose decision today has temporarily turned back the integration clock here, is a painstaking jurist with a passion for archeology and an aversion to publicity.

He is talkative—but off the record. He no longer grants interviews.

At 74, Lemley, of medium build, walks with the aid of two canes because of an ailment affecting one leg. His deep blue eyes are alive with interest during court testimony.

Several years ago Lemley told a friend that he loved the South so much "it is almost a religion with me."

The Judge's roots extend back to pre-Revolutionary War days. His family settled in Virginia. He was born and reared at Upperville, Va.

He received his education at Randolph-Macon Academy, the University of Virginia and Washington and Lee University. Later he and a younger brother moved to the small town of Hope in southern Arkansas and organized a law firm.

Lemley bought an old plantation complete with ante bellum home. In his yard he has added a fireproof museum where Indian relics are housed.

The museum, one of the showplaces of Hope, attracts visitors from all parts of the Nation. His family furniture is an antique collector's dream — some of it handed down from 200 years ago.

Lemley plunged into the hobby of archeology long ago with the meticulous fervor that marks his court cases. He is quoted in archeological books and journals.

The Judge, his wife and two sons used to be active in digging for Indian relics and burials. Lemley's recent illness has ended his widespread searches all over Arkansas. His sons, who attended West Point, have etched careers in the Army and Navy.

Professional archeologists are grateful to Lemley for a major accomplishment. The Judge established an important timetable for Indian emigration in the lower Mississippi valley.

Lemley is a man of culture with a practical background. He took a premedical course, he worked on a railroad, he taught school, he farmed and he has been a banker.

The late President Franklin D. Roosevelt appointed Lemley as a roving U. S. District Judge in Arkansas in 1939.

Integration Suspended 2½ Years

U. S. Judge Rules 'Breathing Spell' Is In Public Interest

By Clifton Wells

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 21 (AP)—U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley today granted Central High School a breathing spell from racial integration "in the public interest, including the interest of both Negro and white students."

The veteran Arkansas jurist granted a school board request for a 2½-year suspension of its gradual plan for public school desegregation.

Under Lemley's ruling, the seven Negro students still enrolled at Central at the end of the past school year would be barred from the 2000-pupil high school this September.

Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, promptly filed notice of appeal here and asked in a motion that Lemley grant a stay of execution of his order until the appeal is heard in higher court.

Branton said that if Lemley refused to stay the order, the motion could be taken to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The appeal would be heard

n the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

Gov. Orval Faubus, whose National Guardsmen last September turned away Negroes seeking to enroll in Central, commented:

"The Negro citizens of the community would do well to accept today's ruling, which will do much to reestablish the normal and friendly relations which prevailed here before . . . This is not a final settlement of this problem, but it can prove a peaceful interlude."

The school board last Feb. 28 asked Federal District Court to suspend integration at Central High School until mid-semester 1961 on grounds that incidents and tensions stemming from the presence of the Negro stidents had adversely affected the educational process.

The board said it could see no improvement in the situation if the Negroes were permitted to return this fall.

"The importance of maintaining education standards today is certainly no less than it has been in prior years; in fact it is more urgent. And while the Negro students at Little Rock have a personal interest in being admitted to the public schools on a nondiscriminatory basis as soon as practicable, that interest is only one factor of the education, and must be balanced against the public interest, including the interest of all students and potential students . . .

"There is also another public interest involved, namely, that of eliminating, or at least amelioratinng, the unfortunate racial strife and tension which existed in Little Rock during the past year and still exists there."

Reasons Are Given

Lemley said the granting of the board's petition did not constitute a yielding to unlawful force or violence, but was simply an exercise of equitable discretion and good judgment so as to allow a breathing spell in Little Rock and preserve educational standards.

His decision was another chapter in the Little Rock crisis which began last September when, on the eve of the first year of integration at Central High School, Gov. Faubus surrounded the school with National Guardsmen.

On his orders, the state troops turned back nine Negro students who attempted to enroll at Central under a Federal court order approving a plan for gradual integration. Under the plan, desegration was to commence at the high school level, later in junior high school and finally in elementary schools.

Faubus voluntarily withdrew the state troops in the face of an order by U. S. District Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N. D., enjoining him and other state officials from interfering with court-decreed desegration.

Police to Protect School

Although the Negro students successfully entered the school under police protection Sept. 23, they were withdrawn the same day because of rioting multitudes of whites outside.

President Eisenhower the following day federalized the Arkansas National Guard—removing the troops from command of the Arkansas Governor—and ordered combat troops of the 101st Airborne Division at Ft. Campbell, Ky., to Little Rock to enforce the court order for integration.

Federalized National Guardsmen remained at Central to protect the Negroes throughout the school year—a period marked by racial incidents in the halls and threats to bomb the big high school building.

Judge Mentions Unrest

Lemley found that the racial incidents plus the presence of troops was a disturbing influence and created "situation of tension and unrest among the school administration, the classroom teachers, the pupils, the latter's parents."

"The source of trouble," he said, "was the deep seated popular opposition in Little Rock to the principle of integration."

He said that if the attendance of Negro students at Central were maintained during the next school year, troop protection would again be needed.

"Now, while troops can disperse crowds, and keep the Negro students physically within the school . . . the presence of troops cannot reduce or eliminate racial tensions, or create a climate that is conducive to education," he wrote.

Sees Education Available

Lemley emphasized that the stay of integration would not deprive the seven Negroes of a good high school education. He noted that the quality of education Horace Mann High School for Negroes is on a par with that at Central High.

Of the nine Negroes who enrolled at Central last September, Minnijean Brown was expelled and Ernest Green became the school's first Negro graduate May 29.

Minnijean entered the private, interracial new Lincoln School in New York City under a scholarship. Ernest plans to continue his education at Michigan State University, also under scholarship.

Both Judges Lemley and Davies were assigned here temporarily to fill a vacancy on the bench of the Eastern District of Arkansas. Lemley's home court room is in Texarkana, Ark.

Members of the school board met Lemley's decision with pleasure, segregationists with caution.

Wayne Upton, board president, said "I feel we made a strong case and I am well pleased with the results of the hearing."

Amis Guthridge of Little Rock, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council, said "we are highly pleased, of course, but the people must not be optimistic too early and let their guard down."

Segregationists Pleased

"I am grateful for the two-and-a-half-year delay," said Margaret Jackson, president of the prosegregation Mothers' League of Central High. "I hope that the U. S. Supreme Court may reverse its decision in that period."

Faubus, in his statement, said: "From the beginning, I pleaded for time to consider this difficult problem. Had the Little Rock, Ark., or in Newtime been granted, either in port, R. I., nine months of turmoil and tension would have been avoided, as well as the saving of more than five million dollars of public funds."

The Governor's reference of Newport was to his meeting with President Eisenhower there during the height of the crisis last September. The President refused to accept wording of Faubus' statement that he personally would interfere no further with Central Hig intefration.

The five-million-dollar figure was Faubus' estimate of the amount of tax money required to maintain Federal troops here.

Little Rock Wants To Back Down

The Little Rock school board went back into Federal Court last week to ask for the second time that its integration order be rescinded.

If granted, this request means that the eight children, integrated at Central High School since last September, would be sent back to a Jim Crow school. Afro-American p 4

The board states that it supports the constitution of the United States and is eager to carry out its proposed plan of integration.

However, says the board, it has met the opposition of the state government (Faubus) which tends to defy the Federal law and obstruct compliance with the order of the District Court. Baltimore

The board feels it has the responsibility of operating the integrated plan as directed by the court and yet it has no power to enforce the provisions of the plan. Dat. 3-8-58

* * *

Except for sending troops to patrol the school grounds, the United States Government, it says, has not made an effort to supress the interference now being encountered by school officials.

Nor did the Federal Government apply penal sanctions to the known persons who formed mobs near the school grounds, defied the court's order and interfered with the plan of integration.

The school board with good cause calls the Eisenhower's administration attitude toward its difficulties apathetic.

"We're left alone," the board says, the victims of extraordinary opposition on the part of the state government and a small group of children in Central High School which has been aided by adults.

The school board admits that this small group of children has created incidents which have made it exceedingly difficult for teachers to teach and for pupils to learn.

* * *

NAACP OFFICIALS term the board's petition without precedent in the history of the courts.

They propose to file an answer opposing the return to segregated schools and be represented by counsel when the hearing is held in Federal Court.

Former President Truman, speaking at a Democratic rally in Washington Saturday, tended to support the school board's argument.

Had President Eisenhower taken a firm stand and worked at it unceasingly day and night, the civil rights of the Little Rock children could have been protected without calling out troops, Mr. Truman believes.

* * *

THE PETITION of the school board indicates that the mere sending of troops, no matter how expedient, was not enough.

It is fairly clear now that the President should have followed up this move, through the Department of Justice, by prosecuting and securing convictions of the hard core of trouble-makers.

We have contended all along that the minority of Little Rock citizens who are fomenting discord at Central High will not desist until some of them are put behind bars.

If the Department of Justice can secure convictions of defiant mobsters in Tennessee, we say it can do it in Arkansas.

Great as is our sympathy with the problem of the harassed Little Rock school board trying to do its duty, we still must hold that the answer can never be found in a return to segregated schools.

Knowing that it is on sound legal and moral grounds, the board's most effective answer will be to maintain firm position and continue to ~~ss~~ local and Federal authorities and courts to enforce the law.

First Negro to get diploma—

Little Rock issue is still unresolved; graduation on tap

BY KEITH FULLER
Associated Press writer

LITTLE ROCK, May 24—(AP)— To the strains of a solemn march, 650 Central High School seniors will file across the football field next week to receive their diplomas.

For the first time, one of them will be a Negro.

His presence will represent integration in Little Rock, a page in history, violent, bitter and far-reaching, but an accomplished fact for at least one year. U. S. troops and an expenditure of nearly $5 million went into the accomplishment.

THE COMMENCEMENT EXERCISE will unfold in the stadium where the tough 101st Airborne Infantry had field headquarters when it guarded the presence of nine Negroes at the school last Fall.

But the school campus, first the scene of riots, then an Army encampment last Autumn, wears an outward aura of tranquility.

A few federalized National Guardsmen loll about the school and a jeep with two more soldiers slowly patrols the elm-lined streets.

To the delight of the Guardsmen, all of them Arkansans, their "baby-sitting" job will end May 29 when school closes for the Summer. The big unanswered question is whether they, or men like them, will be needed again next Fall to guarantee the safety of Negro students.

A federal court judge may answer the question summarily when he rules on the school board's petition to have its gradual integration plan postponed until 1961. His ruling may come June 3.

If the court holds that integration—launched last Fall with bloody fights, gripping tension and racial hatred—should proceed, the seven remaining Negro students say they will go back. President Eisenhower said the troops would return only if circumstances forced it, but that he would use troops to meet defiance to a federal court order.

IN HIS THIRD TERM bid for governor's office—a feat accomplished by only one man thus far in Arkansas history—Gov. Orval Faubus said he used National Guard troops to keep Negroes out of Central High School last September "in accordance with the wishes of a majority of the people, which was my responsibility."

Faubus said he would yield to the will of the majority "regardless of whether it is right or wrong."

Little Rock—shouted as an epithet at Vice President Nixon in Venezuela and spoken as an insult by anti-American elements around the world—has resumed its role as a normal quiet city of 150,000.

Conversation on buses, in cafes or on the street turns more to a discussion of business condition than integration.

But the outward calm may not mean the majority has accepted integration as an accomplished fact.

"I DEFINITELY DO NOT THINK it has been accomplished," commented Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council and an ardent segregationist.

"I think," he added, "it has been a flat, dismal failure. I think integration can be stopped, that it will be stopped and that it has been stopped. I mean here and all over the South. The effects of the valiant struggle of white parents against armed might has caused integration to be in disrepute not only in the South but in the North, East and West."

MRS. L. C. BATES, president of the Arkansas National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, declined comment on this aspect of the question because, she said:

1. The fate of the present integration at Central High temporarily is at stake again in U. S. district court where the Little Rock school has asked that its program be delayed for 2½ years. The board said it disrupted teaching to a dangerous degree.

2. She did not want to provide ammunition for Gov. Faubus, currently campaigning on a platform that emphasizes state's rights.

3. She did not want to stir the comparative calm that has prevailed in recent weeks.

A POPULAR HIGH SCHOOL SENIOR girl said the Negroes at Central no longer seem the center of attraction or abuse:

"The kids just don't seem interested in them anymore. The soldiers just sort of stand around and flirt with the girls."

FAUBUS' CHIEF ANTAGONIST is an eastern Arkansas judge, Lee Ward, who advocated "law and order" during the riots at Central High. A third candidate, Chris Finkbeiner, a Little Rock meat packing executive, has labeled himself a segregationist.

With the third term precedent against him, most observers say a decisive Faubus victory would be a mandate to resist integration with every means.

Segregationists say Mrs. Bates and the NAACP "will try to go all the way next Fall, get Negroes into every Little Rock school."

The day when "Little Rock" will again mean an Arkansas city rather than symbol for racial strife may not yet be at hand.

FEDERAL ACTION DELAYED
PUBLIC PRESSURE SOUGHT

Public Pressure Sought

Federal Action Delayed In School Integration

Christian Courier Wed 9-17-58

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Eisenhower administration expressed the hope Tuesday that public pressure by parents and children would force reopening of Southern schools closed to halt integration.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. of Virginia reacted promptly. He said it was the "old familiar technique of divide and conquer and this is what they've been trying to do all the time."

In Little Rock, Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas announced he was advancing by 10 dates the date for a special school vote in the city on admitting Negroes to the white schools. The referendum election now is set for Sept. 27.

The governor said the action had nothing to do with any public clamor for reopening the schools, however.

Faubus closed the four high schools at Little Rock after the U.S. Supreme Court ordered integration to proceed immediately at Central High. Almond shut the Front Royal, Va., school in the face of federal court desegregation order.

At Newport, R.I., Atty. Gen. Rogers conferred with President Eisenhower at the summer White House and then told a news conference the administration was holding up federal action "at this time" pending further developments in Arkansas and Virginia.

He said that "reports received from the communities involved indicate that the serious impact of what it means to have the public schools closed is beginning to be keenly felt and its significance more fully appreciated."

Rogers said it was hoped public pressure would force reopening of the schools involved. But he made it plain the government would take whatever legal action it could to get the schools open if local authorities failed to do so.

Federal Troops.

The attorney general did not rule out the possibility of federal troops being called out again as they were at Central High last year.

White House press secretary James C. Hagerty, who was with Rogers at the conference, was asked how the President reacted to a statement by Faubus that he would be receptive to another meeting with the President. "He hasn't any reaction," Hagerty replied.

In Little Rock, Faubus explained he advanced the date of the special election there because "the issue needs to be resolved as soon as possible so that we can find some means of educating the children." He said the September date permits using the current voters' lists. The voting period ends Oct. 1 in that city.

Lawyers said they did not know what legal value the referendum would have in view of the Supreme Court's ruling denying further delay in integration in the high schools.

Hits School Board.

Faubus also lashed out at the Little Rock School Board. He said "the board is using the children in its own pressure campaign in this cold war for integration."

He apparently referred to the board's action Monday suspending football and other extra curricular activities in the high schools.

The board replied in a statement Tuesday that its sole motive "was strict compliance with your proclamation closing the high schools which was presumed to close all activities . . . will you please advise us immediately as to which high school activities you intended that your proclamation cover."

In another development, Dr. T. B. Hay, a Little Rock Presbyterian minister, said he would seek to have evangelist Billy Graham, a Southern Baptist Minister, meet with Faubus in an effort to solve the city's school impasse.

The move came after reports that former Democratic presidential candidate Adlai Stevenson would be sought for the role.

Little Rock Payroll Peak Was $2,000,000

Washington (ANP) — During the peak of the integration controversy in Little Rock, the payroll for the Arkansas National Guard troops approached $2 million a month, according to figures recently released by the Army.

It was learned that no estimate was made on the cost of maintaining paratroopers who were stationed there because the Government would be paying them anyway, no matter where they were stationed.

But in the case of the National Guard the situation was different. Guardsmen were accustomed to drawing a day's pay for a weekly drill. But after they were federalized on September 24, they began drawing full Army pay. As a result, 10,600 Guardsmen drew a total of $1,754,681 from the Army in October.

The number of Guardsmen were gradually reduced until the number now stationed at nearby Camp Robinson is only 432 which received a total pay in December of only $124,185.

Of this number of Guardsmen only a handful patrol Central High School now to protect the nine Negro children attending classes there.

LITTLE ROCK SEEKS TO DROP ARMY CASE

Citizen Hopes To Appeal Fine In School Disorder

ARMY ARRESTED DUNCAN

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 13. — The City of Little Rock wants to dismiss charges against a Little Rock resident arrested by Army authorities during the height of integration disorders here at Central High School.

The man in question, however, said Monday he didn't want the charges dropped.

Fined For Disobedience

"I'm trying to get this issue to the Supreme Court," said Vernon Duncan, 37-year-old wholesale lumber dealer who was fined $51.50 here in Municipal Court about two months ago on charges of refusing to obey orders of an Army officer.

Mr. Duncan said he was the only one arrested by the Army during the integration unrest at the school. He said he was at a service station near the school having some gasoline put in his car when he was ordered to move on. He said he refused and was arrested.

City police made some arrests at the school during disorders, but court hearings on those cases resulted either in dismissal of charges or suspended fines.

The "nolle prosequi" motion in the Duncan case was prepared by City Atty. Joe Kemp late Friday and filed Monday with the Arkansas Supreme Court.

The city attorney asked the court to dismiss, first, a writ of prohibition filed by Mr. Duncan's attorney against Circuit Judge William J. Kirby.

City Asks To Step Out

Secondly, he asked the matter be sent back to Judge Kirby "for the entry of a nolle prosequi," meaning the city doesn't intend to prosecute further.

Kenneth Coffelt, attorney for Mr. Duncan, likewise made it clear he didn't want the matter dropped. He had first asked Judge Kirby to dismiss the Municipal Court fine without a hearing, but the circuit judge had refused.

The attorney then asked the Supreme Court to issue a writ of prohibition against the circuit judge's acting in the case, and oral argument on that motion has been scheduled before the Supreme Court for Jan. 27.

Judge Kirby said he didn't plan to take any action until the Supreme Court had ruled on motions before it.

Mr. Kemp indicated he might confer with the Supreme Court further on the matter Tuesday, but otherwise had no comment for the record.

The city attorney, during the course of the Municipal Court hearing, had objected to a ruling which changed the charges against Mr. Duncan.

Change In Charge

Municipal Judge Harry Robinson at that time dropped a charge of disturbing the peace and granted a motion by Mr. Duncan's attorney that charges consist only of refusing to obey orders of an Army officer "acting pursuant to the proclamation of President Eisenhower, Sept. 23, 1957."

Under such a charge, Mr. Duncan could raise issues testing the constitutional powers of the President in sending Federal troops here.

"We're going to get this case to the United States Supreme Court one way or another and I don't want them to drop the charges," Mr. Duncan said.

He added that he may file charges of "false arrest" if he is cleared on the present count.

TROOPS ARE BACK IN LITTLE ROCK EXPECTED

LITTLE ROCK — (INS) — Federalized National Guard troops were expected to return to integrated-troubled Little Rock Central High School Wednesday to be on hand when classes resume today.

Capt. James Smith, a public information officer for the Arkansas military district, said so far as he knew the troops would take up stations at the school Wednesday night.

At Camp Robinson near Little Rock, where the 432 remaining federalized guardsmen are stationed, it was learned that a platoon of troops had been alerted for Central High duty Wednesday.

When the Christmas holidays began Dec. 21, troops were removed from the school for the first time since Sept. 23, when Federal troops were used to maintain order and enforce a court directive that the Little Rock school permit nine Negro students to attend classes.

There had been some speculation that the Army might use this opportunity to remove the troops while classes are in session to see if disorder would erupt again as it did before the troops were called out.

LAST WEEK

Meanwhile, attorneys for the Little Rock school board were studying a ruling handed down last week by the New Orleans Court of Appeals, which overturned a Federal District Court order that Dallas, Texas, schools must integrate at the start of the new semester this month.

The appeals ruling said in effect that the District Court erred in ordering the Dallas school board to desegregate on a certain date instead, as the U. S. Supreme Court held in its 1954 integration ruling, "with all deliberate speed."

The attorneys were instructed to look into the appeals ruling by the school board to see if it might apply to the Little Rock case, where Federal District Judge Ronald Davies held last September, in a ruling similar to the Texas Court order, that Central High must be integrated immediately.

Shift guardsmen at Central High

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Federalized National Guardsmen at integrated Central High School have been more effectively disposed recently "based on our mission," the Arkansas Military District announced last week.

Asked what the announcement meant, military district spokesmen would not say, explaining simply that the military just does not discuss the details of a military operation.

• • •

REPORTS FROM pupils in the school vary. Some say they have noticed little or no change recently in the use of the troops, while others report that they have not seen any troops inside the school in recent days.

While pupils say the walking patrols outside the building have been eliminated but two or three jeeps still are on patrol around the school, military spokesmen say 25 or 30 troops are assigned to the school and troop strength hasn't been changed in several months.

Guards Return To Central High

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — Eight of nine Negro students enrolled in Little Rock's Central High school resumed classes Thursday under the protection of federalized Arkansas National Guard troops.

The ninth student, Minnie Brown 16, did not show up. She was suspended temporarily before the holidays for dumping a bowl of chili on a white boy during an incident in the school cafeteria.

The guardsmen returned to the school New Year's night, entered the school building — apparently for a briefing, and then took up posts on the campus. They had been withdrawn since Dec. 19, when the school closed for the holidays.

ENDS SPECULATION

The reappearance of the soldiers, part of the last 423 in federal service in connection with Central high's integration problems, ended speculation that the troops might not be replaced after the vacation pending further racial disturbance.

The National Guard was ordered to the school last Sept. 23 to maintain order and enforce a federal court ruling that Little Rock schools permit nine Negro students to attend classes.

When the guard first took over from U. S. army troops in the wake of prolonged violence, it had to deal with some disorder the first day. Since then, however general calm has prevailed.

STUDY RULING

As guardsmen resumed their duties, attorneys for the Little Rock School Board studied a ruling last week by the federal court of appeals at New Orleans, overturning a district court order that Dallas, Texas, schools must integrate as the new semester opens this month.

The reviewing court found that the district court erred in ordering desegregation in Dallas on a specific date rather than "with all deliberate speed," as defined in the basic 1954 ruling by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Attorneys were instructed to examine the New Orleans decision to see if it might apply to

Huddleston Seeks Probe Of Little Rock Troops

Wants To Define Ike's Authority With Aim Toward Abolishing It

BY GENE WORTSMAN
Post-Herald Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6—Rep. George Huddleston, Jr., will ask Congress to probe the President's authority in sending troops into Little Rock, the Birmingham congressman revealed today.

The congressional aim, he said, should be to remove any such authority from the statute books.

Huddleston said the inquiry should be conducted by the House Armed Services Committee, of which he is a member, and of which Rep. Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) is chairman.

He explained that defense is so important that it should come first but after it is completed, he is going to urge that Vinson go right into the Little Rock matter.

According to Huddleston, Congress thought that last year it repealed any presidential power to use Federal troops in civil rights or other disturbances which do not constitute insurrection.

Now the Congress should find of the President can use Federal troops under some other law, either stated clearly or ambiguously.

If the law is clear that the President can use troops, the law should be repealed.

If the law is open to interpretation, it should be clarified to prevent the President sending troops into communities in future conditions in where there is not insurrection.

Of course, said Huddleston, the President clearly has authority and responsibility to employ federal troops to squelch an insurrection, which is an uprising against the country.

"Anybody who says that little situation in Little Rock was insurrection should have his head examined," Huddleston head examined," Huddleston stated.

People all over the country, he added, are disturbed about the use of troops there, because it could set a precedent for use of federal troops any time citizens defy a federal court.

Then, said Huddleston, you would have something like a police state.

In the defense hearings, Huddleston said he will be interested in knowing the impact inter-service rivalry has had on missile development.

He also wants to know the effect th Budget Bureau and "other economy-minded agencies" have had on research and development "in this vital area."

"I hope we can remove the confusion in the minds of the American people as to where the responsibility lies for our lag in missile development," Huddleston declared.

The Birmingham congressman said he believes our defense and domestic needs can be met without new taxes even though the President's budget may reach new heights this year.

Guard Down To Day Duty At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 7 (AP).—Federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen are on duty at integrated Central High School in the daytime only as of today, another move reducing military surveillance at the school.

Guardsmen left Central High at 5 p. m. yesterday and will no longer serve at night, week ends or holidays on the campus. They will be at the school between 7 a. m. and 5 p. m. Mondays through Fridays.

The decision was reached by the Arkansas Military District after discussions with authorities at Washington and officials of the Little Rock School District, a spokesman said.

Meanwhile, eight of the nine Negro students attending Central showed up for class as usual. The absentee is Minnijean Brown, still under indefinite suspension for an incident during which she overturned food on two white students in the school cafeteria.

SUSPENSION ORDERED FOR LITTLE ROCK BOY

White Student Accused Of Kicking Negro Girl

2-WEEK PENALTY GIVEN

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 1.—A 17-year-old white boy involved in a kicking incident Wednesday at Central High School was given a two-week suspension Saturday.

However, school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said that a Saturday morning conference with the boy and his mother prior to the decision dealt only with the boy's "school program"—not integration.

Mr. Blossom recommended that the school board review the boy's record before he was reinstated. He noted that the boy already was under a suspension based on scholastic troubles before Wednesday's incident.

Accused of Kicking

The suspended student is Richard Boehler, who was accused by Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students, of kicking her in a brief argument which occurred after classes Wednesday near a side entrance to the school building.

The girl later unsuccessfully sought a warrant for the youth's arrest, and young Boehler Friday described her as a "troublemaker."

Mr. Blossom said the suspension will date from Wednesday. The recommendation that the school board review the suspension was the first incident indirectly referred to the board. Past incidents have been handled solely by Mr. Blossom and Central High Principal Jess W. Matthews.

Minnie Jean Brown has been involved in several incidents at the school since integrated classes started, and was suspended for two weeks earlier in the school year. Mr. Blossom declined comment when asked if her record was again to be reviewed as a result of the incident involving young Boehler.

There were indications, however, that such a step might be taken.

Live Grenade Found

Pulaski County deputies had in their possession Saturday a live hand grenade found under an empty house about six blocks from Central High School. It was reported to Sheriff Tom Gulley Friday afternoon.

The grenade was found by a carpenter making repairs to the house. Officers didn't know if it had been placed there during earlier integration disorders in the Central High area.

School is scheduled to reopen Monday following a revival of speculation last week that Federal troops might soon be removed. Atty. Gen. William B. Rogers was reported to have told Republican leaders in Washington Friday that the troops will be removed "at the earliest possible moment consistent with public safety."

An earlier report in Little Rock during the week speculated that a "removal date" of March 1 was being considered. But there was no confirmation of either report by army officials here.

BOMB SCARE

Little Rock School Gets Bomb Scare

Daily News
Jackson, Miss.
Fri 1-17-58

National Guard Scours Building But Finds No Trace Of Explosive

LITTLE ROCK (AP)—A bomb scare sent armed National Guardsmen swarming through integrated Central High School last night, but a search of the huge brick building apparently uncovered no explosives.

The federalized troops found "no indication of any evidence" of a bombing, a spokesman for the Arkansas Military District said. Other Army officers insisted that the surprise maneuver was merely "a practice alert."

About an hour before the soldiers arrived at the four-square-block campus, military authorities, Little Rock police headquarters and a newspaper had received anonymous telephone calls that "something was going to happen to Central High School."

"They're from out of town; they're going to blow up the school," a woman caller shouted almost hysterically into a newsman's ear.

At 9 p. m. two jeeps and a bus carrying an estimated 36 guardsmen reached the campus. The rumors that "something was going on" brought hundreds of onlookers to the school in automobiles.

TROOPS ENTER

The troops, under the command of an unidentified colonel, dashed into the dark building and flashlights were seen moving from room to room.

The colonel was asked about the presence of the troops. He replied sharply, "No statement," and ordered news photographers to take no pictures.

City police patrolling the area stopped Ed Martin of The Associated Press and Ken Johnson of the Memphis Commercial Appeal and warned: "You'd better stay out of here the rest of the night."

In recent weeks the federal troops, protecting nine Negro students attending classes with some 2,000 whites, have been stationed at Central High only during school hours. The night guard has been left to civilians employed by the school.

Yesterday, despite a reported lunch hour incident, was the first day since Sept. 25 that the federal soldiers ordered here by President Eisenhower to enforce a court order for integration were not satisfied outside the school building.

TO PATROL HALLS

An Army spokesman explained that the new policy did not mean a reduction of force. He said guardsmen would continue to patrol the halls.

The normal troop strength at Central recently has been about 12.

An official at military district headquarters said it probably would not be necessary for "the alert platoon to remain at the school . . . because it is not believed that anybody would perform an act of that nature (bombing) in this community."

Classes were dismissed for the weekend to allow teacher additional time to grade final examinations.

Mrs. Thomas Sontag said that her 16-year-old ward, a student at Central High, had spilled soup on a Negro girl in the cafeteria.

She said David Sontag, her brother-in-law, told her that he threw the soup on Minnie Jean Brown because the Negro girl had called him "white trash" the day before.

School Supt. Virgil Blossom said Central High officials were investigating the incident.

Minnie Jean Brown only this week was removed from the suspended list. School authorities said that the girl in anger had spilled chili on two white boys. This incident also occurred in the cafeteria.

Troops Search Little Rock High, Apparently For Bomb

Courier Charleston S.C. Fri 1-17-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 16 (AP) — Armed National Guardsmen, their officers insisting officially that "this is a practice alert," searched integration-troubled Central High School tonight.

They apparently were looking for a bomb, despite the assertions that it was no more than a routine maneuver. Earlier, a high National Guard officer, who would not be identified, said the troops suddenly were ordered to the school because of a "bomb scare."

Flashlights were seen moving from room to room shortly after an estimated 36 soldiers entered the high school building at 9 p.m. Later, city policemen ordered all newsmen out of the area and there were no immediate reports as to what, if anything, was found in the search.

A spokesman for the Arkansas Military District said the troops would stay at the school "some time." He added, "This practice alert has nothing to do with the cafeteria incident."

The Central High cafeteria during the noon hour had been the scene of a soup-throwing incident involving a white boy and a Negro girl.

Classes were dismissed for the weekend today—the holiday being granted to allow teachers extra time in which to grade final examination papers.

An hour before the troops were ordered out, rumors began to circulate that something was about to happen at the high school.

Asked about the presence of the troops, the unidentified colonel said "no statement" and disappeared inside the building.

An hour earlier rumors began to circulate that something was about to happen at the high school.

An unidentified woman, sounding nearly hysterical, called the Arkansas Gazette, and said: "They're from out of town. They're going to blow up the school."

In recent weeks, the school has been guarded at night by civilians. Troops are stationed at the school only during class hours.

Earlier today, a white student's guardian reported that her ward had dumped a bowl of soup on a Negro girl because she had called him "white trash," the day before.

Mrs. Thomas Sontag said her 16-year-old brother-in-law, David Sontag, told her that he dumped the soup on Minniejean Brown. The incident occurred in Central's cafeteria.

Mrs. Sontag said David did not tell her why the girl had called him "white trash."

School Supt. Virgil Blossom confirmed the soup incident.

"There was a food-throwing incident about 1:20 p.m., between a white student and a colored student," he said. "Who provoked the trouble we are not certain at this time. An investigation is being made by officials of the school."

The Brown girl was only reinstated this week after serving a suspension for spilling food on two white boys in the school cafeteria.

Mrs. Sontag said that as far as she knew David had not been suspended as a result of today's incident.

Mrs. Sontag declined to say whether she was a member of the prosegregation Mothers League of Central High, but she said that David had not been in trouble before.

A white girl, Darlene Holloway, now is under an indefinite suspension. Although Blossom has said her story disagrees with reports from Central High officials, the Holloway girl said she was suspended after she pushed a Negro girl and the Negro threatened to hit her. Mrs. Fred Gist, Darlene's mother, has asked a hearing before the school board and threatened court action if she does not receive satisfaction.

Since resumption of classes Jan. 2 after the holidays, about a dozen guardsmen have been stationed on school days at Central High, where nine Negroes are enrolled with some 2,000 white students.

Bomb plot report follows agitation at Little Rock

(Special To AFRO)

LITTLE ROCK — A bomb plot rumor and new trouble inside Central High School followed the annual meeting here, last week of the Capital Citizens' Council.

Federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen taking "precautionary measures," searched the school last Wednesday following a series of reports that the school would be bombed.

No bombs were found and civilian night guards were returned to duty, with troops stationed there only during day school hours.

Inside the school, intensified harassment of the nine colored pupils was reported as Minnie Jean Brown became the target again of a food-throwing incident.

His sister-in-law, Mrs. Thomas Sontag said the boy admitted, dumping a dish of food on the girl.

Miss Brown was recently readmitted to school after an eight-day suspension growing out of another food-spilling episode.

At the meeting of the Capital Citizens Council in the Hotel Marion here, Roy V. Harris of Georgia was the featured speaker.

Other speakers were Robert B. Patterson of Indianola, Miss., founder and secretary of the Citizens Councils of America and John U. Bard of New Orleans, chairman of the Federation for Constitutional Government.

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, president of the Little Rock Capital Citizens Council and the Rev. L. D. Foreman, chaplain of the council, were others on the program.

Harris said:

"Little Rock has Ike (President Eisenhower) over a barrel.

"If the people of Little Rock stand pat and he is forced to keep troops here from now on, he will be the laughing stock of the nation and the world."

In another action, a white woman whose daughter was suspended from Central High School, has threatened court action if her girl is not reinstated soon.

She is Mrs. Fred Gist, mother of 17-year-old Darlene Holloway.

* * *

THE WOMAN'S daughter was suspended as a result of an incident with Miss Elizabeth Eckford, one of the nine colored students.

Meanwhile, in North Little Rock, W. A. Fair, president of that city's NAACP chapter, pleaded not guilty Wednesday of violating the Bennett ordinance.

The Bennett law, an anti-NAACP measure, would compel certain groups to turn over their membership and financial lists to the city.

* * *

UPON THE motion of Mr. Fair's attorney, George Howard, Circuit Court Judge William J. Kirby continued the case until April 16.

The case was an appeal of a $25 fine assessed against Mr. Fair when Municipal Court Judge Milton McLees convicted him last Dec. 5.

Mrs. Bates is appealing a $100 fine and costs, levied upon her by the Little Rock Municipal Court.

The President stated:

"I hope that the local officials in Little Rock can soon express their confident intention of maintaining order and peace in their town.

"That, having been expressed, I see no reason for keeping any of the National Guard."

Little Rock Has Dynamite Scare; FBI Probe Set

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The Justice Department Monday authorized the FBI to investigate the finding of dynamite in a locker at Little Rock's Central High School.

The department said the FBI would "determine if any violation of federal law was involved."

Officials declined to elaborate.

The FBI made an investigation of disorders at the school last September when nine Negro children enrolled under a federal court desegregation order.

Herald P.I

After getting a lengthy report on these disorders, the department adopted a mark time policy with respect to possible federal prosecution of those involved.

Tue 1-21-58

But officials indicated that if further disorders occurred involving the same persons this policy might be changed.

The discovery of the dynamite climaxed a hectic first day of the new semester that was filled with rumors and tension. Earlier in the morning a Negro student — one of the nine whose integration into Central High touched off the Little Rock crisis — was knocked down by a white boy. Both were sent to the principal's office.

Miami Fla.

Superintendent of Schools Virgil Blossom said an investigation of the incident is pending.

BLOSSOM

The search for the dynamite was carried out while some students were attending classes and others were lunching in the basement cafeteria, just a few yards from where a stick was found.

Acting Police Chief Eugene Smith said he believed the dynamite was put there "not to blow up anything but to create hysteria."

Blossom commented: "It appears that this is a part of a campaign to try to force us to close the school. This is an opinion on which the police, FBI and military agree.

"We further feel that no one in this community would actually carry out anything of this sort that would result in harm to the children."

Central High School now is guarded on school days by federalized guardsmen of the Arkansas National Guard. Without comment, the military resumed its outside patrols Monday morning. They had been discontinued about 10 days ago.

It was a holiday for Central High's 2,000 white students and nine negro pupils. But the Army said no one at military district headquarters had been advised of this, so a regular daytime patrol was sent out.

The Little Rock Police Department said no officers would be assigned to the Central High area tonight. A police spokesman said he understood the school planned to hire a few off-duty patrolmen to augment the force of watchmen.

The bomb scare followed another racial incident at Central High during schools hours yesterday.

Mrs. Thomas Sontag said her 16-year-old ward, David Sontag, poured soup on a Negro girl in the cafeteria after the Negro girl called him "white trash."

School officials have declined to say whether the Sontag boy was suspended for the incident. Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said Principal Jess Matthews was conducting an investigation.

Troops Find No Bomb At Little Rock

News & Courier Charleston S.C.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 17 (AP)—The Army tonight turned the mission of guarding Central High School back to civilian watchmen for the weekend.

This was in line with the military's recent policy of keeping troops at the forcibly integrated school only during classroom hours.

The policy was altered for the first time in weeks last night when reports of a possible bomb planting sent a platoon of soldiers hurrying to Central High.

Officials of the Arkansas Military District announced today that a thorough search of the building failed to reveal any evidence of a bomb. Troops were withdrawn shortly after midnight, a spokesman said, and a normal class day

Little Rock Central High Negro Graduate Says Future 'Pioneer Students' Should 'Turn Cheek'

CHICAGO — (UPI) — One of the nine Negro students who attended the integrated high school at Little Rock, Ark., advised future "pioneer students" who meet antagonism in newly desegregated schools in the South to "turn the other cheek."

Ernest Green, 16, who became the first Negro to graduate from Central High urged such students to strive primarily "to be just another student and blend in — turn the other cheek." There might not have been any trouble at Little Rock, he added, were it not for "outside influences."

The nine students and Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas State chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), arrived in Chicago Thursday to receive the 12th annual Robert S. Abbott Memorial award, a national Negro citation for public service.

The award was made by John H. Sengstacke, editor and publisher of the Chicago Dfender and nephew of the newspaper's founder, Robert S. Abbott, for whom the award is named.

Mrs. Bates said that even after the Negro students were admitted to Central High a "small group" of white students continued a psychological war with small harassments, shouting name calling and the like.

She emphasized, however, that the majority of white students accepted integration peacefully.

The students were agreed that they bore no ill feelings toward those white students who tried to keep them out.

"We have no feelings of contempt for them," Minnijean Patillo, 15, said.

"We understand the environment in which they have grown up and what the South has taught them. We only hope they can learn the Christian way of life. No, we have no contempt at all."

Green said he planned to accept a scholarship to Michigan State University in the fall and until then would hold a summer job in New York City. He said he hoped to enroll in a pre-law course at MSU.

Green graduated from Central High school Tuesday night, May 27, while 120 federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen, 100 policemen and plainclothes detectives were on hand to guard against any demonstrations.

A guardsman with a billy club followed Green last Monday as he went through rehearsal for the program. When Green's name was called to receive his imaginary diploma, a few students laughed, but most of them applauded.

Police Chief Eugene G. Smith and several detectives watched from a distance and reporters and photographers were instructed to remain on the outskirts of the practice ceremonies.

Ronnie Hubbard, 17 - year - old senior class president, told his classmates "I know everyone will do what is right Tuesday night. I don't think anybody wants to do anything to ruin our commencement."

All the students present, including Green, applauded Hubbard's words, and school Principal Jess W. Matthews echoed the class president's statement with "I hope you will take it on yourselves to see that everything goes right."

Meanwhile, reporters from five national Negro publications, who were in Little Rock for the ceremonies, protested being banned from the stadium.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom told them the school board voted "some time ago" to bar the colored press and said he does not have authority to alter the board's decision.

The school board limited admission to ticket holders and handed out eight tickets to each senior to give his parents and friends. The board said newsmen would be limited to upper rows of the stadium, and photographers — save one from each of the two Little Rock newspapers — would be prohibited.

About 500 persons, meeting at a rally of the Capitol Citizens Council in Little Rock Monday night, commended Dr. W. M. Caskey, professor of social science at Mississippi college, Clinton, Miss., for declaring Thursday "Liberation Day in Arkansas."

Several boxes of postcard-sized cards, printed in red, white and blue, were passed out at the meeting. The cards read "Eisenhower Go Home,' and in large-size type "Liberation Day, May 29th."

Caskey also criticized Evangelist Billy Graham for advocating integration. Caskey said Graham has demonstrated "a soft spine."

CENTRAL HIGH'S FIRST NEGRO TO GET DIPLOMA

Little Rock, Ark., May 24 (AP) —To the strains of a solemn march, 650 Central High school seniors will file across the football field next week to receive their diplomas.

For the first time, one of them will be a Negro.

His presence will represent integration in Little Rock, an accomplished fact for at least one school year. United States troops and an expenditure of nearly 5 million dollars went into the accomplishment.

The school campus, first the scene of riots and then of an army encampment, now wears an aura of tranquility. A few federalized national guardsmen loll about the school and a jeep with two soldiers slowly patrols the elm lined streets.

To the delight of the guardsmen, all of them Arkansans, their "baby sitting" job will end May 29, when school closes for the summer.

But Will They Be Back?

The question is whether they, or men like them, will be needed again next fall to guarantee the safety of Negro students.

A federal court judge may answer the question June 3. If he holds that integration should proceed, the seven remaining Negro students say they will go back. The school board has petitioned to have its original integration plan postponed until 1961.

In his third term bid for the governorship, Gov. Orval Faubus said he used national guard troops to keep Negroes out of Central High school last September "in accordance with the wishes of a majority of the people, which was my responsibility." Faubus said he would yield to the will of the majority "regardless of whether it is right or wrong."

But the outward calm may not mean the majority has accepted integration as an accomplished fact.

"I definitely do not think it has been accomplished," commented Amis Guthridge, attorney for the Capital Citizens council and an ardent segregationist. "I think it has been a flat, dismal failure."

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, noted the scheduled graduation next Tuesday of Ernest Green, 17, the only senior among the eight Negroes at the school, and said:

Students Ignore Problem

"I'm very happy with this progress, altho it is said that Ernest has to be graduated under pressure. He was not able to participate in any activities related to the graduation."

She said she expects the remaining seven Negroes to graduate "if the federal court upholds the original plan of the school board."

A popular high school senior girl said the Negroes at Central no longer seem the center of attention or abuse.

Has integration made progress among the so-called in betweens—those neither radical for or against?

A Central High teacher said, "I think some parents lost interest in the question after the hectic first term. But one must make some qualifications: Whether you mean those who opposed it are now for it, or those who opposed it now tolerate it. I think the latter is more correct."

Little Rock Grad Gets Scholarship From Mich. State

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (NNPA) - Earnest Green, the first colored graduate from Central High School here, scene of rioting over desegregation, has been granted a scholarship by Michigan State University.

Earnest, 16, who received his diploma Tuesday night, May 27 with 601 classmates, applied to Michigan State for the scholarship. He would like to enroll this fall as a pre-law student.

At East Lansing, Mich., Robert Stewart, Michigan State scholarship committee chairman said the scholarship would be worth $555 a year and amounted to the regular out-of-state tuition fee.

Mr. Stewart said the award actually was approved May 4, but Earnest had not yet filed a formal enrollment application.

In addition to the university's grant, Mr. Steward said the national scholarship service and fund for colored students had indicated it would grant Earnest $399 to $500. He added that Earnest had been saving since childhood for a college education and would also get help from an aunt and his parents.

Little Rock Negro Asks Scholarship At Michigan State

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Ernest Green, first Negro graduate from Little Rock, Ark., Central High School scene of conflict over school desegregation, has applied for a scholarship to Michigan State University.

Bob Stewart, MSU scholarship committee chairman, said he had received Green's academic records and that he was in the top 10 per cent of his class. He is particularly interested in a science course, Stewart said.

Green was referred to Michigan State by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro students.

"We would be most anxious to have this young man as a student at Michigan State," Stewart said. "From the face of his high school record, he could make a valuable contribution here."

EAST LANSING, Mich.— Michigan State U. has granted a $555 per year scholarship to Ernest Green, first Negro graduate of Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

The grant is equivalent in worth to the regular out-of-state tuition fee.

J. Robert Stewart, MSU scholarship committee chairman, said that the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro students has also indicated that it will grant Green from $300 to $500.

GREEN FINISHED in the top ten per cent of his class. He was numbered among 600 who graduated from Central High.

The only incident to mar the exercises at the Little Rock school occurred when 18-year-old Curtis E. Stover spit into the face of an unidentified Negro girl.

All eight Negroes in attendance at Central High School made passing grades and one of them made the honor roll, according to Principal J. W. Matthews.

Bar Negro Press At Central Rites

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI)— Baccalaureate services at integrated Central High school came off quietly Sunday night, but five Negroes and a white boy were arrested outside the stadium.

Police charged two of the five Negroes with carrying concealed weapons—a pistol and a long knife—and arrested the white boy for spitting on a Negro spectator as the students and parents filed out of the stadium.

Police identified the two Negroes as Vernon Barnes and Frank Ashew, both "over 20." They were arrested a block from the school an hour before the services began.

BECOMES FIRST

Taking part in the baccalaureate was Ernest Green, 18, one of the nine Negroes who integrated the school last September with the help of armed paratroopers.

He is scheduled Friday to become the first Negro ever to receive a degree from Central High.

Newsmen were told by police to sit down in their roped-off section at the top of the stadium 15 minutes before services started. Two Negro reporters and a Negro photographer were barred, although about 15 Negro spectators attended.

The barred Negroes, Simeon Booker and Ernest Withers of Jet and Ebony publications and Miss Sarah Black of the New York Amsterdam News, said School Superintendent Virgil Blossom told them the school board wouldn't allow them to attend.

When Blossom was asked if this was true, he said "you didn't ask me that. You didn't see me tonight." He said to ask him the question again today.

Negro Gets Diploma Under Heavy Guard In Little Rock

By SY RAMSEY

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)— Central High School awarded a diploma to a Negro for the first time in an orderly commencement protected by 220 city police and federalized National Guardsmen Tuesday night.

Shortly after the ceremony the soldiers left the school area.

There were no incidents at the floodlit stadium.

"I'm happy that's all over," said Ernest Green, the lanky 16-year-old Negro who made history. "I'm going to New York to live it up."

Green said a New York hotel restaurant union had invited him to spend a week's vacation there beginning June 12. He said he hopes to enter Michigan State next fall and embark on a law career.

Tuesday night Green sat impassively with 601 other seniors on the football field. As he received a diploma and congratulations from Principal Jess W. Matthews an almost inaudible murmur was heard among the 5,000 spectators.

Green arrived in a taxi and walked unescorted to the meeting point of seniors. Detectives escorted him to another taxi after the ceremony.

About 100 policemen took positions throughout the stadium. Some 120 guardsmen occupied the school building and the underside of the vacant stadium wing where they were out of sight. All traffic around the school was blocked off when the commencement began.

After Green got his diploma there was an exodus from the stadium of newsmen and spectators who apparently had come to see him be graduated.

Several teen-agers had showed up at the gate with counterfeit entrance tickets. They were turned away.

Gov. Oral Faubus called out guardsmen last September to prevent nine Negroes, including Green, from entering Central High.

Central High School Has First Negro Graduate

LITTLE ROCK, Ark — Keeping watch unto the end, a ring of federal troops, supplimented by policemen, guarded Central High School's first integrated baccalaureate at the school's stadium Sunday night.

An estimated 25 Negroes were included in the crowd of 1,5000 who attended the rites. Sixteen - year - old Ernest Green, was the lone Negro in the 600 candidates for graduation.

About an hour before the service was slated to get underway, seven Negroes were arrested near the stadium and were booked on charges of disturbing the peace, and two of the seven have additional charges of carrying a concealed weapon, a gun and a knife. A newswriter told police, he heard one of the Negroes say they were going to the stadium to protect Green.

All of the seven Negroes were released on bond. The only racial disturbance at the stadium occurred when a white boy spat at one of the Negroes when the crowd was filing into the stadium. He was arrested and charged with disturbing the peace, but was released on bond.

A cameraman for the Arkansas Democrat made an attempt to take a picture of the incident, and was almost slugged with a board by a white woman. Police rescued the photographer. Green was not molested during the exercises.

Little Rock Plea Rejected by Judge

N.A.A.C.P. Counsel To Seek Immediate Review of Negro Ban

From Wire Dispatches

Little Rock, June 23.—Federal District Judge Harry J Lemley denied a request Monday that he delay execution of his order suspending integration at Little Rock's Central High School until the ruling had been appealed.

Wiley Branton, who represented the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, said he would seek an immediate review of the denial by the Eighth Circuit court of Appeals in St. Louis.

Unless Judge Lemley is overruled, his decision will bar the eight Negro students who attended Central High's first integrated term from returning there this fall.

In a ruling handed down Saturday, the judge granted a plea by the Little Rock School Board for a 2½-year postponement of its plan for gradual integration at the school.

Cites 'Serious Disruption'

He held that the board had shown that the educational process at Central High had been seriously disrupted by violence, intimidation, and tension growing out of the Negro students' presence.

The N.A.A.C.P. has already filed notice with the Circuit Court that it would appeal this finding.

Judge Lemley said that in all probability "it will take months to carry the case through the Court of Appeals and the United State Supreme Court."

In a lengthy memorandum reiterating many of the same arguments made in his initial decision, Judge Lemley said he did not believe it was in the public interest to allow Negro and white students to return together to the school.

Says Appeal Not Denied

Branton said Judge Lemley spoke for the N.A.A.C.P. at one point, however, when he pointed out that they had not been deprived of the right to appeal.

In his argument Monday Branton urged the judge to stay his order because of the time it would take to appeal the judge's decision.

Little Rock School Board attorney Arch House opposed the stay requested by the N.A.A.C.P. because he said they were granted only in "extraordinary circumstances and we see no such circumstances here."

In his memorandum Judge Lemley stated "that from a practical standpoint to grant this motion and stay the enforcement of our judgment would to a large extent nullify our order in the case. . . ."

Next Step Probably Writ

"The situation at Central High School," the judge continued, "which we have found to be intolerable from an educational standpoint, would continue from the beginning of the approaching session to the final ruling of the Supreme Court on the merits of the case."

The next step in the critical integration issue will probably come when N.A.A.C.P. attorneys file a writ to stay Lemley's order with Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

Branton told newsmen that if the St. Louis court should turn down their motion "then we would present it to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States."

Will Ask Judge Today to Stay Ruling

By SY RAMSEY

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Negro attorneys, bracing for a possible summer-long legal fight to maintain integration at Central High School, will ask a federal judge Monday to stay his own order delaying integration.

"We may learn whether the Negro students return to Central High this fall," said Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, who filed notice of appeal from the ruling by U. S. Dist. Judge Harry Lemley of Hope.

If Lemley rejects a stay—pending the appeal—the case eventually could be carried to the Supreme Court, Branton said.

Lemley, a 74-year-old jurist who also is a respected amateur archaeologist, Saturday suspended integration for 2½ years as requested by the Little Rock School Board.

NAACP MAPS FIGHT

At a hearing under Lemley two weeks ago the board said tension, violence and the presence of troops at Central had made integration unworkable.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People opposed the move. It said the constitutional rights of the seven Negroes still enrolled at the school would be abridged by postponement.

In a 35-page opinion Lemley agreed with the school board that the time for Negroes to enjoy their rights was not quite at hand.

This does not mean the court is yielding to unlawful force or violence, Lemley added. He said the delay could be a breathing spell in which a change in personalities and easing of racial tensions might help smooth integration at midterm, 1961.

NOBODY TALKATIVE

The reaction to Lemley's ruling in this city, which has almost become accustomed to the ebb and flow of racial bitterness, was fairly predictable.

Integration spokesmen were grimly silent or openly indignant. Segregationists were pleased but subdued. Both sides agreed one round was over but not the fight.

They were not talkative. A newspaper reporter who tried to question 50 persons at random got only 10 quotes but plenty of advice to mind his own business.

Gov. Orval Faubus, perhaps the most controversial figure in the integration controversy, said a delay might improve race relations even if it was not a real settlement.

The racial crisis was touched off last Sept. 2 when Faubus called National Guardsmen to Central and ordered them to turn away nine Negroes from the school. He said he did this to prevent imminent violence. His opponents say he did it to ensure a third term as governor.

STUDENTS KEEP QUIET

The seven remaining Negro students, whose mixture of triumph and ordeal at Central may be cut short by Lemley's decision, had no comment. They were told by NAACP leaders to remain silent about the suspension of integration.

Branton said that if Lemley granted his request for a stay the situation would remain as it was until Saturday—which means the Negroes still are enrolled at Central while the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals handles Branton's appeal.

If Lemley rejects the stay, Branton said, "we could present the motion to the 8th Circuit Court at St. Louis whether or not it is in recess, and they could act on it separately from the appeal."

Branton said the Supreme Court would be the next—and last—stop if the appellate court also rejected the request for a stay.

NAACP Seeks Reversal Of Court Order

Jackson, Miss.
Mon. 6-23-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, "knocked for a loop" by a court order de-integrating Central High School, goes back into court today with a plea for a new ruling.

The NAACP is scheduled to present a motion today asking federal Judge Harry J. Lemley to set aside his order to suspend integration at Central for two and a half years.

Daisy Bates, Arkansas president of the NAACP, said she was "knocked for a loop" by Lemley's decision.

Wiley Branton, an attorney for Negro students, said if Lemley denies the motion to set aside the order, the NAACP will appeal the case to the 8th circuit court of appeals at St. Louis and then to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Lemley Denies Stay Order Delaying Interruption Of School Integration

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, June 23. — Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley Monday refused to stay his own order delaying school integration here for two and one-half years. He indirectly advised the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to try for the stay in a higher court.

Wiley Branton, a Negro attorney for the NAACP, took the cue.

Judge Lemley denied Branton's motion Monday morning after hearing six minutes of oral argument and recessing court for an hour to write the opinion.

"From a practical standpoint to grant this motion and stay the enforcement of our judgment would to a large extent nullify our order," Judge Lemley said.

Handled Plea Speedily

He said it would probably take three months to carry the case to the Supreme Court "and in the meantime the situation at Central High School which we have found to be intolerable . . . would continue. . . ."

The 74-year-old jurist said he had handled the School Board's petition for an integration delay as quickly as possible in order to reach a decision before September 1.

"In the meantime the plaintiffs can apply at least to the Court of Appeals of this circuit for a stay of the enforcement of our judgment," he said.

The School Board had asked that integration be delayed at Central on grounds that racial tension, violence and the presence of troops was interrupting education there. Judge Lemley's ruling Saturday granted the board the delay.

Monday, board attorney A. F. House opposed Branton's motion. He said that since the court granted a postponement "in the public interest" a stay would be only in the interest of the seven Negro students now on the Central High rolls.

Will Mail Motion

Branton said that since no Negroes were attending summer school at Central the School Board was not faced with any racial problems.

After Judge Lemley's denial of the motion to stay, Branton telephoned clerk Robert C. Tucker of the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis to ask for instructions on obtaining a stay from the appellate court.

Mr. Tucker said he told Branton to mail the motion to the court and he would forward it to Chief Judge Archibald Gardner at his home in Huron, S. D.

"If it's necessary, I'll go to the judge's home to ask for the stay," Branton said.

Branton said that if the appellate court should deny a stay he would present his motion to a justice of the Supreme Court.

"I have no particular judge in mind," he said.

Court May Decide On Little Rock

NAACP Appeal Plea Up For Yes Or No

WASHINGTON, June 29 (UPI) —The Supreme Court is expected to announce tomorrow whether it will grant a plea for emergency action on an appeal of a federal judge's decision suspending integration at a Little Rock, Ark., high school.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People entered the plea last Thursday on behalf of seven Negro children who would be barred under the ruling from Little Rock's Central High School next Fall.

The court announced last week that tomorrow's meeting would be the last of the 1957-58 term. But the NAACP asked it either to extend its present term or meet soon in a special session to consider the ruling by Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley.

* * *

Sen. McClellan

Meanwhile, Sen. John L. McClellan praised Lemley's decision as "sound and just." He declined to predict the result if the Supreme Court decides to overturn.

But he said the Little Rock situation proved "that forced integration is not successful." He said in a television interview that he did not believe the majority of the people in Arkansas would accept integration willingly "in my lifetime."

Lemley rejected the NAACP's appeal to postpone the effect of his order suspending integration for 2½ years to provide a "cooling off period" at the school where federal troops were called out to keep order.

The attorneys then asked the Supreme Court to bypass the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, where the case would normally be heard, and decide the issue before the next school term begins in September.

They contended that the delay would encourage "lawless elements opposing compliance" with the Supreme Court's 1954 decision ordering an end to racial segregation in public schools.

Army Denies 'Do-Nothing' Orders To Troops In Little Rock, Ark.

Daily World P.1 Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 3-27-58

NEW YORK—The Pentagon has denied "that the federalized troops on duty in Central High School (Little Rock) are operating under orders to do nothing in the case of a disturbance, except to observe."

The Army position was set forth in a letter to Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association of the Advancement of Colored People, who previously had reported to Wilbur M. Brucker, Secretary of the Army, that he had received information from Little Rock "that the soldiers on duty at the school are said to be operating under orders to do nothing in the case of a disturbance, except to observe it."

In his letter, of March 14, Wilkins cited 42 incidents of harassments, intimidations and violence directed against Negro students attending Central High School by 30 identified white students within a period of 80 school days.

ASSURANCE GIVEN

Replying through his administrative assistant, John W. Martyn, on March 21, Secretary Brucker made no reference to these incidents. However, the Army declared, the report that the troops were operating under "do-nothing" orders "is not correct." Further, Mr. Martyn gave assurance "that adequate provisions exist in the instructions issued by the Army to the troops to insure necessary action in the performance of their mission.

"It must be understood," he pointed out, "that the school authorities are directly responsible for the control and discipline of the students within the school. According-ly, the troops at the high school have conducted themselves in such a manner as not to usurp or interfere with the responsibilities of the school authorities."

The Pentagon letter further stated: "Military personnel on duty in and about the school have been and will continue to be prepared to intervene as necessary to assist the school authorities and to carry out such other instructions."

NAACP Seeks More Action By Troops At Little Rock

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Tues. 4-1-58

NEW YORK (AP)—The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People Monday night renewed its demand for more militant action by troops at Little Rock Central High School.

Otherwise, the NAACP claimed, "We are confronted with the incredible spectacle of the government of the United States placing the burden of enforcing the orders of its courts upon the slender shoulders and the young hearts of eight teenaged Negro students."

The eight Negroes have been attending Central's first integrated classes since last Sept. 25 under troop protection.

The NAACP originally complained that the troops failed to intervene in at least 42 incidents where white students were the aggressors against the eight Negroes.

The Army replied that the troops are prepared to intervene if necessary to aid school authorities and to carry out other unspecified instructions.

NAACP Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins released the text of a new letter addressed to Army Secretary Wilbur M. Brucker. It read in part:

"We suggest strongly that the general mission of the military personnel (and we are not familiar with the detailed instructions) would seem to require that they not only assist the school authorities, but insist on affirmative action by the latter to effect the purpose of the court's order.

"It does not seem reasonable that the order of the court contemplates only the safe conduct of the Negro students to the front doors of Central High School and abandonment thereafter to such harassment as might be devised by some white students and condoned by the officials in charge."

The NAACP contends that only about 30 out of a white student body of 2,000 is responsible for the harassment of the eight Negroes.

NAACP Seeks New Ruling In Arkansas Case

Little Rock — The right of the State of Arkansas to demand the membership lists of NAACP units was challenged in the new chambers of the seven-judge Arkansas Supreme Court here in the first of a series of cases involving the Associaiton's right to function in the state.

In argument before the Court on May 26, Robert L. Carter, NAACP general counsel of New York, and George Howard, Jr., of Pine Bluff, contended that a lower court order granting the that the right to inspect NAACP records was a denial of the Association and its members of freedom of speech and assembly in violation of the United States Constitution.

The case arose last July when Arkansas State Attorney General Bruce Bennett brought suit against the Association charging that for seven years the organization had failed to pay franchise taxes. The court granted a motion by the attorney general requesting the right to inspect the Association's membership lists and to obtain the names and addresses of its members and contributors. The NAACP refused to turn the lists over to the state officials on the ground that to do so would expose its members to reprisals and persecution.

Upon the Association's refusal to comply, the court entered an order granting the state's motion and issued a default judgment in the amount of $427.00 against the NAACP.

Says Segregationists Can Bypass Decision

Jackson, Mississippi
Mon. 6-30-58

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

A federal judge's order suspending integration at Little Rock, Ark., Central High School "opened the door" for segregationists to bypass the U.S. Supreme Court's integration decision, a Little Rock Negro minister said here yesterday.

Rev. C. D. Alstark charged Federal Judge Harry Lemley "did not reach his decision on its merits", in an address before a crowd of NAACP members here yesterday. Alstark, chairman of the board of directors of the Little Rock NAACP, claimed Lemley used "his own decisions" in staying integration at the school for 2½ years.

Alstark said most white students in the school did not object to the nine Negro students. He claimed one white girl told him there would be no trouble if parents "would let us solve our own problems".

Most of the trouble, he charged, came from about 15 sons and daughters of the "Mothers of Little Rock" club.

Alstark called on Jackson Negro ministers to attempt to integrate with the city's white ministers alliance. He said a similar move was successful in Little Rock and claimed he was recently elected vice president of the alliance.

About 400 persons heard Alstark's address. NAACP officials from branches throughout the state attended the meeting.

Daisy Bates of Little Rock, president of the Arkansas Conference of the NAACP, was scheduled as the speaker. Leaders of the group here said she broke her foot last week but had planned to speak here until the death of her father-in-law in Memphis.

Naacp Sees Eight Negro Students Bearing Burden of Enforcing Federal Court Order

The failure of the Army to protect Negro students in Little Rock's Central high school presents "the incredible spectacle of the government of the United States placing the burden of enforcing the orders of its courts upon the slender shoulders and the young hearts of eight teen-age Negro students," Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, charges in a letter to Wilber M. Brucker, Secretary of the Army.

The complete text of Mr. Wilkins' letter, dispatched on March 27 and made public here Tuesday follows:

We are in receipt of a letter of March 21 from Mr. John W. Martyn, written at your request, asserting that the Federalized troops around Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas, are not operating under orders to do nothing in the case of a disturbance except to observe.

We note further Mr. Martyn's assurance that "adequate provisions exist in the instructions issued by the Army to the troops on duty to insure necessary action in the performance of their mission."

However, Mr. Martyn writes that the troops "have conducted themselves in such a manner as not to usurp or interfere with the responsibilities of the school authorities" (for the discipline of the students within the school), and he states further that the military personnel "have been and will continue to be prepared to intervene if necessary to assist the school authorities. . ." (underscoring ours).

We submit that this language is subject to the interpretation that the troops have initiated no move in cases of overt action by white students against Negro students, and that they have waited "to assist" the school authorities, presumably on request of the latter.

The record contains forty-two incidents over an eighty-day school period with mild disciplinary action having been taken in only a very few cases. There is no record of action by military personnel after the withdrawal of the Federal troops, either original or in the form of assistance to school authorities.

We have, as you have noted an intense interest in this matter. We believe, in the basis of the President's order and on the statements in Mr. Martyn's letter, that the presence of the troops was to effectuate compliance with the order of the U. S. District Court and that in discharging this mission, the troops were to proceed against any and all persons whose conduct tended to nullify the order.

If this interpretation is correct, the school officials who failed to exercise the authority at their disposal are as guilty of hindering the court order as are those who commit overt acts of obstruction.

We suggest strongly that the general mission of the military personnel (and we are not familiar with the detailed instructions) would seem to require that they not only assist the school authorities, but insist on affirmative action by the latter to effect the pudposes of the Court's order.

It does not seem reasonable that the order of the Court contemplates only the safe conduct of the Negro students to the front doors of Central High School and abandonment thereafter to such harassment as might be devised by some white students and condoned by the officials in charge.

If this be the Army's interpretation, then we are confronted with the incredible spectacle of the government of the United States placing the burden of enforcing the orders of its courts upon the shoulders and the young hearts of eight teen-age Negro students.

ARKANSAS

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

WASHNGTON, Feb. 25 (AP)—Asst. Atty. Gen. W. Wilson White testified today the President has power to send troops into a state whenever resistance to a federal court order is "of such magnitude that state forces are powerless, or are not being used, to prevent a breakdown of law and order."

He maintained this position at a Senate Judiciary Cmmittee meeting in the face of sharp contrast by Southern members of the legality of President Eisenhower's dispatch of Army paratroopers to Little Rock, Ark., last September, in the row over court-ordered integration of Central High School there.

Sen. Langer (R-ND) joined the Southerners in questioning Eisenhower's constitutional or legal authority for the use of troops. Langer said the President acted on "very, very poor advice" in the school integration crisis.

Southern senators referred to "occupation" by federal troops and Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-SC) compared the situation to "fighting the Civil War over again."

Johnston said that "the President can take over everything in a state" if he has the power attributed to him by White to use federal troops.

"If there weren't any race issue in this, I'd take the same position," said Johnston, who declared he was interested in protecting individual rights and the rights of the states.

White, a Philadelphia lawyer, went before the committee for a second hearing on his nomination to be an assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's new Civil Rights division.

He already is serving under a recess appointment made last fall but his nomination, submitted Jan. 13, is subject to Senate confirmation.

The committee will hold still another hearing on the nomination at a date to be announced later by Chairman Eastland (D-Miss).

Sens. McClellan (D-Ark) and Hennings (D-Mo) were among committee members who said they wanted White to return for further questioning.

White, questioned by McClellan, testified he knew of no plan to withdraw the federalized National Guardsmen who still are on duty at Central High School under Army command.

He also said that he hoped troops won't have to be sent to the school again next fall when it reopens but that he didn't know whether or not this would be done.

"Who would know?" asked McClellan.

"It's a White House decision," White replied.

ARKANSAS — WHITE STUDENTS — LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Ousted Girl's Dad Demands Fair Deal

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UP). The father of a white girl suspended from integrated Central High school because of a racial incident says he will take his daughter back to school Monday.

"I hope she will be afforded the same federal protection . . . extensively provided the nine Negroes," Jay Parker, the father, said.

Supt. of Schools Virgil Blossom said 16-year-old Sammie Dean Parker, who allegedly distributed cards reading "One down—eight to go," had been suspended for the rest of the school year.

Parker called it "expulsion" and said he plans to accompany her to Central High Monday in an attempt to have her re-enter the school.

The girl was suspended two weeks ago supposedly for distributing cards with the slogan referring to the expulsion of Minniejean Brown, one of the nine Negro students, earlier this month.

Minniejean was barred from the school after she had been involved in several quarrels with white students.

Parker charged, "My daughter is being persecuted and is being used to intimidate every white student at Central High School."

Negro Case Undecided

The words refer to the suspension of Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students, who has been suspended for the second time this school year and who also has been recommended for expulsion' or "permanent suspension." Her suspension, based on a recent incident, has left eight Negroes still attending classes.

The Negro girl and her parents conferred with school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom late Monday afternoon, in protest of the recommended expulsion, but there was no decision announced.

Cards Circulated

Chairman Wayne Upton said it may be a day or two before the school board announces a decision.

Earlier, Mr. Blossom confirmed that three white students had been suspended. They were identified as Howard Cooper, Miss Sammie Dean Parker and Billy Ferguson.

Young Ferguson's suspension reportedly was due to his shoving a Negro student down a flight of stairs. The other two participated in circulating the cards, the superintendent indicated.

Young Cooper, a 16-year-old sophomore and son of Earl Cooper, showed up with his father during the board session with Minnie Jean Brown to protest his suspension. However, he didn't get an audience. His father said he would try to see school officials later.

Young Cooper told reporters he was wearing the card on his shirt pocket when a school official caught him. He said he was against integration.

Thinks He Has Right

"I think I have the right to show how I feel about it," he added.

Miss Parker was involved in earlier incidents at the school last September, when there was rioting against entry of the nine Negro students. She was taken from the school forcibly by Little Rock police the day incidents broke out in frone of the building.

Details of the incident involving young Ferguson were lacking.

Asked where he got thep rinted card, young Cooper said that "another boy gave it to me."

The latest incidents followed a week-end harassment of Daisy Bates, Arkansas president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who has been serving as spokesman for the Negro students.

Little Rock police said they had received a complaint from her that several white boys had thrown bottles and stones at her home Sunday.

Wrapped In Rebel Flag

One stone, described as about the size of an orange and wrapped in a Confederate flag, was hurled through a picture window at her home. She and her husband, L. C. Bates, didn't see who hurled it but said they heard a car speed away.

About two hours earlier, Lee Lorch, whitep rofessor at a Negro college here and who lives within a block of the Bates house, said he chased six cars occupied by white boys after they had hurled bottles and stones at the Bates house.

LITTLE ROCK SCHOOL SUSPENDS 3 WHITES

Two Are Linked With Cards Against Integration—One In Pushing

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 17.—Three white students were suspended from Central High School Monday. Two were involved in circulating cards against integration, the third in the pushing of a Negro student down a flight of stairs.

Little Rock school expels Negro pupil

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 18 —(AP)—The Little Rock school board last night expelled Minniejean Brown, one of nine Negroes admitted to Central High School last Fall, for the remainder of the school term.

Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, who recommended the action against the 16-year-old girl, said Minniejean could not attend a public school, white or Negro, in the Little Rock District until next September.

The decision to expel Minniejean, who already was under a two-week suspension, came a few hours after Blossom revealed that three white students—two boys and a girl—were suspended after racial incidents yesterday at the 2000-pupil school.

W. B. Brown, father of the Negro girl who claims she has been the main target of segregationist students during the five months the Negroes have attended Central, promptly labeled the action as "very unfair."

Mrs. Brown said: "I shall consult my attorneys immediately and be governed by their advice."

NAACP Leader Says Little Rock Nine Tormented

KEUKA PARK, N.Y., Jan. 28 (AP) — Thurgood Marshall, Negro leader, said yesterday the nine Negro pupils at Little Rock High School "can't take much more of the passive harassment their fellow students are giving them."

He said the nine were annoyed daily by about 40 of the 2,000 enrolled at the school. He said cafeteria trays were spilled on them, they often were shoved and sometimes spat on.

"It goes on day after day," he asserted. "They deserve great credit for staying on."

Marshall, chief legal counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, made the remarks in a speech at Keuka College.

Of the state of Virginia's plans to close all public schools rather than integrate them, Marshall said "it will do no good, but at least—for once in that state—the Negroes and the whites will have the same treatment, no education for either."

IWU STUDENTS SEEK HEARINGS BY BOARD

Suspended At Little Rock For Pro-Segregation Cards

THIRD BOY REINSTATED

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 19.—School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said Wednesday two of three white students he suspended Monday have asked for hearings with their parents before the Little Rock School Board.

They are Sammie Dean Parker and Howard Cooper, who were suspended for passing out cards at the school which said "One down . . . eight to go."

A third student, Billy Ferguson, was suspended the same day for shoving one of the Negro students down a flight of stairs. Mr. Blossom said he had reinstated young Ferguson, effective Monday.

To Arrange Meeting

He said he will try to arrange a board meeting for the other two students as soon as possible. Both have protested their suspensions as unjustified.

The signs referred to expulsion earlier of Minniejean Brown, one of the nine Negro students who had been attending Central High. She was offered, and accepted, a scholarship to Lincoln High School in New York Tuesday.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who last September sent National Guard troops to the school to resist integration, Wednesday at least partially sided with the Negro girl who has been expelled.

The Governor said he felt if she wanted to remain in Little Rock, the School Board should allow her to go to the all-Negro Horace Mann High School. Under present rules, however, her expulsion made her ineligible to transfer to any other school in Little Rock.

The Governor further said he thought the board should make provisions for any and all students who might be expelled from Central High "because of incidents arising from integration."

'Situation Is Different'

"The situation is different from the usual expulsion case. The students are nervous and keyed up, and should be given some facilities for resuming their studies here if they are expelled because of trouble or incidents arising from the integration issue."

The Governor added that if the Negro girl wanted to go to New York, "that represents a different situation."

The school was founded in 1948 by alumni and faculty members of the Horace Mann-Lincoln School when that center was closed by Columbia University.

Two years ago New Lincoln consolidated with another private institution. It now operates two instructional centers.

Pupils from nursery through second year receive instruction at a branch on the fashionable East Side. All other grades are taught at the edge of Harlem.

Majority Of Whites

A school spokesman said no records are kept of the pupils' racial background. The majority is white, he said, and "as many come from Park Avenue social backgrounds as from Harlem."

One of the school's aims, he added, "is to allow intermixture in a wholesome atmosphere of children from varied backgrounds as a part of the educational process."

The spokesman said Minnie Jean probably will live at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth B. Clark. Dr. Clark, a Negro, is a sociology professor and a trustee of New Lincoln.

Little Rock White Girl Is Expelled

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 28 (AP)—A 16-year-old white girl was expelled from Central High School today and her father promptly charged that she was being "crucified" in a campaign to beat down opposition to racial integration.

The Little Rock School Board ousted Sammie Dean Parker, a pretty blonde who has been involved in several racial incidents, for the rest of the term.

No reason for the expulsion was given. Sammie Dean has been suspended since Feb. 17 in connection with the appearance of printed cards reading, "One down—eight to go" in obvious reference to the expulsion of Minniejean Brown, one of nine Negroes who entered Central High last Sept. 25 under federal troop protection.

There have been numerous racial clashes and bomb scares at the big school in recent months and last week the school board petitioned a federal court to suspend the integration program. No hearing has been set on the petition.

Expelled Girl's Father Will Confront Officials

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 1 (AP)—The father of a white girl "suspended" from integrated Central High School because of a racial incident says he will take his daughter back to school Monday.

"I hope she will be afforded the same federal protection . . . so extensively provided the nine Negroes," said Jay Parker, the father.

Superintendent of Schools Virgil Blossom said Friday night that 16-year-old Sammie Dean Parker, who allegedly distributed cards reading "One down—eight to go," had been suspended for the rest of the school year.

* * *

PARKER called it "expulsion" and said he plans to accompany her to Central High next Monday in an attempt to have her re-enter the school.

The girl was suspended two weeks ago supposedly for distributing cards with the slogan referring to the expulsion of Minnijean Brown, one of the nine Negro students, earlier this month.

Minnijean was barred from the school after she had been involved in several quarrels with white students.

Blossom would not say why the Parker girl was "suspended" for the rest of the year.

* * *

PARKER charged, "My daughter is being persecuted and is being used to intimidate every white child at Central High School."

He blamed Blossom, Principal Jess Matthews and Assistant Principal Mrs. Elizabeth Huckaby because, he said, "they want to beat down all opposition to the Blossom plan." He referred to the school board's plan of gradual integration which was upset by the crisis last fall.

White Girl To Stay Out Of School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 1 (AP)—The father of a 16-year-old white girl who was expelled yesterday from integrated Central High School said today that he would not try to return her to school Monday.

J. D. Parker said he had abandoned an earlier-announced plan to try to take Sammie Dean Parker to the school despite the expulsion, effective for the reminder of the school year.

Through attorney Amis Guthridge, Parker issued this statement:

"Due to the physical and emotional condition of my daughter, I have decided against the probability of subjecting her to humiliation and further callous treatment by school officials and armed troops.

"It is obvious that any further appeal to the Blossom-dominated school board would be futile and for these reasons I will not take her to Central High School Monday as I had previously planned."

There was no elaboration.

The Little Rock School Board ordered Sammie Dean's expulsion for unannounced reasons after a closed hearing yesterday. Virgil T. Blossom is superintendent of Little Rock schools.

Parker yesterday declared that his daughter was "being crucified by three people who are determined to beat into submission all opposition" to integration.

He named these as Blossom and two subordinates. The school officials declined comment.

Sammie Dean had been under suspension since Feb. 17 as a result of the appearance of printed cards reading, "One down—eight to go" in reference to the expulsion of Minnijean Brown, a Negro girl, who has since enrolled in a private school in New York.

The remaining eight Negroes are attending Central under protection of a small contingent of Federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen.

LITTLE ROCK BOARD EXPELS WHITE GIRL

Her Father Plans To Defy Ouster—Officials Give No Reason For Move

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 28.—A 16-year-old white girl was expelled from Central High School Friday after a review of her Feb. 17 suspension by the Little Rock School Board.

Her father immediately served notice he will defy the expulsion.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said the action was taken against Sammie Dean Parker, daughter of Jay D. Parker, a railroad company employe.

No Reasons Given

The superintendent declined to give reasons for the board's action, based on a board policy of issuing explanations only to parents involved.

The girl's father told newsmen he planned to conduct his daughter personally to the school Monday to attempt to put her back into classes.

Charging his daughter was being "persecuted," Mr. Parker said he hoped that by Monday the school board will have changed its mind.

Hopes For 'Protection'

He said he hoped the same "protection" will be given his daughter Monday by Federal troops still stationed there as has been afforded the eight Negro students still attending classes.

Miss Parker was suspended Feb. 17 for two weeks after she was charged by school officials with having passed out cards bearing the lettering, "One down . . . eight to go." The sign was a reference to the recent expulsion of Negro student Minnijean Brown, who last week started attending a New York school on a scholarship.

The expulsion order against the 11th grade white student apparently was the same type that had been issued against Minnijean Brown. She will be ineligible to attend any [illegible] public school in Little Roc[illegible] the remainder of this school year.

"At least, that's the way I understand it," Mr. Parker said.

Heated Session Indicated

A Wednesday night meeting at which the girl and her parents conferred with school Principal Jess W. Matthews, Mrs. Elizabeth Huckaby and Mr. Blossom may have had something to do with the decision to expel her.

Reports coming out of that meeting, held to "review" her Feb. 17 suspension and to determine whether she would be reinstated, indicated an extremely heated session had ensued.

However, neither Mr. Blossom nor Mr. Parker would comment on the Wednesday night discussion.

Mr. Parker criticized Mr. Matthews and Mrs. Huckaby, as well as Mr. Blossom, in his statement Friday. Mrs. Huckaby is assistant vice principal for girls. Neither she nor Mr. Matthews was available for comment.

'Large Crowd' Predicted

Several sympathizers said there would be a "large crowd" on hand Monday morning to accompany Mr. Parker and his daughter when she attempts to get back into Central High.

Miss Parker was suspended along with Howard Cooper, a white student who also had been charged with passing out or wearing the cards. Young Cooper will be reinstated in classes effective Monday, Mr. Blossom said.

The board, when it suspended both students, had said young Cooper could return on March 3 (Monday), but that Sammie Dean would have to consult with Mr. Blossom again before her reinstatement would be considered.

Mr. Parker's statement follows:

"My 16-year-old daughter is being persecuted and is being used to intimidate every white child at Central High School.

'She Has Been Crucified'

"My daughter, according to the board, has an excellent school record but she has been crucified because of three people who are determined to beat into submission all opposition to the Blossom plan, namely, Virgil T. Blossom, Jess W. Matthews and Mrs. Elizabeth Huckaby.

"Over the week end I hope the board will reverse Mr. Blossom's tragic mistake. I will accompany my daughter to Central High at 8:15 a.m. Monday and hope she will be afforded the same Federal protection that the board and President Eisenhower so expensively affords the eight Negroes."

Miss Parker was taken forcibly from the high school last fall during heavy disorders at the school when city police were trying to maintain order.

Mr. Parker said Friday, in recalling the incident, that city police took her from the school after she had jumped out of a ground floor window from one of the classrooms where students were assembling for study. At that time, the Negro students hadn't yet gained admission to the school.

Investigate Little Rock High School

The suspension of the 16-year-old Negro girl from the Little Rock Central High school, with the added inference that the order may be permanently extended, would seem to imply that the officials of the school are slowly yielding to segregationist pressures.

The young lady in question has been subjected to repeated personal affronts, indignities and even physical encounters without her assailants being punished in a manner commensurate with the offenses, or in a manner calculated to prevent a repetition of such incidents.

The charges on which she has been suspended are so flimsy as to induce the suspicion of a clandestine machination to rid the Central High School of the remaining Negro students. "One down and eight to go" is a chant that now echoes through the halls of the school. This sinister mood indicates strongly that plans are on foot to provoke the other Negro students into incidents that will incur drastic actions.

That school authorities should be a party to such a damnable plot is to be deplored. They should be censured caustically by the decent citizens of the community who must be aware of the continuing injury inflicted upon them by so flagrant a disregard of elementary rights.

The suspension, which in reality amounts to expulsion inasmuch as it will be extended indefinitely, opens afresh the deep wounds of segregation which many of us thought were about to heal. Little Rock has had enough bad publicity to frown upon any furtherance of the evils that had brought it into disrepute.

This lack of morality and conscience, this piece-meal defiance of integration are warranted grounds for a federal inquiry or legal action or both. We so move.

LITTLE ROCK
9 NEGRO STUDENTS AND MRS. BATES
RECEIVE SPINGARN MEDAL

Little Rock Nine and Mrs. Bates To Receive Spngarn Medal

Green - 6-13-58

NEW YORK—Nine Negro teenagers, the first of their race to enroll in Central high school of Little Rock, and Mrs. L. C. Bates, their mentor and president of the Arkansas State Conference of Branches, have been chosen as this year's recipients of the Spingarn Medal, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, announced here today.

The medal, awarded annually to a Negro American for distinguished achievement, will be presented at the 49th annual NAACP convention in Cleveland, July 8-13

Precedents Broken

In selecting Mrs. Bates and these six girls and three boys, the Spingarn Award committee broke two precedents. For the first time, the award, regarded as the most coveted in the field, is being given to a group rather than an individual. Tlso for the first time minors are recipients of the award.

Oklahoma City Oklahoma

The children and Mrs. Bates are cited for "their courageous self-restraint in the face of extreme provocation and peril," and for "their exemplary conduct in upholding the American ideals of liberty and justice." Their role in the Little Rock crisis, the citation continues, "entitles them to the gratitude of every American who believes in law and order, equality of rights, and human decency."

The young people entered Central High last September in compliance with a federal district court order. They were at first denied admittance by Arkansas state troopers acting on order of Governor Orval E. Faubus. Later they were admitted under the protection of federal troops dispatched to Little Rock by President Eisenhower to prevent interference with the court order.

Suit Filed by NAACP

The ruling to admit them to Central high school was the result of a suit filed on their behalf and at the request of their parents by NAACP lawyers. The gradual plan of desegregation proposed by the Little Rock Board of Education in 1955 was approved by the United States District Court to become effective with the opening of school in September, 1957.

Ernest Greene Graduated

On May 27, Ernest Greene became the first Negro to be graduated from Central High. He was a member of the senior class of 600 boys and girls. Earlier, Minnijean Brown, after repeated harassment by a band of white students, was expelled. She entered the New Lincoln school, a private integrated institution in New York City.

Carlotta Wall made the honor roll in her class. All eight of the colored students who remained in Central High passed. Others in the pioneer group include Elizabeth Eckford, Thelma Mothershed, Melba Pattillo, Gloria Ray, Terrence Roberts and Jefferson Thomas.

Medal Instituted in 1914

The Spingarn Medal was instituted in 1914 by the late J. E. Spingarn, then chairman of the NAACP board of directors. It is a gold medal on an appropriate colored band. This year individual medals will be presented to each of the winners.

Mr. Spingarn died in 1939. The medal has been continued under terms of his will which set up a trust fund "to perpetuate the lifelong interest of my brother, Arthur B. Spingarn, of my wife, Amy E. Spingarn, and of myself in the achievements of the American Negro." In 1939, Arthur B. Spingarn succeeded his brother as president of the Association, a position which he has since held continuously.

Last year, the medal was awarded to the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King jr., for "his outstanding leadership role in the successful Montgomery bus protest movement." Other previous Spingarn Medalists include Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, Miss Marian Anderson, Jackie Robinson, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, Judge William H. Hastie, Thurgood Marshall, Paul Williams, Carl Murphy, and A. Philip Randolph.

Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, made the announcement Thursday. P-1

The medal is awarded annually to a Negro American for distinguished achievement in the field of race relations. In selecting Mrs Bates and the youngsters, the award committee broke two precedents. For the first time the award, regarded as the most coveted in the field, is being given to a group rather than an individual, and the first time, minors are recipients.

At a dinner in Chicago where the students accepted the Robert S Abbott Award, it was rumored that the students had turned down the NAACP award because it was thought Mrs Bates was excluded from the honor.

Plan to Lease Schools Is Illegal, Rogers Says

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 25—Attorney General William P. Rogers said today that Arkansas' school-leasing plan to avoid desegregation, which other Southern States have enacted in varying forms, is unconstitutional.

Rogers' views were presented [illegible] Justice Department [illegible] Federal Court in Fort Smith, Ark., where the Little Rock School Board sought advice on whether it legally could lease its closed high schools, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sought a court order to forbid [illegible].

Federal Judge John E. Miller in turn rejected both the School Board's and the NAACP's petitions. He refused to give the Board what in effect would have been legal advice before any attempt was made to lease the schools. And he told the NAACP he could not rule on the merits of its injunction request because that would require deciding validity of State laws which can be done only by a panel of three Federal judges.

Rogers' position, while no surprise, was the first official presentation of the Government's views. It indicated the Justice Department will take all steps it can to strike down these State attempts to get around Federal Court desegregation orders.

[illegible] law permits leasing of empty school buildings [illegible] private groups. A new law permits use of State funds to pay tuition of students at private schools. Six Little Rock citizens have incorporated to operate private schools. They plan to try to lease the buildings from the School Board, hire city teachers and operate a segregated high school system on State tuition grants.

Rogers called this a "sham and artifice," a transparent effort to avoid compliance with Federal Court desegregation orders by simply changing the world "public" to "private." The important legal fact is that public funds would be involved, said Rogers. He said the courts have held "unequivocably" that states cannot do indirectly what they have been forbidden to do directly.

The private school incorporators, Rogers said, "have no educational experience and no academic accreditation, own no school, employ no teachers and have no financial resources which would permit them to buy or rent a school or employ teachers."

Rogers' memorandum, entered by him as a "friend of the court," stated:

"The status of a school as a public institution is not changed by projecting into its operation a private corporation of this nature.

"Unequivocally the courts have held that the superimposition of such a corporation does not excuse a State institution from noncompliance with the 14th Amendment or with orders establishing 14th Amendment rights."

It was the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, decreeing equal protection of the laws, which the Supreme Court held in 1954 was violated by State laws segregating pupils on the basis of race.

Scores "Sham and Artifice"

Rogers also made this assertion:

"If it is contemplated that any teachers or any other educational personnel now employed at (Little Rock's) Central High School or other schools under control of the School Board are to be used in the proposed schools, or if public monies of the State of Arkansas or any of its subdivisions are to be used to finance the schools to be operated by a corporation on lease from the School Board, then such facts would make even more transparent the sham and artifice proposed, and would thus provide additional cogent reasons why such lease or transfer would be an evasion of and in violation of the existing orders of this Court as confirmed by the Supreme Court."

Rogers, like the NAACP, asked that if Judge Miller refused to forbid the School Board to lease the buildings that he at least require that a private operation carry out the Board's desegregation plan. Miller refused to act on any part of the request.

Judge Miller said, in turning down the NAACP that to make a ruling he would have to pass on the constitutionality of the Arkansas laws.

He said one Federal district judge cannot do this; it takes three. He said the NAACP will have to file an entirely new suit, attacking the constitutionality of the three laws, one of which goes back to 1875.

It could not be immediately determined whether a three-man court would be asked to pass on the issues before the expected reopening of the schools Monday.

One Law Invoked

Gov. Orval E. Faubus is armed with a package of legislation passed by a special session of the Legislature last month in an effort to stave off desegregation. When the Supreme Court refused to let Little Rock suspend its gradual desegregation plan for 2½ years, Faubus invoked one new law and closed the four high schools.

Under another provision of that law the city will vote Saturday on a loaded question which if passed would open the high schools on a desegregated basis Monday. If, as expected, the referendum fails, an attempt will be made to set up a private high school system.

All this left the School Board, as Miller conceded, "on the horns of a dilemma." It wants to get the schools open. But unless Saturday's referendum carries, the only way they could be opened under State law would be by private operation.

On the other hand, the Board is under a year-old Federal Court order to carry out its desegregation program. It fears it might be held in contempt of that order if it leases the schools for segregated operation. That is a decision the Board apparently will now have to meet on its own this weekend.

Meanwhile, the campaign is building up for Saturday's election. The question on the ballot will be for or against "racial integration of all schools."

Segregationists say this means immediate desegregation of all schools, though the law permits and school officials say they would continue their gradual plan. For this year that means admitting six Negroes to the 2000-student Central High School.

Faubus Sees Way Open

Faubus, back from the Southern Governors' conference, said Miler's refusal to forbid leasing the schools "paves the way" for the School Board to go ahead and do it. The high schools could be reopened immediately if they are leased and if the city votes against desegregation Saturday, he said.

The Governor and segregationist leaders have told residents they can safely vote against desegregation because the private school plan would educate their children.

On the other side are a group of lawyers, some clergymen and a group of women who feel the private school plan is invalid and that the choice Saturday is between desegregated schools or no schools.

The women's group presented a half-hour television panel discussion tonight giving that side of the picture. They had asked the three television stations for time to answer Faubus' speech of last week touting the private school plan. The women said two of the stations turned them down.

Both Little Rock newspapers have carried little black-bordered advertisements scattered throughout the paper all week giving both sides of the argument.

A typical message from the women's group was: "Your choice on Saturday: Free public education or no public education. Vote for opening our schools."

On the other side were such as: "Mother and dad: What grade is your daughter in? How many school years does she have to be race-mixed?" "Don't be party to transforming Little Rock into another Washington, D. C." "Like a hen on a June bug the NAACP will pounce on all the schools of Little Rock if the race-mixers win the school election Saturday."

D. C. "Problem" Told

A 1½-hour speech made to the Capital Citizens Council Monday by William Gerber on what he described as terrible problems desegregation has brought to Washington schools, was rebroadcast tonight by a local radio station. Gerber was counsel for the Southern-dominated House District Committee investigation of Washington schools in 1956.

Side by side with the school referendum advertisements run ads from several out-of-state private schools inviting Little Rock students to enroll. About 10 per cent of the 3600 high school students have moved to other schools.

Four Central High students have started a postcard survey of 1236 fellow students asking whether they want school to open, regardless of desegregation. They hope to get an answer to give their elders before Saturday.

The pollsters hope the results will influence adult voters in the referendum. They said tabulations should be completed by Friday.

Preston Rudisill, Kirk Smith, Gail Manor and Sharri Smith, all 17, said they had mailed postcards asking students to mark a yes or no to this question: "Do you wish to have Central High School open, whether segregated or integrated?"

The students polled were requested not to sign their names.

Bodenhamer, Vandiver Hit School Decision

Gubernatorial candidates Ernest Vandiver and William T. Bodenhamer Tuesday attacked the U.S. Court of Appeals decision against suspension of integration at Little Rock, Ark.

Calling the decision unfortunate and unwise, Vandiver said: "Regrettably, this decision can only result in renewed strife and discord which will mean a serious division in the unity of our country at a most critical time."

Bodenhamer issued this statement: "It is regrettable that the federal courts have seen fit to cause further trouble in Little Rock. Under my segregation plan, there will be no occurrence of this nature in Georgia."

Ruling Is Interpreted As Go-Ahead To Lease Little Rock Schools

JUDGE JOHN E. MILLER
Doesn't mean to shirk

If Segregationists Win Election Tomorrow, Monday Reopening Felt A Possibility

From Wire Dispatches

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 25.—Attorneys for the Little Rock School Board interpreted the ruling of a federal judge Thursday as a go-ahead to lease the schools to a private corporation if segregationists win Saturday's special election.

United States District Judge John E. Miller, sitting at Fort Smith, Ark., declined to advise the School Board whether it can legally lease the schools.

Judge Miller held that Arkansas State laws have primacy in the matter and that the District Court lacks jurdisdiction at this time.

His ruling was a body blow to the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, which also had petitioned the court.

The ruling also disregarded a plea of the Justice Department that Judge Miller instruct the board to comply with the integration order of the Supreme Court whether schools reopen as private or public.

The Justice Department had entered the case Thursday morning as a friend of the court.

Faubus closed the schools after the United States Supreme Court ordered the immediate readmission of Negroes to Central High School, which they attended for the first time last year under the protection of federal troops.

Rogers Calls Plan 'Sham'

Attorney General Rogers declared that Faubus' private-school plan was a "sham" and illegal. While not an actual party to the case, as a "friend" Rogers filed a memorandum of law stating the Justice Department's position.

The N.A.A.C.P. intervened, petitioning the district court to enjoin the School Board from leasing the school buildings or, as an alternative, to require any private school using them to admit Negroes.

Miller dismissed the petitions without prejudice, meaning that the School Board and the N.A.A.C.P. could seek relief in another court.

Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., Negro attorney for the N.A.A.C.P., asked the judge what procedure to follow in pressing the issue in the courts.

"The constitutionality of the anti-integration acts passed by the recent legislative session will have to be decided first," Miller replied.

Already Challenged

Some of the anti-integration measures enacted by the recent special session of the Arkansas Legislature have already been challenged in a State court. The test cases concern an act empowering the Governor to close schools by proclamation and one providing that State funds may be withheld from integrated schools.

Judge Miller also cited the 1875 law.

"Under an old act of 1875 it gives the school board the right to lease (school) property when not in use," he said. "Now that act may play an important part in determining the validity of this entire scheme."

Richard C. Butler, a School Board attorney, said the board had "no immediate plans" for further court action.

In petitioning Miller the School Board had said it would be willing to lease the school buildings immediately, provided such action was legal.

The Little Rock school district will vote Saturday in a referendum by the Governor on the question of integrating the schools of the district.

Will Urge All To Vote

Faubus will go on television here Friday night, he said, to urge "both integrationists and segregationists" to vote Saturday in order to reflect the will of the people. Faubus has often said his actions are dictated by the feeling of the majority.

The big question, Faubus said, is "integration, complete and total."

Thursday night a "Women's Emergency Committee To Open Our Schools" presented a televised panel discussion urging a pro-integration vote as the only legal way of reopening the schools.

The obvious South-wide impact the outcome of the balloting will have was reflected by out-of-state advertisements appearing in Little Rock newspapers.

Mississippians Run Ad

Some Mississippians used a full newspaper page here Thursday, declaring, "Your actions will have a decisive effect upon not only your city and state but on the future of the United States."

The advertisement added:

"The question is: Do the parents and taxpayers of a state and a community have the right to educate their children as they always have, without destructive interference from the Federal Government?"

The way now was seen clear for the forces of Governor Orval E. Faubus to roll up an election victory and for the city's four high schools to reopen on a private, segregated basis next week, perhaps Monday.

The Kentucky Conference of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church has endorsed the approach to integration advocated by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. Story on Page 12.

Faubus Encouraged

Faubus said:

"The School Board asked for these instructions and the Federal Court has not stopped them from leasing the buildings. I think the situation looks very bright.

"If the people of Little Rock vote against integration Saturday, the schools can be opened immediately."

Judge Miller said the question involved the constitutionality of recently enacted Arkansas anti-integration laws and of an 1875 Arkansas law, and these laws could be passed on only by a three-judge federal court.

In similar cases three-judge federal courts have refused to rule on State laws until after State courts have had a chance to pass on their validity.

Realizes Predicament

"I have no inclination to shirk my responsibility, but this court is without authority to rule on the matter before it," said Miller, Arkansas' only federal jurist at present. "I realize the predicament you (the School Board) are in and I realize the pressure you are under, but I cannot assume the responsibility for advising you; that is something for which you have to depend on your counsel."

The School Board had asked whether it could lease Little Rock's four closed high-school buildings to a recently formed private corporation—as envisioned by Governor Faubus—without being held in contempt

U.S. LIKELY TO GIVE LITTLE ROCK PLAN

Justice Department Expects to Advise Judge How to Reopen 4 High Schools

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23 (UPI)—Justice Department officials said today that the department "most probably" would offer definite recommendations to a Federal judge on how to reopen four high schools in Little Rock, Ark. The schools were closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to block integration.

The officials said the department was expected to file a brief with Judge John E. Miller of the United States District Court detailing the legal steps that could be taken to bring about school integration at Little Rock.

On Nov. 10 a three-judge panel of the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals directed that positive steps be taken to facilitate integration at Little Rock's Central High School. Details were left up to Judge Miller and the Little Rock school board.

Judge Miller is expected to hold a hearing soon on the Appeals Court order. Five members of the school board have resigned since the order was handed down.

Officials said the Justice Department probably would offer concrete guidance to keep the District Court "on the right track" in seeking a way out of the tangled school problem. But they declined to reveal what suggestions they had in mind.

Catholics Delay Aid Pleas

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 23—A [illegible] Catholic school official [illegible]drawn requests for [illegible]led by two Catholic [illegible]utions that had accepted [illegible]aced students from Little [illegible]ck's high schools.

The Rev. John W. Kordsmeier, superintendent of Catholic schools in the state, said the applications had been withdrawn for review by his office. He said the schools had sent the requests to the state without having cleared them first with the diocese.

The applications were filed by St. Peter's High School at Pine Bluff and St. Scholastica at Fort Smith. The two schools had asked for the transfer of five Little Rock students.

The withdrawal of the two Catholic schools leaves only one private institution asking for state aid for Little Rock students. It is the Harding Academy at Searly, Ark., which is operated by the Church of Christ.

Little Rock Judge's Ruling

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 23—Following is the text of United States District Judge Harry J. Lemley's opinion today denying a stay of his order suspending integration at Little Rock Central High School:

The motion of the plaintiff to stay the enforcement of the judgment in this action rendered herein on June 20, 1958, pending appeal therefrom, having been given new consideration by the court, is hereby denied.

As we understand the law, we have a discretion in this matter; and we feel that that discretion should be exercised in denying the motion, primarily for the reason that from a practical standpoint to grant this motion and stay the enforcement of our judgment would to a large extent nullify our order in the case, since it will in all probability take months to carry the case through the Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court; and in the meantime the situation at Central High School, which we have found to be intolerable from an educational standpoint, would continue from the beginning of the approaching session to the final ruling of the Supreme Court on the merits of the case; and for the reason stated in our opinion in said cause, we do not think that such is in the public interest, including the interest of both the white and Negro students in the Little Rock district.

The Honorable Archibald K. Gardner, Chief Judge of this circuit, in assigning us to handle the school board's plea, gave us up to and including Sept. 1, 1958, within which to try and decide the case. In order that any aggrieved party might apply for appellate relief before the beginning of the next school session, our preliminary proceeding, the trial and the preparation and filing of our opinion and order were speeded up as fast as we felt such could be done and at the same time give proper consideration to the cause.

We do not feel that the plaintiffs are deprived of the opportunity of securing and appellate ruling on their motion for supersedeas by reason of the action we are now taking, since it will be more than two months before Central High School convenes this fall, and in the meantime the plaintiffs can apply at least to the Court of Appeals of this circuit for a stay of the enforcement of our judgment of this action.

This, the Twenty-third day of June, 1958.

(Signed) HARRY J. LEMLEY,
United States District Judge.

"And, by all who will read and comprehend, he will be honored and his decision will shine as a beacon to others as the proper judicial application of a bad decision by a higher court. If cause for complaint exists, then it rests with the United States Supreme Court."

Solon Lauds Little Rock Race Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. E. C. Gathings (D-Ark) said Thursday U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley's recent decision in the Little Rock school case was proper and logical.

Gathings said in a statement that the Supreme Court had held that the formula for enforcing its integration edict included determination by the District Court as to the timing of such change. Lemley's decision, he said, follows the high court's formula.

"It (the Lemley decision) is logical and should come as no surprise to any one conversant with either the facts in the case or the legal aspects," Gathings said. "Had the facts been different and Judge Lemley suited his decision to the whims and the policies of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, then those same voices raised to condemn his findings would have been carried throughout the land lauding and eulogizing him."

He added:

"But Judge Lemley seeks to win no popularity contest nor soil his judicial robes with the stains of sociological dilution of judicial reasoning. Judge Lemley followed the time-honored and correct method of finding the facts and applying them to the law.

Integration Delay Hearing Asked

Aug. 4 Requested For Appeal Date

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 9 (UPI)—A motion was filed in the U. S. Court of Appeals today asking that a hearing on an appeal from the order suspending racial integration in Little Rock, Ark., schools be held Aug. 4.

Wiley A. Branton, Negro attorney from Pine Bluff, Ark., said he thought the August date would give both the school board, the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, and other Negro groups involved adequate time to prepare their arguments. Branton is representing the NAACP in the case.

The appeals court earlier today set a seven-day deadline for either side in the case to motion for a hearing date. Otherwise, the case would have had to have been placed on the September docket of the court beginning Sept. 10, about the time the schools start their 1958-59 year.

The order was issued by Judges John B. Sanborn, St. Paul, Minn., Harvey M. Johnsen, Omaha, Neb., and Martin D. Van Osterhout, Sioux City, Iowa.

The order said the court would permit submission of the case on the original papers, rather than consume the time necessary to print documents.

The appeal is from an order by U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley, authorizing the Little Rock Board of Education to suspend its plan for racial integration until January, 1961.

The plan had been in effect since last September, with National Guardsmen protecting nine Negro students who attended Central High School then.

The Lemley Decision

Lee County Bulletin

THE U.S. Supreme Court is not going to change its desegregation ruling. It is purely wishful thinking to speculate even that it might. The law, then, will continue to be that admission to a public school cannot be decided on the basis of race or color.

We do not believe that the Supreme Court will overrule the Lemley decision of last week [suspending integration at Little Rock's Central High]. That order is in keeping with the court's "deliberate" speed philosophy.

If only those who believe in taking the law in their own hands, even to the point of lawlessness and violence, do the talking and the acting in the next two and a half years in Little Rock, the situation very easily could be more intolerable than it was in the past school year. Likewise, if irresponsible politicians there are willing to gamble away their city's chances for peace and reason for the sake of personal political profit, no good can possibly follow the Lemley decision.

At the other extreme, the NAACP ought to recognize that nothing can be gained by pressuring for immediate compliance with the desegregation decision at Little Rock. The fact is that racial strife and tension there are such that the decision of Judge Lemley to delay was the only one that wisely could be rendered.

Segregqtion Committee

The Talladega Daily Home

STATE Senator Albert Boutwell's suggestion that the Alabama legislature should have a special permanent committee to handle segregation matters should receive the thoughtful consideration of all members of the legislature.

The purpose would be "to combine the independent thoughts of 141 members" of the legislature into the most workable legislation and to keep out ill-advised measures. Otherwise, the senator says, the lawmakers will be taking pot shots here and there and never get anywhere.

Mr. Boutwell is a man wise in the matter of state legislation and specifically in that pertaining to segregation. The Alabama legislature would do well to follow his advice in this matter.

Integration Is Pushed Too Fast, Ike Hints; High Court Will Meet

Bills Given Rush

Legislation May Wind Up On Governor's Desk By Tonight

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 27.—The Arkansas House and Senate Wednesday gave near-unanimous approval to legislation offered by both Gov. Orval Faubus and Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett. Each body must act on measures adopted by the other before final approval.

Final action on most if not all of the 13 measures could come Thursday. However, amendments placed on two of the proposals may carry the voting over to Friday.

The Governor's six-package program, built around a school-closing law, met approval in both Senate and House shortly before noon. Six of the seven measures by Mr. Bennett met quick approval in the House Wednesday afternoon, and were transmitted to the Senate for a vote Thursday.

Only a smattering of opposition showed up in the House to the Governor's program. In the Senate, there were no opposing votes.

Amendment Shouted Down

In the House, Representative J. C. Cottrell of Little Rock sought vainly to amend the school-closing proposal, by changing a provision which would require a majority of the "qualified electors" to re-open an integrated basis any school the Governor might have closed. Mr. Cottrell pointed out that it's a rare occurrence if more than the majority of qualified voters turn out to exercise the franchise in any Arkansas election.

He contended that in fairness to both sides of the question, the bill should be reworded to allow a majority of those voting to decide the fate of a school that might be closed by the Governor.

The proposed amendment promptly was shouted down.

Amended in the House was a school board recall law sponsored by Mr. Bennett.

However, that wouldn't apply to the House-amended school-closing proposal, since it was done by merely striking certain provisions from it.

The two-pronged action added up to an effort by the legislators not only to put the Governor's recommendations on the law books, but also to give the attorney general broader powers in dealing with activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

'Root Of Problem'

Commenting on the House action on his bills, Mr. Bennett—who has started extensive litigation already against the NAACP—said his bills would take up where the Governor's legislation leaves off.

"The Governor is dealing primarily with the Little Rock problem," he said. "The legislation I'm offering would curb the activities of the NAACP, and in so doing I believe end a lot of our integration problems."

The attorney general has contended on prior occasions that integration-promoting efforts of the NAACP were the root of Arkansas integration worries.

In the House, Representative Ray Smith of Hot Springs voted against the school-closing law without comment. Representative Jack Oakes of Augusta voted against one of the Governor's bills dealing with transfer of state aid to students who re-enroll in non-integrated schools. Mr. Oakes said he objected to certain wording of the bill, not to the bill in principle.

Lone Dissenter Was Small Voice In Noisy House

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 27. — (AP) — The lone voice of dissent in the Arkansas Legislature Wednesday belonged to a young lawyer from Hot Springs. It was a small voice in the supercharged uproar of a House aroused against school integration.

The lawyer, Ray S. Smith Jr., cast the only vote against empowering Gov. Orval Faubus to close Arkansas schools if they are forcibly integrated. The measure passed 94-1.

He Practices Law

Mr. Smith is 32, with reddish hair and an alert face. He wears horn-rimmed glasses. He is of medium height, trimly stocky. Born at Hot Springs, he practices law there. He is married and has two sons. He belongs to the Methodist Church, and has served in the House since 1955.

"It was hard on me today," Mr. Smith said after casting his vote. "It made me sick. If I didn't believe in representative government, I might have done differently."

Mr. Smith said the vote did not reflect his views on integration. He prefers to keep those to himself. He explained that he thinks the school-closing bill gives Governor Faubus too much power, at the expense of local school districts.

Mr. Smith tried to amend the school-closing bill to provide that it take effect only by petition of a school board or 10 per cent of the voters of the district. The amendment was beaten down.

"There is no question in my mind of Governor Faubus' integrity," Mr. Smith said. "I just don't want to give that power to any governor, even though I believe in his integrity."

Relief Need Seen

Another thing that bothers Mr. Smith is what happens to a child when his school is closed. he declared:

"No provision is made for the continued education of the children. I agree that the people of Arkansas are entitled to relief. I recognize that an emergency exists and I have supported and will continue to support all measures designed to prevent violence and protect the rights of the people.

"I cannot believe the people want to give up the right to control their own schools and to cease the education of their children."

Hearing Is Today

Breathing Spell At Stak —President Mentions Going 'Slower'

(Text on Page Three)

By MORRIS CUNNINGHAM
From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27. — President Eisenhower hinted Wednesday he believes school integration is being pushed too rapidly as the United States Supreme Court prepared to study the crisis-filled Little Rock situation.

The President also said there is "no chance" of great divergencies between his views and those to be presented to the Supreme Court Thursday in a Justice Department brief.

May Be Moderate

The President's news conference remarks thus closed at least the possibility that the Administration will recommend a moderate course in the Little Rock case.

However, observers recalled that the President spoke in a moderate vein several times last year prior to dispatching Federal troops to Little Rock to enforce integration at Central High School.

At stake in Thursday's hearing is whether the high court will grant Central a breathing spell or order immediate readmittance of Negroes to its classrooms.

The Supreme Court hewed closely to the Administration's recommendations in its original 1955 school desegregation order. And it presumably will give great weight to the Administration's views in the Little Rock case to be heard Thursday.

Will Reflect 'Ike' Views

The President said he wouldn't instruct the Justice Department to argue one way or the other. But he twice said he expects the department's brief, to be filed by Solicitor General J. Lee Rankin, to reflect his views.

He hinted at those views in response to a question about a report in the current issue of Newsweek magazine. The magazine reports he has told friends privately he wishes the Supreme Court had never handed down its school desegregation decision, and that he thinks integration should proceed much more slowly.

The President denied the first point in the report, saying in effect he would never voice an opinion about the correctness of a Supreme Court decision.

May Have Said 'Slower'

"Now with respect to the other one," he continued, "it might have been that I said something about 'slower,' but I do believe that we should—because I do say, as I did yesterday or last week, we have got to have reason and sense and education, and a lot of other developments that go hand in hand as this process—if this process is going to have any real acceptance in the United States."

Thursday's extraordinary special session of the Supreme Court—the fifth since 1920—was called by Chief Justice Earl Warren to consider a petition by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for a resumption of integration at Little Rock's Central High School.

The NAACP asked the Supreme Court to vacate the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals' 30-day stay of its integration order, and also to stay Federal Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley's two-and-one-half-year postponement order. Attorneys for the Little Rock School Board have filed in opposition, and will participate in Thursday's oral arguments. Solicitor General Rankin will appear for the Government.

Ike's Legal Spokesmen Strong For Desegregation

WASHINGTON (AP) — While President Eisenhower has steadfastly declined to give his own opinion on the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools, his legal spokesmen have been enthusiastic advocates of desegregation.

Herbert Brownell Jr., the Eisenhower administration's first attorney general, contended the high court had the authority and the duty to strike down the color line in public schools.

Brownell filed a 118-page brief with the court Nov. 27, 1954, in which he argued it was the court's responsibility to enforce the equal rights provision of the 14th Amendment.

The 14th Amendment provides, among other things, that no state shall make or enforce any law that abridges the privileges and immunities of U. S. citizens.

J. Lee Rankin, now solicitor general but at the time head of the Justice Department's office of legal counsel, told the Supreme Court orally in December, 1953, that the department adopts the views of segregation expressed in a legal brief filed by the Truman administration in 1952. That brief said the historic "separate but equal doctrine" laid down in 1896 was wrong and asked the court to overturn it. The department said at the time that Rankin was speaking for the Eisenhower administration.

The separate but equal doctrine, handed down in a transportation case, allowed states to enforce segregation in schools provided that separate facilities for Negroes were equal to those provided for whites.

The Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, struck down the separate but equal doctrine, holding racial segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional.

During arguments in April, 1955, on implementation of this decision Solicitor Gen. Simon B. Sobeloff, now chief judge of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, took what he called a middle course.

He asked for a decision "to suggest motion, to encourage motion" toward ending segregation, but with no ironclad deadline, as asked by Thurgood Marshall, counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

In its May, 1955, follow-up decision calling for the ending of racial segregation "with all deliberate speed," the court gave district courts considerable leeway and told them they could take into account local conditions in deciding individual cases.

In a news conference statement Aug. 20, Eisenhower, as he has done whenever the matter came up, declined to express his view of the Little Rock case. He said it would not be appropriate for him to do so "because there are some phases of this case still pending in the courts."

But Eisenhower said all citizens have a solemn duty to comply with final court orders. And he said each state "owes it to its inhabitants, to its sister states and to the Union the obligation to suppress unlawful forces."

Ike Asks Support On School Issue

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1 (UPI)—President Eisenhower appealed to the South today to recognize its duty to comply with court-ordered school integration and grant "all our people" their constitutional rights.

In a statement stemming from the Supreme Court's latest ruling Monday, he said that any other course except compliance with court school orders would be "fraught with grave consequences to our nation."

Plea to All

The President came to his first news conference since Aug. 27 armed with "a little statement" on the integration problem. In brief, it was a plea to all Americans—public officials and private citizens alike—to be true to "our constitutional ideals."

Eisenhower, who appeared in ruddy good health following his Newport, R. I., vacation, discussed most current issues dispassionately. But he spoke with more than his usual forcefulness in ruling out any appeasement of Communist China.

He also was irked at two reporters who persisted with questions he apparently did not think particularly relevant. And he expressed amazement with the election "apathy" of some Republicans. He also was puzzled by some foreign reaction to U. S. foreign policy.

The President also said:

He will enter Walter Reed Army Medical Center Friday for his annual physical checkup. He announced it because he did not want anyone to get the idea he had a "new illness." The White House said a report on the head-to-toe examination would be issued Saturday.

He never asked anyone to seek the resignation of his chief assistant, Sherman Adams. But he said "there is no question" but that others advised Adams "very strongly" that it was best he leave as a result of the furor over Adams' gifts from industrialist Bernard Goldfine. The President also said he planned to issue a table of the White House staff reorganization to show how issues are funneled upward to him for a final decision.

In discussing the school integration crisis, the President avoided specific reference to closing of Southern schools. He noted that he had warned last week that such action would have evil effects and said he would not elaborate.

When asked about the Arkansas and Virginia situations, he volunteered his brief statement noting that the Supreme Court held unanimously Monday that there must be "equality of opportunity for education" where public funds are involved.

Court Ruling

The court held that no state could nullify court integration orders directly or by such "evasive schemes" as closing or opening closed schools as private institutions.

The President said it was "incumbent on all Americans" to "recognize their duty of complying with the rulings of the highest court in the land."

"We must never forget that the rights of all of us depend upon respect for the lawfully determined rights of each of us," he said.

"As one nation, we must assure to all our people, whatever their color or creed, the enjoyment of their constitutional rights and the full measure of the law's protection."

As for how closed Southern schools could be re-opened, the President said that a number of cases still are pending in various courts and he will have nothing to say until they have been decided.

Faubus Admits Possible Mistakes In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (ANP) — Controversial Gov. Faubus of Arkansas got into the news picture again last week with an announcement that he plans to reveal a "new thought" on the school integration problem, and admission that he might have made a few mistakes during the Central High controversy.

Interviewed at a news conference here, Faubus tried to minimize his own posible mistakes in comparison to what he trmd the government's major blunder in calling out federal troops to enforce integration at the school. The government mode the biggest mistake by using the troops, he said.

Back from a vacation trip in North Arlansas, the governor appeared to be acting the part of a prima donna, as he kept reporters guessing on what his "new thought" will be. He said, however that he might reveal it in an address before the Independent Magazine Wholesalers convention here Jan. 18.

He refused also to say whether he would run for a third term as governor. He would say only that he thought the integration issue would be a major issue in the 1958 campaign.

Asked if he thought the National Dmiocratic Party wouldo suppport him in th campaign, Faubus said: "I think that I am not in any sort of disfavor with the Party. I may be with some Party officials but these are only a few. National Democratic chiftain Paul Butler, who usually speaks for the party, has critized Faubus on his stand in the Little Rock controversy.

REP. WINSTEAD
. . . Would 'handcuff' Ike

Rep. Winstead would curb Ike's troop use

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7— (AP)—Rep. Winstead (D., Miss.) today criticized the Eisenhower administration for sending troops to Little Rock during the school integration crisis there. He called on Congress to put "legislative handcuffs" on the executive to prevent similar action in the future.

Men in authority who would use the military against citizens in a sovereign state must be convinced, Winstead said, that "framers of the constitution meant for the military to be servants of the people—not their masters."

Winstead made his remarks in connection with plans to introduce two bills aimed at limiting use of federal troops.

One bill would prohibit the president from calling the National Guard into federal service except in time of war, threat of invasion or when requested by a state governor or legislature.

The second would prohibit use of federal troops to enforce federal court orders and state laws.

WINSTEAD said in a speech prepared for the House that his bills came "as a result of the disgraceful action of this administration in calling out the National Guard of Arkansas and in ordering 1200 battle-ready paratroopers of the 10th Airborne Division into Little Rock to force the integration of nine Negro children at Central High School."

Unless repetitions can be prevented, Winstead said, "we have witnessed the beginning of the end of our cherished form of government."

CRISIS IN LITTLE ROCK IS TOPIC OF ARTICLES

Series By Former Mayor To Appear In Paper

CRITICAL OF GOVERNOR

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 13. — Former Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann is author of a series of newspaper articles on the Little Rock integration crisis, which will be published later in book form, he said Monday.

Mr. Mann, who left office late last year after city voters approved a change to a city manager form of government in 1956, said he gave his views on the integration controversy after being urged "both locally and out-of-state" to do so.

Critical Of Governor

The series will start appearing in the New York Herald Tribune on Jan. 19, under the former Little Rock mayor's byline.

The mayor is understood to be critical of Gov. Orval Faubus in the discussions, on grounds the governor—in calling out the National Guard to block integration at Central High School early in September—precipitated a major integration furor which has had worldwide repercussions.

The former mayor and the governor clashed a number of times during the controversy. Mayor Mann charged Little Rock police could have handled the situation if Governor Faubus had stayed out of it, and the Governor referred to Mr. Mann as a "discredited" public official. The Governor charged that voters turned to a city manager form of government because of dissatisfaction with Mr. Mann's administration of city affairs.

Mr. Mann since has returned to his insurance office here, and the city manager hired by the city manager board of directors is expected to report for work here later this week.

Wishes Him Luck

Mr. Mann said he wished Mr. Dauley the best of luck, but that "he's going to have his hands full, in view of the city's needs."

Mr. Mann said Little Rock's biggest administrative problem always had been insufficient finances. The present city budget of about three million dollars a year should be "at least" five million a year to meet city needs, he said.

White Boy Says Life Threatened

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A 17-year-old white youth said last night that anonymous telephone callers threatened his family with death because he kicked a Negro girl pupil at integrated Central High School.

Richard Boehler told newsmen that he launched a kick at Minnie Jean Brown, 16, as she passed him near the school campus after classes were dismissed Wednesday afternoon.

He said she didn't try to fight back.

"She just put her hand to her face and cried like the baby she is," he said.

Prosecutor Frank Holt refused to issue a warrant for Boehler's arrest. The warrant was sought by Minnie Jean and her mother.

Holt said his office would investigate.

SUSPENDED WEDNESDAY

Boehler said he was suspended from Central High Wednesday morning for arguing with his home room teacher and for failing to pay a $1.50 school fee. He went back to take some other students to their homes in his automobile.

Boehler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth F. Boehler, said someone in a crowd of white students dared him to "go get" Minnie Jean as she walked past him. But he didn't kick at her because of the dare, he said.

Boehler said Minnie Jean had called him "white trash" in a school corridor and once got into a dispute with him in a French class.

He said that three different persons had called him repeatedly on the telephone last night, threatening to kill him, his parents, his 13-year-old sister and his grandmother.

CONFERENCE SLATED ON KICKING INCIDENT

Youth's Parents To Talk With School Head

BOARD CHANGE IS MADE

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 31.—The parents of a 17-year-old boy accused of kicking a Negro girl student at Central High School asked for a conference Friday with school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom.

Mr. Blossom said he probably would meet Saturday with Richard Boehler, 17, and his parents, to discuss an incident occurring Wednesday and involving Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students attending integrated Central High.

No Action Taken

The superintendent said he had taken no disciplinary action against the youth, pending "further investigation." Minnie Jean Brown and her mother tried to obtain an arrest warrant Thursday against the boy, but Pros. Atty. Frank Holt declined to issue it.

Young Boehler, whose identity had been kept secret until late Thursday night, said the Negro girl involved in the incident was a "troublemaker."

He also said he and his parents had received a number of anonymous telephone calls threatening their lives.

He contended the girl had called him some bad names, and that as a result he kicked her. The Negro girl said Thursday she was kicked without cause, but the white youth said that "she's a troublemaker . . . and acts as if she owns the school."

He said he had trouble with her earlier in the school year.

Mr. Blossom said so far as he knew school closed Friday for the week end without further incident.

School Board Change

The school was operating Friday with a change in the School Board. Wayne Upton, Little Rock attorney, Thursday night was elected new president of the board, to succeed Dr. William G. Cooper, who was elected vice president.

Dr. Cooper, meanwhile, was named president of the board of Little Rock University. The School Board acts as trustees also for the university, but with different presidents.

Rogers Promises Troops Removal

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31. — (AP)—Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers was reported to have told Republican leaders Friday "we are going to get the troops out of Little Rock at the earliest possible moment consistent with public safety."

Rogers also was reported to have said the Administration has no civil rights legislation to propose. He spoke at a closed door meeting of the Republican National Committee and an account of his talk was given later to newsmen by a committee spokesman.

Regular Army and Arkansas National Guardsmen were mobilized in Little Rock last fall during the school integration crisis. Only a few National Guardsmen are still on duty at Central High School there.

Faubus Silent

Alabama State GOP Chairman Claude Vardaman was reported to have told the committee that since Rogers has been in office "his statements have done more to quiet feelings in the South than any other single thing."

At Little Rock, Gov. Orval Faubus declined comment on Rogers' reported statement.

Little Rock Integration Violence Continues

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 1 (AP).—Violence broke out several times at integrated Central High School yesterday, and a white boy and a Negro girl were suspended.

The tension-filled day also included a bomb scare but no explosives were found.

Minnie Jean Brown, 16, one of the nine Negroes attending the school, was suspended by Principal Jess Matthews. Apparently the action resulted from a corridor scuffle between the Negro girl and a white girl, Frankie Ann Gregg.

Mr. Matthews also suspended Leroy Hudkins, 17, a white youth who reportedly doused Minnie Jean with soup in a cafeteria incident after the fight in the corridor.

Father Withdraws Daughter

Mrs. Frank B. Gregg, jr., said her husband went to Central High and withdrew their daughter after Frankie Ann hit Minnie Jean with a purse because the Negro girl called her "white trash."

Mrs. Gregg quoted her daughter, a 10th-grader, as saying she and Minnie Jean bumped into each other while changing classes. The name-calling and purse-slinging followed, Mrs. Gregg said.

Carlotta Walls, 14, colored, repored that a white boy kicked her. It could not be determined whether any action was taken in this incident.

Minnie Jean has figured in a number of racial disputes at Central High which still is guarded during class hours by a small force of federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen.

She was suspended in late December before for throwing chili on two white boys in the school cafeteria.

After Minnie Jean's reinstatement last month, a white boy drew a suspension for tossing soup on her.

Incident Last Week

Last week another white boy kicked her as she walked across the school campus. She and her mother tried unsuccessfully to have the boy arrested. He had been suspended for scholastic reasons a few hours before the kicking occurred.

None of the other Negro pupils has been suspended since they started attending school under the protection of Federal troops last September 25.

Yesterday morning, a Little Rock television station (KTHV) got an anonymous telephone call that a bomb had been planted at Central High. School authorities and city patrolmen checked but found nothing.

In another development concerning school integration, Representative Hays, Democrat of Arkansas, and Gov. Orval Faubus conferred at the Governor's office yesterday on legislation that Mr. Hays plans to introduce.

The measure would call for a congressional study of school desegregation Mr. Hays said. He declined to discuss details.

The South, Too, Is For Law

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, at his press conference yesterday, said, reading from a prepared statement, that "it is incumbent upon all Americans, public officials and private citizens alike, to reeognize their duty of complying with the rulings of the highest court in the land." He had been asked whether in the light of the Supreme Court's decisions, Arkansas and Virginia should re open their closed schools on an integrated basis without being forced into it by the federal government.

Dr. J. T. Raney of L. R. Private Schools Meets Press

Deeply opposed as vast numbers of Southerners are to forced integration in the schools, intense as efforts are to prevent it, it should be realized over the country that this does not mean they are against law and order. The South, too, is for law and order. Extremists favoring sheer defiance and violence are few. Responsible officials and citizens striving to maintain segregation are seeking to do so by legal means.

It cannot yet be foreseen just how these lawful efforts will come out. But in Arkansas and Virginia these endeavors have sought legal courses. In Alabama, school placement and "freedom of choice" laws are steps taken in an orderly way toward legal solution of school problems. Such programs are not defiance of law and the Supreme Court.

THE COURT'S OPINION OF LAST Monday in the Little Rock case attributed difficulties in the situation there "to the actions of legislators and executive officials of the state of Arkansas taken in their official capacities, which reflect their own determination to resist this court's decision in the Brown case and which have brought about violent resistance to that decision in Arkansas."

But it should be pointed out and emphasized that Gov. Faubus has not defied U. S. courts but has sought legal means of resistance. His own use of troops in blocking integration at Central High School was taken, he insisted, in accordance with his conception of his duty as governor to seek to maintain public peace. He did not defy the order of the Federal District Court to proceed with integration in September, 1957.

Steps taken to set up private segregated schools in Arkansas and Virginia have been based on conviction as to legal rights.

A BASIC CONTENTION OF opponents of compulsory integration under the Supreme Court's ruling against segregated schools has been that the ruling itself is not in accordance with the Constitution. The Supreme Court is not to be regarded as infallible. The court has reversed itself in various cases, as it did in the 1954 decision overturning the long established "separate but equal" ruling.

Southern opponents of compulsory integration of the schools are not only seeking legal means of opposing it but also seek change of the court's doctrine and to persuade more Americans that the 1954 decision was unconstitutional and that forced desegregation can tragically operate against the public interest and that of both white and Negro citizens. Certainly it is a basic right to express conviction, to criticize court decisions, to seek legal changes. Where such action is denied, freedom does not exist.

Faubus Bars Militia Use for Integration

Fla. Times-Union

Refuses Shift on Schools

Arkansas Governor, Little Rock Unit Hold Meet

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 20 (UPI)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus said today that President Eisenhower needn't expect him to use the state militia to enforce integration at Central High School Sept. 2.

The President made it clear in Washington that he will use federal troops to enforce integration decrees, as he did in Little Rock last fall, if it is necessary to prevent "anarchy."

He said his feelings are "exactly as they were" last fall. Faubus said his "position of last fall is unchanged."

After what he described as an "amicable" meeting with the Little Rock School Board at Supt. of Schools Virgil Blossom, Faubus declined to say whether he has decided to call the legislature into session to deal with the new integration crisis. Earlier, he had said "a decision must be made before the end of this week."

Faubus said the school officials had answered some of his questions as to steps they planned to avert integration. Answers to some of the questions, he added are not yet known.

Blossom said the board has asked the U.S. Court of Appeals for a stay of its integration order. He added school authorities agreed to explore every legal angle with a view to postponing integration.

New Battle Seen

(In St. Louis attorneys requested the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals today to make its decision denying delay in Little Rock integration effective immediately in order that Negro students can start the fall term, beginning Sept. 2, in white schools.)

The only chance of operating Central as a segregated school is if the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals or a U.S. Supreme Court justice stays the appeals court order that integration must continue at Central.

School board lawyers prepared an appeal to the Supreme Court and a petition to the appeals court for a stay.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Monday reversed a decision by U.S. District Judge Harry Lemley of Hope, Ark., that Central should have a 2½-year recess from integration.

Faubus held a news conference after Eisenhower read a statement at his news conference in Washington affirming his intention to use federal troops to enforce integration, if necessary.

Position Unchanged

"If it is the purpose of Mr. Eisenhower's statement to reaffirm his position of last fall, that it is my duty as governor to use the militia to enforce integration in any school district in this state, then I must say that my position of last fall is unchanged," Faubus said.

"I do not interpret my constitutional duties to cover any such theory as that advanced by the President. I do recognize my duty to preserve the peace of my state and I shall continue to do so to the best of my ability.

"It is also elementary that I am bound under my oath of office to uphold the Constitution and to enforce the laws of my state within the framework of the federal Constitution."

But, he said, "Many lawyers throughout the nation, regardless of their views on segregation or integration, have expressed the view that the Supreme Court (integration) decision is without the basis of law."

NAACP to Push Fight

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (AP) — The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People today notified Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus of its opposition to further delay in bringing about integration at the Little Rock High School.

In a telegram signed by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary, the NAACP said it will advise the parents of Negro students that it "stands ready to assist them further in pressing without delay and with all legal weapons their rights."

The message also declared:

"It is now the duty of the state and local authorities to protect the determined rights of individual citizens and in the event of their failure the duty of the federal government so to do."

The telegram was in response to a suggestion by Faubus yesterday that the NAACP make clear its attitude toward the recent U. S. appeals court decision ordering integration.

IF NECESSARY

Ike Indicates He'll Use Troops Again

WASHINGTON, Aug 20 (UPI)—President Eisenhower made it clear today that he again will use federal troops to enforce court-ordered public school integration if it is necessary, to avoid "anarchy."

The President told his news conference the federal government must and will enforce court integration rulings if the states fail to do so.

He said his feelings "are exactly as they were" last fall when he ordered paratroopers and federalized National Guardsmen to maintain order at newly integrated Central High School at Little Rock, Ark.

Although he did not specifically mention the use of troops, Eisenhower made it perfectly clear that he would use them again as a last resort in Little Rock or any other locality where violence and mob rule threaten public order.

Reads Statement

The President opened his news conference by reading a prepared statement which he said was aimed at answering questions raised by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decision reinstating integration in the Little Rock high school.

"Every American must understand that if an individual, community or state is going successfully and continuously to defy the courts, then there is anarchy," he said.

The President said it is the duty of each state to "suppress unlawful forces" and maintain order to "permit compliance with the final orders of the court. . . .

"Defiance of this duty would present the most serious problem, but there can be no equivocation as to the responsibility of the federal government in such an event" he added.

Feelings Unchanged

The President said his feelings are uncharged from last Sept. 24, when he ordered federal troops into Little Rock. He quoted a paragraph from his nationwide television speech at that time which said:

"The very basis of our individual rights and freedoms rests upon the certainty that the President and the Executive Branch of the government will support and insure the carrying out of the decisions of the federal courts."

During a follow-up question period, Eisenhower was asked whether Virginia Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. had requested a conference with him regarding school integration problems certain to arise in Virginia this fall.

"No," the President replied, "but there have been one or two political figures from Virginia that have agreed with me we would like to talk some of these things over, but so far we just haven't gotten the opportunity."

The President told his last news conference he is willing to meet with Almond to discuss the integration situation, particularly in Arlington, just across the Potomac from Washington, and Norfolk. Thousands of families of federal employes live in these two areas.

AT LITTLE ROCK

Faubus Calls Special Session Of Lawmakers

By ARTHUR EVERETT

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus Saturday called an emergency session next week of the Arkansas State Legislature to try to block further racial integration at Central High school.

The legislators may be asked to close the big school entirely, as a last resort against what Faubus called illegal federal interference.

Faubus told a news conference that information he has received indicated that violence in the event of renewed integration at Central would be even greater this time than a year ago. Riots outside the school last fall shocked the nation and led President Eisenhower to send federal troops to Little Rock.

During the past year of crisis here, Faubus often threatened to call on the legislature for special anti-integration measures. But he kept putting off the actual call for one reason or another.

Finally, in midafternoon, Faubus solemnly announced he had summoned the lawmakers to a special session next Tuesday—one week before Central High is scheduled to reopen.

In his call, Faubus said in part:

"Because of the grave concern of the people of Little Rock and the general public in this matter, and the great desire to combat by legal means the forcible integration of the Little Rock high schools and to avoid the almost certain disorders that would ensue, it is imperative that the people be given an opportunity to act. . . .

"It is the responsibility of the chief executive, under the constitution and law of Arkansas, to preserve the peace and good order of the state. This has been and will continue to be my firm position.

"I have not offered nor will I offer any objections to changes which are brought about through constitutional and Democratic processes, in accordance with the will of the people."

Faubus told newsmen he would have liked to delay his call until the Supreme Court makes its next scheduled move in the case. That appears to be nearly a week away, however, and Faubus declard: "There is no time to do that."

Although he wouldn't discuss the nature of any bills he has in mind, Faubus said:

"It is my hope and my expectation that the legislature will act on the bills before Sept. 2."

Central's 2,000 students are scheduled to return to classes on that date.

Of any measures that are passed Faubus said: "I hope it will never be necessary to use them."

Asked if he had information that violence this year might even go beyond last year's if Central's integration program is resuled, Faubus replied: "That is the information brought to me over and over."

CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL
GOVERNOR FAUBUS - SCHOOL BOARD

Board at Little Rock Wins Stay; All-White Opening Due Sept. 2

30 Days Are Granted For Appeal

By Wire Dispatches

The Little Rock School Board yesterday was granted 30 days by the Eighth United States Circuit Court of Appeals to carry its fight against resumption of integration to the Supreme Court.

The court's stay order at St. Louis came just four days after it had set aside the order of U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., suspending integration in Little Rock's Central High School for 2½ years.

Immediately after the Appeals Court acted, Little Rock School Superintendent Virgil Blossom announced that Central High School would open September 2 "as an all-white high school."

N.A.A.C.P. To Keep Fighting

Seven on the nine Negroes who attended Central High School last year had sought readmission. One was graduated, another expelled.

In New York, Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel of the National Association For The Advancement of Colored People, announced his determination to fight for the September 2 integration deadline. He said he would go to Washington today armed with one or two of three possible motions seeking Supreme Court action reversing the Appeals Court's stay.

Virginia's Governor says in a Page 3 story that if federal troops are sent to his state to enforce integration, "They will patrol empty schoolhouses."

Although the court was not in session, Justice Charles E. Whittaker, in charge of the Eighth Judicial Circuit, could act on any motion in the case.

Stay Order Telephoned

The stay order was telephoned to the clerk of the appeals in St. Louis by Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner from his office in Huron, S. D.

It set out that if the appeal is made within the 30 days, the stay order will remain in force until the Supreme Court acts.

At the same time, the Appeals Court denied a motion of attorneys for the Negro students to make effective at once its mandate overruling Judge Lemley. Under court rules a mandate usually takes 20 days to be issued.

Even as the Appeals Court acted, Arkansas Governor Orval E. Faubus in Little Rock stood firm on his call to Arkansas legislators to stand by for a possible call to deal with the integration situation.

In Recess Till October 6

Judge Gardner's order set yesterday for the beginning of the 30-day period.

Should the School Board take the full 30 days, the case would not reach the Supreme Court before late September and the Supreme Court itself is in summer recess until October 6. Other legal moves could take nearly another month.

Barring fast Supreme Court action as requested by the N.A.A.C.P., it appeared certain that Central High would open the fall term as an all-white school.

Richard Butler, attorney for the School Board, said the decision "apparently means that the integration question is at a standstill until October."

Wrote Only Dissent

The Supreme Court has heard no oral arguments in segregation cases since its 1954 decision calling for "all deliberate speed" in eliminating desegregation.

Judge Gardner said the seven members of the court had decided at the time they issued their decision that a stay should be granted if requested by the School Board. The 90-year-old Gardner wrote the only dissent.

The School Board's motion for a stay had contended that as long as "grave questions" in the Little Rock case remained undecided by the Supreme Court, enforcement of integration would create "an increasingly intolerable situation."

Special Session Seems Off

Faubus said late yesterday that he would not make a decision on calling the Legislature until today.

"I didn't make my plans to call the session in haste, and I am not going to call them off in haste," he said.

But it was apparent that the likelihood of a session is now remote.

A veteran legislator, Carroll Hollensworth, commented, "I would think this removes the need for a special session, and I don't think we will have one . . . I am making my plans not to attend a special session Monday."

At a press conference just before the Appeals Court stay, Faubus indicated one of the bills he would submit to the Legislature would call for closing Central High should President Eisenhower send troops there.

"Likely one (bill) will deal with use of troops, either federal or State," Faubus said. He added that closing the school "has been suggested by a number of legislators and certainly that is one (bill) that is being considered."

Faubus last fall called out the Arkansas National Guard to keep the nine Negroes out of school. He said he did it to preserve peace, but a district judge ordered him to stop interfering with integration at the high school.

Mob Riots Followed

Mob riots at the school followed, and Eisenhower dispatched paratroops and nationalized the guardsmen to restore order. Integration was troop-enforced the rest of the year.

The Appeals Court acted quickly on the School Board's request, filed only yesterday morning. The board's application followed by a day the opposing motion of attorneys for the Negro students.

The board has contended the stay should be granted so the Supreme Court could determine whether an order for school desegration may be postponed upon a finding that its continuation might be contrary to public welfare.

FAUBUS DEMANDS ARKANSAS BOARD RESIST OR RESIGN

Insists Little Rock Schools Must Suspend Integration Despite Court's Ruling

STATE ACTION HELD UP

Governor Says He Must See Board's Plans Before He Decides on a Session

Text of statement by Faubus is printed on Page 18.

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 19—Gov. Orval E. Faubus called on the Little Rock School Board today either to find means to suspend racial integration at Central High School or to resign.

Governor Faubus said he woulld await disclosure of the board's plan before deciding whether the state shouldl act to cope with "the dire implications of any forcible integration of the schools at this time."

He also declared that the parents of the seven Negro children now technically enrolled at the school and officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People could resolve "this whole unhappy situation" by withdrawing students to allow a cooling-off period.

"Any action taken by the Chief Executive, the Legislature or the people before the attitude of these people is known might prove to be premature and unnecessary," he commented.

Reacts to Decision

The Governor's remarks came in a statement read at a news coference in his Capitol office this morning. They followed the announcement yesterday in St. Louis that the United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has reversed a District Court ruling that had granted the School Board here a two-and-a-half-year delay in its plan for gradual integration.

Mr. Faubus's statement surprised most observers, since he had previously indicated that he would summon the Legislature into special session immediately if the District Court were overruled to consider school closure measures.

However, he implied today that such a session would be called later if needed. Asekd if he had legislation ready to be introduced, he replied:

"I used to be a Boy Scout and their motto is 'Be Prepared.'"

The Governor, who won renomination to a third term by an overwhelming majority last month, was sarcastic in his criticism of the school board as he has been in the past.

Questions School Board

"Does the board intend to ...inue to promote the com... integration of the Little ...ools while muttering insin...re... half-hearted protestations," he asked, "or does it intend to fight in every legal way possible the integration by force, with such dire consequences for education in the affected school, and the peace of the community?"

The Governor declared that although the body had been ordered to continue its integration plan, "it has every right to resist the order by any and every legal means."

Mr. Faubus then suggested that school officials follow one of these alternatives:

¶Resign "and allow the people to select a new board, which would have the courage to act in conformity with their wishes."

Asks Board's Intentions

Noting that Central High is scheduled to open two weeks from today, the Governor asserted:

"If the people, the members of the Legislature or the Chief Executive are to have any opportunity to do anything about this situation, without the possibility of unnecessary action, or of conflicting action with the efforts of the school board, then it is necessary to know almost immediately the plans and intentions of the school board and the Negro leaders."

Asked to comment, Virgil T. Blossom, school superintendent, said:

"I will present these questions to the school board and get an answer to them as soon as possible."

In an earlier statement on the Court of Appeals ruling, Mr. Blossom said the board would "promptly pursue any and all legal remedies which it has, including an appeal to the United States Supreme Court."

N.A.A.C.P. Seeks Answers

Mrs. L. C. Bates, head of the N. A. A. C. P. in Arkansas, said the Governor's questions were directed to the school board and "it's up to the board to answer them."

"When the school board calls us, we will listen to their plan," she said. "Then we'll decide what to do.

"As far as I can see the school board has only one device and that is to follow the plan as approved in the courts."

She declined to say whether additional Negroes would seek admission to Central High or whether they would request to be enrolled in Hall High School, a second White institution here. However, Mr. Blossom said that the school board had received no new applications from Negro students.

Doubts were expressed over whether even the seven original Negroes could return to Central on opening day, Sept. 2.

A Little Rock lawyer pointed out that the circuit ruling setting aside the delay granted here last June by Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., would not take effect until the receipt of a mandate from the appellate bench.

Under court regulations, he said, such a mandate is not filed in the district court until twenty days after the announcement of the decision. And the appeals court made no provision in its decision to waive the regulations.

School and police officials and community leaders fear that if the seven do return violence will result. Several contended that opposition to intergation here is much more intense than it was last year, when the admission of nine Negroes touched off rioting at Central High.

LITTLE ROCK
GOVERNOR FAUBUS- SCHOOL FUND PLEA
FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO OPERATE A PRIVATE SEGREGATED HIGH SCHOOL

14k 1958

NATIONWIDE APPEAL

School Fund Plea Made by Faubus

Times-Union p. 1

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 8 (UPI)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus made a personal and urgent nationwide appeal today for contributions to operate a private, segregated high school system in Little Rock churches, lodge halls and rumpus rooms.

He used his official stationery with the governor's seal on it and personally signed the original.

Then he ordered copies sent to thousands of persons who have written, telegraphed or telephoned him asking how they can help.

"It is urgent that the students re-enter school at the earliest possible date," the letter said in part.

Termed Urgent

"This struggle to preserve constitutional rights, not only for the citizens of Little Rock, but also for all the nation, is most urgent."

Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the Little Rock Private School Corp., signed the letter above Faubus' signature.

Raney and other private school officials refused to say how much has been contributed in a campaign that began more than a week ago. They have mentioned individual amounts such as $5,000 and $3,000.

The corporation plans to operate private schools only for whites. More than 3,000 high school students in Little Rock, including about 700 Negroes, are in their sixth week without instruction.

The appeal letter said:

"The plan set up by action of the extraordinary session of the General Assembly provided for the use of state funds, to be allocated on a per-student basis, for the students's education, in whatever school he chose to attend.

"At the request of the NAACP and the Justice Department, the federal courts have enjoined all public officials, including school teachers, from using the state funds, as provided by law.

"The acts have been challenged in the courts of the state where they have already been upheld as constitutional. At the present time, the schools are closed through the injunctive process of the federal courts.

"For this reason, it appears necessary that the Little Rock Private School Corp. should proceed with its plan to set up private schools in private facilities to be operated by private funds.

"It is urgent that the students re-enter school at the earliest possible date. We would, therefore, appreciate your assistance in providing contributions to sustain the private schools at this time.

"Should we win our fight in the courts, thus permitting us to use public funds, as authorized by the Legislature, then any unused portion of your contribution will be refunded to you on a pro rata basis.

"This struggle to preserve constitutional rights, not only for the citizens of Little Rock, but also for the nation, is most urgent. Any contribution which you can make to this cause will be beneficial to us and to all freedom-loving citizens of this nation.

"P.S.—We suggest you run this letter as an advertisement in your local newspaper."

Printers, pressmen aid Little Rock

Employes of the composing room and the press room at The Birmingham News and Post-Herald have contributed $189 to The Little Rock (Ark.) Private School Corp.

Plato R. Johnson, who handled the fund raising in the composing room, said the printers contributed $129.

In the press room, contributions amounted to $60, according to Earl Bladon.

The money was raised in an effort to help Little Rock's white citizens set up a private, segregated school system.

Bastrop, Shreveport Funds Are Given To Little Rock

TOTAL IS ABOUT $150,000

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 30.—The Little Rock Private School Corp. was about $30,000 richer Thursday as result of two Louisiana donations given to finance segregated private high schools here.

Gov. Orval Faubus and Dr. T. J. Raney, corporation president, received one of the donations, $11,100, Thursday noon from a group of Bastrop, La., residents.

$18,000 From Shreveport

Dr. Raney also disclosed he had received more than $18,000 from a drive in Shreveport. He flew to Shreveport Wednesday night, he said, to pick up the money.

The two contributions brought the total received to date to about $150,000, Dr. Raney said. He added, however, that it's probably going to take "from $500,000 to $600,000" to finance private schools here for the full year.

He said there probably will be an announcement Saturday on facilities for 10th grade students, who aren't yet in classes. Dr. Raney said negotiations were under way for a building and that they should be completed by Saturday to enable the corporation to open classes Monday for 10th graders.

Classes for seniors started last week, and juniors started studies this week in buildings which once housed the University of Arkansas Graduate Center. In all, the corporation has enrolled about 850 high school students while about 360 are attending the newly opened Baptist high school here which is sponsored by Ouachita Baptist College at Arkadelphia.

Given To Faubus

A delegation led by E. F. Madison, attorney and Citizens Council leader, arrived at the Governor's office here shortly before noon to present him a check for $11,100 for the private school corporation. The Governor turned it over to Dr. Raney.

"We wanted to show what a small community can do," Mr. Madison said as he handed over the check. Bastrop, a community of about 15,000, started raising the money last Thursday and closed the drive Saturday afternoon.

A spokesman said the Citizens Council spearheaded the drive, but that city officials as well as residents joined in.

Governor Faubus said he appreciated the display of support "in our hour of trial and crisis." He also pledged continued efforts in the fight against court-ordered integration.

The Governor said the battle had boiled down to one of states rights "against an all-powerful Federal autocracy."

"The stakes are too high to be surrendered without a struggle," he said.

Predicts Firm Stand

The Governor predicted the people of Little Rock will continue to "stand firm" against integration.

Dr. Raney said daily donations to the private school operation were running slightly more than enough to run the schools on a day-to-day basis. If they continue, he said, the corporation should be able to finance this year's schooling.

Governor Faubus' office indicated donations were coming in daily at the rate of about $2,000 a day, a decline from about a week ago.

Other donations received Thursday included $146 from the town of Thornton, Ark. Mayor Everett Wilson accompanied by state Senator Oliver Williams of Sheridan presented the money to the Governor.

Little Rock School Fund Hits $150,000

Times-Union

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 30 (AP) — Contributions to the Little Rock Private School Corp., now total about $150,000, enough to operate segregated classes for white students for one-third of a school year, Dr. T. J. Raney said today.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus accepted a check for $11,100 raised by residents of Morehouse Parish, La., and Raney, corporation president, said he was given $18,071 last night at a segregationist meeting in Shreveport, La.

Besides large donations, Raney said the total of small contributions received daily is exceeding the amount needed to operate the schools for one day.

"We're staying ahead there," he said. "And the large contributions are enabling us to build a cash reserve."

Faubus, in accepting the check from E. F. Madison of Bastrop, president of the Morehouse Parish Citizens Council, said he is confident the people of Little Rock "would stand firm and make whatever sacrifice necessary to maintain our form of government."

Tel 10-31-58

"So long as we have the support manifested by this contribution ... I don't see how we can do less than stand firm," Faubus said.

The governor said he accepted the money "on behalf of all Americans who believe in constitutional government and local control of local affairs."

Faubus said his office is receiving between $1,500 and $5,000 daily. Raney said a similar amount was received daily at corporation offices. He estimated about $500,000 would be needed to operate for a year.

"This expression of support from the American people—because these checks are coming from all parts of the nation—amazes and gratifies me," the governor said. "It proves that not only we in Arkansas, but people throughout this country believe in states' rights."

The Morehouse Parish fund was raised during an intensive three-day campaign last week. Madison said success of the drive is "an example to others in the South and elsewhere what can be accomplished by a unified campaign."

He said he understands that similar drives are under way or being started in other Louisiana parishes.

Raney said he was told in Shreveport that the $18,000 was raised in short order and returns exceeded expectations. He said other cities have indicated they want to initiate similar fund campaigns and that he has been promised "a sizeable contribution" if he personally would launch a drive in Tulsa, Okla.

Raney told Faubus the Shreveport group said the amount of contributions would have been doubled if Faubus had made a personal appeal there.

There has been no change in corporation school plans to open classes for 10th graders Monday, Raney said.

Classes for seniors opened two weeks ago and junior students started studies last week.

SUPREME COURT DECISION-MON. OCT. 13, 1958
LITTLE ROCK-
DENIES PLEA OF GOV.FAUBUS- (USE OF NATIONAL GUARD)

High court denies plea of Gov. Faubus

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13 —(AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas lost today in an effort to get the U. S. Supreme Court to look into an injunction issued against him in the school integration row.

The injunction, issued by U. S. District Judge Ronald E. Davies, halted Faubus' use of National Guardsmen in September, 1957, at Central High School, Little Rock.

THE SUPREME COURT refused to review the case. The effect of such a refusal is to let lower court orders stand.

The high tribunal also turned down some other reviews of cases involving the racial issue in schools, but it agreed to delve into a lower court decision that voided three Virginia laws aimed at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

This decision was given by a special three-judge U. S. Circuit Court in Richmond.

Two of the laws voided would require organizations which engage in racial litigation, or collect funds for such purposes, to register with the state.

The other provided punishment for barratry—stirring up litigation.

LOUISIANA SCHOOL officials were denied a review of a decision striking down a requirement for a certificate of eligibility prior to admission to state institutions of higher learning.

— The decision was made by the U. S. Circuit Court in New Orleans on suits by Negroes who successfully contended their constitutional rights were violated.

The Delaware State Board of Education failed to obtain a review of an order to draw up a plan of desegregation for all school districts which have not admitted Negroes.

THE HIGH COURT also refused for the second time to review a plan under which Girard College in Philadelphia has continued as a school for white male orphans only.

The justices sent back to Virginia courts, for possible further action, a case involving validity of subpoenas issued by a Virginia legislative committee. The subpoenas were issued to obtain the names of members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

In a busy day in which many orders were issued, the court took these other actions:

Agreed to review a decision that Congress gave broadcasting stations immunity from libel suits for remarks made in political speeches which they cannot censor.

Decided to review the conviction of Russian Col. Rudolf I. Abel as a Soviet spy. Convicted in U. S. District Court in Brooklyn, Abel was sentenced to 30 years in prison and fined $3000.

It turned down New York Gambler Frank Costello, who had tried again to win a review of his 1954 conviction for income tax evasion.

REFUSED TO reconsider a June 30 decision blocking enforcement of a California law that required non-Communists oaths to obtain tax exemptions.

Declined to review a decision upholding condemnation of Tuscaloosa Indian land in New York state for the $625 million Niagra Falls power project.

Granted the Securities and Exchange Commission a hearing on a contention it has authority to regulate life insurance companies which sell variable annuity contracts. The commission appealed to the high tribunal from a decision by the U. S. Court of Appeals here that such contracts are insurance policies and not security investment plans.

DECIDED TO REVIEW a decision dismissing a charge that George Donald Shirey, in seeking the postmastership at York, Pa., violated federal law by promising donations to the Republican Party.

Refused to review government efforts to prosecute Frank Brewster, former Western boss of the Teamsters Union, on a charge of contempt of Congress. The Justice Department appealed to the high tribunal from a 2-1 decision by the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The Court of Appeals reversed Brewster's conviction on the charge, which resulted from his refusal to answer questions and produce records for a Senate investigations subcommittee.

ARKANSAS

TURNED DOWN THE PLEA of John William Powell and his wife, Sylvia Campbell Powell, for an injunction to bar the government from bringing them to trial on espionage charges.

The denial also applied to Julian Schuman, a co-defendant The three face a 13-count indictment at San Francisco alleging they committeed seditious acts in connection with their publication of the China Monthly Review at Shanghai during the Korean War.

SUPREME COURT DENIES APPEALS ON SEGREGATION

Refuses to Review Three Cases, Including Faubus Injunction

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court Monday knocked down appeals for reviews of three cases stemming from school integration.

After wishing Associate Justice Harold H. Burton health and happiness in his retirement, the high court Denied Louisiana school officials review of a decision striking down a requirement for a certificate of elgibility before admission to state institutions of higher learning. The decision had been handed down by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans on suits by Negroes who successfully contended their constitutional rights had been violated.

Refused the Delaware State Board of Education review of an order to draw up a plan of desegregation for all school districts which have not admitted Negroes. The board had contended that under Delaware law the power to effect desegregation lies not with it but with local school boards. Monday's review denial upheld a U.S. Circuit Court which had said it saw no merit in such a contention.

Faubus Denied.

Denied Arkansas Gov. Orval E Faubus review of an injunction barring use of national guards men at Little Rock's Central High School a year ago last month. Faubus had claimed that U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald E. Davies, who issued the injunction, had acted without legal authority. Faubus also had claimed the Justice Department had no right to ask for the injunction because the department was not "the real party in interest."

The three cases were listed routinely among a large number which the Supreme Court refused to review.

In another case, the high court agreed to review a U.S. Dist. Court decision that voided three Virginia laws aimed at the National Association for the advancement of Colored People. Two of the state laws required organizations which engage in racial litigation, or collect funds for such purposes, to register with the state. The third provided punishment for stirring up litigation.

In other decisions, the court:

Agreed to review a decision that broadcasting stations have immunity from libel suits for remarks made in political speeches which they cannot censor. The North dakota Supreme Court had interpreted a section of the Federal Communications Act as giving such immunity by barring station censorship of political broadcasts.

Agreed to review the conviction of Russian Col. Rudolf I. Abel, 55, as a Soviet spy. Abel was convicted in U.S. Dist. Court in Brooklyn, sentenced to 30 years in prison, and fined $3,000.

Hearing Set On Mandate To Integrate

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 8 (UPI)—Federal Judge John E. Miller today set Jan. 5 as the date for a hearing here on an appeals court mandate directing integration of Central High School.

His order setting the hearing explained it was necessary in the interest of the parties concerned, all persons acting in concert or participating with the Little Rock school board, and in the interest of the public.

Judge Miller last Friday received the mandate from the U. S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. It directed him to see that integration of Central High School is carried out as ordered by the U. S. Supreme Court and confirmed an order of the court Nov. 10 prohibiting the Little Rock school board from leasing property to any organization or person for carrying on segregated schools. It also enjoined the school board from engaging in any other acts designed to "impede, thwart or frustrate execution of integration" of Little Rock schools.

Gov. Orval Faubus last September closed the city's four high schools after the Supreme Court ordered them integrated. A plan to transfer state aid to a private corporation was blocked by the appeals court on a motion of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, which sought and obtained the restraining order Nov. 10 against transfer of school district property.

An attorney closely associated with the school board, which resigned except for one man Nov. 14, said he believes Judge Miller eventually will order the high schools opened and integrated.

He said the judge at the hearing next month probably will ask each side to give their interpretations of the mandate, and possibly will ask for briefs.

The lawyer said the question of whether the judge can order the schools open is still to be decided. Another question is whether the law giving Faubus authority to close the schools is constitutional.

Actually, the Supreme Court has already passed on that, the lawyer said. By that he referred to a decision of the Supreme Court which said no plans to thwart integration would be allowed to stand.

Little Rock School Crisis Hearing Set

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A federal judge Monday set a hearing date of Jan. 6 in the Little Rock integration case and said he would act that day on an appeals court mandate ordering immediate integration here.

U. S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith said he would enter an order on the issue after considering suggestions or arguments brought by interested parties.

The 70-year-old jurist said the mandate, entered last week by a three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, left very little room for judicial "discretion" in the case.

"The fact that I will probably issue an order the day of the hearing does not mean I have in mind now what my order will be," Miller said. "I have in mind generally what it will be but the specific provisions will be determined after the hearing."

Miller said only parties with a valid interest in the case would be permitted to appear before him.

Miller said his order would not deviate from the appellate court decision which instructs the Little Rock School Board to take "positive steps" toward implementing integration. But the decision does not spell out how this should be done since Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the high schools as a last-ditch anti-integration measure.

FAUBUS APPEALS FOR SCHOOL AID

Asks Contributions for Private System

By PRESTON MCGRAW

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus made a personal and urgent nationwide appeal Wednesday for contributions to operate a private, segregated high school system in Little Rock churches, lodge halls and rumpus rooms.

Faubus read the letter written on official stationery with the governor's seal on it and signed the original personally.

Then he ordered copies sent to thousands of persons who have written, telegraphed or telephoned him asking how they can help.

"It is urgent that the students re-enter school at the earliest possible date," the letter said in part.

SAYS NEED URGENT

"This struggle to preserve constitutional rights, not only for the citizens of Little Rock but also for all the nation, is most urgent."

Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the Little Rock Private School Corporation, signed the letter above Faubus' signature.

Raney and other private school officials refused to say how much has been contributed in a campaign that began more than a week ago.

They have mentioned individual amounts such as $5000 and $3000 but will not give a total.

PICK LIKELY ADDRESSES

A staff of girls, working in an anteroom near Faubus' office, went through the stacks of messages he has received and sorted out likely addresses to send the personal appeals to.

The private school corporation has hired W. C. Brashears, a retired elementary school principal, as its superintendent of high schools. He said he and Dr. Raney should know later in the week when they can open the first private classrooms.

The corporation plans to operate private schools only for whites.

More than 3000 high school students in Little Rock, including about 700 Negroes, are in their sixth week without instruction.

RIGHTS GROUP ASKS FOR FUNDS

La. Party Seeks to Help Little Rock

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP)—The States Rights Party of Louisiana Wednesday began a fund-raising campaign to help Little Rock, Ark., fight public school integration.

Chairman Robert S. Chandler, Shreveport, said the party set up an organization in Caddo Parish to receive donations and planned such organizations in other parishes soon.

He said money to help Arkansas and the rest of the South beat the race mixers" will be collected by James C. Atkins, Caddo Parish treasurer for the States Rights Party and school board member.

".... What we want is to show the people of Little Rock and certain persons in Washington and the East that the support for Little Rock is widespread," Chandler said.

"Your support of Little Rock will, of course, also give encouragement to those in Virgisia who are also fighting our fights," he said. "There are those who by design or by ignorance, or for personal political gain, are seeking to control everything from Washington. These are the race mixers."

FUNDS ARRIVING FAUBUS STATES

Segregated Schools in Little Rock Sought

BY UPI

Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus disclosed that contributions totaling "$3000 or $4000 a day" are coming in for a private, segregated high school system in Little Rock.

It was the first time an official has disclosed how well the Little Rock Private School Corporation's campaign for funds is succeeding.

In Virginia, the NAACP withdrew a motion seeking to force the Norfolk school board to reopen the city's six integration-closed schools after a federal judge told them the suit should be aimed directly at state "massive resistance laws" and Gov. J. Lindsay Almond.

Discussing the Little Rock fund-raising campaign, Faubus said none of the contributions was in answer to thousands of personal letters he had sent all over the country, asking "urgently" for contributions. His letters haven't had time to be delivered and answered.

WOMAN ASKS RULING

The governor's disclosure came shortly after a fireman's wife asked the Arkansas supreme court to rule on the constitutionality of the law under which Faubus closed Little Rock's four high schools.

The fireman's wife is Mrs. Gertie Garrett, a segregationist. Her lawyer took the case to the state supreme court after a lower court threw out her challenge.

If the state's high court declares the law unconstitutional, Faubus will have no legal way to keep the schools closed.

Meanwhile, NAACP attorneys have promised to "put forth every legal effort" to get 10,000 white and 17 Negro children back into Norfolk's schools closed by a state law which shuts down integrated schools.

They indicated they would file another suit, but they had not decided whether to name Almond a defendant and directly challenge the constitutionality of the state's anti-integration laws.

OTHER DEVELOPMENTS

In other developments on the racial front:

—The house of bishops of the U. S. Protestant Episcopal church, meeting in Miami, unanimously adopted a resolution Friday in favor of racial integration at all levels of church and civil life.

—But the 21st biennial conference of the United Lutheran Church in America at Dayton, Ohio, was marked by a hot debate on racial integration. The Rev. Arnold F. Keller Jr., of Allentown, Pa., presented a motion urging delegates to reaffirm stands taken at previous conventions endorsing integration. Delegate E. Fritz Hollings, governor-nominee of South Carolina, attacked Keller's motion but failed in his attempt to have it tabled.

—A state legislator called for repeal of Virginia's massive resistance laws and enactment of "fresh," new laws that would minimize integration. Another legislator called for a statewide referendum on whether the state should abandon public education or integrated schools.

—In Charlottesville, Va., three private schools groups met to consider whether to integrate their schools under federal court order and use the services of public school teachers or try to maintain segregated, private schools with privately-paid teachers.

Faubus Asks School Funds

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus today stepped into the drive for private school funds by preparing thousands of letters appealing Nationwide for money.

The letters are signed by Faubus and Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the corporation seeking to establish all-white private high schools here to replace those closed by the Governor to avoid desegregation.

The appeals will be printed on the Governor's stationery and will be ready for mailing in about four days. They will go to the thousands of people who have written or wired Faubus urging him to stand fast against the Federal Government.

The appeal letter promises a pro-rata refund of any unused portion of contributions should the use of state money become legal later on.

The letter states that the original plan to use state money for the operation of private, segregated schools was thwarted by Federal court action which restrained the state from using public funds for support of private schools.

"For this reason," the letter says, "it appears necessary that the Little Rock Private School Corp. should proceed with its plan to set up private schools in private facilities, to be operated by private funds. It is urgent that students reenter school at the earliest possible date. We would, therefore, appreciate your assistance in providing contributions to sustain the private schools at this time.

"Should we win our fight in the courts, thus permitting us to use public funds, as authored by the Legislature, then any unusual portion of your contribution will be refunded to you on a pro-rata basis."

Contributions Reach $150,000 Mark For Little Rock Segregated Classes

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Contributions to the Little Rock Private School Corp., now total about $150,000, enough to operate segegated classes for white students for one-third of a school year, Dr. T. J. Raney said Thursday.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus accepted a check for $11,000 raised by residents of Morehouse Parish, La., and Raney, corporation president, said he was given $18,071 Wednesday night at a segregationist meeting in Shreveport, La.

Besides large donations, Raney said the total of small contributions received daily is exceeding the amout needed to operate the schools for one day.

"We're staying ahead there," he said. "And the large contributions are enabling us to build a cash reserve."

Faubus, in accepting the check from E. F. Madison of Bastrop, president of the Morehouse Parish Citizens Council, said he was confident the people of Little Rock "would stand firm and make whatever sacrifice necessary to maintain our form of government."

"So long as we have the support manifested by this contribution . . . I don't see how we can do less than stand firm," Faubus said.

The governor said he accepted the money "on behalf of all Americans who believe in constitutional government and local control of local affairs."

Faubus said his office was receiving between $1,500 and $5,000 daily. Raney said a similar amount was received daily at corporation offices. He estimated about $500,000 would be needed to operate for a year.

"This expression of support from the American people—because these checks are coming from all parts of the nation—amazes and gratifies me," the governor said. "It proves that not only we in Arkansas, but people throughout this country believe in states' rights."

The Morehouse Parish fund was raised during an intensive three-day campaign last week. Madison said success of the drive was "an example to others in the South and elsewhere what can be accomplished by a unified campaign."

He said he understood that similar drives were under way or being started in other Louisiana parishes.

Raney said he was told in Shreveport that the $18,000 was raised in short order and returns exceeded expectations. He said other cities had indicated they wanted to initiate similar fund campaigns and that he had been promised "a sizeable contribution" if he personally would lanuch a drive in Tulsa, Okla.

Raney told Faubus the Shreveport group said the amount of contributions would have been doubled if Faubus had made a personal appeal there.

There has been no change in corporation school plans to open classes for 10th graders Monday, Raney said.

Classes for seniors opened two weeks ago and junior students started studies last week.

Gov. Faubus Thanks Local School Fund Contributor

Contributors to the Little Rock private school fund are receiving the personal thanks of Gov. Orval E. Faubus. Following is the text of the Arkansas governor's letter to a Charlestonian:

"It is heartwarming to know of your interest in and support of our efforts to preserve constitutional government in America. I appreciate deeply the many wonderful letters, telegrams, telephone calls, and personal messages.

"Many of the suggestions and plans that have been presented have been very helpful to me and my assistants. For this we are very grateful.

"I will continue my efforts to defend and preserve the great freedoms which we have enjoyed during the long history of our republic. Our rights and privileges, embodied in the principle of State's Rights and local autonomy, are too precious to surrender so long as there remains any room to defend them through the democratic processes.

"This is a struggle in which all should be interested, for the outcome will affect all citizens of the nation.

"Your help and encouragement will always be appreciated."

Little Rock Receives Mandate Prohibiting Private School Lease

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — The long-awaited mandate from the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis prohibiting the Little Rock School Board from leasing the city's four closed high schools for private, segregate duse, arrrived here Thursday.

The mandate, mistakenly sent to the U.S. District Court clerk in Texarkana, Ark., was received at the federal district clerk's office here. It will go to Federal Judge John E. Miller at Fort Smith, Ark., for action.

The mandate confirms an order of the court issued Nov. 10 prohibiting the Little Rock School Board from leasing property to any organization or persons for carrying on segregated schools. The mandate enjoins the school board from engaging in any other acts designed to impede, thwart, or frustrate execution of integration of Little Rock schools.

However, Little Rock has no school board since five of the six-member group resigned Nov. 14 and fired School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom at the same time. The five board members and Blossom had been under continuous attack from Gov. Orval Faubus and segregationists since the racial crisis at Central High School in September of 1957.

A new school board will be elected Dec. 6 in the annual school board election.

The city's four public high schools were not allowed to open this term by Faubus. He kept them closed to prevent court-ordered integration.

The mandate provides that the school board "shall take such affirmative steps as the said district court may hereafter direct to facilitate and accomplish integration of the Little Rock school district in accordance with the court's prior orders."

Judge Miller said Thursday he would hold hearings in Little Rock "before the Christmas holidays" on the order to open and [illegible] city's high schools.

Private School Receives Name In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) —The Little Rock Private School Corp.'s all-white high school here got an official name Thursday.

The school was established in a former orphanage after Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed all four Little Rock high schools Sept. 12 to forestall court-ordered integration.

Donations from the public support the segregated high school which has an enrollment of 850. School Supt. W. C. Brashears said Tuesday a total of $245,626 has been contributed.

'Standing Before Uncharted Roads'

Little Rock's 180 High-School Teachers May Be Pivotal Point In Tug of War Over Integration

Little Rock, Oct. 18 (AP)—Little Rock's 180 high-school teachers are caught up in the backwash of the integration struggle and may become a pivotal point in the federal-state tug of war.

The teachers are needed desperately by the Private School Corporation to operate the private, segregated high schools as Governor Orval E. Faubus' answer to court-ordered integration.

Both Faubus and the newly appointed superintendent of the proposed private schools, W. C. Brashears, said hiring teachers is the last big obstacle to opening classrooms for the 3,000 idled students.

Many Forces Tugging

These students are now in their seventh week without instruction, dating from the time the Governor closed Little Rock's three white high schools and one Negro high to avoid integration.

But there are many forces tugging on the teachers in opposite directions, a spokesman said, and they face a difficult decision "that is like standing before two uncharted roads neither of which may take them where they want to go."

Their dilemma is this:

They lose many protective benefits if they cut lose from the Little Rock School District to join the proposed private-school system. And if they don't make this move they may face an awesome pressure from the public and the State Administration.

Problems Formidable

The problems facing these instructors are formidable:

1. They are currently under the same injunction that has prevented the corporation from leasing the four high-school buildings, and their attorneys have advised them not to attempt to teach for the private schools without resigning from the Little Rock public-school system.

2. If they resign they suspend their credits toward their retirement and lose the protective clauses for job security. After being hired by the School Board they may not be fired without cause and are entitled to a hearing on any grievance. Once resigned, however, the board could take them back later or refuse.

Being Paid by District

3. They are currently being paid by the district although they have no classes to teach and their retirement benefits are building up as usual.

4. The teachers have no assurance of when or how long private schools might operate and are reluctant to leap before some final determination is made about the future of education in Little Rock.

5. According to a spokesman, most of them genuinely want the public education system to continue and are not convinced that a private system of long duration is possible.

Some Prefer Segregation

Then there are pressures working on them to quit the district by resignation and join the private-school faculty. These include:

1. The possibility that the Legislature might try to abolish the school district in January when the session resumes, in order to break the contractual ties with the Little Rock School Board. Their attorneys tell them this would be unconstitutional.

2. Some of them—there is no count—feel strongly in favor of segregation and would like to help Faubus in his struggle to maintain it.

3. There is the pressure of the public which has, in two elections, shown an overwhelming support of the Governor. The public clamor for teachers to break the deadlock may be a tremendous force.

4. And, finally, there is the knowledge that teachers generally must look to the Legislature and the Governor for their financial gains and, for that reason, would be reluctant to openly defy them.

It adds up to a nightmarish situation for the teachers and one that only a miracle can erase.

STUDIES TOUGHER IN TOLEDO, SAYS LITTLE ROCK GIRL

Toledo, Sept. 22 (AP)—Ellis Bullien, 15, who is attending school here because the integration furor has delayed opening of the high schools in her home town of Little Rock, Ark., said Monday she's finding her studies tougher here.

"I've learned for the first time what homework is," she told a reporter. "Back home, we only went to school when we were in class."

Miss Bullien, daughter of Atty. Bruce Bullien, has been a junior two weeks in the private Maumee Valley Country day school here. In Little Rock, she attended Hall High school. She said her parents had discussed sending her to a private secondary school before the Little Rock schools failed to open. She said she would not rebel at attending an integrated school. "If that is what the government wants, and they feel it is the Christian thing to do, it is all right with me," she said. There are no Negroes at Country Day school.

NAACP To Fight 'Private Schools

500 White Seniors Expected To Register Monday In Little Rock

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 17.—Plans of the Little Rock Private School Corp. to open classes here Monday will be challenged in Federal Court, a spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said Friday.

The comment came after the corporation leased a building formerly owned by the University of Arkansas, and which will be used to conduct senior class studies.

Dr. T. J. Raney and other members of the corporation met newsmen at the site early Friday to announce that registration of seniors will start Monday.

The two-story, 32-room structure was purchased Wednesday by Vance M. Thompson, a McCrory businessman and real estate man. He in turn signed a rental agreement with the corporation Friday for use of the building as a school.

Legal Test Planned

In Pine Bluff, Negro attorney Wiley Branton said the school will be put to a legal test. Branton has represented the NAACP in the Little Rock integration controversy. He refused to give details.

Dr. Raney emphasized that only white senior students would be registered.

The NAACP request for a temporary restraining order against the corporation's use of public school buildings already has been granted by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Branton described the privately-financed school as a "subterfuge," the same label he had placed on the corporation's previous plan of using the public school buildings as private institutions. He said the NAACP may wait until the Court of Appeals in St. Louis has given a final ruling on the litigation affecting the public school buildings before filing anything new.

Dr. Raney said the corporation has $61,481 on deposit with the Trust Department of First National Bank here, derived from private donations throughout the country. However that figure apparently did not include an undetermined amount still being processed by Gov. Orval Faubus' office.

$400 Monthly Rent

Dr. Raney said the corporation will pay Mr. Thompson $400 a month rent for the building and that a registration of about 500 seniors is expected. He said classes for 10th and 11th graders would be set up as quickly as other suitable buildings, additional money and teachers could be found.

W. C. Brashears, superintendent of the corporation, said about 22 teachers had been lined up to teach senior classes.

O. M. Owens, a former high school principal at Batesville, now retired, will be the principal.

Although it wasn't expcted to have any effect on Monday's opening of classes, Mrs. R. G. Taylor of Little Rock Thursday filed a suit challenging validity of the sale of the university property to Mr. Thompson.

"Some people never learn," Branton said. "In view of the fact that the Constitution of

Private School Opens In Little Rock Monday

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 17 (UPI) — The Little Rock Private School Corp. has $61,481.25 in contributions in the bank and will open classes for white high school seniors Monday in a rented building.

Dr. Thomas J. Raney, president of the corporation, announced the school's opening in a news conference under the maple trees in the private school yard.

He invited reporters inside to see what the new school—formerly the University of Arkansas Graduate Center—looks like.

"Get all you want today because the whole block will be off limits Monday," he said.

The University of Arkansas Graduate School, which formerly owned the building, was not sure it could get its library desks and chairs out of the building by Monday. There was some confusion over who owns the blackboards.

Integration Summary

LITTLE ROCK.—Private school corporation says private, segregated classes will open in Little Rock churches, lodges before Oct. 15, probably this week.

ST. LOUIS.—Federal Court extends order that prevents Little Rock corporation from leasing city's high schools as private segregated schools, schedules next hearing for Oct. 15. —Page 5.

CLINTON. — Students of dynamited Clinton High School will resume classes in abandoned Ridge as soon as the building can be made ready. FBI sifts wreckage for clues.

WASHINGTON. — Justice Felix Frankfurter bitterly denounces officials of the State of Arkansas for thwarting court-ordered school integration at Little Rock.—Page 15.

ALEXANDRIA. — Federal judge refuses to dismiss suit seeking admission of 14 Negro children to Alexandria all-white public schools. Nine Virginia schools remained closed.—Page 15.

Virgil T. Blossom, Superintendent of Schools, announced today that all three video stations had offered their facilities for temporary classrooms of the city.

Each station will take a grade. Teachers will be selected from all four schools — Central, Hall, Tech and the all-Negro Horace Mann — to lecture and give assignments.

Three Groups to Teach

One group of teachers will teach tenth graders over one channel, eleventh grade teachers will operate on the second channel, and twelfth grade teachers on the third.

Instruction will at first be limited to two hours a day on each station. Each will offer four instruction periods of thirty minutes each.

The plans were formulated at a meeting of station representatives with Mr. Blossom this morning.

It will be up to parents to see that Johnny or Jane is tuned to the right channel and not watching a horse opera.

The school board has indicated that appliance dealers have offered to make extra sets available to children whose parents do not own TV receivers.

The use of three stations, the board believes, will give maximum coverage to the 3,500 Negro and white students until the schools reopen. If the crisis is prolonged, an alternate plan may be invoked utilizing a fourth channel already approved by the Federal Communications Commission.

Plans by Three Stations

Here are the plans that the three stations have presented:

KATV has offered 7:30 A. M. to 1 P. M. daily until Oct. 13 and 7:30 to 11 A. M. thereafter.

KTRV is allotting 7:30 to 9:30 A. M. daily "for the duration."

KARK has offered an hour, either from 1 to 2 or 2 to 3 P. M., and the two hours from 4 to 6 P. M.

Stations KTHV and KARK are prepared to cut off some commercially sponsored programs. KATV normally does not come on the air until 1 P. M. All three stations are donating the services of their technicians without cost to the school board.

For the long range, the plan of Doug Romine, KARK general manager, may be considered. KARK has a second transmitter standing by on Shinnal Mountain, which can be converted for operation on another channel within ten days, Mr. Romine said.

The move would require F. C. C. approval, but Mr. Romine regards this as relatively certain because the agency has already approved that channel for future educational programs.

This channel, he suggests, could be made available to the schools sixteen hours a day if necessary.

'MIXED' TV CLASSES SET IN LITTLE ROCK

Negro and White Students to Hear Same Teachers Beginning on Monday

BY BILL BECKER
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 18 — Negro and white students in Little Rock will be hearing the same teachers beginning on Monday — but they will be hearing them in their homes, while watching television.

On that day educational television programs for students of the four closed high schools will begin on the city's three television channels.

FAUBUS STRESSES PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Says Rental of Little Rock Highs Is 'Only Answer' to Integration Order

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 18—Gov. Orval E. Faubus declared tonight that a private school system appeared "to be the only answer to the Federal Government's order to integrate at any price."

In a state-wide television address Governor Faubus called on the Little Rock School Board to "demonstrate good faith" by offering to lease the four high schools here to a newly formed corporation, which would operate them on a private basis.

However, Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said:

When the schools open, be it under public or private guidance, Negro children will be there.

The Governor also expressed confidence that the outcome of the referendum Sept. 27 would be against reopening the schools under the Supreme Court's integration order.

"Now, it is crystal clear that if the voters of the Little Rock School District vote against integration, these facilities will become surplus and not needed for public school purposes," the Governor said.

"This will leave the school board free to lease the buildings to a suitable private agency. In this connection, I am sure that you are already aware that such an agency has been organized."

It was the Governor's second appearance of the day on television. In an interview on the National Broadcasting Company network early this morning, he contended that Arkansas was not defying the Supreme Court by resisting the desegregation ruling handed down last Friday.

Meanwhile, the newly elected president of the Little Rock Private School Corporation, Dr. T. J. Raney, a 48-year-old surgeon, said the schools could retain their accreditation under the groups' plan. He also declared that he would be willing to go to jail, if necessary, to carry out the program.

Virgil T. Blossom, district school superintendent, told a news conference that an educational television program would begin here Monday on all three commercial channels. Six hours of lessons a day will be available to the 3,480 students affected by the Governor's refusal to allow the four schools to open.

Faubus Scores Critics

In his speech, Mr. Faubus declared that "those who would integrate our schools at any price are still among us." He went on:

"They have seized upon the present situation to promote and foment concern and discontet, because of the temporary closing of the schools. They have spread wild rumors and attempted to organize demonstrations. These are the same people and the same forces who have all along been opposed to the majority will of the people of Little Rock and Arkansas. The only difference at the moment is that they have substituted the cry 'Open the schools,' for the well-worn 'law and order' phrases.'"

He said that boys and girls were being urged to "demonstrate and to issue statements which the adult instigators themselves do not have the courage to do."

The Governor praised those "who seek to preserve our form of government." But he attacked persons "who oppose the great majority of Arkansas people in this fight."

To them he said:

"I urge you to think—lest in your consuming desire to gain your end, among them the destruction of Orval Faubus you destroy also the very principles of government that enable you and all others to live as a free people."

Defends Private Plan

He declared that Arkansans were unwilling to pay the price of "violence" to integrate the schools.

The private school plan, he said, was within the law because:

¶"The Federal Government has no authority to require any state to operate public schools."

¶"The Federal Government has no authority to tell a state Government for what purposes it may levy taxes, or how the tax money may be expended."

¶"In all the cases involving the public schools and integration, the Federal courts have said only that an agency of the state cannot maintain segregated schools. This ruling does not apply in any way to private schools. Private schools are not affected by these decisions, even though the schools receive aid from state and Federal sources."

650 Enroll In Little Rock All-White Private Schools

By PHIL NEWMAN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — A White Citizens corporation and a Baptist organization registered more than 650 white high school students for private, segregated classes in a former university graduate school and three churches.

And the University of Arkansas estimated that nearly 400 high school students had applied for correspondence courses to complete high school work.

The Little Rock Private School corporation registered approximately 250 seniors Monday and plans to start classes today. The Baptists will continue registration through Wednesday and expect to open school for all three high school grades Monday.

Dr. J. W. Cady, temporary principal at the Baptist high school, said they registered 407 students Monday. Not included in that total are 47 students who have attended a high school at the second Baptist church for the past week.

No Negroes tried to register Monday.

Two Negro colleges, Philander Smith and Shorter, were considering the idea of starting private schools for Negro students. But a Negro leader said the NAACP would not go along with private schools for Negroes.

It would put the NAACP in the position of supporting segregation and private schools," said L. C. Bates, publisher husband of the president of the Arkansas NAACP.

The private classes are a substitute for public high school, which about 3,000 students — including 700 Negroes — can't attend because the four high schools have never opened in the integration dispute.

School Supt. Virgil Blossom said that the closed public schools would grant diplomas to seniors who qualify through the University correspondence courses.

He said juniors who start correspondence courses now may complete graduate requirements by next year, but because of the lack of sufficient classroom hours, this year's sophomores will be ineligible for graduation through the extension service.

Reopening Faces New Court Test

Little Rock Acts on Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 28 (AP).—Authorities labored today to open Little Rock's four high schools quickly. But their efforts to begin segregated classes ran head on into a new court crisis.

The court move could result in further delay in sending students back to classes.

Action to open the schools under a private lease plan began even before final results were known in yesterday's clear-cut, 2½-1 referendum victory by segregation advocates.

But the private school plan will be attacked tomorrow morning in Omaha, Neb. There a two-judge Federal Court will hear an injunction plea seeking to stop the Little Rock School Board from leasing its properties to a private corporation.

It appeared the four schools, with their enrollment of 3698 before transfers began, cannot open tomorrow because the lease still is being negotiated. But the negotiators pledged all possible speed.

The United States Supreme Court also may explain at a special session tomorrow just what it meant three years ago when it ordered the Nation's public schools to integrate with "all deliberate speed."

The court is meeting to issue a formal opinion spelling out its Sept. 12 order directing Central High School to readmit Negro students "immediately." The court acted quickly at the Sept. 12 session because of the impending opening of the school year.

Little Rock classes were scheduled to begin four weeks ago. They were delayed pending court decisions and an opening date of Sept. 15 set.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus then closed them before they opened. He said he acted to prevent the same kind of violence that occurred at Central last fall.

The petition for an injunction against the lease plan was filed with the Eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals by Wiley Branton, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

His petition also asks that the court prevent any transfer of school properties without court approval. It also asked that Negroes be admitted to any private school converted from a public school if the court should approve the lease plan.

And during that litigation, the question of when the four schools could open might remain in doubt. Faubus has said he will keep any school closed if it faces forced integration either by court order or military action.

The ballot total in yesterday's referendum was 19,470 to 7561 in favor of maintaining segregation in schools. It was held under Faubus' program to maintain segregation unless communities vote in favor of integration.

Negro voters obviously made themselves felt on the integration side of the issue, but they have only about one-sixth of the ballot strength of whites here.

The private school operation is the next step under the Governor's program. The State plans to support the private institutions by paying students' tuition.

Faubus and many other Southerners point out that the U. S. Supreme Court never has ruled specifically that private school segregation is unconstitutional, and they believe their plan will stand up against attack in the courts.

Others doubt that the maneuver can survive a test of its legality. This also is the official view of the U. S. Justice Department.

TV CLASSES CONTINUE

Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the pro-segregation Central High Mothers League, said she plans to file a petition for recall of four school board members tomorrow, although the board apparently is cooperating with the private school corporation in carrying out Faubus' plan.

"We still have to have a school board for the public school system other than the four high schools," she said. Primary and junior high schools will remain under school board jurisdiction after the high schools are leased.

A fifth board member, Dr. Dale Alford, is an outspoken segregationist. Mothers League members believe the other four are resisting segregation plans.

Faubus Says U. S. To Force Integration

By JOHN R. STARR

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus Monday revealed he had "pretty reliable information" the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has prepared a ruling designed to force reopening of public high schools here on an integrated basis.

"This rather alarming information may not be accurate," he said, "but it conforms with recent victory forecasts by the NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People). And the NAACP always has known in advance what was going on in these cases."

A three-judge federal court at St. Louis has under advisement a request for a permanent injunction against leasing public school facilities here to a private educational corporation. Faubus referred to the ruling in this case.

Faubus said he felt the only way the appellate court could force reopening of the city's four high scools, closed by the governor Sept. 12 under a special session legislative act, would be to declare the school closing act invalid. He pointed out the law has been upheld in state court and has not yet been challenged in federal court.

The Little Rock Private School Corp., balked by a temporary federal restraining order from renting public buildings, has set up classes in private buildings with the educational program financed entirely by private funds.

"If they hold the special session law invalid," Faubus said, "they then could instruct the Little Rock School Board to open the schools and the board would be held in contempt if it disobeyed."

Little Rock Ready For Junior Class

Students To Start Tuesday In Purchased Buildings

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE Rock, Oct. 25. — The Little Rock Private School Corporation disclosed Saturday it has made arrangements to open classes for 11th grade students here Tuesday.

Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the group, said they had purchased two additional buildings on the campus of the former University of Arkansas Graduate Center here, and that desks and other equipment would be moved in over the week end.

The two buildings are Quonsethut type structures, located within a few yards of the main building of the former graduate center where the corporation started classes for seniors last Tuesday.

Purchase of the two additional buildings was made from Vance Thompson of McCrory, owner of the property, at a price of $8,000, Dr. Raney said. Mr. Thompson has leased the main building to the corporation, after purchasing it and other buildings on the former university site.

About 250 in 11th grade registered with the corporation several days ago, along with about the same number of 10th graders.

Dr. Raney said facilities are yet to be worked out for the 10th graders, but that Nov. 3 is still the "target date" for getting their studies underway.

2,600 Pupils Are Enrolled

All But One-Third At Little Rock Are In Class

SHORTAGE OF TEACHERS

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 25.—More than two-thirds of Little Rock's high school students have enrolled in some kind of private school or educational course since closing of the city's four public high schools eight weeks ago.

Gov. Orval Faubus closed the schools under newly-enacted legislation giving him the power to shut down classes where integration is threatened. The Little Rock school district has voted against reopening the schools on an integrated basis.

1,100 Unaccounted

No exact figures of transfers from the public school system are yet available, since the Little Rock School Board—no longer the "supervisor" of the high schools—has stopped keeping transfer records. However, unofficial tabulations place the total at about 2,600. Actual studies for at least half that number are yet to begin, although some will enter their first classes Monday.

That still leaves about 1,100 of the 3,700-member high school student body "unaccounted for." Apparently a large number of students have no plans for any schooling at all this year. The unregistered total of 1,100 however probably includes some not yet "unofficially" noted — which would whittle it down even further.

The 2,600 which can be accounted for represent a summary of private school plans and correspondence course signups as reported within Arkansas in recent weeks. There is as yet no way of determining how many students have been sent to public or private schools in other states.

Baptist Classes

As of the week end, roughly 750 students had signed up with the Little Rock Private School Corporation, which during the week got senior class studies under way, but is yet to open classes for sophomore and junior students.

Another 500 had signed up with a school being sponsored by Ouachita Baptist College of Arkadelphia, already being referred to as the "Baptist High School" here. Classes for this group are scheduled to begin Monday.

About 650 have been allowed to enter Pulaski County rural high schools, including about 200 Negro students who have transferred to the all-Negro Wrightsville High School.

About 350 students are believed to have signed up for high school correspondence courses with the University of Arkansas, which are accredited studies, officials say.

In addition, another 350 have been signed up in small church-sponsored classes within Little Rock and Conway, or have been allowed to enter North Little Rock and Hazen public schools. The largest single group in this category is the 125 students who have registered for classes at Conway Baptist College.

Tuition Fees

For the most part, studies for those registered in other schools are yet to start. For instance, Conway Baptist doesn't plan a start of classes until Nov. 3. Others will start Monday, or already have started.

The Private School Corporation hopes to start classes for juniors and sophomores "about Nov. 1," according to W. C. Brashears, the superintendent.

Private donations from throughout the South, as well as other parts of the nation, financed creation of the school set up by the private corporation. Church-sponsored schools have turned to church buildings as their "nucleus." Tuition fees to students, ranging from $10 to $20 a month, are helping finance the plans.

Obtaining teachers has been the biggest problem. Spokesmen heading the various schools have turned to retired teachers, college staff members and a few teachers from out-of-state to form faculties. No members of the Little Rock public school teaching staff have been hired, said School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom.

Juniors to Start Studying Today

Little Rock Private School Unit Buys Two Buildings for Classes

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)— The head of the Little Rock Private School Corp. announced Sunday that two buildings have been purchased for use as classrooms by displaced white high school juniors and sophomores.

Dr. T. J. Raney said the two buildings are on the campus of the corporation's new private high school for seniors. All of the buildings formerly were used by University of Arkansas.

Cost of the two buildings was $8,000, Raney said.

About 250 seniors started classes last week in the private school's main building. Five hundred juniors and sophomores enrolled at the school, which is supported by public donations, but no classroom facilities were available for the lower grade pupils immediately.

Juniors will report to classes today for assignments and a full schedule of work will start Tuesday. Target date for beginning sophomore classes is Nov. 3.

Meanwhile, a group of Episcopal laymen set up survey teams to study a statewide Episcopal high school.

The Episcopal Churchmen's Association voted unanimously to examine the proposal. Committees were appointed to make a report to an Episcopal convention in January.

A number of church schools have been established for white pupils idled by Gov. Orval E. Faubus' closing of Little Rock's four high schools in a move to block integration.

No private schools for Negroes have been set up.

Roy Wilkins Says:

'Private' Schools Will Collapse

LITTLE ROCK, Ark — (UPI) — Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Sunday that integration dodging "makeshift schools must sooner or later collapse."

Wilkins said the "private" schools such as the one operated by the Little Rock Private School Corporation "are of no benefit to white students" and "sooner or later, as in Virginia, sober people will demand an end to all the futile gestures. Common sense will take over," Wilkins said, "and Arkansas will rejoin the Union."

Wilkins spoke before the Arkansas State Convention of the NAACP branches to start a two-week drive to recruit 1,000 new members in Arkansas. Mrs. L. C. Bates of Little Rock was re-elected president of the Arkansas branch of the organization.

The NAACP leader referred to the closing of public schools in Little Rock and in Virginia by Gov. Orval Faubus and J. Lindsay Almond to keep them from being integrated.

TWENTY-SIX SUE

Twenty-six white Virginia parents have filed suit demanding reopening of schools there.

"It is conceivable that if the states choose to deny everyone an education rather than give up segregation," Wilkins said, "the federal government will find a way to fill the breach."

Wilkins said the "states can refuse to obey the Supreme Court and the Constitution under only one condition: that they secede from the Union. They can disagree and criticize, but they cannot defy and remain partners in a federation of states under a federal constitution."

He said that segregationists who plead for states' rights want only one states' right.

"In their eyes, the Supreme Court could rule on offshore oil rights, on interstate pipeline rates, on the Dupont-General Motors question, or a score of other matters — none of which is mentioned in the Constitution — but not on Negro citizenship rights," Wilkins said.

RULING IS INTEGRATED

"That ruling belonged to the white people of Dixie. They would interpret the Constitution as the Negroes are concerned."

Wilkins said the 1896 "separate but equal" opinion of the Supreme Court was just as much a "judge-made law" as segregationists claim the 1954 integregation decision was.

"But there was no complaint that "the separate but equal opinion was a 'judge-made' law," said Wilkins. "It was accepted as the law of the land. Negroes did not like it, but they managed to live with it — although at a terrible price."

Wilkins said that if the separate but equal decision was the law in 1896, then the 1954 desegregation ruling is the law today.

Private Schools in Little Rock Enroll Pupils for Classes Today

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 20 (UPI)—White students began registering for segregated classes at a private school and in three Baptist churches today, seven weeks after Gov. Orval Faubus closed the city's four public high schools to prevent desegregation.

Newsmen were ordered off the grounds of the private school after an official overheard a girl registrant from Texas tell a television interviewer that "they had everything they're ofering here in the eighth grade where I came from in Texas."

About 150 seniors registered at the private school opened by the Little Rock Private School Corporation in a 3-story building that formerly housed the University of Arkansas Graduate School. Enrollment was restricted to seniors.

W. C. Brashear, superintendent of the private school system, said classes for the seniors would start Tuesday.

Ouachita Baptist College registered about 250 white students for 10th, 11th and 12th grade private classes. They hoped to begin classes next Monday.

About 2700 white students and 700 Negroes were left stranded when Faubus closed the public schools in answer to U. S. Supreme Court orders to desegregate them. Several hundred have transferred to schools out of Little Rock.

Newsmen and photographers had been permitted to witness the registration at the private school until Herschel Goodman, a member of the private corporation, overheard the Texas girl make the remark to an interviewer. He went inside and told Dr. Thomas J. Raney, president of the corporation.

Raney came outside and told newsmen: "Get off. This is private property. You'll have to leave. If I need you, I will call you."

The private school is offering classes in American history, English, applied mathematics, algebra, social studies world history, civics, government and science.

Police cars cruised about the area, but there were no incidents. Negro students en route to junior high and elementary schools passed by during the registration.

[In New York legal experts of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were considering possible court action against the newly opened private high school, the Associated Press reported.

[NAACP counsel Thurgood Marshall said one problem was whether to institute action in the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, or some other court.]

Private Plan For Schools Gains Favor

Segregation Leader Believes Sentiment Growing In State

By JOE INGRAM

A top leader in Alabama's fight to preserve segregation said Monday that sentiment was growing in favor of a plan providing for the closing of schools in a district, both white and colored, if any school is ordered integrated.

The official, who asked that he not be identified, said the proposal was patterned after Georgia's segregation laws but that it went one step further.

"The Georgia law allows the immediate closing of a school if integration is ordered; there is no need for any hearings, elections or other steps, the school is just closed," he explained. "We are working on a plan for Alabama which also would provide for immediate closing, but it would further provide for the immediate closing of all schools within the school district."

REARRANGE DISTRICTS

It might be necessary to rearrange some school districts in the event there are some with nothing but white schools," he said. "We would want a Negro school in every district so that it could be closed along with the white schools."

"This would be a double-barrel weapon, in that the Negro schools would also be shut down," he continued. "The white schools could be re-opened under the private school plan which was disclosed last week."

The private school plan was released publicly a week ago by Atty. Gen.-nominate MacDonald Gallion. He suggested that schools might be operated under an endowment system completely separated from state or county government and as such immune from federal court action.

NEGRO TEACHERS

"There are some 7,000 or 8,000 Negro school teachers in Alabama, and they are well paid and leaders of their race in the respective communities," he explained. "When these teachers start seeing their jobs abolished there may be a reluctance on their part to support any integration movements."

"It all boils down to an economic affair, and that looks like the only way we can win this fight," he continued. "The Negroes are in a position, economically, to operate schools for Negro children on an endowment basis."

"If the privately endowed white school system can be worked out, and it is off to a good start, then the question for the Negroes may eventually boil down to segregation or no education," the official added.

MARKET VALUE

When asked what would be done to provide plants for the privately endowed white schools, the spokesman said considerable thought had been given that matter.

"One suggestion has been that school buildings which have been closed be appraised as to their true market value, then be sold by the state to the private fund," he explained. "The state might allow long-term credit, maybe as much as 80 to 100 years. Such an arrangement would be perfectly valid. Since the federal courts have ruled that the schools can't be leased, this purchase plan might be the answer."

The spokesman, who has played an active role in developing the private school plan, predicted that a "terrific endowment drive" would be initiated within the near future.

"We have all been encouraged by the public response to this program and we are anticipating fine results from the drive," he added.

Little Rock School Plan Awaits Ruling

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A campaign for full operation of private, segregated schools here marked time Monday, apparently waiting the outcome of a federal court hearing in St. Louis Wednesday.

Meanwhile two more churches opened interim academies in an attempt to fill the educational gap created when Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the city's four high schools to avoid integration.

The temporary classes now operating in Little Rock take care of only a small number of the 3,000 white high school students left without public schools. No arrangements have been made by any group for some 700 idle Negro pupils.

Announcement of an opening date for white schools planned by the Little Rock Private School Corp. apparently will not come until after a ruling by three justices of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

In a brief filed Monday, the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People urged the justices to issue a permanent injunction against leasing of the public school buildings to the corpo-

White Pupils Register In Little Rock

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — The Supreme Court Monday affirmed a lower court order barring racial segregation in the city parks of New Orleans. It thus struck another legal blow at efforts to continue segregation in publicly supported institutions.

In a brief order without a written opinion, the court affirmed a decision of a Federal District Court which held unconstitutional the Louisiana state law requiring separate park facilities for Negroes and whites.

The case was brought before the high court by the New Orleans City Park Improvement Assn. a state agency. The association contended the park case was not heard fully by the Federal District Court which handed down the integration ruling.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Little Rock, Ark., White students began registering for segregated classes at a private school and in three baptist churches Monday, seven weeks after Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the city's four public high schools to prevent integration.

Newsmen were ordered off the grounds of the private schoo after an official overheard a girl registrant from Texas tell a television interviewer that "they ha everything they're offering her in the eighth grade where cam from in Texas."

About 150 seniors registered a the private school opened by th Little Rock Private School Corp in a three-story building that formerly housed the University o Arkansas graduate school. Enrollment was restricted to seniors.

CLASSES OPEN TUESDAY

W. C. Brashear, superintendent of the private school system, saic classes for the seniors would start Tuesday "even if we have to hold them on the lawn under the trees." He declared to the efforts of workmen to ready the building for occupancy.

Ouachita Baptist College registered about 250 white students for 10th, 11th and 12th grade private classes. They hoped to begin classes next Monday.

About 2,200 white students and 700 Negroes were left stranded when Faubus closed the public schools in answer to U. S Supreme Court orders to integrate them. Several hundred have transferred to schools out of Little Rock.

STUDY NEGRO SCHOOLS

Negro leaders scheduled meetings to explore the possibility of opening private schools for Negro students.

Integrate Exiles Enroll in Area

Two 15-year-old girls whose own schools in Little Rock, Ark., and Front Royal, Va., are closed, enrolled in the junior class yesterday at Norristown High School.

It was coincidence, but a common desire—not to have their education interrupted—that brought the two girls to the same classrooms and made them neighbors in Jeffersonville, near Norristown.

Jacquelyne Davis, who is living with an uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. William Bateman, at 182 Liberty ave., transferred from Little Rock's closed Central High.

The girls were unacquainted until they met yesterday. Miss Miller's mother, Mavis, is a former Norristown resident and a graduate of the school her daughter now attends.

Dr. J. W. Cady, temporary principal at the Baptist high school, said they registered 107 students today. Not included in that total are 47 students who have attended a high school at the Second Baptist Church for the past week.

No Negroes tried to register today.

Two Negro colleges, Philander Smith and Shorter, were considering the idea of starting private schools for Negro students. But a Negro leader said the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People would not go along with private schools for Negroes.

The private classes are a substitute for public high school, which about 3,000 students—including 700 Negroes—can't attend because the four high schools have never opened in the integration dispute.

650 Pupils Enrolled at Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 20 (UPI)—A white citizens' corporation and a Baptist organization registered more than 650 white high school students today for private, segregated classes in a former university graduate school and three churches.

The University of Arkansas estimated that nearly 400 high school students had applied for correspondence courses to complete high school work.

The Little Rock Private School Corp. registered approximately 250 seniors today and plans to start classes tomorrow. The Baptists will continue registration through Wednesday and expect to open school for all three high school grades Monday.

Little Rock Diehards Pass Hat to Finance Private High Schools

From Our Wire Services

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 1.—A new maneuver began today to put Little Rock's high school education beyond the reach of Federal courts. But the plan makes no provision for Negro children whose school is shuttered.

Asked if any program is in the offing to teach Negroes of Horace Mann High School, Dr. T. J. Raney said tonight, "Not in our corporation."

Raney, president of the Little Rock Private School Corp., today announced a program of segregated high school education using private resources.

APPEALS FOR MONEY

He appealed for money and for space in buildings.

An earlier plan for lease of the city's four high schools by the corporation and operation of State tuition payments was nullified, by the courts, at least temporarily. All-Negro Horace Mann High was included in that program.

Raney also said he had no knowledge of any offers of money or facilities for the schooling of Negro high school students.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, declined comment on Raney's statements and the issue of education of Negro high school students.

Raney said money and facilities already were being offered to his group.

PLEA FOR BUILDINGS

He said one vacant building already has been examined and three churches had offered facilities. Raney declined to name the churches.

In a statement today, Raney asked that anyone owning "an available building which might be used for classroom purposes" call the corporation offices. Financial contributions, he said, should be sent to the bank where the corporation has an account.

"Federal officials, from the President on down, must be made to understand that the course they have chosen is leading the Nation to destruction," Raney asserted.

COMPLIANCE ADVISED

Mr. Eisenhower at his Washington news conference today said it is the duty of all Americans to comply with the Supreme Court's integration rulings.

Raney refused to answer questions at the conference, but a reporter asked him later whether the corporation proposed to take funds from white segregationists and set up private schools for Negroes.

"It looks as if we are operating in private homes," he said. "There will be no Negro schools that I can see. We have received no contributions for any."

CLAIMS $5000 GIFT

He announced that the first major contribution was "$5000 and all I have to do is pick it up." He declined to say who made it. It costs about $4500 a day to operate the four high schools on a public basis.

So began the newest move to circumvent Federal courts. Last Monday, the Supreme Court ruled that integration must proceed in Little Rock without further delay.

TEACHERS BEING PAID

The teachers are being paid now, although they are not working. They are under contract to the school board, and they get pensions and other fringe benefits.

A top legal authority in the State administration said the new school plan was hopeless.

"Both this office and the Governor's office have people calling up and saying they are ready to do anything, and they mean anything," he said.

"But the Federal Government has got everybody enjoined from those who have charge of the State money, the whole works. There is no way the State can finance any education."

Raney made his appeal contingent on the action, scheduled next Monday by the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. The court is to rule on making the temporary restraining order, blocking the corporation from using public school facilities, a permanent order.

'NO TURNING BACK'

"If the court enjoins our use of the high school buildings . . . we will immediately begin school in other quarters.

"We have chosen our course, and as long as the people of Little Rock and our public officials give us their support, there will be no turning back."

The schools have been closed to more than 3000 students, of whom 700 are Negroes, since Sept. 2.

LITTLE ROCK GETTING BIDS FROM TEACHERS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 23 (UPI)—Leaders of Little Rock's new private school said today that the rate of teacher applications might soon make it possible to increase the number of students.

About 230 white seniors attended their second day of school today. The organization of classes for juniors and sophomores has been held up by a teacher shortage.

The school superintendent, W. C. Brashears, said that a "very large number of applications" had been received from teachers interested in conducting junior and sophomore classes. He estimated that a total of twenty-five or thirty more teachers were needed for those grades.

The seniors were being taught by fourteen teachers in the three-story building that once housed the University of Arkansas Graduate Center.

Dr. T. J. Raney Jr., president of the Little Rock Private School Corporation, said public contributions were coming in at a "faster rate tha never before."

The estimated total of $600,000 required to operate the school for a year, he said, "seems perhaps not quite so formidable as before."

Faubus Sees U.S. Forcing Schools Open

LITTLE ROCK Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus Monday revealed he had "pretty reliable information" the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has prepared a ruling designed to force reopening of public high schools here on an integrated basis.

"This rather alarming information may not be accurate," he said, "but it coincides with recent victory forecasts by the NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People). And the NAACP always has known in advance what was going on in these cases."

UNDER ADVISEMENT

A three-judge federal court at St. Louis has under advisement a request for a permanent injunction against leasing public school facilities here to a private educational corporation. Faubus referred to the ruling in this case.

Faubus said he felt the only way the appellate court could force reopening of the city's four high schools, closed by the governor Sept. 12 under a special session legislative act, would be to declare the school closing act invalid. He pointed out the law has been upheld in state court and has not yet been challenged in federal court.

The Little Rock Private School Corp., balked by a temporary federal restraining order from renting public buildings, has set up classes in private buildings with the educational program financed entirely by private funds.

Money Is Sought For Little Rock

Copies of an appeal for funds to set up private schools in Little Rock have been received in Charleston. The appeal is signed jointly by Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the Little Rock School Corp., and Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

Following is the letter:

"The plan set up by action of the extraordinary session of the General Assembly provided for the use of state funds, to be allocated on a per student basis, for the student's education in whatever school he chose to attend. At the request of the NAACP and the Justice Department, the federal courts have enjoined all public officials, including school teachers, from using the state funds, as provided by law. The acts have been challenged in the courts of the state, where they have already been upheld as constitutional. At the present time, the schools are closed through the injunctive process of the federal courts.

"For this reason, it appears necessary that the Little Rock Private School Corporation should proceed with its plan to set up private schools in private facilities, to be operated by prvate funds. It is urgent that the students re-enter school at the earliest possible date. We would, therefore, appreciate your assistance in providing contributions to sustain the private schools at this time.

"Should we win our fight in the courts, thus permitting us to use public funds, as authorized by the Legislature, then any unused portion of your contribution will be refunded to you on a pro-rata basis.

"This struggle to preserve constitutional rights, not only for the citizens of Little Rock, but also for all the nation, is most urgent. Any contribution which you can make to this cause will be beneficial to us and to all freedom loving citizens of the nation.

"Please send your contribution to either of the following addresses:

"Little Rock Private School Corp., Box 1958, Little Rock, Arkansas."

Volunteer Workers Ready 32-Room Building For Private Group

CLASSES DUE TOMORROW

Baptists Also Prepare For Registration Of Students—No Action Taken Yet For Negroes

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 19. — Volunteer workers labored feverishly Sunday to put a 32-classroom building in shape to begin private classes for white high school seniors.

Registration, with about 500 students expected, will be held Monday and classes will start Tuesday.

The building, leased Thursday by the Little Rock Private School Corp., required almost complete redecoration and refurnishing. It formerly was used as a graduate facility by the University of Arkansas.

Larger Building Sought

An official of the organization said it is hoped the lease to a larger building — one to hold up to 600 students — will be signed in the near future, and that classes for sophomore and junior students will begin by Nov. 1.

Registration for Baptist High School, a private institution for whites sponsored by Ouachita Baptist College, also starts Monday. Opening of classes is scheduled the following Monday.

Two Negro colleges, Arkansas Baptist here and Shorter College in nearby North Little Rock, are considering opening high school branches for Negro students.

Arkansas Baptist's board of trustees meets Monday to make a final decision on whether to undertake the project for Negroes.

Dean B. F. Lever of Shorter College said, "If enough persons are interested to justify classes, we would set it up."

Were Closed Sept. 12

An estimated 3,600 students were left without a high school to attend when Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed three white and one Negro high schools Sept. 12 as an anti-integration measure.

About 700 white and 200 negroes have transferred to other schools. Several private institutions have been started or are being planned for white students, but there has been no group working toward private schools for Negroes.

Meanwhile, the Arkansas education department said 38 school districts with 166 displaced Little Rock High schools students have applied for state money.

MONEY FOR TRANSFERS

Harvey Snell, budget director of the education department, said the Hazen, Ark., school district asked for the most money. Forty-two Little Rock High school students transferred to Hazen High.

The money — $174 per student per school term — will be sent to each school district where a displaced Little Rock High school pupil has transferred. The payment of Arkansas state funds to such schools is provided for by one of the anti-integration laws passed last summer by the Arkansas legislature.

FORCED SCHOOL MOVE EXPECTED

Hears U.S. Court Looks for Way—Faubus

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Gov. Orval Faubus said he has been informed that the U. S. eighth circuit court of appeals is trying to find a way to open on an integrated basis Little Rock's four empty high schools.

Faubus closed the schools to keep them from being integrated.

"I don't know if the information is reliable," Faubus said, "but the source formerly has been reliable."

CITES NEGRO INACTION

The governor said the reason he thinks his information might be correct is that the city's Negro leaders have not tried to integrate private, segregated schools set up by segregationists.

Faubus said the only way he knew that the court could get the high schools open would be to declare unconstitutional the laws he used to close them.

But Faubus said he did not know how the constitutionality of the laws could be ruled on by a federal court of appeals when they

Two Buildings Purchased For Little Rock Classes

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The head of the Little Rock Private School Corp. announced Saturday that two buildings had been purchased for use as class rooms by displaced white high school juniors and sophomores.

Dr. T. J. Raney said the two buildings are on the campus of the corporation's new private high school for seniors. All the buildings formerly were used by the University of Arkansas.

Cost of the two buildings was $8,000, Raney said.

About 250 seniors started classes this week in the private school's main building. Five hundred juniors and sophomores enrolled at the school, which is supported by public donations, but no classroom facilities were available for the lower grade pupils immediately.

Juniors will report to classes Monday for assignments and a full schedule of work will start Tuesday. Target date for beginning sophomore classes is Nov. 3.

Meanwhile, a group of Episcopal laymen set up survey teams to study a statewide Episcopal high school.

The Episcopal Churchmen's Assn. voted unanimously to examine the proposal.

A number of church schools have been established for white pupils idled by Gov. Orval E. Faubus' closing of Little Rock's four high schools in a move to block integration.

No private schools for Negroes have been set up.

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have noted with profound appreciation a news item in today's paper covering appeal of the Citizens Council for funds to help the white people of Little Rock set up a private segregated school system, and have gladly sent check for the Little Rock Private School Corp. as suggested.

I hope our people will respond generously to this appeal. It will mean a lot to Little Rock—and to our own state, where we may face a similar situation ere long, and I believe bless in the giving as well as in the receiving.

Thanks for all you have done in the situation, facing our whole Southland.

Little Rock Negroes Turn Down Private School Plan

LITTLE ROCK — Negro leaders today turned thumbs down on proposals to begin their own private schools.

"It would put the Negro in the position of supporting private schools and supporting segregation," said L. C. Bates, publisher husband of the president of the Arkansas NAACP.

His wife and NAACP attorneys had been working over the weekend on court action that "will bring this situation to an end once and for all."

"It is ironic that the Negro has to be the one to save the public schools," Bates stated.

School leaders have pointed out that if there is to be any chance of a full year of schooling, the public schools must be opened by Nov. 1. NAACP lawyers have talked of filing an action to force the private corporation to open its doors to Negroes on the theory that private schools are a substitute for public schools.

ONE PURPOSE ONLY

"These schools are open for one purpose—to defy the Supreme Court," Bates said.

Meanwhile more than 250 white seniors began classes in the makeshift private high school opened by a citizens group.

W. C. Brashears, superintendent of schools for the Little Rock Private School Corporation, said he expected almost 300 students would be in class.

He estimated more than 250 students registered for classes Monday in a building abandoned by the University of Arkansas graduate center and said a few more would register Tuesday.

More than 3,000 high school students have been idle for the past seven weeks because the four high schools have never opened. Gov. Orval Faubus kept the schools closed to keep them from being integrated.

A total of 407 sophomore, junior and senior students pre-registered at the new Baptist high school Monday and more will register today. The Baptist school expects to start classes next Monday in three churches.

About 400 other students have applied for correspondence courses with the University of Arkansas. School officials said diplomas from the four closed high schools would be given to students completing work for graduation through the university extension service.

The private corporation said it plans to have another building ready by Nov. 1 to provide classes for sophomores and juniors.

Brashears said it would hold almost 650 students, but declined to disclose its location.

The Rev. H. O. Bolin said the board of his church — the High and Methodist — has decided to turn its facilities over to the private school corporation for extra space, if it is needed.

No Branch School Plan For Negroes

But It's Not All Rosy For Faubus, Either

LITTLE ROCK. — (ANP) — At least two Negro colleges last week squelched the rumor that they would be able to aid the displaced Negro high school students in the area.

A spokesman for Arkansas Baptist college said he knew nothing of a board meeting reportedly scheduled earlier in the week to discuss establishing a high school branch for displaced Negro students. He further stated that if his institution decided on the high school undertaking, it would be only after the federal courts act further on the issue of white private schools.

Dean B. F. Lever of Shorter college here announced that Shorter "couldn't establish a high school branch now because of a $700,000 building program underway."

Wait For Ruling

Meanwhile Wiley Branton, NAACP lawyer, announced that the association would attack the private school plan in the courts, but admitted that Negroes are marking time until the Circuit Court of Appeals rules on the issue.

The Eighth United States Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis is expected to hand down a ruling shortly on the NAACP's petition for an injunction to keep the public school board from leasing the closed high schools of Little Rock to the private school corporation.

No Money—No Schools

On the other hand, Governor Faubus is finding out that his ideal private school plan isn't ideal after all. He admitted this week that the private school for whites (which opened last Monday) can't continue unless the public continues to send money to support this venture, at a steady rate. He hinted he is working on a plan to finance private, segregated schools with tax funds.

A Chicago executive thought he had the answer to the displaced-students-question when he suggested and offered to aid white southern students who would come here to attend schools. It was interesting to note that not a single family accepted his offer although it was widely advertised in newspapers throughout the South.

Won't Try To Enter Private Schools, Says Daisy Bates

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (ANP) — Mrs. Daisy Bates has told reporters that no Negro children would attempt to enter the all-white private high school classes "as long as there are no state funds being used."

However, Atty. Wiley A. Branton, counsel, NAACP, described the private school project as "mere subterfuge" and indicated that the NAACP would deal with it in due time, which meant, he explained, "we'll deal with it by legal action."

Little Rock Colleges Deny High School Plan

LITTLE ROCK — (ANP) — At least two Negro colleges last week squelched the rumor that they would be able to aid the displaced Negro high school students in the area.

A spokesman for Arkansas Baptist Church said he knew nothing of a Board meeting reportedly scheduled earlier in the week to discuss establishing a high school branch for displaced Negro students. He further stated that if his institution decided on the high school undertaking, it would be only after the federal courts act further on the issue of white private schools.

Dean B. F. Lever of Shorter college here announced that Shorter "couldn't establish a high school branch now because of a $700,000 building program underway.

WAIT FOR RULING

Meanwhile Wiley Branton, NAACP chief lawyer announced that the Association would attack the private school plan in the courts, but admitted the Negroes are 'making time' until the circuit court of appeals rules on the issue.

The Eight US circuit court of appeals in St Louis is expected to hand down a ruling shortly on the NAACP's petition for an injunction to keep public school board from leasing the closed high schools of Little Rock to the private school corporation.

Little Rock Corporation Is Cautious

LITTLE ROCK. — The Little Rock Private School Coporattion moved cautiously this week toward overcoming federal obstacles to setting up all-white private schools.

Corporation officials promised a statement later this week on an opening date.

Definite plans on how the corporation intends to tackle the many blocks facing it were clouded by reticence of officials to disclose information. Most of the group's moves were behind the scenes.

Teachers Are Sought

A federal court order prevents buildings of the city's four high schools, closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to thwart integration, from being used by the private corporation. Little Rock public school teachers also are barred by the court from aiding the group.

W. C. Brashears, a retired public school principal named by the corporation to head the private schools, planned to start interviewing prospective teachers in an effort to begin classes as soon as possible.

He said applications had come in from many parts of the country.

Baptists Plan School

Gov. Faubus, central figure in the historic federal-state struggle here, threw a new punch at the federal government Tuesday with a charge that officials were trying to intimidate him by assessing him extra personal income taxes.

The government denied the charge, which sprang from a form letter which the internal revenue service later told the governor had been issued prematurely.

Faubus said the government had sought back taxes on items covering a three-year period.

Today mixed with gains and defeats for the 3,000-odd students caught in the deadlock, there were these other developments:

1. The Arkansas Missionary Baptist association announced it would hold high school classes for Little Rock students at its Conway Baptist college, about 30 miles from here, beginning October 20.

Demonstration Flops

2. A planned demonstration at neighboring North Little Rock high school in support of Little Rock segregationists fizzled. Between 15 and 25 students had demonstrated Monday and announced another.

3. Attorney James L. Sloan filed notice he would appeal to the Arkansas supreme court a lower state court ruling upholding one of Gov. Faubus' anti-integration laws. The law provides for state funds to be withheld from schools closed by the governor because of orders to integrate.

We Can't Quit, Says Dr. Raney

Faubus Says Way Will Be Found To Open Schools

By RELMAN MORIN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Little Rock's high schools were still closed Tuesday but the leader of the group that sought to operate them on a private basis said new plans are being drawn to continue the fight for segregation.

"We are far from finished," said Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the Little Rock Private School Corporation. "We can't quit."

Raney gave no indication of the nature of the plan.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus said a way will be found to reopen the schools on a segregated basis. He urged the people to stand firm after federal judges Monday blocked the private school operation with a temporary restraining order.

END OF LINE?

A legal authority close to Faubus said, however:

"We are at the end of the line."

Raney officially stated Tuesday that the schools would not open Monday, before the federal judges acted in Omaha, he set Tuesday as the opening date.

Shortly afterward, Raney ordered signs posted on the grounds of the four high schools.

"This school closed by order of the federal government," they read.

A painter's error made the sign at Central High read "goverment" instead of "government."

A brief scuffle took place between an armed guard at Hall High and employes of the private corporation posting the sign. The guard, William Mansfield, pulled a pistol from his holster, but finally agreed to let the sign go up.

Pupils and their parents were telephoning the schools asking if they would be open.

No teachers appeared. They were warned by their attorneys not to work with the private corporation.

Principals answered the telephones and told the callers there would be no school.

NEWS STATEMENT

Raney met newsmen in the office of the principal of Central High, scene of the riots last year, and the focal point in the harsh situation now.

He looked tired and angry. He read a statement, on a single sheet of paper, charging the federal government and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People with responsibility for closing the schools.

Actually, they were closed Sept. 12 by proclamation of the governor.

"Through the concerted efforts of the government of the United States and the NAACP, the Little Rock Private School Corp. has now been enjoined and prohibited from operating Central High, Hall High, Technical High, and Horace Mann High," Raney's statement said.

"The closing of our senior high schools is now the full responsibility of the federal government and the NAACP. It is quite evident that they are ready to sacrifice the educational opportunities of 4,000 students to satisfy their consuming desire to mix the races in our school, public or private."

He said he knows no legal avenue by which the private corporation can go ahead with its plan. Monday, after the corporation leased the buildings from the board, federal judges issued an order nullifying the lease, and telling everybody to keep hands off the schools.

HEARING SET

A hearing is scheduled for next Monday by the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals on a petition to make the temporary order permanent.

Judge M. C. Matthes of the U. S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals said he will sit with Judges Harvey M. Johnsen and Joseph W. Woodrough next Monday in a hearing for an injunction to stop the Little Rock private school plan.

The three judges were named by Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner.

Successful Physician Heads Little Rock's School Fight

By CLETON WELLS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A white-haired medical man more used to professional conferences than news conferences has carried his doctorly bedside manner into the turbulent school integration struggle here.

"All we want to do is have the kids going to school and let them (the state and federal governments) fight it out," said Dr. Thomas J. Raney, president of Little Rock's newly formed Private School Corporation.

The corporation was chartered for the purpose of operating the four high schools as private, segregated institutions.

The plan was advocated by Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who closed the schools against court-ordered integration. It is vigorously opposed by the federal government and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Raney, now a central figure in the emotional controversy, never before has been involved in a political dispute. He has lived here most of his adult life, prospering quietly as a general practitioner and surgeon.

He looks like the successful physician he is. Well groomed, his 6-foot frame carries a well proportioned 190 pounds.

He was born 45 years ago at Newark in northeast Arkansas, one of six brothers and three sisters.

Immediately upon graduation from the University of Arkansas Medical School, he opened a practice here.

He has continued his practice in Little Rock except for the five years he served in the Army Medical Corps during World War II, saw duty in China and the Aleutian Islands and was released as a lieutenant colonel — a rank he still holds in the inactive reserve.

He has a wife and two sons—Jeff, 13, and Glen, 10.

For relaxation, he operates a 540-acre farm near here where he raises gaited horses which he rides in horse shows throughout the Southwest. In addition, he is an avid backer of the University of Arkansas football team.

Raney said he became involved in the integration dispute because of his keen concern over the educational future of his sons. He said he would go to jail "if I have to" in support of the private school plan for maintaining segregation.

But asked if he was a segregationist, he replied:

"I don't know."

"Are you a particular friend of Gov. Faubus?" he was asked.

"No more than anyone else," he said.

Raney and his fellow incorporators have maintained that the governor had no hand in the formation of their group.

An attempt by the corporation to open the high schools Tuesday was thwarted by a federal court restraining order.

What's the next move?

"I don't know," said Raney slowly. But he added cheerfully: "We ain't through. Not yet."

Little Rock Asks Court To Avoid 'Bedlam, Chaos'

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Little Rock School Board questioned Monday whether federal courts are able to cope effectively with state action in opposition to public school integration.

"And perhaps this court should so hold," the school board told the Supreme Court.

The board asked the court not just simply to return Little Rock to the "bedlam, turmoil and chaos" of the past year's integration troubles at Central High School.

The board, through its attorneys, made the statement about state action in pleading with the high court to permit a 2½ year suspension of its plan for gradual mingling of Negro and white children in Little Rock schools.

LITTLE WILLINGNESS

The board contended that the legislative and executive departments of the federal government have displayed little willingness to help carry out the Supreme Court's antisegregation decisions.

It said "the matter would seem to rest more appropriately with those departments where obstruction by the governor and legislature and mass opposition by a state is concerned."

Recalling that the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis suggested the school board had the duty of resisting concerted opposition to the state and its populace, the attorneys told the court:

"Certainly the responsibilites of school districts should be clarified and delineated by this court."

GOOD FAITH

The board contended that it has acted in good faith in putting forth a plan for gradual integration of public schools, and said it had not violated any Negroes' constitutional rights.

"Rather," the board said, "the action offensive to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is mass opposition by the people of the state and the state itself."

Whether Little Rock will be allowed a postponement of integration until January 1961, as approved by Federal Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., will be argued before the Supreme Court Thursday.

Specifically, the arguments will revolve around whether the court of appeals in St. Louis was right in reversing Judge Lemley.

Saying the tremendous importance of the questions presented by this case is manifest," the board said it "calls for a decision more far reaching, studied and comprehensive than the superficial treatment accorded by the Circuit Court of Appeals."

"Whatever the answer may be," the board said, "it certainly is not to simply return the school district to the bedlam, turmoil, and chaos which has been destroying the school district and has emasculated the educational program."

The board said there has been "severe impairment of the educational system both present and prospective because of desegregation."

For Reopening Negro Pupils QUICK RULING SOUGHT

Federal Judge Petitioned To Rule On Whether Move Would Be In Contempt Of Integration Order

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 23.—The Little Rock School Board Tuesday asked Federal Court to decide whether it could legally turn the city's high schools over to a private corporation.

The board said it was willing to relinquish control of the schools, but questioned whether it would be in contempt of Federal integration orders if it did so.

The petition for instructions was filed here before District Judge John E. Miller, who was holding court in another section of the state. School Board attorneys were hoping for an early hearing.

Test Of Faubus Moves

The action in a sense represents a legal test of Gov. Orval Faubus' school-closing proclamation and the school reopening plan he has advocated.

If Judge Miller should rule the board would be in contempt another Federal obstacle, in addition to the standing integration order, would have been thrown up against the Faubus-led effort to keep schools here segregated.

The board asked Judge Miller to determine if it could legally turn the schools over to a private corporation under the state's School-Closing Law and another act authorizing transfer of public funds to private schools.

Both measures were adopted by the recent special session of the Legislature on recommendation of Governor Faubus.

A private corporation has been organized here to try to reopen schools on a segregated basis, if the school district votes Saturday to keep the schools closed. The Saturday vote in effect would be a referendum on Governor Faubus' school-closing order.

'Willing To Lease'

"Petitioners are willing to lease said high school properties to said private institutions upon reasonable terms if in doing so they will not subject themselves to charges of contempt for having violated a directive of this court," the School Board petition stated.

The board said it was seeking an immediate ruling on the contempt question so if the voters Saturday go against reopening schools on an integrated basis, there will be "a minimum of delay in reopening high schools within the district."

A court spokesman said Judge Miller probably would wait to see a copy of the petition before setting a hearing date. However, the spokesman pointed out that Judge Miller has stated he will be available for "any emergency" which arises in litigation here affecting the school controversy.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said the board voted four to one to petition the court for a ruling on the contempt question. He didn't name the dissenter. He also disclosed the number of transfers of Little Rock high school students to other schools has grown to 302.

Board Recall Sought

A recall movement has been launched against the School Board, headed by the Mothers League of Central High. Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president, said the recall movement will be continued, regardless of how Judge Miller might rule on the board's request.

She said there had been a delay in filing the recall petitions with the county clerk here because names of signers must be submitted in typewritten form. However, she said the petitions and request for an election will be filed before this week end.

About 6,300 signers are required to call an election.

Dr. Dale Alford of the board is not included in the recall plea.

Negroes Shun Arkansas School

Warned by Official Central Will Bar Their Registration

By BRYCE MILLER,
United Press International.

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 22.—No Negro students appeared at Central High School today as some 900 white students started registering for the fall term.

Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent of Little Rock schools, warned Negroes yesterday that Central will not allow them to register for the fall term.

The pressure has been removed, at least temporarily, from Little Rock and shifted to Washington where the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People prepared a last-ditch appeal to the Supreme Court that would permit Negro children to reenter the Arkansas school.

Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, was expected to file motions seeking to override the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals stay on its previous order requiring the school to integrate.

In New York, Marshall said he planned tentatively to catch a plane later today for Washington where he will file the motion.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus announced that he is watching Mr. Marshall to see what he does, but it looks as if he will call a special session of the Legislature next week or "in the very near future."

"I don't think that anybody is no naive as to think that more legislation is not needed," he said.

"If the stay granted by Judge (Archibald) Gardner (chief judge of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals) is superceded by a justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, the call will go out for a special session of the Legislature on Monday," he said.

"If the stay is not superseded, there is still a very good possibility of a special session in order to have certain measures acted upon by the Legislature, thus preventing interference with the consideration of other matters which will come before the regular session.

"Also the measures to be acted upon at the special session may be needed before the convening of the regular session."

Gov. Faubus said he may keep the Legislature on standby until the regular session in January. He put it on standby yesterday.

Today, white students chattered happily as they started registering and talked about almost everything but the school's racial troubles.

Several hundred students had registered within the first hour. The boys mostly wore blue jeans and T-shirts while most of the girls were dressed formally in pedal-pushers and shorts.

Principal Jess W. Matthews said he expected no trouble.

"I don't know where it would come from," he said.

"The way things have turned out, I doubt that Central High School will be in the national spotlight on opening day."

Mr. Blossom said yesterday that the records of the Negro students will be transferred from Central to the Horace Mann Negro High School. But Mr. Matthews said today the Central High School office still has the Negroes' records and that he has received no instructions as yet to transfer them.

Mr. Matthews, in a brief message to the students, said:

"Central High School, one of the finest schools in the country, welcomes you as a member of the 1958-59 student body. A good high school record is important to everyone. Your future success in Central High will depend upon your scholastic efforts and your wholehearted participation in all phases of the school program"

Civilian guards, wearing pistols strapped to their sides, prevented news photographers from entering the building. The guards have been at the school throughout the summer.

"We are planning to open Central High this September as an all-white school," Mr. Blossom said yesterday.

He said should the stay of mandate of the appeals court be in effect when school opens Sept. 2 "we will tell any Negroes who come to Central the same thing."

LITTLE ROCK
VOTE - FOR OR AGAINST INTEGRATION

Segregationists Win In Little Rock Voting

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Segregationists rode a rising tide of votes in the Little Rock special school election Saturday night, rolling up better than a two-to-one lead with one-fifth of the precincts reported.

With nine precincts reported, only one had gone in favor of the integrationists.

During the balloting, Negroes and whites stood in long lines from early morning but police said there were no incidents.

Runs Ahead

The vote ran ahead of figures for ballots cast last July when Democrats renominated Gov. Orval E. Faubus in the primary election—which set a record.

Noting the heavy vote, Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High School, a segregationist group, said: "The reports I am getting from the polling places could not be better."

The Negro vote appeared to be proportionately as big as the white vote. There are about 8,000 Negro voters in the school district and officials of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said they had been working hard to get them to the polls.

Under the state laws passed to authorize this special election more than half the district's total of qualified voters must mark ballots for integration to carry. The estimated total of qualified voters is around 42,000.

Mrs. Jackson's organization has been gathering signatures for a petition to recall four of the members of the School Board. She said her workers went to the polling places Saturday with copies of the petition.

Faubus was in Fayetteville, 180 miles from Little Rock, watching a football game. He made a televised last - minute appeal Friday for a vote against integration. He said he would await the result in Fayetteville.

It was a cool, cloudless Saturday. Although the majority of people were not going to work, they turned out early. In some cases, they were waiting before the polls opened at 9 a.m.

Within an hour the lines began to stretch out.

At Hall High School—one of the city's closed by Faubus—a Negro family paraded with a placard, saying: "Please vote for integration to help us have equality."

They were Mr. and Mrs. James Howard and their son and daughter. The mother carried her 18-months-old son, Jimmy, in her arms. Three - year - old Wanda walked, clutching Mrs. Howard's hand.

At another polling place, in a predominantly segregationist neighborhood, people made no effort to conceal their vote.

Laughing and joking, they held the ballots against the wall, in full view of other voters, and marked "X" opposite the proposition calling for segregated schools.

Two Proposals.

There are only two propositions on the ballot: "For or Against," "integration of all the schools in the Little Rock school district."

Fire stations, schools, churches, the court house, an empty business building, and a drug store were among the 32 places where ballot boxes were waiting.

At the drug store, election officials reported a third of the qualified voters in the precinct cast ballots in the first three hours.

The so-called "Silk Stocking District" of Little Rock, site of Hall High and perhaps the major center on opposition to Faubus, had one of the heaviest turnouts in the early hours.

The Democratic primary election, last July, brought out a record primary vote. It gave Faubus a smashing, 70 per cent victory over two highly-regarded opponents.

Faubus' plan — assuming the vote goes his way — is to have a private corporation lease the school buildings and the facilities from the school board. Then, he insists, they can be opened immediately as private schools without Negro students.

Faubus says that these actions may be taken next Monday, or within a few days thereafter.

"I do not get into a situation without knowing what I am doing," he said in his televised speech.

Earlier, Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas director of the NAACP, warned that "when the schools open, be it under private or public guidance, Negro children will be there."

Little Rock votes heavy against mixing

BY RELMAN MORIN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 27—(AP)—A massive vote piled up rapidly in Little Rock Saturday as the city balloted on the question of admitting Negroes to its all-white schools.

Political observers said the heavy turn-out may foreshadow a lopsided decision for segregation—as much as 70 per cent.

Police kept a close watch on the crowds lining the sidewalks, for blocks in some places, waiting to mark their ballots. Squad cars circled the blocks, rolling slowly past the queues where Negroes and whites mingled.

Day is quiet

Gov. Orval E. Faubus went by automobile to Fayetteville, Ark., a 180-mile drive, to attend the football game between the University of Arkansas and Tulsa University.

Faubus, who made a televised last-minute appeal Friday for a vote against integration, said he would await the verdict in Fayetteville.

It was a cool, cloudless Saturday.

Tension High In Little Rock On Eve Of School Election

By RELMAN MORIN
Associated Press Staff

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 26.—Racial feeling and bitterness between white groups gripped Little Rock Friday on the eve of a special election to decide whether the people want Negro students admitted to all-white schools.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus said violence is possible if there is an attempt to achieve integration by force.

Black-bordered advertisements, bristling with jagged words, appeared in the newspapers. One filled a whole page.

Statements flew back and forth. Two groups of women, battling on opposite sides, intensified their drive for votes.

Would Clear Way

Governor Faubus said a vote Saturday against integration would clear the way for him to set in motion a plan to open the schools as private institutions without Negroes.

But Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has warned:

"If the schools open, be it as private schools or public schools, Negro children will be there."

The election Saturday has only two propositions on the ballot:

"For racial integration of all schools in the Little Rock school district," or "against" with the same wording.

There are about 8,000 Negro voters in the district. Mrs. Bates said "we are working as citizens to get out the Negro vote."

Caught between Federal and state orders, the Little Rock school board has sought legal advice. An Arkansas Federal judge, John E. Miller, told the board he has no authority to rule.

School board attorneys gave the board a memorandum Friday which said:

"If the election Saturday results in a vote requiring the public high schools to remain closed, any leasing of the high schools must necessarily be tentative, as the validity of the lease will depend upon the final decision to be rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction."

No Comment

They refused to answer questions from reporters asking for amplification.

Adding to the swift rise of feeling in Little Rock, the advertisement bought by both sides said:

"Integration is only the beginning" . . . "businessmen of Little Rock: you cannot afford to let the public schools stay closed" . . . "Read these editorials from a newspaper in Alabama, loyal to the end" . . . "This appeal has been signed by some 500 young mothers: people are praying that we will have the courage to hold out a little longer."

The full-page ad carried a caption saying it had been paid for by Roy V. Harris, of Augusta, Ga., and two other Georgians. It showed a cartoon of Chief Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren, an NAACP official, and a man in a Russian army uniform sailing in a boat toward a dyke labeled massive resistance."

The text said, "We wish we could join in the battle on Arkansas soil . . . we assure you that we stand ready to battle here."

Another ad, by a women's committee urging the people to vote for integration asked, "Are you really ready to abandon our public school system by voting against?"

The school board, bringing figures up to date, said 391 high school students have transferred from Little Rock's four closed schools. This is more than 10 per cent of the total. Officials said 16 left in the past two days.

Segregation Strongly Favored As Little Rock Voters Turn Out For A Record Ballot On Issue

Majority Needed

Corporation Ready To Take Over Institutions On Private Basis

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

By KENNETH JOHNSON

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 27.—Citizens in this racially-tense city voted Saturday to keep the public schools segregated.

With 24 precincts out of a total 82 reporting, the vote was:

For integration—6,105.

Against integration—11,680.

Those favoring admitting Negroes to the schools carried only two of the five predominantly Negro districts.

A majority of registered voters in the Little Rock School District had to vote for integration for the measure to be carried.

Heavier Than July

The voting was heavier than the record ballot cast last July when Democrats renominated Gov. Orval E. Faubus in the primary election.

The vote raised the possibility that the four high schools which have been closed for three weeks might be opened Monday on a privately-operated but segregated basis.

A newly formed private-school corporation here, headed by Dr T. J. Raney, had awaited any moves toward reopening schools until Saturday's voting. They were expected to confer Sunday.

The Justice Department was expected to join in any action the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People might take in challenging the segregated reopening plans. That was indicated Thursday at Fort Smith when the Justice Department joined in a petition by the NAACP asking Federal Judge John E. Miller to enjoin the Little Rock School Board from leasing the schools to any private group.

Judge Miller dismissed the petition for lack of jurisdiction, and the NAACP filed notice of appeal here Friday.

The Governor was in Fayetteville Saturday to attend the Tulsa-University of Arkansas football game.

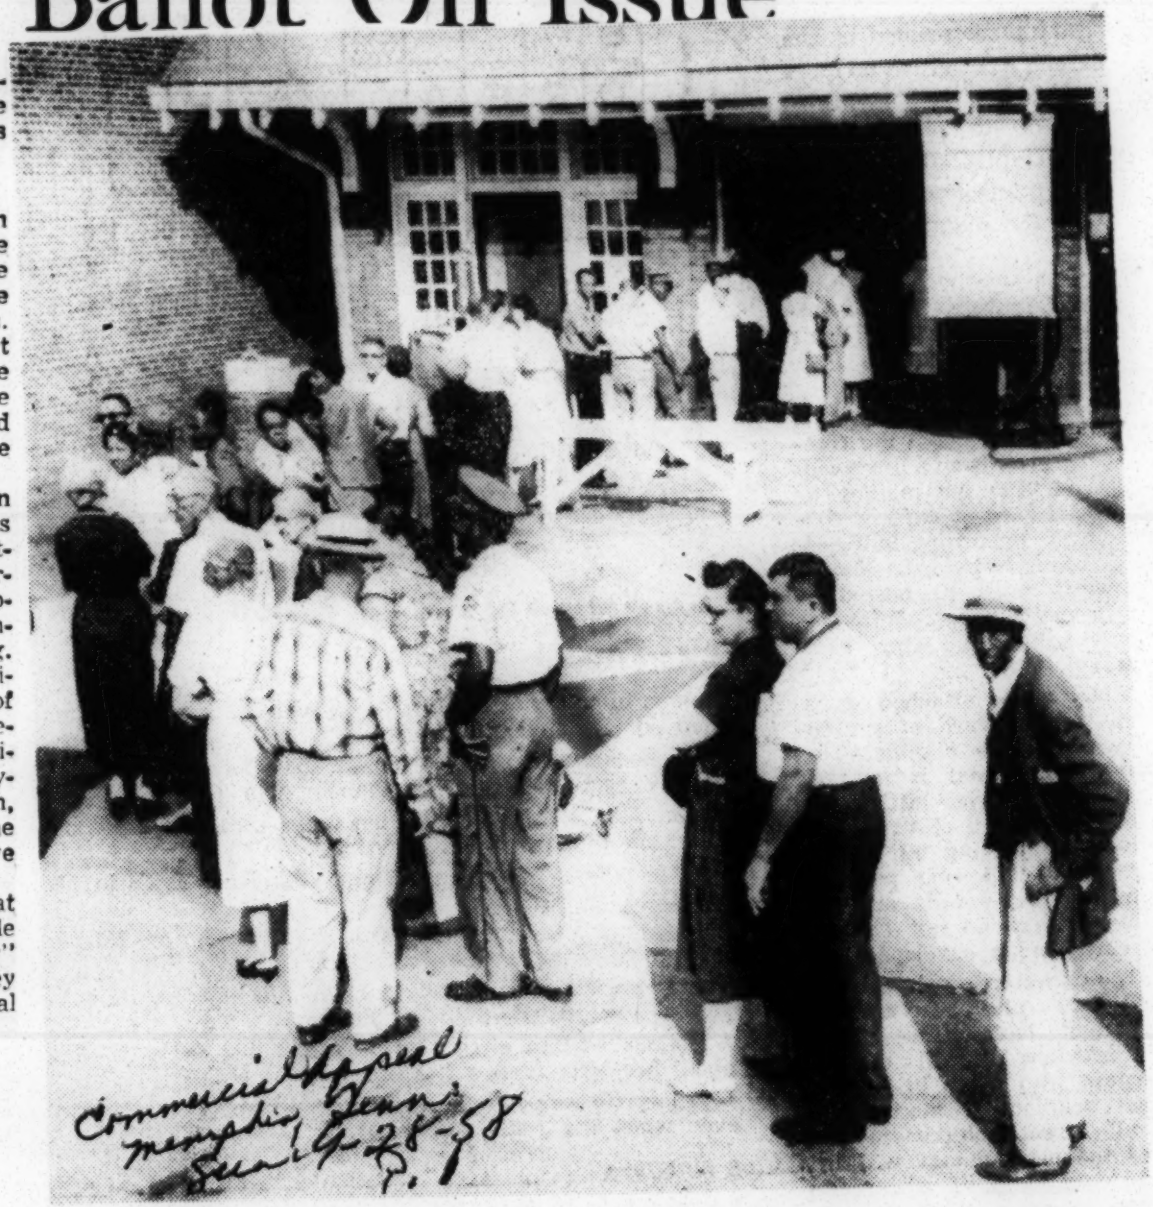
Formed To Lease Schools

The private school corporation was formed last week to lease the school facilities from the School Board, and reopen the schools on a segregated basis. The move clearly was a part of the Governor's plan to resume classes here, although both he and corporation members said he had no part in organizing the private school agency.

The Governor, who went on television Friday night to discuss the election, had warned repeatedly that a vote "for" in Saturday's election was in effect approving "total integration" rather than "limited" racial mixing.

Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High School, said segregationist leaders were confidently looking forward to carrying out the private school plan, which both the NAACP and the Justice Department already have branded as a "sham."

Mrs. Jackson said also that recall petitions against the Little Rock School Board "definitely" will be filed here Monday. They would call for another special election.



WAIT TO VOTE—A long line of white and Negro voters queued up outside a Little Rock fire station yesterday to cast their ballots on whether their closed high schools should reopen segregated or integrated.

Faubus Vows Not To Open Schools Mixed

Defies U. S. Court To Make Him Order Integrated Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 3 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus bluntly defied the power of the U. S. Supreme Court to compel him to integrate Little Rock high schools, saying today, "I will never open the public schools as integrated institutions."

The spectre of Federal troops again being used in Little Rock also came into his comments at a news conference.

Reporters asked what would happen if the high schools are reopened—in defiance of Federal court orders—on a private, segregated basis. He replied:

"The only recourse the Federal Government would have would be to send in marshals and the Army to forcibly eject teachers and students."

Faubus issued a prepared statement on his position today in the narrowing battle with the Federal Government over the schools. He said he would assist the Little Rock private school Corporation in obtaining money and other facilities for a privately-operated school system. The statement contained the words:

"The only question is whether the facilities are to be used by the corporation, or not at all."

George Douthit, statehouse correspondent for The Arkansas Democrat, read the statement in the governor's mansion before the news conference. He asked Faubus what was meant by the phrase, "or not used at all."

Faubus replied, "I will never open the public schools as integrated institutions."

"The people have voted to close the schools and they will remain closed" unless opened on on a private, segregated basis.

He referred to last Saturday's special school referendum, in which segregationists piled up 72 per cent of the total vote.

This was Faubus' first and strongest statement of position since last Monday when Federal courts twice spoke out on the Little Rock struggle.

The private corporation plan does not include setting up a private school for Negroes.

Faubus said, "I will assist the corporation, or any other, in providing education for Negroes as well as whites."

He said the Negroes would have to provide their own teachers and funds.

LITTLE ROCK UNIT ASKS INTEGRATION

61 Lawyers Assert Schools Can't Be Reopened Legally on a Segregated Basis

By BILL BECKER
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20—Sixty-one Little Rock lawyers declared their opinion tonight that the four closed Little Rock high schools could not be legally reopened as segregated private schools.

They urged a vote for integration in next Saturday's referendum.

This was the strongest statement yet made against Gov. Orval E. Faubus's plan to operate the schools under ap rivate corporation set up earlier this week.

"It is our opinion that existing public school facilities of this district cannot be legally operated with any public funds as segregated private schools," the lawyers said in a signed statement.

"Consequently the real issue before the voters of this district on Sept. 27 will be whether we shall open our schools under the court approved plan of limited integration or close them altogether."

The voters of the Little Rock school district are scheduled to ballot next Saturday on integration of schools. The election was set as part of Governor Faubus's omnibus bill combating the Supreme Court ruling.

Alternatives 'Distasteful'

"A limited integrated school system pursuant to court orders is distateful to many in our group, but the alternative of no public school system is even more distasteful.

"We do not believe that existing circumstances justify destroying one of the finest public school systems in the nation.

"We regret that the alternatives are harsh but, nevertheless, as attorneys and citizens we fell compelled to take our stand for public education."

Therefore, the statement concluded, "we urge our fellow citizens to join with us in the effort to preserve free public education in our city."

Prominent lawyers signing the statement included H. Maurice Mitchell, secretary of the Pulaski (Little Rock) County Bar Association; Steele Hays, son of Representative Brooks Hays; Thomas E. Downie, former Little Rock prosecuting attorney and John H. Haley, an attorney for the Little Rock school board.

The lawyers were said to represent a cross-section of the city's legal profession. The group said that time had not permitted reading — all lawyers in Little Rock before the statement was prepared.

Their statement will be prominently displayed in advertisements Monday in both Little Rock papers, The Arkansas Gazette and The Arkansas Democrat.

Opposing Citizens' Drives

Meanwhile, opposing citizens' drives—one to reopen the schools, the other to oust integrationist members of the school board—began this weekend in Little Rock.

A "Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools" opened headquarters in a downtown hotel. The committee chairman, Mrs. Joe R. Brewer, said the group hoped to rally thousands to vote for integration in the special election next Saturday.

"It's ridiculous," said Mrs. Sally Plummer, a mother and member of the group, "to try to retain the ways of old granddad in this age of sputniks and missiles."

Mrs. Plummer is a member of a family that has lived in the Little Rock area 100 years.

On the other hand, petitions were being circulated by segregationists asking for the recall of four of the five present members of the school board. Only the name of Dr. Dale Alford was omitted. Dr. Alford has consistently opposed the board majority on most school integration questions.

Officials of the Capital (White) Citizens Council declined to say they were sponsoring the petitions, but it was understood they were being distributed mainly by council members.

The council scheduled a preelection rally for Monday night.

Last night sixty-five students of Hall High School adopted a resolution asking for the immediate reopening of schools, integrated or otherwise. Only one Negro student has applied for entrance at Hall.

A spokesman for Gov. Orval E. Faubus said that "the Governor didn't regard sixty-five as very many" for such a protest.

A spokesman for the Hall group said the number was "merely a small portion of the students who feel our way." He added that homeroom presidents polled their classmates and reported nearly 90 per cent wanted to return to school before the Sept. 27 election.

The Central High Tigers, football pride of the city, registered their thirty-fifth straight victory last night by defeating Tilghman High of Paducah, Ky., 25 to 14. Only 1,800 persons braved rain to see the game.

It was rescheduled when the school board restored the athletic program after an exchange of views with Governor Faubus.

PARENTS' DILEMMA: MIXED SCHOOLS OR NONE?

Federal moves toward reopening of schools in Little Rock, Ark., and Front Royal, Va., are being held in abeyance pending assessment of the effect on state authorities of local pressures. Here correspondents of The New York Times weigh those pressures.

LITTLE ROCK TROUBLED

By BILL BECKER

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 20—The troubled citizens of Little Rock, slightly perplexed by the kaleidoscopic whirl of events, found themselves nearing agreement this week on at least one point: It is high time the children got back to high school.

Parental dissatisfaction was sounded in many quarters. Yet it was highly problematical whether the basic views on integration of many parents were undergoing much change. This appeared particularly true in the Central High School area, where out of every four parents questioned, three answered in this vein: "We are still opposed to integration, but our children can't go without school much longer."

Some balm was applied to their feelings when Gov. Orval E. Faubus moved forward the date of the special school district election from Oct. 7 to Sept. 27. The voters of the district are scheduled then to decide whether they want integration of all Little Rock schools.

Television Instruction

Only the four high schools—Central, Hall, Technical and all-Negro Horace Mann—remained closed on Sept. 2, the starting date originally set for the high schools. Elementary and junior high schools, not under the mandate to integrate, opened Sept. 8.

This third week of locked doors found that more than 110 parents have requested transcripts of their children's grades, presumably preparatory to transferring them to schools outside the district. No total of actual transfers was yet available, but it seemed likely that enrollment—when the schools do open—would be below last year's high of 3,698 students.

The statistics, however, are only a symbol of the turmoil which engulfed many parents. Anxiety over the children's welfare increased Monday when high school doors swung open only to teachers.

Six hours of daily television instruction, spread over Little Rock's three channels, is scheduled to begin Monday. But this is a regimen hardly calculated to satisfy either conscientious students or the parents. Harried school officials admitted they were not sure how homework will be checked, or whether the time will be credited on students' records.

Hundreds of parents have telephoned Virgil T. Blossom, superintendent of schools; Jess W. Matthews, principal of Central High, and Terrel E. Powell, principal of Hall High. Central, with more than 2,000 students, is the largest of the four. Hall and Horace Mann each have about 750 while Tech has 175.

Governor Faubus, in an adroit television speech Thursday, held out the promise of swift action in his bid to convert the schools to private operation under the provision of the state constitution written in 1875. He derided the critics who contend that only a vote for integration can assure prompt opening of the schools.

If the voters would show their support of segregation the schools would be opened soon after Sept. 27, the Governor said. The lone issue to be voted on is: for or against racial segregation of all schools within the Little Rock school district.

Moreover, a majority of all registered voters, not merely a majority of those voting, must approve for integration to pass. It has been estimated it will take at least 20,000 votes for a majority. In a 1957 school election when integration was an issue only 6,738 votes, total, were cast.

The special election is regarded as the keystone of the Governor's strategy to receive a clear and convincing expression of the "will of the people." The wording of the proposition to be voted on and the unusual majority requirement are seen as an almost certain guarantee of victory for the segregationists.

Election Authorized

The election was authorized formed a "women's emergency committee to open our schools" and have urged votes for integration as the only way to save the school system. The chairman, Mrs. Joe R. Brewer, maintained that this was the only way a clear mandate could be given by the people to keep the schools public.

But the prevailing mood of many parents in the dominant Central High area is expressed perhaps most forcefully by Mrs. Margaret Jackson of the Mothers League.

"I don't think it would hurt my children to stay out of school a year if we can win this fight for our rights," this ardent segregationist said. She claims that 600 women, most of them Central High mothers, belong to her league.

175 LITTLE ROCK TEACHERS PAID

175 Little Rock Teachers Paid $20,000 Weekly to Sit in Vacated Schools

Washington, D. C.—Diehard segregationists have not yet met their Waterloo but from all indications the centuries-old walls of racial bias are beginning to crumble under the impact of integration thrusts and economic cost of closed schools.

In a news conference Monday Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming stated "No one can forsee all the significant social, economic and psychological effects—on the children, on teachers on the community —of closing the doors of public schools to our young people."

Flemming said the closed schools are passing this week the deadline when it is impossible for them to complete the recognized minimum school year of approximately 180 days by June 30.

Exhorbitant Price

Uneasiness is especially evident in Little Rock where the private school corporation is offering the people "half a load" educational program in an attempt to ease the tension created by the closing of the four public high schools by Gov. Orval Faubus.

More than 3,000 students are affected. Meanwhile, the city is paying an exhorbitant price for segregation. The 175 regular tachers under court injunction not to teach in the private school system are being paid $20,000 a week for simply reporting daily at the vacated high schools.

Federal Courts

However, there are reports that federal officials are expecting a ruling from federal district court stipulating procedure by which the closed schools in Little Rock may be re-opened. In all, 13 schools have been closed in the integration controversy.

Norfolk Citizens

Integration is making headway in the South, however. In an election two weeks ago in which the voting was heavily influenced by the threat to cut off state funds to schools reopened on integrated basis, Norfolk citizens came close to overriding the closure action.

Of the more than 21,000 persons voting, 8,871 were for reopening the city's public high schools on an integrated basis as opposed to 10,000 who balloted to keep them closed. Those voting to reopen the schools were behind a Norfolk city council move to have them returned to local control.

Atlanta Mayor

In Atlanta, Ga., Mayor William B. Hartsfield demanded that the State of Georgia "let the people of Atlanta be the jury to decide the fate of her own schools. The mayor is at odds with state officials principally Gov. Marvin Griffin, who threatened to close the schools under state laws rather than have them integrated by federal orders.

Van Buren Students Trek Back To Class

AN BUREN, Ark. (AP)—The white students protesting racial integration at Van Buren High agreed Tuesday to return ... ending controversy ... into a battle of courts and committees.

Only three of 35 students who walked out last Thursday in protest of the presence of 13 Negroes gathered outside the school Tuesday morning. All said they probably would return to class Wednesday but would start another boycott. Negroes tried to enter classes again.

"We don't have much choice," one of the three said. "With the others back in, we'll have to."

School officials said 22 of the protest group were readmitted Tuesday. The others gave up the boycott Monday.

The Negro students, who have stayed away from the school since Friday after the boycotters threatened violence, indicated they would not try to re-enter until they could do so under court protection.

Legal moves loomed from the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and a group of white parents who have organized to combat integration.

A group of white parents met with the school board Tuesday night and asked what steps could be taken to legally block integration.

The board took under consideration a question about whether it should request an integration decision of the U.S. Supreme Court which gave Little Rock Central High School a 2½-year breather.

In answer to another question, the board said it would be up to the Negro students enrolled at Van Buren High to decide whether they would drop out and go to school in some other town.

She reported that the student council had polled 180 white pupils in the school and only 45 opposed integration. Total enrollment is 635.

A sideline verbal skirmish developed between Van Buren Police Chief Voll Russell and the Rev. William M. Wilder, president of the City's Ministerial Alliance.

Wilder charged that the city police force had supported "lawlessness and violence" during the student boycott.

Integration Strike at Ark. School

Van Buren Plea Sent to Faubus

By United Press International

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 4. —Sixty white boys at Van Buren High School went on strike against integration today and announced they would stay away from classes until Negroes quit the school.

The strike, on top of a reported threat by a white student yesterday to "cut up" a Negro student, reduced Negro attendance from thirteen to three—two girls and a boy.

Roger Williams, a striker, telegraphed Gov. Orval Faubus in Little Rock: "On behalf of Van Buren High School, we are on strike here in order to stay integration. We need your help."

May Hasten Bill

Gov. Faubus said the Van Buren situation may cause him to sign the anti-integration bills the Legislature passed last week earlier than he had expected. The bills will allow him to close any school where he thinks integration is causing an uproar.

The Van Buren school system accepted twenty - four Negroes last year. This year, thirteen Negroes enrolled along with 600 white students. Five Negroes enrolled for the first time in the junior high school, but no incidents were reported there.

The high school strike started with forty boys. The group grew to sixty.

The strikers massed across the street from the high school. Signs on automobiles said: "Niggers go, whites will come back," and "Chicken whites go to schol with jiggs."

One Negro boy said he tried to enroll in Lincoln (Negro) School in near-by Fort Smith, but was turned away today. The Fort Smith school superintendent said his Negro schools weren't taking any Van Buren Negroes now. Van Buren is 130 miles northwest of Little Rock.

The Negroes were greeted Tuesday when school opened by signs saying, "Go home, Nigger."

George Hudgins, a Negro honor student, complained yesterday that a white student "sat across from me and sort of honed a switch-blade knife back and forth across the palm of his hand." He said he couldn't concentrate in such an atmosphere and probably will try to enroll in a Negro school in Pine Bluff.

Council Calls Conference In Van Buren

By RICHARD DAW

VAN BUREN, Ark. (AP)—Segregationist leaders called a strategy conference Monday after eight Negroes re-entered Van Buren High School amid only minor demonstrations by white students.

Officers of the Van Buren City Betterment Council would give no indication of what would be considered at the meeting except to say that integration matters would be discussed.

"We got along O.K.," said Thomas Banks, 15, a junior.

Banks and 12 other Negroes enrolled at the 622-pupil high school had not attended classes since two weeks ago when about 15 white students staged protests.

The white students refused to attend integrated classes and threatened to use force to remove Negroes from the school.

Four of the 13 have transferred to other schools and one remained at home because of illness.

At the city's nearby junior high school, three of the five Negroes enrolled there also went back to classes. They had stayed away because of the boycott of the high school although there were no reported incidents at the junior high.

The scene as the Negroes returned to Van Buren High, singly and in groups, was in sharp contrast to two weeks ago when white students gathered on a corner, brandishing anti-integration signs and voicing threats.

"Nigger," shouted a boy leaning from a second-story window as two Negro boys and a girl entered a side door. His cry brought no response from the Negroes or from other white students in the area.

Last Friday U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller refused to issue a court order in connection with the earlier disturbances, but indicated he might reconsider in event of further disorders.

No incidents were reported last term, the first for Van Burean as an integrated school.

Arkansas School Strikers Winning

United Press International.

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 5. —White students striking against integration at Van Buren High School apparently achieved their objective today. Not a Negro was seen entering school.

A dozen girls joined 45 to 50 white boys in the strike today. But just before the last bell rang, the girls piled into an automobile and drove away.

The boys struck yesterday in an effort to drive 13 Negroes out of the high school. Only three Negroes—two girls and a boy—showed up yesterday.

The strikers burned one effigy of a Negro last night on the campus. They hauled out another effigy and set in on fire. A civilian guard on top of the school building threatened to shoot.

In other school integration news:

• The segregationist Mothers' League of Little Rock Central High School passed a resolution condemning those who accept jobs as deputy U.S. marshals to enforce integration at the school.

• In Alexandria, Va., Federal District Judge Albert V Bryan last night approved opening of Virginia schools Monday on a segregated basis.

• In Harrisonburg, Va., Federal District Judge John Paul announced he will enjoin the Warren County School Board Monday from barring Negro students from white schools solely because of race.

• At Winston-Salem, N. C., two crosses were burned on the lawn of the R. J. Reynolds High School last night. Earlier in the day the school admitted a Negro student for the second year.

As Adults Try To Silence Them

"We Want Integration", Ark. White Students Say

VAN BURENN Ark. —(UPI) —A white honor student told the Vn Buren School Board and the segregationist Citizens Council Tuesday night that a poll of 160 white students showed tha 85 favor integration.

Ahe student, Angie Evens, 15, said 30 of the students potld ed were undecided and 45 were opposed to integration.

"THOSE 85 said they felt it was only fair for Negroes to go to school at ths high school," she said.

A total of 600 white students attend Van Buren high, where 55 white boys struck six days ago against the school's integration by 13 colored pupils. The strike has collapsed, but the colored pupils refused to return until they are guaranteed protection by a Federal court.

• • •

ALL BUT THREE or the strikers were back in school Wednesday the three didn't show up around the schoolyard.

Cheerleaders upt up a sign saying "Beat Fort Smith," where there was a sign last week saying, "This a white school. Go home nigger." The Van Buren and Fort Smith football teams play Saturday night.

• • •

MISS EVENS had trouble finishing her report on the students' poll. The Rev. Grady Williams, a traveling evangelist and segregationist, tried to make her and school oiffcials look at a picture of a "big black buck Negro tweaking the cheek of a white girl."

"I am willing to swear that no one coached me or any of us on what to say here tonight," she said. "We're doing this on our own."

JOHN COBB, spokesman for for the 40 Citizens' Council members present, said the strike had been orderly.

"It was not orderly and contrary to what you say, there was cursing of the teachers and of the superintendent and of the principal," Angie said. "The boys who struck disrupted our classes for four days by driving their cars around and racing the engines and causing them to backfire."

Strike Bars Negroes At School in Arkansas

VAN BUREN, Ark. Sept. 5 (AP) — A group of fifty segregationist white students apparently succeeded today in keeping Negroes out of integrated Van Buren High School.

But they failed in their boast that hundreds of other white students would join them in their boycott, which started yesterday. One striker had said last night: "You'll see very few white kids in there (the school) tomorrow."

Newsmen watching all three entrances to the 600-pupil high school did not see any of the thirteen Negro students arrive at class time, 8 a. m. Later, reporters who were permitted inside the building found only white students in the classrooms. Three Negroes attended classes yesterday.

Girls Join Strikers

The leaders of the student strike stationed themselves across the street from the school and called to other students to join them as they arrived for class.

The strikers attached a cardboard sign to a telephone pole. It read: "Chicken whites go to shcool with jigs."

"Nice Kids"

One school official said "those are nice kids," referring to the students who filed into the building when the first buzzer sounded. Nodding toward the strikers, he said, "it's the few out there that get the publicity." The official estimated that only thirty-five of the striking group actually were enrolled in the high school.

Scorning a guard's threat to shoot them, the rebellious white youths burned a Negro in effigy on the campus last night. Several boasted that their parents were behind them and had given them permission to strike.

Van Buren Feels Tension Mounting

United Press International.

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 6. —School officials and police today braced for a week of tension at Van Buren's 650-pupil high school, where dozens of belligerent white students staged anti-integration protests.

There was no indication what action, if any, would be taken and Gov. Orval E. Faubus said he had no plan to go to Van Buren or to sign any of the anti-integration bills the legislature passed in special session last week "for the next few days."

"I don't think anything is going to develop," Gov. Faubus commented. "Reports I have had from observers on the grounds indicate there is very little trouble."

Strike Continues.

A group of 50 white students continued its strike against integration yesterday and succeeded in keeping Negroes out of Van Buren High School and Junior High School.

Thirteen Negro students stayed away from the high school rather than provoke the group of white students who say they will not attend classes again until the high school, integrated last year, is segregated.

A parent of a student attending the junior high school said the five Negroes who entered his son's school for the first time this year failed to show up. The man, who refused to be identified, said white boys chased the five Negro youngsters out of school about noon. However, other sources said three of the junior high Negroes left voluntarily while the other two stayed until the end of the day.

Only White Students.

But, a school official confirmed that only white students attended school yesterday.

Disturbances also were reported in Kentucky, where a group of white boys, ranging in ages from 10-12, scuffled yesterday with four Negro youths on their way to previously all-white Pride Avenue Elementary School at Madisonville.

The four Negroes enrolled last Tuesday in the second, fourth and sixth grades.

In Virginia, parents of 30 Negro children in Charlottesville awaited the city school board's final decision today on their applications to white schools.

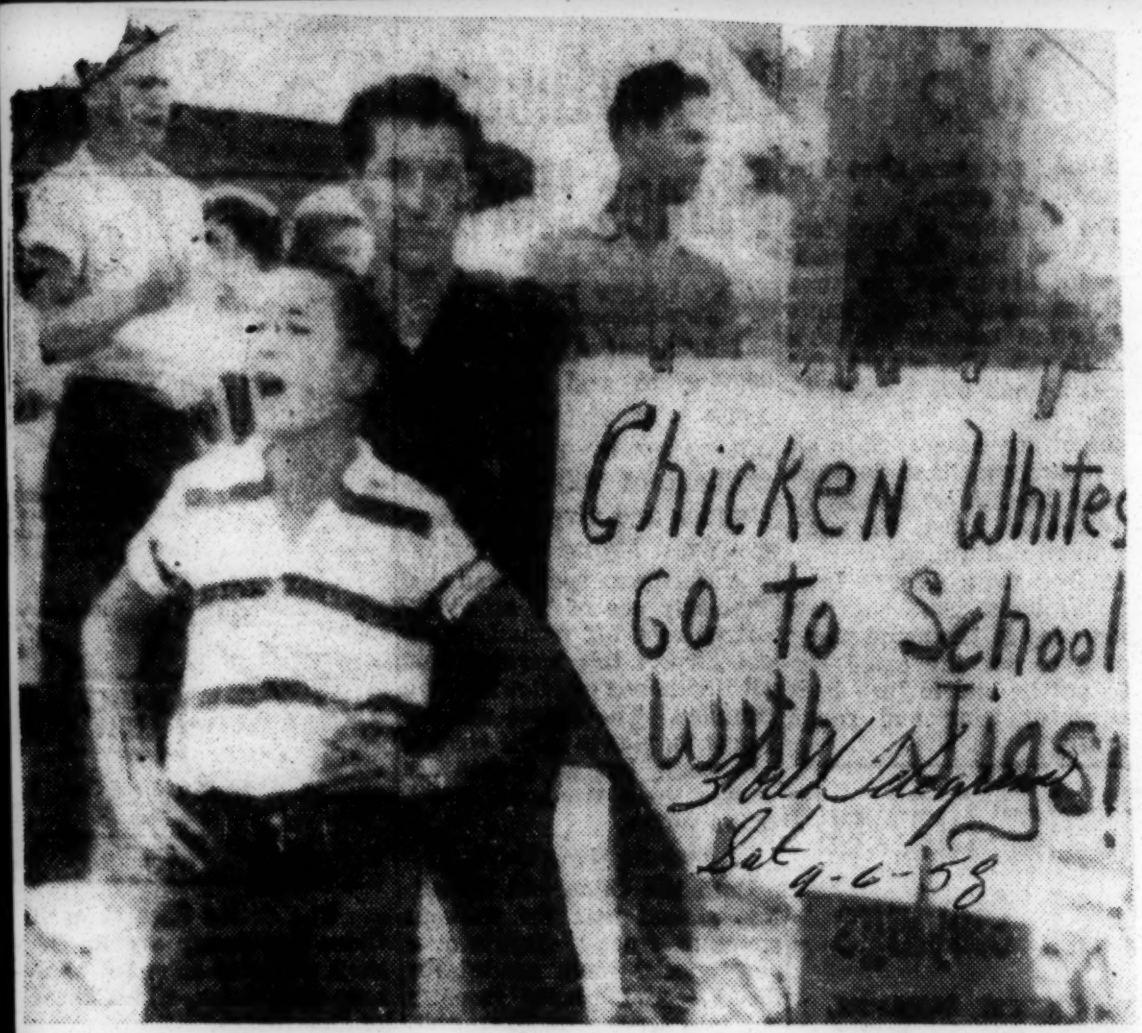
Marshals Given Stepped-Up Training

United Press International.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. — The Justice Department is putting United States marshals and their deputies through intensive and apparently unprecedented training in law enforcement. But it claims this was nothing to do with school integration at Little Rock or elsewhere.

A department spokesman said last night about 20 men—including some from the Washington area and possibly Virginia and West Virginia—already had taken the training. He was not certain whether men from the two states had attended. He said another class will start Sept. 14 or 15 for 29 marshals and deputies from Maryland north to Maine.

Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., is scheduled to reopen Sept. 15. But the spokesman, Press Officer Luther Huston, said the training sessions have "nothing whatever to do with Little Rock," which is involved in pending Supreme Court action on the integration problem.



White pupils striking against segregated classes at Van Buren, Ark., High School taunt other whites as they enter school building yesterday. No Negro students attended.

Van Buren Students Protest To Faubus Over Integration

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 4 (AP)—White high school students today banded together to physically oppose racial integration and appealed to Gov. Orval Faubus for support.

"In behalf of Van Buren High School we are on strike here," a telegram to Gov. Orval Faubus said. "In order to stay integration we need your help."

Faubus, just back in his Little Rock office from a two-day fishing trip, shook his head after reading the message signed, "Roger Williams."

"I don't know what to do about the Van Buren situation; I will have to check into it," said the governor.

13 Negroes Enroll

Thirteen Negro boys and girls entered Van Buren High School Tuesday when the school began its second year of court-ordered integration. They marched past jeering white youths and derisive inscriptions painted on the sidewalks and brick walls of the two-story building.

One of the Negro students, Freddy Bell, 16, said last night that he and several of his Negro classmates would not return to Van Buren High because of threats and insults from white students. The school has a total enrollment of 635.

A group of about 50 white boys gathered outside the high school building early today. They belligerently proclaimed that they would block entrances and take other, unspecified, measures to keep Negroes out.

A spokesman said 41 boys had organized a strike to resist integration. He indicated the group would not return to class until Negroes were permanent ousted.

School Supt. Everett Kelly, who arrived at the school about the time classes began at 8 a.m. CST, took newsmen through a portion of the building.

Negroes in Class

Two Negroes, both girls, were seen in classrooms with whites. Kelley declined to say how many more Negroes might have been inside the school, which appeared orderly and normal.

The white boys, who loitered outside the building and sat under trees on the campus, said they had seen no Negroes and did not know how the girls had gotten inside.

"Our parents approve of what we're doing," one of the boys said.

A sheriff's patrol car and a city police car were parked at the school about the time classes opened. Both autos left after a short time and no police were spotted on the campus later.

Appeared Harmonious

To outward appearances, Van Buren's first year of integration was harmonious despite persistent, unconfirmed reports of racial friction among the students.

The junior high school was integrated Tuesday apparently without difficulty. Five Negroes are enrolled there.

Previously all Van Buren Negro students had gone to schools for their race in Fort Smith, just across the Arkansas River. Some still attend school there despite Van Buren's integration.

In contrast to the turmoil at Van Buren, two Negro children peacefully studied with whites in an elementary school at Fort Smith.

Gov. Faubus still has not signed anti-integration bills provided him by the recent session of the Arkansas Legislature.

One of the bills permits him to close a school should federal force be used to require it to integrate.

50 Van Buren Students Ask Faubus To Step In

Strikers Threaten To Put Negroes Out; Arlington, Va., Granted Integration Stay

By The Associated Press

A group of some 50 white high-school students yesterday banded together to physically oppose racial integration at Van Buren, Ark., and appealed to Governor Orval Faubus for support.

"In behalf of Van Buren High School we are on strike here," a telegram to Faubus said. "In order to stay integration, we need your help."

Faubus, just back in his Little Rock office from a two-day fishing trip, shook his head after reading the message signed, "Roger Williams."

"I don't know what to do about the Van Buren situation; I will have to check into it," he said.

Only two of the 13 Negroes who registered at Van Buren High Tuesday returned yesterday.

May Be Shifted Later

In another integration development, Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan authorized Arlington County, Virginia, to open its schools next Monday on a segregated basis.

Bryan stressed, however, that this was without prejudice to 30 Negro pupils' right to be shifted to white schools later should he find they are entitled to such transfers. The 30 have asked to be admitted to white schools.

The judge said he would not make his final ruling in the Arlington case until after the Supreme Court has ruled in the Little Rock case now pending before it.

Arguments Scheduled

The Supreme Court will hear arguments in the Little Rock case next Thursday.

Bryan, at the conclusion of three days of testimony and legal arguments at Alexandria, Va., said he would have to give "meticulous and tedious study of the evidence in each of these cases."

In the end, he said, the present assignments of the Negroes by the School Board to Negro schools may stand in full, all may be reassigned to the white schools they are seeking to enter or some of the transfers may be granted and others denied.

At Van Buren, a slowly swelling crowd of white boys milled about the high school throughout the morning and into mid-afternoon. They left at the end of the school. They made no demonstrations—even when two Negro girls walked down side steps from the building and boarded a school bus along with white students.

'We Will Be Back'

"We will be back outside the school tomorrow and every other day for six days until the Negroes are removed," a leader said. "At the end of those six days, if the Negroes are not out, then we will put them out for good."

Thirteen Negro boys and girls entered Van Buren High School Tuesday when the school began its second year of court-ordered integration.

One of the Negro students, Freddy Bell, 16, said Wednesday night that he and several of his Negro classmates wuould not return to Van Buren High because of threats and insults from white students. The school has a total enrollment of 635.

The junior high school at Van Buren was integrated Tuesday apparently without difficulty. Five Negroes are enrolled there.

Other Cities Integrated

Virginia's Governor J. Lindsay Almond firmly advised local school boards involved in federal desegration cases yesterday to steer clear of making any assignments of Negro pupils to white schools.

The State Pupil Placement Act, he said, has stripped the local boards of their assignment powers and given them to the Central State Pupil Placement Board.

"Precisely That"

And he said by refusing to assign pupils the local boards could not properly be held in contempt by federal courts.

He was asked if this meant Norfolk should reverse its announced intention of assigning 17 Negro pupils to white schools under the pressure of a Federal District Court order.

"Precisely that," Almond said.

At Winston-Salem, N. C., three Negro children enrolled at the previously all-white Easton Elementary School yesterday. Many white children assigned to the school either stayed away or went to other schools.

VAN BUREN, ARK., GETS SPOTLIGHT IN SCHOOL SCENE

White Boys Mass to Keep Negroes From Classes; Norfolk Gets Advice

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A group of some 50 white boys—apparently a self-appointed task force of segregationists — milled about the Van Buren, Ark., High School Thursday in an avowed effort to keep Negroes from attending classes.

Their attempt was at least partly successful. Some observers said at first that none of the Negroes who went to school briefly on Wednesday came back. But later others reported that two Negro girls were seen inside the building.

Wire to Governor

The white boys then wired an appeal to Gov. Orval E. Faubus for support and the governor, in Little Rock, said he would have to check into the situation.

Newsmen who talked to the group around the Van Buren school said some made vague threats that they would do something if the Negroes were not youthful leaders had said earlier they were conducting a "strike" against the proposed race mixing.

Van Buren thus became one of the focal points of the Deep South's struggle to hold its segregation line. It was the only spot making any show of resistance in a day otherwise undisturbed by the gradual school integration process.

The first year of integration at Van Buren High passed without any major trouble. The town's junior high school admitted five Negroes Tuesday without incident. Integration proceeded peacefully at other Arkansas towns of Fayetteville, Bentonville, Charleston and Hoxie.

Without Incident

Such cities as Great Mills, Md., and Winston-Salem, N.C., went ahead with enrollment of Negro pupils without incident. In Virginia, the principal developments involved legal technicalities.

Virginia's segregationist Gov. J. Lindsay Almond advised the school board at Norfolk not to assign Negro pupils to white schools as the board said it planned to do under pressure of a federal court order.

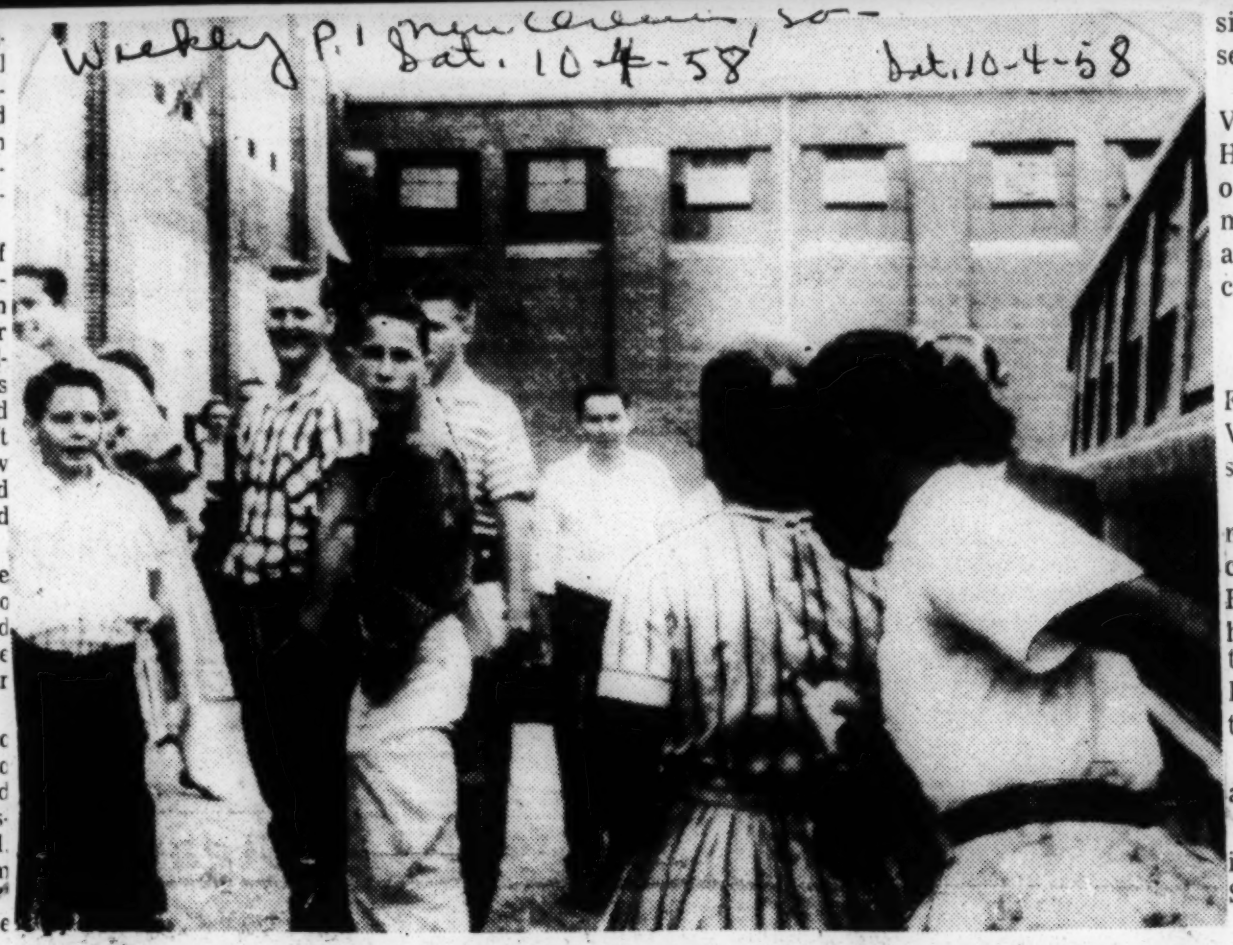
The governor said his statement was prompted because of "some misconception of the authority of local school boards in pending integration cases. His position, he explained, was that no court decree can require the state to operate public schools, whether integrated or not, and that the courts lack authority to make any specific pupil assignments.

At Alexandria, Va., in a continuing hearing before a federal judge, attorney James H. Simmons argued that "nonracial and reasonable criteria" were used in denying the applications of 30 Negroes to enroll in various Arlington County white schools.

One of the minor mysteries of recent days in the integration activities was solved Thursday when the family of Negro minister Clennon King turned up in Woodbine, Ga. Whereabouts of King's wife and five small children had been undisclosed since they left their Gulfport, Miss., home a few days ago after reporting they had received a series of abusive and threatening telephone calls.

Mrs. King, at her parents' home in Woodbine, said she hoped to stay in her native Georgia and that no attempt would be made to enroll their 6-year-old daughter in a white Gulfport school.

However, King, who returned to Gulfport Thursday after a visit to New York, told newsmen he had not abandoned his plans to register the girl in the white school. Deploring his wife's flight from Mississippi because of "terror," he said he would try to persuade her to return.



RETURN TO SCHOOL -- Van Buren, Ark., took the bull by the horns last week, and in rapid-fire actions: a - temporarily suspended 70 white students who had barred the public schools to Negro pupils and b - opened the way for Negroes to return to school at once. Negroes Return To Classes In Van Buren, Ark.

VAN BUREN, ARK., — (UPI) — Eleven Negroes who quit Van Buren's high and Junior high schools because of a white students' anti-integration strike returned to classes Monday without a catcall being raised against them.

Eight of the 10 returned to high school, where the anti-integration strike took place. The other three returned to the junior high school. They quit the first week in September.

Superintendent Calvin Patterson said he expected three more Negroes to take up their schooling at the high school. Two more were expected at the junior high school.

Patterson said he visited the Negroes had stuck it out longer when the strike started; they may not have had to stop.

"It may be that the Negroes gave up too soon," he said.

U. S. District Judge John E. Miller refused last Friday to grant the NAACP an injunction ordering the school board to stop interfering with integration.

WHITE PUPILS KEEP NEGROES FROM SCHOOL

Faubus Gets New Van Buren Plea

Van Buren, Ark., Sept. 5 (AP)—A group of about 50 segregationist white students apparently succeeded Friday in keeping Negroes out of integrated Van Buren High school.

But they failed in their boast that hundreds of other white students would join them in their boycott, which started Thursday. One striker had said Thursday night, "You'll see very few white kids in there [the school] tomorrow."

Urge Others to Join

Newsmen watching all three entrances to the 600 pupil high school did not see any of the 13 Negro students arrive at class time. Later, reporters who were permitted inside the two story, red brick building, found only white students in classes.

The leaders of the student strike stationed themselves across the street from the high school and called to other students to join them as they arrived for class.

35 Strikers Enrolled

One school official said "Those are nice kids," referring to the students who filed into the building hurriedly when the first buzzer sounded. Nodding toward the strikers, he said, "It's the few out there that get the publicity."

The official estimated that about 35 of the striking group actually were enrolled in the high school.

A second appeal for support was dispatched to Gov. Orval Faubus Friday. A telegram signed "parents of junior and senior high," read:

"Gov. Faubus, on behalf of Van Buren Senior and Junior High, things are getting serious here and we need help immediately. Please give us an answer at the Coffee House cafe, Van Buren, Ark."

Faubus Visit Rumored

It was rumored here that Faubus had plans to come to Van Buren for a look at the situation.

In Little Rock, the governor's office acknowledged receipt of the telegram but said Faubus would not see it until he returned to the state capitol building. One spokesman knew of no plans for Faubus to go to Van Buren.

The governor was unavailable for immediate comment.

He was reported to be working on a speech he will deliver Saturday morning before the Arkansas state Democratic convention which opened Friday in Little Rock.

A spokesman for the parents of the Negro students said a meeting would be held over the week-end to decide what to do. One parent was quoted as saying his child never would return to Van Buren High under conditions such as exist today.

Adults Watch Quietly

As the boycotting white students milled about this morning, a number of white adults watched quietly from automobiles and street corners.

Scorning a guard's threat to shoot them, the rebellious white youths burned a Negro in effigy on the campus Thursday night. Several boasted that their parents were behind them and had given them permission to strike.

Parents of most of the youths held a meeting Thursday night. The mothers and fathers appointed a committee to look into what they termed their "legal rights." The tenor of the meeting was sympathy for the white boys.

A newsman heard one mother say: "The kids took the first step [the boycott] today; now it is up to us."

Ask Faubus for support—

White youths keep Negroes from Van Buren School

By The Associated Press

A milling group of 50 white boys partially blocked integration at Van Buren (Ark.) High School today and appealed to Gov. Orval Faubus for support.

At Little Rock, Faubus said: "I don't know what to do about the Van Buren situation; I will have to check into it."

FAUBUS INDICATED that his only information about the Van Buren situation was what he had read in news dispatches.

A group of white boys waited outside the Van Buren High School building this morning, saying they would prevent Negroes from entering the school. Other observers reported that no Negroes appeared but at least two Negro girls got inside the building. Authorities would not say how many more might be inside.

School officials permitted newsmen to tour a portion of the two-story red brick building before noon.

"We saw two Negroes, both girls, in separate classrooms with white students," reported Richard Davis of The Associated Press. "Everything inside the building seemed to be in good order."

Outside, striking white students gathered around newsmen and made "vague threats" that if the Negroes were not out of the school by next week they would do something. The youths did not say what they planned to do.

No police officer was in sight.

IN AN EVIDENT EFFORT to hold the segregation line, Gov. J. Lindsay Almond of Virginia asked Norfolk's School Board not to assign Negro pupils to white schools, as it had planned under court order.

Almond advised school authorities involved in critical segregation action to hold fast to provisions of state law, and not to take any steps under federal court pressure that might reflect on the community's responsibility in operation of the schools.

In connection with a hearing on the race-mixing issue at Alexandria, Va., an attorney for the Arlington County School Board contended that "non-racial and reasonable criteria" were used in denying applications of 30 Negroes for enrollment in various white schools.

Attorney James H. Simmonds, appearing before Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan, defended as necessary the yardsticks he said the school board used to measure the applications.

WASHINGTON GOVERNMENT sources continued to withhold comment on reports that civilians were being enlisted to serve as deputy marshals if needed at Little Rock, Ark.

Enrollment of Negro pupils in white schools proceeded without incident at Winston-Salem, N. C. and Great Mills, Md. In the latter city the high school received as its first Negro student a 16 year-old girl who had been the center of a federal court controversy.

At Greensboro, N. C. a small group displaying a Ku Klux Klan banner and a Confederate flag met at a school. Even so, five Negro children, three of whom entered the school last year, attended the opening session without trouble.

At Fort Smith, just across the Arkansas River from Van Buren, two elementary schools admitted Negroes. One of the youngsters attended school with white children last semester in Fort Smith, where integration is voluntary. The Arkansas cities of Hoxie, Fayetteville and Charleston also went ahead with integration Wednesday.

Four Kentucky high schools desegregated for the first time. There were no incidents as two Negroes attended white schools in Charlotte, one of the cities in which North Carolina's first school integration took place last year.

Jeers Missing Second Day At Van Buren, Ark., School

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 3 (AP)—Negro and white students went to classes together here today with no sign of white resistance which flared briefly yesterday at Van Buren's already integrated high school.

Thirteen Negroes entered Van Buren High School yesterday past a score of jeering white boys and signs saying, 'Nigger, Go Home."

At the previously all-white unior high school, five Negroes were admitted to classes for the first time without incident. Under the integration plan here, the high school was integrated last year and the junior high school this year.

Across the Arkansas River at Fort Smith two Negro children enrolled in a white elementary school without difficulty.

Ten Negro children were eligible to enter first grade classes of white schools. Under Fort Smith's voluntary integration procedure, only Negroes who complete the first grade in a racially mixed classroom there are eligible to advance to the school's second grade.

Most of Arkansas' integrated schools—at Van Buren, Fort Smith, Fayetteville, Ozark and Charleston—are located in the western part of the state where the Negro population is relatively small. Hoxie has the only desegregated school in eastern Arkansas.

At Little Rock, in the center of the state, racial troubles which have commanded national attention simmered in a legal lull.

School in Kentucky Quietly Integrated

FULTON, Ky., Sept. 3 (AP)—Twenty Negroes began their second day of classes with 161 white pupils at Fulton High School today as some of Kentucky's few new integration programs got quietly under way.

Officials called the mixing of classes "just another school day," although it was the first break in school segregation in this far western Tennessee border area.

Fulton High School was the only one integrated here, and was one of four in the state which took the step for the first time yesterday. The other three were in the bluegrass county of Nelson, where Bardstown. Bloomfield and Old Kentucky Home high schools quietly moved a total of 20 Negro pupils into classes with 726 whites.

Kentucky has approximately 40,000 Negro pupils among its estimated 630,000 school children.

Integration of the high school in Fulton came under a court order after a Negro high school at Hickman, 20 miles away, was closed because it had too few students to maintain state accreditation.

Only a few onlookers stood by as students walked into the building yesterday. A qualified observer said none of them were from Fulton.

47 Boys in Arkansas Bar Negroes at School

By The Associated Press

Forty-seven white boys — apparently a self-appointed task force of segregationists—milled about the Van Buren, Ark., High School Thursday in an avowed effort to keep Negroes from attending classes.

Their attempt was at least partly successful. Some observers said at first that none of the 13 Negroes who went to school briefly on Wednesday came back. But later others reported that two Negro girls were seen inside the building.

WIRED FAUBUS

The white boys then wired an appeal to Gov. Orval E. Faubus for support and the governor, in Little Rock, said he would have to check into the situation.

The youths left at the end of the school day. They made no outward demonstration, even when two Negro girls left the building and boarded a school bus with white students.

"We will be back outside the school tomorrow and every other day for six days until the Negroes are removed," a leader said. "At the end of those six days, if the Negroes are not out, then we will put them out for good."

He added more than 100 "strikers" would turn out Friday.

In Alexandria, Va., U.S. Dist. Judge Albert V. Bryan Thursday authorized Arlington County to open its schools next Monday on a segregated basis.

30 PUPILS

Bryan stressed, however, that this was without prejudice to 30 Negro pupils' right to be shifted to white schools later should he find they are entitled to such transfers. The 30 have asked to be admitted to white schools.

The judge said he would not make his final ruling in the Arlington case until after the Supreme Court has ruled in the Little Rock case now pending before it.

The Supreme Court will hear arguments in the Little Rock case Sept. 11.

Bryan, at the conclusion of three days of testimony and legal arguments, said he would have to give "meticulous and tedious study of the evidence in each of these cases."

In the suit he said, the present assignments of the Negroes by the school board to Negro schools may stand in some or all may be reassigned to the white schools they are seeking to enter, or some of the transfers may be granted and others denied.

Earlier, Judge Bryan mentioned from the bench that the Supreme Court in its next Little Rock decision may further clarify its ruling that "all deliberate speed" shall be used in carrying out public school desegregation.

The Supreme Court used that phrase in its 1955 decision on how the decision of a year earlier.

outlawing segregation, should be carried out.

The first year of integration at Van Buren High passed without any major trouble. The town's junior high school admitted five Negroes Tuesday without incident. Integration proceeded peacefully at other Arkansas towns of Fayetteville, Bentonville, Charleston and Hoxie.

One of the minor mysteries of recent days in the integration activities was solved Thursday when the family of Negro minister Clennon King turned up in Woodbine, Ga. Whereabouts of King's wife and five small children had been undisclosed since they left their Gulfport, Miss., home a few days ago after reporting they had received a series of abusive and threatening telephone calls.

Mrs. King, at her parents' home in Woodbine, said she hoped to stay in her native Georgia and that no attempt would be made to enroll their 6-year-old daughter in a white Gulfport school.

However, King, who returned to Gulfport Thursday after a visit to New York, told newsmen he had not abandoned his plans to register the girl in the white school. Deploring his wife's flight from Mississippi because of "terror," he said he would try to persuade her to return.

Integration Is Resumed At Van Buren, Arkansas

And Not Even A Catcall Marrs Students' Return

VAN BUREN, Ark. — (UPI) — Eleven Negroes who quit Van Buren's high and junior high schools because of a white students' anti-integration strike returned to classes Monday without a catcall being raised against them.

Eight of the 11 returned to high school where the anti-integration strike took place. The other three returned to the junior high school they quit the first week in September.

Mode To Return

Superintendent Calvin Patterson said he expects three more Negroes to take up their schooling at the high school. Two more were expected at the junior high school.

Patterson said he wished the Negroes had stuck it out longer when the strike started; they may not have had to stop.

"It may be that the Negroes gave up too soon," he said.

U. S. District Judge John E. Miller refused last Friday to grant the NAACP an injunction ordering the school board to stop interfering with integration.

He said he thought the school board could handle the problem without being enjoined. A crowd of photographers and reporters at Van Buren high created more excitement Monday among white students than the arrival of the Negroes.

White students stopped their play on the schoolground and stared out of windows as the photographers made pictures of the Negroes.

A Promise To Behave

There was no attempt to block entrances to the school as there was the first week of September when 78 white students went on strike. The 78 were expelled, but later readmitted when they signed promises to behave.

School Superintendent Everett Kelley showed the Negroes into school.

Mrs. Hazel Norwood, mother of two of the Negro students who returned Monday said they had been meeting with her every day to try to keep up with their lessons.

"I'm not a teacher, but I tried to round them up," she said.

Twenty-five Negroes integrated Van Buren high last year without difficulty. Trouble started the first week of school this year.

While the strike was in progress, segregationists started a White Citizens' council. Sam Cox Jr. leader of the council, said he was afraid to start a protest Monday.

"The Supreme court has made their decisions and if we stir up something, we are liable to be sticking our necks out," he said.

Negroes Try For Re-Entry At Van Buren

VAN BUREN, Ark. (AP) — Negroes will try Monday to reenter public schools here from which they were barred two weeks ago by jeering, threatening white students.

The Negroes will carry with them assurance from a federal judge that they can seek his help if further obstacles to their school attendance arise.

There was no indication Sunday whether white students would again stage a protest.

The Negroes have not attended school since Sept. 5, after a group of about 45 white students refused to go to integrated classes at Van Buren High and threatened violence to restore segregation. The protest dissolved when the Negro children stayed away from the high school and the nearby junior high.

All execept two of the 18 Negroes enrolled in this west Arkansas citys schools planned to report for classes Monday. Those two transferred earlier to segregated schools in other cities.

Eleven are still enrolled at Van Burean High and five at Van Buren Junior High. The city maintains a Negro elementary school but has no facilities for Negroes only at the upper grade levels.

The Negro students decided to return to school after U.S. District Judge John E. Miller declined Friday to order the school board to resume integration. Miller indicated he felt such an order was unnecessary and that Negroes could return to class without it.

The judge, who had jurisdiction over a suit which led to integration here last year, assured both the Negroes and the school board that they could seek further action from him if difficulty arose.

Van Buren is operating under a plan of gradual integration worked out without a formal court ruling on a desegregation suit filed by attorneys of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. Integration began in the high school last year, was started in eighth grade this year and is scheduled to proceed one grade downward each succeeding year.

17 Van Buren Negro Pupils Study Alone

VAN BUREN, Ark. (AP) — The nation's far-flung racial struggle leaves Negro children in this west Arkansas town caught in a dilemma—afraid to attend the city's legally integrated schools and unable to attend nearby segregated ones.

The answer to their problem lies in what could be a long, tedious court case.

Meantime the children—about 16 of them—gather in small groups to study in preparation for the day when they can return to school, wherever it may be.

WITHOUT TEACHER

"It's tough to keep up in my studies without a teacher," said Nathaniel Norwood, 17. I'll really be glad to get back in class."

The problem of Nathaniel and other children began on the second day of this school year after they had attended a full term at Van Buren High School without any reported incidents.

On the second day, the 13 Negroes at the 635-pupil school began receiving vague threats from some white students.

The next day all except two of the Negroes returned home when faced by a boisterous group of anti - integration white students. The white students refused to attend racially mixed classes and threatened to use force to restore segregation.

NONE RETURN

The demonstraters, whom school officials said numbered about 45 succeeded on the fourth day of school in keeping all Negroes away.

None of the 13 has returned. Five younger Negro students in junior high remained at home, too.

The Negroes are unable to return to a segregated school because the city's gradual integration plan voided the system under which Van Buren sent Negroes to a high school in another district. The students can't transfer to another district on their own initiative.

Future school plans for the group depend on the outcome of a suit in U. S. District Court at nearby Fort Smith, filed in behalf of the students by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

District Judge John E. Miller has said a ruling could not come before Friday on the NAACP's effort to have the school board ordered to enforce integration despite the white students' protest.

A final decision could take much longer.

'Alice in Wonderland'—
"It doesn't matter much what I think" about the Supreme Court ruling, stated Little Rock School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom (right) in an interview with Mrs. Alice A. Dunnigan, special columnist for The Pittsburgh Courier (left). The interview took place in front of the Supreme Court Building while two other reporters looked on.

May Open Mixed School in Little Rock

Will Gov. Faubus Weaken Under Public Pressure?

(Courier Press Service)

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Is Gov. Orval Faubus weakening? If high school students continue their exodus to schools in other parts of Arkansas and other states, public pressure may force the opening of one of Little Rock's schools on an integrated basis.

A source close to Gov. Faubus, who ordered the schools closed indefinitely after the Supreme Court ordered them integrated immediately, said growing movements to get them reopened as public schools were reported.

"If pressure develops as has been rumored and white students continue in their protests, saying they want to go to school, even if it is integrated—if it really gets serious—we are urging the governor to open one of the schools on an integrated basis," the source said.

"The school is Horace Mann, the Negro school. We are serious about this. The school would be in the Little Rock district and would be a high school. It would enable the students who are really serious about going to school—even if it is integrated—to continue their education."

■

ON SATURDAY, Sept. 27, voters of the Little Rock school district vote on whether the four closed senior high schools will be reopened on an integrated basis.

Forces on both sides are marshalling strength to get out the vote. The segregationists are the noisiest, but support for the opening of schools on an integrated basis came from a group of white churchwomen who formed a "Women's Emergency Committee to Open Our Schools." They are urging voters to vote for integration, saying there is "no other way to open our schools."

Insiders are wondering what Gov. Faubus' next move will be in the face of mounting pressures of this sort. He may have to weaken and give in to the wishes of the very voters whose wishes he thought he was satisfying.

But the governor agreed that a public vote was the only way to reopen the schools—only on a segregated basis.

■

IN A TV-RADIO speech he urged the Little Rock School Board to lease the schools after the election to a private group that will open them with whites and Negroes separated. His attitude toward integration has been that it should not be forced upon a district.

There was little doubt that phones—probably the governor's among them—were ringing in many offices. The principals of the two major high schools—Central and Hall—received renewed indignant calls.

"Closing the schools is bad enough," said a Central High parent, "but why take the kids' sports and fun away from them, too?"

■

IT WAS FELT that the curbing of football games and all extra-curricular activities at the four high schools is putting even more pressure on the governor.

Meanwhile the school integration elsewhere continued about the same.

In Birmingham three men were fined $200 each in Recorder's Court in connection with crowd dispersal orders by police. They were charged with refusing a lawful command and loitering after a warning.

In Baton Rouge the Louisiana State University Board of Supervisors considered establishing a branch of the Negro Southern University in New Orleans as a way to block Negro attendance.

U. S. Should Have Put Faubus in Jail

By
TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON
(Courier Roving Reporter)

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Almost to a man, every Negro I have talked with here during the past week expressed the belief that the U. S. Government last year should have put Governor Orval Faubus—or some of the white mobsters at Central High School—in jail!

That would have ended the trouble, everyone believed.

Because Governor Faubus—and the CHS white mobsters—defied a Federal law and got away with it as far as punishment was concerned, most Negroes here feel the green light was given to vicious whites who wanted to promote mob violence.

Negroes here likewise credit the row at Van Buren last week to the failure of the U. S. to act more firmly here in Little Rock. They cite the absence of mob violence in Clinton and Nashville, Tenn., this year, where last year those who flouted the integration orders were arrested and punished.

A PARENT of one of the "Little Rock Nine" told me: "The Department of Justice should have put Faubus in jail. He openly defied the Federal government when he sent the guard up there (to CHS) to keep our children out of school."

The parent went on: "They should also have arrested and punished those who made up the mob at the school. Then all this trouble would have been ended."

That was the general sentiment being expressed by Negroes with whom I talked, either higher echelon Negroes or just the man on the street.

A CAB DRIVER said bitterly: "They (the whites) want you to raise their children for them; to prepare their food, and you could spit in it and they wouldn't know the difference.

Yet, they don't want you to sit down beside them or be in the same place with them. It doesn't make sense."

Failure to put somebody in jail for defying the Federal court order has apparently told other would-be offenders they, too, can do it and get away with it. And that feeling is spreading around Arkansas. Perhaps by the time this is in print, the showdown will have come and somebody will have been put in jail.

In another comment on Governor Faubus, editor C. H. Jones told the Courier he felt Faubus was using the Central High School row to build his campaign for the U. S. Senate against Senator J. William Fulbright.

"Faubus planned his program last year for the purpose of securing a third term," Jones said. "He got it, and now he is continuing the campaign, and if he can keep it going two more years—and I think he will succeed in doing that—he will get himself elected senator."

Faubus used Mr. Jones' paper last year as one "reason" why he sent guardsmen to CHS. He showed a Jones' headline on TV forecasting threats and violence. Editor Jones blasted Mr. Faubus in the primary and voiced public support of candidate Lee Ward for governor.

Four Negroes Show Up At Little Rock Church

Leave When Usher Tells Them It Is Attempt To Embarass Pastor

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 6 (UPI)—Four Negroes—two men and two children—tried today to integrate the Baptist church of which the president of the Little Rock Ministerial Alliance is pastor.

The head usher met them at the door and talked them out of it. The pastor, the Rev. Dale Cowling, said there was no question but what "somebody" put the Negroes up to it, to stir up trouble.

It was the second church integration attempt in two Sundays. A white woman took a Negro to Pulaski Heights Methodist Church last Sunday. The minister charged she did it for spite.

Two Negro men, with a Negro boy and Negro girl, walked up to the door of the Second Baptist Church. Cowling has publicly urged that Little Rock's four high schools be opened integrated.

The head usher met them at the front door.

"I explained that our pastor is a great friend of their race and it would embarrass him if they came in this morning," he said. "I also told them it would disrupt our services.

"I explained that we were not refusing to seat them and if they desired, we would. But they said 'no,' they didn't want to come to church if those were the circumstances.

"They turned around, walked down the front steps and left."

The usher did not tell Cowling about the incident until he finished his sermon an hour later.

"It was part of the tactics of pressure groups," Cowling said. "Our head usher said one of the Negroes smelled like a brewery.

"On the whole, our Negro population has handled itself remarkably well. There is no question that somebody put these up to it."

The school crisis, however, was at a standstill, pending the hearing of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's petition for an injunction tomorrow before the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis.

The NAACP, supported by the Justice Department, wants the Appeals Court to issue a temporary injunction preventing the Little Rock School Board from turning over the four high schools to a white corporation for operation on a private, segregated basis.

The school board is now under a temporary restraining order which is effective until the Appeals Court makes up its mind tomorrow about a temporary injunction.

RETIRED TEACHERS IN THE SOUTH REQUESTED TO VOLUNTEER TO TEACH IN SEGREGATED SCHOOLS

Refired Teachers Requested To Act

Asked By Barnett To Work Little Rock Schools

DREW, Miss., Oct. 13.—(UPI)—Jackson attorney Ross Barnett called for retired school teachers in the South to volunteer to teach in segregated schools at Little Rock in a speech here last night.

Barnett, who is expected to make this third race for governor next year, said, "The regular teachers, it seems, have been notified by Federal authorities not to teach.

"The retired school teachers of Southern states have a wonderful opportunity at this time in promoting the welfare of the South," he said, "if they will volunteer or make available their services as teachers in the Little Rock high schools." He said this would "be telling the United States Government in no uncertain terms that we of the South still believe in states' rights."

Mag Profiles Daisy Bates Of Little Rock

"America cares," that's what the embarking troops of the 101st Airborne meant to Daisy Bates, when they arrived in Little Rock.

The story of Mrs. Bates, Arkansas NAACP president and guiding force behind the entry of Negroes to the school, is told in the September issue of Ebony Magazine.

Although her name is known around the world, says EBONY, few know the real woman — the woman who has wielded as much power as given to any woman of her time, during one of the greatest constitutional crisis in American history.

An incident of discriminaton as a child, being made to wait while whites were served has never left her memory, and in later life, with her publisher-husband L. C. Bates, has campaigned against segregation, discrimination, police brutality, and all forms of man's inhumanity to man.

The final entry of the Little Rock Nine climaxed the pressure Mrs. Bates, as the state NAACP head, had kept on the school board since 954 until the court approved the gradual integration plan. On one occasion in early 1957, when she learned Negro students were being discouraged, she told Superintendent Virgil Blossom, "Well, we've got 25 kids. You can take the cream of the crop or you can take all of them."

CENTRAL NEGRO ENTERS COLLEGE

One of nine Negro students at the focus of last year's integration turbulence in Arkansas, Green was little noticed among nearly 4,000 boys and girls entering freshman week activities at Michigan State University.

He arrived on campus Sunday and was assigned to share a dormitory room with Larry Osternik of East Grand Rapids, Mich.

The rest of the week was to b filled with various tests, orienta tion activities and actual registra tion for classes.

Green, who wants to study law eventually will have to transfer t another institution. MSU has n law school.

Although rated a good basket ball player, he said he has no plan to go out for any varsity sport.

Thomas A. Dutch, MSU director of housing, said there was nothing unusual about Green's room assignment. There is nothing on housing applications that indicates race, color or religion.

Osternik expressed pleasure about the arrangement. His mother, Mrs. Leonard Osternik said: "Larry only wanted a roommate who was a very nice boy and I think he got one." She added she was "very much impressed" in a visit with Green.

A large share of Green's expenses at MSU will be met from a tuition scholarship he received on the strength of A-B average at Little Rock. He worked in New York this summer on the office staff of a garment workers union local.

Faubus Warns Of School Ballot

Says Vote To Reopen Means Total Integration

ELECTION IS TOMORROW

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 25.—Gov. Orval Faubus returned late Thursday with a warning that if Little Rock votes to reopen schools Saturday it will mean "total integration" for the city's school system.

The Governor commented briefly on the integration issue as he drove back with Mrs. Faubus and several friends and aides from Lexington, Ky., where he attended the Southern Governors' Conference.

Backs Private Schools

The Little Rock School District votes on whether to reopen schools on an integrated basis or keep them closed. The Governor, who called the election under a new school-closing law, hopes to reopen the schools on a private-school, leased basis if voters reject integration.

He said he was aware of a drive by certain groups to reopen the schools under the argument there will be no schools if they aren't reopened on a "limited" integration basis.

Argument Is Delusion

"That argument is a snare and a delusion, because the people will be voting Saturday on total integration. They might be able to maintain limited integration awhile, but not for long and everybody knows it," the Governor declared.

Governor Faubus said he thinks it may be possible to get the schools reopened by Monday.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High, said petitions for a recall election against the school board might be filed Friday. She said earlier in the week filing of petitions had been delayed because of having to type names of persons signing the forms.

SCHOOLING VIA TV IS FOUND WANTING

Week of Little Rock Test Shows Megacycles Failing to Match Classrooms

By BILL BECKER
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 26—The first full week of high school television piloted in Little Rock seemed today to have settled one thing: in teaching, there is no substitute for personal give and take.

That sums up the dominant view of teacher and pupil participants in the programs.

As mind reached out to mind via the megacycles teachers said that they found one-way education boring.

"It just can't take the place of the classroom," said Miss Christine Poindexter, who teaches trigonometry for seniors. "I am not able to do anything for the children who need extra help, and it's going to get stiffer as we go along."

Miss Poindexter and other teachers find it hard to compress into a half-hour the lesson of the normal fifty-minute classroom period. Most of the teachers think they are maintaining a fairly good pace, however.

Are the children keeping up?

The bright pupils, yes. Others, doubtful, judging from random interviews.

"It's tough when you can't ask questions," many pupils agreed.

"We're not learning anything, it's too elementary," some of the brighter ones declared.

"Boring," several commented.

One said he usually fell asleep during the third consecutive period of the television lessons.

The 7 A. M. start for the lessons was too much for him, apparently.

The programs are being watched by perhaps 75 per cent or more of the pupils of the four closed high schools. No exact survey has yet been attempted.

Several parents questioned at random said their children were keeping up their homework.

"And we're enjoying the classes, too," some remarked.

Virgil T. Blossom, Superintendent of Schools, says that the response from parents has been so great that "it gives us hopes for adult educational television."

The Federal Communications Commission has approved an educational television channel for Little Rock, but it is not yet in operation. The three commercial stations are providing six hours of instruction daily, Monday through Friday. Each is carrying four half-hour periods for the tenth through the twelfth grades.

Students Greet Faubus' Return

Plan To Present Him With Pledge Of Support This Morning

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 25.—About 40 high school students gathered at the executive mansion Thursday to welcome Gov. Orval Faubus back to Little Rock. They said they plan to present him with a pledge of support Friday.

The students, most of them from Central High, drove to the mansion shortly after noon to await the Governor's return. He arrived shortly before 5 p.m., from Lexington, Ky., where he attended the Southern Governors Conference.

Arrival Is Cheered

Fred Jolly, leader of the group, said Central High students have been preparing a petition pledging support to the Governor in his anti-integration stand. They hope to be able to present it to him Friday morning on the steps of the State Capitol.

Occasionally the group would break into a chant: "Two, four, six, eight, who do we appreciate, Faubus, Faubus, Faubus." They broke into wild cheering when the Governor arrived.

Sign Hits At NAACP

Their automobiles, parked on a street near the mansion, carried signs of pro-Faubus nature.

"Welcome Home, Daddy Faubus," read one. "Vote for us, not Daisy," read another, a reference to Mrs. Daisy Bates, head of the Arkansas chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Little Rock Police Chief Gene Smith announced Thursday there would be no further demonstrations allowed by high school students, but his directive apparently was in reference to a large demonstration which took place here earlier in the week. At that time, about 150 students, most of them from Central High, drove a motorcade through the downtown section. An elderly man was struck by one of the cars.

IN CHURCHES, HALLS—

L. R. Citizens Plan To Commence Classes

BY PRESTON McGRAW
United Press International

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 6—The Little Rock Private School Corp.'s lawyer said today he expects the corporation to try to open classes in churches, lodge halls and rumpus rooms this week.

"The decision of the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals today is not going to make any difference," Leon Catlett, the lawyer, said.

"I think we can get the schools opened this week that I doubt that there is any way right now to detail our plans."

"There is nothing more that either I or Dr. T. J. Raney could say at this time."

Dr. Raney is president of the Private School Corp.

The Appeals Court extended last Oct. 13 a restraining order that was issued Sept. 29 to keep the Little Rock School Board from turning the closed high schools over to the corporation for operation as private, segregated institutions.

The plan to start classes around Little Rock in private quarters with publicly subscribed funds is an alternative to the plan of leasing the public schools and operating them privately with tax funds.

There is always the possibility that the Appeals Court would let the public high schools be leased, but the Private School Corp. apparently did not think it promising enough to wait for.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus did not put much stock in the possibility, however. He said the Appeals Court would extend the restraining order two hours before it did.

Faubus, speaking in Hot Springs, also raised the possibility that Little Rock's high school students may not go to school at all this year.

"Suppose the children of Little Rock missed a year of school; they still wouldn't be as far behind as the children of Washington, D. C.," Faubus said.

He made this reference to the possibility of the children missing a year of school after an allusion to a report by a congressional subcommittee.

The report, on the effect of integration in Washington's schools, said students there are two years behind.

He said he has no plan to do away with the state's public school system because of integration.

Many Little Rock Students Move

BY DICKSON PRESTON
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 25—Hundreds of parents are providing their own reluctant answer to the school crisis here by sending their children away to school.

Already more than 10 per cent of the 3688 pupils of Little Rock's four closed high schools have been transferred. The number is increasing daily.

Hardest hit is Hall High School in the city's finest residential district. As of Wednesday afternoon, 227 of Hall's 731 registered pupils had requested transcripts indicating they were going elsewhere. That is 31 per cent of the student body.

Parents of others are waiting to see if the integration dispute is somehow solved this week-end following a special election called by Gov. Orval Faubus. But if the impasse drags on another week or so, Hall may have virtually no student body.

This is especially tragic because Hall is a brand-new school which cost $2 million and is one of the finest in the Southwest. It opened last September, in the midst of the violence at Central High, and graduated its first class of 105 seniors last May.

Hall had no Negroes last year, but one girl had applied this Fall and it was indicated she would be assigned to the school. A poll of Hall students, according to Student Body President Don A. Smith, showed that 71 per cent of them want the school reopened even if it is on an integrated basis.

Meanwhile, they and their parents are not waiting. The children are going to county high schools, to Fayetteville, West Memphis, and almost any other Arkansas city that can take them and to dozens of public and private schools outside the state.

Many of the Hall students will return when classes resume—if they ever do. But others won't.

Fewer pupils are transferring away from Central High, largely because most Central students come from families which can't afford it. Transfer even to a nearby public school costs from $125 to $300 in tuition. Private schools run as high as $2500 a year.

Even at Central, however, there have been 142 requests for transfer. Central has about 2000 pupils.

The other two high schools have been relatively untouched. There have been four transfers from Horace Mann, the Negro high school, and two from Technical High School.

Faubus Keeps Breathing Defiance at U. S. Gov't

LITTLE ROCK — Failing segregationist quarterback Gov. Orval Faubus, thrown for repeated losses by the impregnable forward wall of the U.S. Supreme Court, marshaled his haggled forces in another huddle, mapping hopeless strategy to keep on defying "the law of the land."

The hard-headed Arkansas field general who has been repelled constantly by Government forces as he tried to crash the line, now prepared for a last-ditch effort to circle the ends.

"I WILL never open the public schools as integrated institutions," he shouted, in open and bold defiance of the court rule.

What would happen if the high schools are reopened on a private, segregated basis, reporters asked Faubus.

"The only recourse the Federal Government would have would be to send in marshals and the Army to forcibly eject teachers and students," he retorted.

The opposing team, the U.S. Government, hopelessly outnumbering the Little Rock segregationist team, waited to see just how Faubus and his "rams" would butt their heads against the immovable stone wall.

But, throughout the country, the Government's cheering section is indicating that the waiting game is not sufficient. Indications are strong that they want the powerful Government team, led by President Eisenhower, to outcharge the weak Faubus line, throw the runners for a loss and win the segregation battle.

THE FAUBUS team, like impudent spoiled brats, did show one sign of weakness; perhaps an indication that in their hearts they know theirs is a hopeless fight.

The Arkansas Governor said he expected to "use private buildings and private funds as his alternative" if the Government continues to crack the whip.

This was the first indication that the Faubus' state-aided segregated program will fail.

While the Faubus squad hud dled, one of their number sneaked off the field to find a scapegoat. He did—the NAACP, as usual.

Arkansas Attorney General Bruce Bennett said he planned to "neutralize" the NAACP which he said is "determined to wreck the spirit of progress among the races."

PUPILS ARE BUSY IN LITTLE ROCK

Some Get Temporary Jobs —Movies and Television Occupy Many Others

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 5 (AP)—Although they have not spent a day in classrooms this fall, Little Rock High School pupils, to hear them tell it, are busy. Some even find profitable uses for their hours.

Gail Manor, a senior, obtained a job last week providing information in a booth at the Arkansas State Livestock Show here.

Sharri Smith, another senior, spends time practicing as a cheer leader for Central High. Football and other extra-curricular activities continue, although Gov. Orval E. Faubus has closed the schools.

Sharri also plans to enroll in high school correspondence courses through the University of Arkansas.

Kirk Smith, another Central senior, works out with the track team. He, too, plans to sign up for correspondence courses. He hopes to become a doctor.

Others keep busy but at less useful pursuits.

Said one Hall High senior girl: "Some of us usually get together every day and watch TV and talk or go to shows."

Then she said:

"I sure would like for school to open."

That seems the view of most students.

Governor Faubus closed the schools as of Sept. 15, saying he did so to prevent violence stemming from prospective integration. Central High was the scene of disorders last year when nine Negroes entered the previously all-white school.

The schools originally were to open Sept. 2, but classes were delayed during court battles until Sept. 15, when the Governor ordered schools closed.

And now students face the sixth week without normal education.

Affected were 3,698 pupils—717 at Horace Mann, the all-Negro high school; 2,071 at Central, 731 at Hall and 179 at Technical High.

When it became apparent the delay would continue indefinitely, pupils began casting about for other schools to attend.

Latest school board figures show 410 students have transferred. Hall High, in a well-to-do district, lost 237 students—a remarkable 31 per cent of its student body.

Central transfers total 167, Horace Mann, 4, and Tech, 2.

All schools in surrounding Pulaski County are jammed with their own pupils and transfers and will take no more. Memphis, Tenn., 150 miles northeast, will accept no more Little Rock pupils.

Many ranged far. Terrance Roberts, a Negro and one of the original "Little Rock nine" who went to Central last fall, transferred to Los Angeles.

For more than a week, the public schools, with the aid of the city's three television channels, held classes two hours each day. This plan was dropped when an attempt to take over the schools by a private corporation failed.

"They all enjoyed the TV school so much," said Mrs. Ray S. Manor, Gail's mother.

"They're all sick of being out of school," she added.

Most of those who had summer jobs gave them up when normal opening time neared.

A good many said they were studying their textbooks at home. Some get together on an informal basis.

Charlene Jackson says, "The kids come over to dance and drink Cokes. We went swimming the other day. Sometimes there are from fifteen to fifty here. Sometimes they bring books and we study together."

St. Louis Says It Cannot Take Little Rock Pupil

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 24 (AP)—A white pupil from Little Rock's Hall High School, closed by Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus to prevent racial integration, will not be permitted to attend school in St. Louis.

Mervyn W. Wicthaupt, secretary-treasurer of the Board of Education, said the application of Hugh Pollard, a senior at Hall, would be rejected because Missouri's constitution prohibited persons who were not residents of the state from attending public schools.

In letters to the principals of Cleveland, Roosevelt, Southwest and Central High Schools, the youth said he was seeking admission because "it appears that the current crisis which has engulfed all of use at Little Rock will not reach a climax in the reasonably near future."

Little Rock Teacher Gets Regular TV Show

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A history teacher's part in stopgap educational television programs for high school students here has won her a TV show.

Miss Emily Freeman, a teacher for 35 years, will do only what she is used to doing—teaching history. The TV series, to continue the remainder of the year, will be entitled "Miss Emily."

The TV programs, started after Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed Little Rock's four high schools against integration, were stopped when a private corporation indicated it would shortly open segregated schools.

"We got letters and cards from people up to 90 years old," said John H. Pounders Jr., promotion director of station KTHV.

"At first the letters were purely complimentary," he said, "but then the letters began to insist that we continue the program and we decided to do it."

The half-hour show will be aired at 7:30 a.m., beginning Monday.

Miss Emily, a Central High School teacher, will not have a sponsor, the station explained, because it does not "want to attach any commercial aspects to the show."

Ex-Liberal 'Ambitious'

Is Faubus Gambling For 'Hiah Stakes'?

Courier

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Why has Gov. Orval E. Faubus taken the school segregation issue as a life-and-death matter and flung himself so adamantly on a path of defiance of the U.S. Government, especially when he once was considered a 'liberal"?

The answer arising from great research into Mr. Faubus seems to be simply that: school segregation is a convenient issue to further his own career and ambitions, that millions of dollars are apparently involved, and the records show that Mr. Faubus has never hesitated to use whatever method seemed most convenient to further his aims.

Elected to the governorship in 1954 by what the Arkansas Recorder called "the boldest political grab in history", Mr. Faubus has become well-known for his disregard of the truth, having several times resorted to admitted untruths to push his viewpoint across.

"Just because I said it didn't make it so," he told newsmen when asked about his statement last year that the Supreme Court ruling was the law of the land.

■

THERE HAVE been other things that weren't so just because Governor Faubus said them.

For example, on April 3, 1954 Mr. Faubus announced publicly that he was not going to run for governor of Arkansas against incumbent Francis Cherry. Yet, on April 28 he filed late in the afternoon on deadline day.

Mr. Faubus, a member of ex-Governor Sid McMath's official family, had been advised not to run by multi-millionaire Witt R. Stephens.

What research has revealed is that Mr. Stephens' company—Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co.—had a case before the Arkansas Public Service Commission and he wanted a favorable dscision from Governor Cherry's commission. A Faubus entry would muddy the water. So Faubus said he wouldn't run. The favorable decision came and Faubus nimbly went oack on his word and filed in a bizarre fashion.

A Faubus lieutenant tells how he "had Orval hidden away in the Sam Peck Hotel (across from the Federal Building in Little Rock) on the final filing day." This friend says he went to the Secretary of State's office and got all the materials needed for filing. "Then just before the ticket closed Orval went up and filed—too late for the opposition to do anything about it." Yet he had given his word he would not run.

In the run-off election against Governor Cherry, Mr. Faubus got 191,449 votes to 184,377 for Cherry. In his home county of Madison Mr. Faubus got 2,888 votes to 47 for Mr. Cherry.

Here was the first instance of voting irregularity, for the total vote represented 168 votes more than the total number of certified poll tax payers qualified to vote. More than 1,000 votes were counted from persons who got ballots in Madison County and were not even on the qualified voters' list. The Arkansas Recorder listed the names of all these people.

■

ALSO IN the run-off Faubus got help from former associates of the Highway Commission, for in 10 counties ex-highway commissioners pulled 8,070 votes for Faubus, where Mr. Cherry got only 982. The Faubus majority was 7,088 from these commissioners. His state majority was 7,072. Thus it is easy to see who actually elected him.

Former Governor McMath told the Courier last week: "Yes, it was my organization that elected him."

Once in office Mr. Faubus with a cunning that cannot be underestimated seized upon the school segregation issue as "the issue," the one to exploit and ride to power, over friend and foe. He seized this issue and has made it work for him.

His present conduct is inconsistent with his past, for he told the Courier last year: "I've been known as being so liberal they've (segregationists) shied away from me." Mr. McMath admits that during his first term Mr. Faubus continued the liberal McMath policies.

But why the sudden change? The answer is three-fold: Mr. Faubus is ambitious, Mr. Faubus is feathering his nest, and Mr. Faubus has a "background" that can stand scrutiny.

■

WHEN FAUBUS addressed an American Legion Convention at New Orleans sometime ago he said: "Now that I have become a child of fortune I have not ruled out the possibility of becoming a standard bearer for a third party in 1960."

In a television address last July, former Governor McMath disclosed that Georgia's Governor Marvin Griffin "intrigued Faubus with the tempting role as standard bearer for a third party in 1960."

Rumors here in Little Rock are that Mr. Faubus plans to seek a U. S. Senate seat in 1960 when the current term of Sen. John L. McClellan (D., Ark.) expires.

This reporter talked with Senator McClellan about this idea and learned that Senator McClellan has not definitely made up his mind—yet—that he will run again in 1960.

"I'd like very much to get out of it," he told the Courier, citing his three grandchildren and recent tragedies to two of his sons, indicating a desire to return to his law practice here and help raise the grandchildren. He admitted he could make more money practicing law than as a U. S. Senator.

"Odds are that I will run again," Senator McClellan told the Courier, "but at this moment, honest to God, I don't know what I'm going to do."

■

IF HE doesn't run, the way will be open for Faubus—provided he can maintain his present popularity with the white masses, and that depends upon his keeping the segregation issue alive and boiling until 1960.

The Courier learned that Mr. Faubus told Senator MsClellan—prior to the segregation uproar—that he would not run against McClellan if the Senator chose to run again. However, once again we hear that reminder: "Just because I said it didn't make it so," with regard to the law of the land. So, Senator McClellan might keep that in mind.

Next week, we'll discuss the feathering of the Faubus nest and the Faubus record of half-truths and Commonwealth College.

Rock Tossers Flee Before Bullets

Daisy Bates Turns Nimrod, Shoots Five Times at Thugs

TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON
(Courier Roving Reporter)

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Five bullets from the gun of Mrs. Daisy Bates, state head of the NAACP and school integration leader, caused white thugs to flee early Wednesday morning after they had thrown several rocks at the Bates' home breaking a window.

Mrs. Bates said the attack took place around 1 A. M.

The crashing of the rock against the window brought Mrs. Bates and her husband, L. C. Bates from their bedroom to a window, where Mrs. Bates saw the figure of a white man outlined in a position preparing to throw again.

Sat. 10-11-58

RUSHING TO the door, she opened it partially and fired one shot at the man who dashed back into the car. Mrs. Bates fired four more shots at the fleeing automobile, which almost turned over as it careened around a corner.

Police had provided protection for the Bateses for a while the night before, but not on Tuesday night.

"I just had a strange feeling that something was about to happen," the intrepid NAACP leader said. Then came the crash of the rock, followed by more rocks. Police made an investigation later and remained in the area until aruond 3 .M. in the area until around 3 A. M.

In another shooting case, Charles Beaver, 22, wounded in his shoulder told detectives that he had dropped a .22 calibre pistol and it had gone off and accidentally wounded him. Other Negro witnesses said no whites were involved.

Beaver was arrested on an open charge.

LITTLE ROCK ADDS A CHURCH SCHOOL

28 Displaced Students Begin Courses at Academy Run by Episcopal Parish

By BILL BECKER
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 30—One new senior high school operated today with twenty-eight displaced students from the Little Rock public school system.

Trinity Interim Academy moved into a thirteen-course curriculum with nine teachers under the direction of the Rev. Wade Wright Egbert.

Among the students were five seniors eager to enter college next year, eleven juniors and twelve sophomores, all from the parish of Trinity Episcopal Cathedral.

Thus far, entrance has been limited to the children of parish members. The Very Rev. Charles A. Higgins, dean of the cathedral, said that the school had room for forty-five students —fifteen in each of the three closes.

Tuition fees are $9 a month a course. Most students enrolled yesterday for four courses.

They are busily at work in small, but well-equipped classrooms at the Parish Hall. The church has operated an elementary school for two years and some of those classrooms have been diverted for high school work. Part of the kitchen is being converted into a science laboratory.

Subjects offered are Latin, French, English, Spanish, Algebra, plan and solid geometry, chemistry, biology, physics, mechanical drawing, world and American History.

The school day begins with fifteen minutes of prayer.

Most of the instructors are qualified teachers. One, Dr. M. J. Kilbury, is a member of the University of Arkansas Medical School faculty. He will teach science at the academy between his normal classes.

Teachers are being paid $75 a month a course.

Dean Higgins said that the Little Rock School Board had given informal assurance that work done in the academy would be recognized by the public high schools when they reopen.

The academy probably will close then. Technically, Dean Higgins says, the students have not transferred but are still registered in the public schools.

"This is primarily a stopgap," he said.

The question of college accreditation has not yet been taken up, but will be shortly if the academy remains in existence.

There are two Roman Catholic parochial high schools in Little Rock, but they are crowded and have not been able to accept transfers.

There are no Negroes in either the Catholic or the Episcopal high schools.

South Africans Aid Faubus But Can Spare Only $18.50

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa —(UPI) — A group of white office workers in this strictly segregated country contributed $18.15 to Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas Tuesday to help him fight integration in state schools. The donors said in a letter to Faubus printed in the newspaper Die Transvaler that they were office workers in Pretoria who said they supported their government's "reasonable and healthy" policy of apartheid race segregation.

ROUND-UP OF WEEK

Desegregation Is 'Smooth, Rough'

A look at the states

ARKANSAS

VAN BUREN — Attendance [illegible] at Van Buren High School dropped abruptly from 13 enrolled on Tuesday, to 3 who showed up for classes Thursday, and none on Friday.

Behind the decline was a strike by 40 white boys, less than a twelfth of the school population, who threatened the colored pupils with violence.

SIX COLORED pupils attended the high school last year without serious incident. Five colored pupils, assigned this year for the first time to the junior high school, have not, thus far, been molested.

No effective effort has been made by police or school officials to disperse the strikers or to force them to reenter their classes.

FORT SMITH — Two colored pupils enrolled and attended classes in white Fort Smith School without incident. Under the city's "voluntary integration" program, ten colored pupils were eligible to enter first grade classes.

Integration also moved ahead peacefully in Hoxie, Fayetteville and Charleston.

LITTLE ROCK — Efforts to recruit deputy U.S. marshals for use at Central High School if the Supreme Court refuses to uphold a 2½-year integration stay were reported on Wednesday.

The recruiting efforts were said to have been made at Batesville, Jonesboro, Conway and Damascus.

* * *

RALEIGH—Utilizing a legal technicality, Federal District Judge Edwin M. Stanley ruled Tuesday against the parents of Joseph Holt Jr., in their efforts to enroll their son in Raleigh's white Needham-Broughton High School.

Refusing to hear or to consider "speculation" on the possible reasons for refusal of the Raleigh School Board to admit young Holt, Judge Stanley contended that the plaintiffs had failed to "exhaust the administrative remedies provided by North Carolina's pupil placement law before appealing to the courts.

Although the board had already denied the request for transfer to Needham-Broughton, the judge said, their securing a lawyer to represent them rather than appearing themselves at an appeal hearing on the board's decison on August, 1957 constituted failure to exhaust administrative remedies.

THE HOLTS were given 10 days in which to file a written motion for retention of the case on the docket to give them "opportunity to "exhaust administrative remedies" by going back to the Raleigh School Board for another hearing or appealing the Stanley ruling to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals."

Neither course could be expected to result in a clean cut decision for weeks, or possibly months.

As a result, young Holt is expected to remain at Ligon High School where he is a junior, for the current school year.

* * *

WINSTON-SALEM—This city began its second year of school integration without incident, as three colored pupils enrolled in formerly all-white Easton elementary School Thursday.

No stir marked the return of Gwendolyn Yvonne Bailey, 16-year-old senior, as the only colored pupil attending Reynolds High School for the past year.

* * *

BIRMINGHAM — A jeering crowd of white men and teenagers assembled in the vicinity of Phillips High School and chased colored passersby out of the area in an effort to prevent enrollment of any colored pupils at the school.

One white youth received a head injury when struck by a stone he said was hurled by a colored youth, and three white men were arrested on charges of loitering.

Colored leaders in the city said that no attempt would be made to enroll colored pupils in white Birmingham schools while a current desegregation suit is pending.

FULTON, Ky. — Twenty colored pupils attended classes with the 161 white pupils of Fulton High School during a week which began Monday with what school officials described as "just another school day."

Fulton was one of four Kentucky high schools which were integrated for the first time this year. The others were at Bardstown, Bloomfield and Old Kentucky Home, where 20 colored pupils were moved into classes with 726 whites. No incidents were reported at any of the schools.

The Henderson Board of Education voted Monday to integrate 800 - pupil City High School next year. Integration began in the first six elementary grades last year. It will be extended to the seventh grade next month.

LEONARDTOWN, Md—Joan Groves, whose application for admission to Great Mills High School has been the center of a legal controversy since it was denied by St. Mary's County officials, quietly entered the school as a pupil on Thursday.

Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals refused a few days earlier to postpone a lower court order for her admission.

County school officials have appealed the order, issued by Dist. Judge Rozelle C. Thomsen, to Judge Sobeloff's Court.

Under the county's desegregation plan, Miss Groves would not be eligible for admission to the school, which integrated its grades 7 through 10 this year, and has scheduled integration of its senior high school classes for next year.

Joan's brother, Thomas Conrad, accompanied her to school. He was enrolled on the same day without difficulty at the same school as a ninth grade pupil.

* * *

ANNAPOLIS — An Anne Arundel County Board of Education plan for a two-teacher exchange between an integrated and a colored elementary school drew the fire last week of the segregationist Maryland Petition Committee.

Carl A. Gallop, chairman of the segregationist group called it a "secret maneuver designed to be foisted on a sleeping public."

Dr. David S. Jenkins, superintendent of schools, ignored the segregationists' protests declaring that he considers the transfer "nothing more than an exchange of teachers on a one-year basis. . .

"If the gentleman (Gallop) wishes to consider this an integration of the county faculty, that's up to him," he added.

VAN BUREN

White Student Leader Appeals for Integration

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 10 (AP) — A white student leader at Van Buren High School appealed last night for segregationist parents to drop their fight to keep 13 Negroes out of the school.

"Have you thought what you make those Negro children feel like, running them out of school?" asked Angela Evans, 15-year-old president of the Student Council.

The girl and a group of anti-integrationist parents were attending a meeting of the city school board.

Her appeal was met by shouted objections from the parents, who supported about 45 white boys when they quit classes Thursday and threatened violence unless Negroes stayed away.

Negroes Stay Away

The Negroes have remained out of school since Thursday and Negro leaders have indicated they won't go back without court protection.

Most of the boycotters have returned to class, but said they would start another boycott if Negroes tried to enter school again.

The parents were members of a newly formed Citizens Committee. Their chairman, Sam Cox, jr., told Miss Evans the group had nothing against Negroes.

"We just want them to go to their own schools," Mr. Cox said.

Van Buren has no high school for Negroes.

Miss Evans reported that the Student Council had polled about 160 white pupils at the 635-student school and found that only 45 opposed integration.

"If we don't object, why should anyone else?" she challenged.

The school board took under consideration several questions from the segregationists, including an inquiry about whether the school board would try to win a court delay of integration if the Supreme Court grants a 2½-year breathing spell at Little Rock.

Group Formed to Fight Van Buren Integration

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 9 (AP).—The leader of a newly formed anti-integration committee declared last night that racial mixing must be ended in Van Buren public schools.

"It has to be stopped now," said Sam Cox, jr., chairman of the group, which supports a white student boycott of integrated Van Buren High School.

The 13 Negroes enrolled at the 635-pupil school have stayed out of classes since last Thursday when 45 white students banded together in a strike against integration.

Boycott members threatened to keep the Negroes out of school by force.

Several methods of blocking integration permanently were discussed by the committee, on a plan to build a Negro high school.

Below High School Age

Mr. Cox, a 30-year-old truck driver, has three children but none of high school age. He said he joined the committee because the high school situation eventually would affect his children.

An attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sought injunctive relief in the controversy yesterday. But United States District Judge John E. Miller rejected U. Simpson Tate's petition to have the Van Buren School Board cited for contempt in failing to protect the Negro pupils.

Judge Miller advised Mr. Tate to file a suit by September 19 and added that he would hear the case on its merits September 25 or 26. He told the Negro attorney he would consider a petition for a temporary restraining order on September 19.

Await Court Action

Mr. Tate, regional counsel for the NAACP, flew back to his headquarters at Dallas last night and Negro leaders here indicated none of the 13 Negro pupils would return to Van Buren High before court action is taken.

Police Chief Voll Russell issued a formal statement pledging a thorough investigation "of any lawless act."

He said the white students involved in the boycott ought to be readmitted to Van Buren High without having to "crawl back," apparently meaning they should not be required to obey a rule that parents must take them back.

"They were just striking and picketing for what they thought was right, just as a union would do," Chief Russell said.

About 20 of the striking students went back to classes yesterday.

Van Buren was integrated in September, 1957, under an agreement between Negroes and the school board. Judge Miller dismissed an integration suit which had been filed by Negroes.

There was no reported trouble last year.

Students' Strike Collapses At Van Buren High School

By PHIL NEWMAN
United Press International Staff

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 9.—An anti-integration strike collapsed at Van Buren High School Tuesday and the police chief disclosed that he supported the strikers. He said it was no more a crime than the Boston Tea Party.

The strike succeeded in that 13 Negroes who had integrated the high school refused to return, although they do not now have to face a picket line.

Parents of the 55 strikers indicated that they were more concerned with the probability that their children would fail their classes if they stayed out longer than with the withdrawal of the Negroes.

Chief Endorses Strike

"The school officials, I understand, are making students crawl back to class," Police Chief Voll Russell said in a prepared statement. "The striking students should be allowed to return to class without having to crawl back.

"They were peacefully striking and picketing for what they thought was just, as any union would do. People landed on Plymouth Rock; others held the Boston Tea Party for what they thought was right.

"The students were doing nothing illegal and were picketing in an orderly manner."

Besides, he said, he thought that $10 would cover all the damage the students did, including the smearing of paint on school buildings last week.

The Rev. William Wilder, pastor of St. John's Methodist Church, immediately condemned Chief Russell and said he now sees why police treated the strikers so gently.

"The truth is that this policeman is rationalizing the behavior of his own force in mentioning the Boston Tea Party," he said.

Minister Lashes Out

"I wondered why nothing was done to those who openly cursed the superintendent, the principal and other school officials; I wondered why nothing was done about obscene signs and notes.

"Now I know. These people support such action in this case, these people who are pledged to uphold the law."

United States District Judge John E. Miller, who refused Monday to grant the NAACP a temporary injunction against the Van Buren School Board, hinted that he may try to find out who started the court action.

If it turns out that NAACP lawyers looked for plaintiffs instead of plaintiffs looking for the lawyers, it may provide grounds for a charge of soliciting a lawsuit, or barratry.

"If they get it before me, I'll find out the facts from every angle," Judge Miller said. "There is a time when we have got to find out the facts."

Judge Miller told the Negroes that they could file a new action Sept. 19. He is now holding court at Harrison, Ark.

Twenty-two strikers at Van Buren High returned to class Tuesday. Twenty-six returned Monday.

Citizens' Group Meets

Three strikers were out Tuesday when school took in; by noon, all except one was gone. One of the three said he will stay out a day or two longer; another said he is looking for another school.

They said four boys in addition to them are still on strike.

Mrs. Lon Wallace, a member of the new Citizens' Council, brought her 16-year-old daughter, Marilyn, back to school and said:

"My girl doesn't like it and neither do I, but there is nothing to be accomplished by staying out of school. They are just ruining their grades."

The new Citizens' Council held a long meeting Monday night and decided to throw its support behind efforts to segregate the high school, which 600 students attend.

Little Rock school superintendent Virgil T. Blossom went to Washington with the school board attorneys, John H. Haley and Richard C. Butler, for Thursday's meeting of the Supreme Court.

The court will decide, probably Thursday or Friday, whether Central High School at Little Rock will open segregated or integrated Sept. 15.

INTEGRATION BLOCKED

NAACP's Support Seen For Van Buren Negroes

VAN BUREN, Ark. (AP)—Attorneys Sunday reportedly prepared legal action aimed at returning 13 Negroes to Van Buren High School despite threats of some white students to block integration by force.

U. Simpson Tate of Dallas, regional counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, is expected to file papers in U. S. District Court at nearby Fort Smith Monday.

Tate declined to say what kind of action he would take. Nor would he say whether any of the Negroes would attempt to enter the school Monday.

The Negroes stayed away from classes Friday.

Resistance to integration flared on the first day of the fall term Tuesday when hostile white students greeted Negro pupils with jeers and warnings to stay away. About 45 white youths cut classes Thursday and Friday and staged a boycott demonstration outside the school.

The strikers appealed to Gov. Orval E. Faubus for help. But the governor said Saturday he understood the situation was calmer and added that he didn't plan to intervene.

Parents of some of the striking students are supporting the boycott.

Tate met with parents of the Negro students. The Negro parents were not available for comment about the meeting.

U. S. District Judge John E. Miller, who would have jurisdiction in any federal court action, left Fort Smith shortly after noon Sunday for Harrison, Ark., to open a 10-day regular session of court there.

Miller said he had not been contacted about any proposed action concerning Van Buren High and that he could not imagine any circumstances that would cause him to interrupt the Harrison court session.

Van Buren Suit Filed by NAACP

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 11 (AP)—An attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked a federal court yesterday to order the Van Buren School Board to carry out its gradual integration plan, halted last week by striking white students who threatened violence against Negroes.

U. Simpson Tate of Dallas, regional counsel for the NAACP, contended in a suit filed in United States District Court at Nearby Fort Smith, Ark., that the school board had in effect shown approval of the sutdent boycott by not taking action against it.

Mr. Tate also asked for a temporary injunction which he said would return 13 Negroes to the 635-pupil school until a ruling could be made on the suit.

A hearing on the injunction request is expected to be held September 19, the day United States District Judge John E. Miller returns to Fort Smith from a court session at Harrison, Ark.

Negro leaders have indicated the Negro children wouldn't try to return to school before court action is taken. They have stayed away since Thursday.

13 NEGROES TO GET AID IN VAN BUREN

Attorneys Held Ready to File Suit to Return Students to Arkansas High School

VAN BUREN, Ark., Sept. 7. (AP) — Attorneys reportedly prepared legal action today aimed at returning thirteen Negroes to Van Buren High School despite threats of some white students to block integration by force.

U. Simpson Tate of Dallas, regional counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, is expected to file papers in United States District Court at near-by Fort Smith tomorrow.

Mr. Tate, who arrived here yesterday, declined to say what kind of action he would take. Nor would he say whether any of the Negroes would attempt to enter the school tomorrow. The Negroes stayed away from classes Friday.

Resistance to integration flared on the first day of the fall term Tuesday when hostile white students greeted Negro pupils with jeers and warnings to stay away. About forty five white youths cut classes Thursday and Friday and staged a boycott demonstration outside the school.

Boycott Supported

The strikers appealed to Gov. Orval E. Faubus for help. But the Governor said yesterday he understood the situation was calmer. He said that he did not plan to intervene.

Parents of some of the striking students are supporting the boycott.

Mr. Tate met with parents of the Negro students today. The Negro parents were not available for comment about the meeting.

United States District Judge John E. Miller, who would have jurisdiction in any Federal court action, left Fort Smith shortly after noon today for Harrison, Ark., to open a ten-day regular session of court there.

Judge Miller said he had not been reached about any proposed action concerning Van Buren high and that he could not imagine any circumstances that would cause him to interrupt the Harrison court session.

The judge said only an emergency could cause him to hear a plea that was not on the Harrison docket.

"I do not know of any such emergency," he declared.

Mr. Tate said he or one of his associates would go to Harrison "if it becomes necessary."

Mr. Tate was chief counsel in the case that led to Van Buren's integration. He filed a suit in 1955 that was dismissed in 1957 without a court decision after Negro parents and the school board agreed on a plan for gradual integration.

NAACP REFILES VAN BUREN SUIT

Asks Court to Order Integration Despite Strike

By PHIL NEWMAN

VAN BUREN, Ark. (UPI) — The NAACP filed a new suit Wednesday, asking U.S. district court to make the Van Buren High school proceed with an integration agreement despite the opposition of white students.

U. Simpson Tate, Southwest regional lawyer for the NAACP, filed the suit in U.S. district Judge John E. Miller's home court in nearby Fort Smith.

White segregationists in the Van Buren school struck last Thursday and scared off 13 Negroes who integrated the school.

The strike continues, the Negroes refuse to come back until a federal court guarantees them protection. Judge Miller turned down an NAACP suit earlier this week on the ground that it was drawn incorrectly.

He invited Tate, however, to redraw the suit and said he could hear it Sept. 19.

The NAACP sued in 1955 to integrate Van Buren High. The school board drew up a gradual integration agreement which Judge Miller and the NAACP approved in 1956.

Twenty-five Negroes attended Van Buren High without difficulty last year. Tate charged Wednesday, however, that the school board has abandoned the second phase of the gradual integration plan.

A white honor student told the school board and the segregationist new Citizens' Council Tuesday night that a poll of 160 students showed that 85 favor integration. There are more than 600 students in the school.

VAN BUREN PLEA OF NAACP DENIED

U.S. Judge Won't Issue Reintegration Decree

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — A federal judge Friday denied a request that he order the Van Buren School Board to reinstate integration, halted two weeks ago by a boycott of white students.

U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller said he believed the school board and faculty members of Van Buren High had done all they could in an effort to carry out integration.

He said he would retain jurisdiction so he could act if the situation did not clear up.

FEELS STRIFE ABATED

Apparently the judge felt the integration controversy has abated and that Negroes can return to classes.

The action was asked by U. Simpson Tat. of Dallas, Tex., regional counsel of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, on behalf of several of the 18 Negro pupils involved.

There was no immediate indication of plans by the Negro pupils. They have remained away from classes since a group of some 45 white pupils refused to attend integrated classes. They threatened violence in their effort to restore segregation.

'DID ALL IT COULD'

The Negroes' attorney had asked Judge Miller to issue a temporary injunction against the board.

Miller said he could not condemn the Negro parents for keeping their children away from school under the circumstances, but that he thought the school had done all it could by expelling the boycotting white students.

School Supt. Everett Kelley testified that all except two of the 75 pupils involved in the boycott had returned to class on the promise of good behavior.

Air Force To Open Segregated Off-Base Little Rock School

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force is going along with segregation at a federally financed school near its Little Rock, Ark., base but that doesn't mean it approves segregation, an Air Force officer said Saturday.

A statement was issued as a result of news reports from Little Rock. These said a new school being built for children from the air base would be for whites only.

Schools Supt. E. F. Dunn of Pulaski County, Ark., said the racial policy was worked out in a meeting with AFB officials. Lt. Stephen E. Emerline, information officer of the Little Rock Air Force Base, said a notice would be circulated among the families specifying that the new elementary school would be open only to Caucasians.

The federal government is financing construction and equipment costs of the $650,000 school while the county provided the site.

In response to queries, Col. James T. Gribble, commander of the air base, issued a followup statement. which was distributed by the Defense Department here. It said:

"On Wednesday, Aug. 20, a meeting was held at the Little Rock Air Force Base to discuss transportation arrangements and school opening dates of various schools in the Little Rock Air Force Base area.

"This meeting was attended by education officers of the base and members of the Pulaski school district.

"During discussion on transportation arrangements, Air Force representatives were advised that the new elementary school, which is located on county property outside the air base, would not be integrated. After the school board's decision, the air base started plans to abide by it, in keeping with Department of Defense policy of conducting civil activities according to customs and decisions of local agencies in the area of military installations.

"This in no way should be construed as approval or indication of agreement with the school board's decision.

"Although there is no segregation within the armed forces, all military services have traditionally followed local civilian rules, regulations and customs with regard to segregation in their off-base activities. This in effect is what Little Rock Air Force Base is doing in regard to the new elementary school, which is not located on the base, but rather one mile south of the installation on county property and therefore under jurisdiction of the local school officials."

Court Asked To Rule on Faubus Plan

Little Rock Board Seeks Advice on 'Private' Schools

By Preston McGraw

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 23 (UPI)—The Little Rock School Board asked U. S. District Court today for a ruling on the legality of Gov. Orval Faubus' plan to sidestep integration by turning the city's public schools into private, segregated schools.

"The petitioners (School Board) are willing to lease the school buildings on reasonable terms if so doing they will not subject themselves to charges of contempt for having violated a directive order of this court," an action filed in U. S. District Court said.

U. S. District Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith will have to answer the School Board's question. He said he has no intention of coming to Little Rock right away.

"It will just have to take its course," he said.

The judge said he did not know whether he can rule before Saturday's special election on the desegregation question in Little Rock.

The School Board asked for an immediate ruling.

Recall is Sought

Almost simultaneously, the Central High School Mothers League filed a petition to recall four members of the School Board the league suspects to be integrationists.

Twenty-eight names were on the petition. Margaret Jackson, president of the League, said it has three days to add more names to the 28 until they add up to the required 6300.

The petition for a ruling on the legality of Faubus' private school plan raised the possibility that the Board might refuse to lease the buildings and nip the plan at the start.

The Board members said a quick determination of their status is essential, because negotiations for leases must be "commenced and commitments made immediately, so there will be a minimum of delay in reopening high schools . . ."

Reports spread that a "taxpayer" is going to file a suit asking a state court to prohibit the Board of Election Commissioners from holding the special integration election Saturday.

Faubus believes the election will show that Little Rock voters want the schools reopened segregated. He already has urged the School Board to lease them for operation as private schools as soon as the election is over.

Plan Called Illegal

Sixty-three Little Rock attorneys already have signed a statement saying Faubus can't legally operate private schools with public tax money. This also is the attitude of the Justice Department.

Two Negroes were reported running into reprisals from anti-integrationists. One reported that some of his colleagues have received telephone calls asking, "How much is the NAACP paying you?"

Others have lost clients because of their stand.

School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom disclosed, meanwhile, that transfers of students from the closed high schools is steadily increasing.

At least 302 students, nearly 10 per cent of the total high school enrollment, already have left Little Rock. Hall High has lost 26.4 per cent of its enrollment by transfers.

The Little Rock School Board for the second day offered six hours of lessons on three commercial television stations for 3480 high school students whose schools are closed.

Blossom said many parents are joining their children in TV classes.

Faubus, at the Southern Governors Conference, said he thinks Federal authorities are having trouble finding holes in his private school plans.

"I think at the moment they are having trouble finding a sound legal basis to oppose our plan," he said. "Of course, if they can't find a legal means, they will use an illegal means, as they did before."

Faubus believes that a law passed in 1675 and dusted off when the present integration crisis came up makes it possible legally to lease out "closed or unused" public schools to a corporation for operation as private schools.

The Legislature passed a law three weeks ago under which the state pays the tuition of any student who transfers out of segregated school, or attends a private school.

The tuition will come out of taxes and the Department of Justice lawyers believe this makes the plan illegal.

Southern Democratic Governors united in determination to remain in Party.

PASTORS OPPOSE FAUBUS ON VOTE

Several Urge Little Rock Flocks to Back Opening of Integrated Schools

By BILL BECKER

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 21—Several ministers called here today for the defeat of segregation in next Saturday's special school election.

The Rev. Dr. J. Kenneth Shamblin, pastor of Pulaski Heights Methodist Church, termed it "an artificial, rigged election" and warned his congregation against "the destruction of public education."

The election will determine whether the four closed high schools will reopen as private, segregated schools.

First Classes on TV

The first high school instruction of the semester, aside from football, band playing, and baton-twirling, will be given over Little Rock's three television stations tomorrow morning. Each station will present two hours of classes daily, Monday through Friday, until the four schools open.

Central, Hall, Technical and the all-Negro Horace Mann High Schools arec losed. About 3,500 students are out. More than 200 have transferred or applied for transfer to schools outside Little Rock.

Dr. Shamblin also had caustic words for Gov. Orval E. Faubus. Last week the Governor labeled a group of Presbyterian clergymen as "left-wingers and Communists."

"I can't be silent when the Governor calls men of God left-wingers and Communists," the Methodist minister said in his sermon. "No Government has the right to call clergymen Communists."

No Reply by Faubus

The Governor has not yet replied to the Presbyterians' demand for an apology. He is attending the Southern Governors Conference at Lexington, Ky.

A number of ministers of other denominations stated their position against putting the schools in private hands. Among them was the Rev. Dale Cowling of the Second Baptist Church.

"It will be the best course for our youth, state and nation," he said, "if we vote to keep our public schools open, even if it means integration. I recognize that to do so will bring us some difficult social problems, but these can and will yield to a spirit of love and prayer."

The congregations of Dr. Shamblin and Mr. Cowling each number about 2,800. Little Rock, with a population of 105,000, has more than 130 churches, most of them Protestant.

There were no reports of pulpit endorsement of segregation, although many pastors remained non-committal on the subject. The Rev. Wesley Prudent, pastor of Broadmoor Baptist Church, who is president of the local (white) Citizens Council, said he did not discuss "these matters in sermons."

The election asks voters of the Little Rock School District to decide for or against integration of all schools in the district. For integration to pass, a majority of all registred voters—not just those voting—must favor it.

Governor Faubus has said that if the voters give him a mandate for segregated schools, he will proceed to have the high schools operated privately.

Lawyers' Stand Studied

Meanwhile, there was considerable comment on the statement of sixty-one Little Rock lawyers that they believed the operation of private schools with public funds would be illegal.

The statement was viewed by some lawyers as a possible foundation for a stand by the school board against leasing the schools to a private corporation established last week.

The board faces the possibility that, if it leases the schools to a corporation to be operated on a segregated basis, it would place itself in contempt of the United States Supreme Court. The highest court ordered integration resumed at Central High School.

It is regarded as almost certain that the board will go into Federal District Court to seek advice before agreeing to any leasing offer. The board has been maintaining official silence as to whether it will move before or after the election.

Board May Meet Early

John H. Haley, a school board attorney, said the board might meet early this week to chart its next move. It was known that the board's attorneys welcomed the public statement by the lawyers, who included some of the area's most prominent attorneys.

However, none of the board attorneys signed the statement. Mr. Haley was erroneously listed Sunday in The Times as a signer.

Robert Shults, a lawyer, said that time did not permit submitting the petition to all practicing lawyers in the Little Rock area. There are about 300 lawyers in the district. Mr. Shults indicated that a large number had declined to sign.

Little Rock leases schools to corporation

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 29—(AP)—The Little Rock School Board executed an historic lease today, turning over the city's four high school buildings for use as private, segregated institutions.

An authoritative source said the new private schools may open tomorrow.

A short time later the U. S. Supreme Court in Washington released an opinion on a previous Little Rock case warning that "evasive schemes" could not stand up to circumvent its integration order.

In Omaha, Neb., a two-judge court heard the NAACP request that the Little Rock School Board be restrained from leasing its senior high schools for use as private schools.

EVENTS SWIRLED ABOUT the central question of whether Arkansas can effect a plan that will thwart the federal attempt to force integration or reach a final precipice beyond which further resistance to race mixing is impossible.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, advised that the lease had been signed, commented: "If we can get the schools open in the next two or three days and there are those who wish to challenge the legality of the action, the litigation could be carried out while the students are in schools.

"Since leases have been signed, if the schools are then closed it will be the NAACP or the federal government who will close them."

There was every indication that perhaps both the federal government and the NAACP would take legal steps to thwart the private, segregated school plan.

THE FOUR LEASED schools, one Negro and three white valued collectively at $6 million, will rent for "not less than $10,000 per year" according to terms of the lease.

The signing of the agreement took place before newsmen. The board president, Wayne Upton, said the board was relying on an opinion of State Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett for the legality of the act.

One clause of the lease said it would "terminate immediately and be held for naught" if it is held improper or invalid "by final judgment of a Legislature that they are not bound by our holding in the Brown case."

To do this it was necessary only to recall "some basic constitutional propositions which are settled doctrine."

WARREN SAID that Article VI makes the Constitution the supreme law of the land. Warren then referred to an 1803 decision by Chief Justice Marshall in which the latter declared that "it is emphatically the province and the duty of the judicial department to say what the law is."

This decision, said Warren, declared the basic principle that the federal judiciary is supreme in the exposition of the law of the Constitution, and that principle has ever since been respected by this court and the country as a permanent and indispensible feature of our constitutional system."

It follows, Warren declared, that the Supreme Court's decision in the Brown case "is the supreme law of the land."

Further, said Warren, Article VI of the Constitution makes the Supreme Court's decision a binding effect on the states.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE went on to declare for the high tribunal "every state legislator and executive and judicial officer is solemnly committed by oath . . ." to support the Constitution.

"No state legislator or executive or juricial officer can war against the Constitution without violating his undertaking to support it," Warren declared for the court.

The high court's marbled chamber was comfortably filled when Warren read the opinion. But it was not packed as it was when the court heard arguments in two earlier sessions, Aug. 28 and Sept. 11.

Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers and Solicitor Gen. J. Lee Rankin were seated in the section of the court chamber reserved for member of the bar of the court.

THE HIGH COURT'S opinion said it was quite true that the responsibility for public education is primarily the concern of the states.

"But it is equally true," said Warren, "that such responsibilities like all other state activity, must be exercised consistantly with federal constitutional requirements as they apply to state action."

Warren went on:

"State support of segregated schools through any arrangement, management, funds or property cannot be squared with the (14th) Amendment's command that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Today the court spelled out, to a certain degree, what it means by "deliberate speed." In effect, it sanctioned delay in some cases, provided local authorities develop good-faith plans to put integration into effect as early as possible.

"OF COURSE IN MANY locations," the court said, "obdience to the duty of desegregation would require the immediate general admission of Negro children qualified as students.

"On the other hand, a district court, after analysis of the relevant factors (which, of course, excludes hostility to racial desegregation), might conclude that justification existed for not requiring the present non-segregated admission of all qualified Negro children.

"In such circumstances, however, the (district) court should scrutinize the program of the school authorities to make sure that they had developed arrangements pointed toward the earliest practicable completion of desegregation, and had taken appropriate steps to put their program into effective operation."

CONSTITUTIONAL rights of Negro students seeking admission to Central High, said the court, "are not to be sacrificed or yielded to the violence and disorder which have followed upon the actions of the governor and Legislature."

The right of a student not to be segregated on racial grounds in state-supported schools—"is indeed so fundamental and pervasive that it is embraced in the concept of due process of law," Warren said.

Referring again to the original 1954 decision banning compulsory school segregation, Warren said: ". . . Since the first opinion, three new justices have come to the court. They are at one (agree) with the justices still on the court who participated in that basic decision as to correctness, and that decision is now unanimously reaffirmed."

THE CHIEF JUSTICE concluded the court's opinion with this declaration:

"The principles announced in that (1954) decision and the obedience of the states to them, according to the command of the Constitution, are indispensable for the portection of the freedoms guaranteed by our fundamental charter for all of us. Our constitutional ideal of equal justice under law is thus made a living truth."

Warren in referring to the three new members of the high tribunal was speaking of Justices Harlan, Brennan and Whittaker.

THE HIGH TRIBUNAL said it was accepting the findings of U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley as to conditions at Central High during the 1957-58 school year.

Lemley found that the educational progress of all students, white and colored, had suffered and "will continue to suffer if the conditions which prevailed last year are permitted to continue."

Lemley's findings, the Supreme Court said, are "to be considered in light of the fact, indisputably revealed by the record before us, that the conditions they depict are directly traceable to the actions of legislators and executive officials of the state of Arkansas . . ."

Today's opinion also recalled a Supreme Court decision some 11 years ago which said that it was desirable and important to preserve public peace, but such an aim could not be accomplished by laws or prdinances which deny rights created or protection by the U. S. constitution.

IN THE THRUSTS at Gov. Faubus and the Arkansas Legislature, Warren quoted Chief Justice Marshall in an earlier decision that, "if the legislatures of the several states, at will, annul the judgments of the courts of the United States, and destroy the rights acquired under those judgments, the constitution becomes a solemn mockery."

To this Marshall statement, Warren added for today's court:

"A governor who asserts a power to nullify a federal court order is similarly restrained."

Warren recalled too another opinion, delivered in 1932 for a unanimous court by Chief Justice Hughes.

In that opinion Hughes said that if a governor had power to nullify a federal court order "it is manifest that the fiat of a state governor, and not the Constitution of the United States, would be the supreme law of the land; that the restrictions of the federal Constitution upon the exercise of state power would be but impotent phrases."

Faubus Plan Hits New Legal Snag

Hearing Today on Plea To Halt Leasing of Little Rock Schools

From Wire Dispatches

Little Rock, Sept. 28.—Authorities labored Sunday to open Little Rock's four high schools quickly. But their efforts to begin segregated classes ran head on into a new court crisis.

The court move could result in further delay in sending students back to classes.

Action to open the schools under a private lease plan began even before final results were known in Saturday's clear-cut, 2½-to-1 referendum victory by segregation advocates.

Lease Being Negotiated

But the private-school plan will be attacked Monday morning in Omaha, Neb. There a two-judge Federal Appellate Court will hear an injunction plea seeking to stop the Little Rock School Board from leasing its properties to a private corporation.

It appeared the four schools, with their enrollment of 3,698 before transfers began, cannot open Monday because the lease is still being negotiated. But the negotiators pledged all possible speed.

"We will be working all day on this thing," said Dr. T. J. Raney, president of the corporation organized to operate the high schools as private, segregated institutions.

Details Are Numerous

A reliable source said the private-school-corporation representatives want to sign the lease before the injunction seekers can get into court Monday morning.

"I didn't realize there were so many details," Raney said. For instance, he noted, contracts have to be worked out with the teachers, whom, he supposes, the State will have to pay.

Classes originally were scheduled to begin four weeks ago. They were delayed pending court decisions and an opening date of September 15 set.

Governor Orval E. Faubus then closed them before they opened. He said he acted to prevent the same kind of violence that occurred at Central High School last fall. The Supreme Court had denied a plea that integration be delayed.

Filed by Branton

The petition for an injunction against the lease plan was filed with the Eighth United States Circuit Court of Appeals by Wiley Branton, an attorney for the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People.

His petition also asks that the court prevent any transfer of school properties without court approval. It also asked that Negroes be admitted to any private school converted from a public school if the court should approve the Little Rock lease plan.

Branton's petition easily could start a whole new round of litigation.

And during that litigation, the question of when the four schools open might remain in doubt. Faubus has said he will keep any school closed if it faces forced integration either by court order or military action.

The ballot total in Saturday's referendum was 19,470 to 7,561 in favor of maintaining segregation in schools. It was held under Faubus' program to maintain segregation unless communities vote in favor of integration.

Never Ruled on Point

Negro voters obviously made themselves felt on the integration side of the issue, but they have only about a sixth of the ballot strength of whites here. Greatest prointegration vote was in predominately Negro precincts.

The private-school operation is the next step under the Governor's program. The State plans to support the private institutions by paying students' tuition.

Faubus and many other Southerners point out that the U. S. Supreme Court has never ruled specifically that private-school segregation is unconstitutional, and they believe their plan will stand up against attack in the courts.

Others doubt that the maneuver can survive a test of its legality. This is also the official view of the U. S. Justice Department.

The intense feelings aroused by the referendum was reflected in the size of the vote—27,031. In the previous school election, on routine issues, the total was 6,738.

Little Rock Balloting Heavy on Pupil Integration Issue

Turnout Indicates Segregation Victory, View

By RELMAN MORIN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A massive vote piled up rapidly in Little Rock Saturday as the city, now a world symbol of racial strife, balloted on the question of admitting Negroes to its all-white schools.

Political observers said the heavy turnout may foreshadow a lopsided decision for segregation.

Police kept a close watch on the crowds of people lining the sidewalks, for blocks in some places, waiting to mark their ballots. Squad cars circled the blocks, rolling slowly past the queues where Negroes and whites mingled.

EARLY VOTING QUIET

Police reported no trouble during the first three hours of the voting.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, apparently unworried, left town. He went by automobile to Fayetteville, Ark., a 180-mile drive, to attend the football game between the University of Arkansas and Tulsa University.

Faubus, who made a televised last-minute appeal Friday for a vote against integration, said he would await the verdict in Fayetteville.

It was a cool, cloudless Saturday. Although the majority of people were not going to work, they turned out early. In some cases they were waiting before the polls opened at 9 a.m.

Within an hour the lines began to stretch out.

NEGROES CARRY PLACARD

At Hall High School—one of the schools closed by Faubus—a Negro family paraded with a placard, saying: "Please vote for integration to help us have equality."

They were Mr. and Mrs. James Howard and their son and daughter. The mother carried her 18-months-old son, Jimmy, in her arms. Three-year-old Wanda walked, clutching Mrs. Howard's hand.

At another polling place, in a predominantly segregationist neighborhood, people made no effort to conceal their vote.

Laughing and joking, they held the ballots against the wall, in full view of other voters, and marked "X" opposite the proposition calling for segregated schools.

There are only two propositions on the ballot: "For or Against," "integration of all the schools in the Little Rock school district."

Fire stations, schools, churches, the court house, an empty business building, and a drug store were among the 32 places where ballot boxes were waiting.

At the drug store, election officials reported a third of the qualified voters in the precinct cast ballots in the first three hours.

The so-called "Silk Stocking District" of Little Rock, site of Hall High and perhaps the major center of opposition to Faubus, had one of the heaviest turnouts in the early hours.

'UNUSUALLY HEAVY'

But from almost every polling place, the word came: "Unusually heavy" . . . "Extremely large turnout" . . . "really heavy for a school election."

The Democratic primary election, last July, brought out a record primary vote. It gave Faubus a smashing, 70 per cent victory over two highly-regarded opponents.

Faubus' plan—assuming the vote goes his way—is to have a private corporation lease the school buildings and the facilities from the school board. Then, he insists, they can be opened immediately, as private schools, without Negro students.

Faubus says that these actions may be taken next Monday, or within a few days thereafter.

"I do not get into a situation without knowing what I am doing," he said in his televised speech.

Earlier, Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas director of the NAACP, warned that "when the schools open, be it under private or public guidance, Negro children will be there."

N.A.A.C.P. Attempts To B... Little Rock Private-School Plan

U.S. Court Asked For Injunction

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 24.—The National Association for The Advancement of Colored People moved Wednesday to block Little Rock's private-school plan as scattered violence between Negroes and whites broke out in this racially tense city.

Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, Negro attorney for the N.A.A.C.P., filed a petition in United States District Court asking that the Little Rock School Board be enjoined from leasing school properties to a private corporation.

The petition asked further that such private schools, if they are opened, be required to admit Negro students under the integration plan previously in effect at Central High School.

Judge Miller To Hear Pleas

The School Board has asked the court whether it may lease its facilities to a private corporation without being held in contempt for acting against Federal Court orders to integrate Central High.

U. S. District Judge John E. Miller will hear pleas on both the School Board and the N.A.A.C.P. petitions Thursday at Fort Smith, where he has his headquarters.

There were several reported incidents of Negro-white violence in the city and its environs.

A group of 15 Negro youths and six white boys battled near a white junior-high school. Three of the whites suffered injuries. Witnesses said the Negroes hit the white boys repeatedly with cleated football shoes, and kicked one when he fell.

Man Hunt Organized

Deputy sheriffs organized a man hunt for an armed Negro youth accused of beating and choking a white woman in her residence. The youth fled to a wooded area and shortly thereafter the deputies called off their hunt because they said they knew him and would arrest him later. The incident apparently was not related to the school-integration tension.

A 14-year-old white boy, Don Weir, reported he was beaten Tuesday night by a 16-year-old Negro who also threatened him with a knife. Juvenile authorities took custody of the Negro.

A flurry of excitement developed in adjoining North Little Rock when an unidentified Negro girl accused a white boy of throwing a firecracker at her near the all-white high school.

Absentee Ballots Pour In

The city faces a new crisis three days from now when residents ballot on whether to integrate the City's schools or keep them segregated.

Absentee balloting in "unheard-of" strength in the referendum pointed up citizens' concern over the racial issue. Deputy County Clerk Vernon Noakes reported that more than 200 absentee ballots have been cast. He called this extremely heavy and "unheard of" as compared with balloting on routine school matters.

Governor Orval E. Faubus, who closed the four high schools 10 days ago, has said he would open the high schools if voters approve integration Saturday. Otherwise, he expects the School Board to lease the school properties to a private corporation for operation as segregated, private schools. The State would pay tuition to the corporation.

Faubus Blames N.A.A.C.P.

Faubus charged that the School Board petition to Miller originated with the N.A.A.C.P. He said it was prepared by Thurgood Marshall, N.A.A.C.P. legal attorney.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas N.A.A.C.P. president, retorted that this seems to be just another one of Governor Faubus' frequent flights into the world of fantasy."

A. F. House, a School Board attorney, said he and other board lawyers "prepared and filed" the petition.

The Governor said in Lexington, Ky., where he was attending the Southern Governors Conference, that he questions the motives of the School Board because it did not withhold its petition until after Saturday's referendum.

Private Classes Begin In Charlottesville

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 24 (AP)—Private classes began Wednesday for 340 white elementary-school pupils in the South's first attempt to circumvent the closing of public schools to block integration.

Parents and teachers, meanwhile, reached agreement on a plan to set up classes for 1,000 white students whose high school was closed in the integration dispute.

Two groups of parents who had been working out separate plans to educate Lane High School students announced after a meeting that they had merged.

Most of the classes for students from Venable Elementary School were being held in the basements and recreation rooms of expensive homes. Mothers took most of the children to school in automobiles.

The League of Women Voters called on local officials to ask Governor J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., to let the community operate Venable and Lane, which he closed after a Federal Court ordered the admittance of 12 Negroes to the schools.

Students Demonstrate

At Norfolk, about 200 students staged a quiet demonstration at the front entrance of Norview High School beneath a hand-lettered banner declaring "We Want Norview To Open Now."

The crowd dispersed 30 minutes later. By then 159 students had signed their names to the brief statement, "We want Norview to open now."

At the same time, a smaller group of boys standing on the walk in front of the school said they preferred private schools to integration.

The school is one of six facing a shutdown under Virginia's anti-integration laws.

New Orleans Board Asks Additional Delay

New Orleans, Sept. 24 (AP)—School Board attorneys Wednesday asked for additional delay in the Federal Court order ending segregation in the New Orleans public schools until the Louisiana Supreme Court acts on the current school statute.

The law in question is an act of the 1956 Legislature that authorized a legislative committee to classify public schools as all-white or all-Negro.

The School Board lawyers filed a motion asking Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright to reconsider his ruling declaring the 1956 State act unconstitutional.

ARKANSAS

NAACP To Ask Court To Block Private Schools

Petitions Federal Court To Halt Faubus' Proposal For Segregation

HEARING WILL BE TODAY

Governor Charges Boards' Filing For Instructions By Judge Was Prepared By Negro Organization

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 24.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Wednesday asked the Federal District Court here to block the proposed private-school plan of reopening Little Rock high schools on a segregated basis.

Wiley Branton, Pine Bluff Negro attorney representing the NAACP, filed a petition late Wednesday asking the Little Rock School Board either be enjoined from leasing the four high school buildings, or require the board to admit Negroes if the schools are reopened as private institutions.

NAACP Hearing Today, Too

Branton's petition will be heard at Fort Smith Thursday morning by Federal Judge John E. Miller along with a "petition for instructions" filed by the School Board itself Tuesday.

The School Board is asking Judge Miller to rule on the question of whether it would be in contempt of Federal Court if it turned the four high schools here over to a private corporation set up to reopen them as segregated facilities.

Judge Miller told attorneys for the School Board by telephone that he would hear their petition Thursday and probably have a ruling before Monday. Branton said he also had been promised a hearing from Judge Miller Thursday in what appeared to be a consolidation of the two cases.

The four high schools now are closed under proclamation of Gov. Orval Faubus. The district votes Saturday on whether to reopen them as integrated facilities, under a special election called by the Governor.

The Governor, attending a Southern Governors Conference the past few days in Lexington, Ky., has been quoted there as saying the schools probably will reopen next week. However, the fresh litigation brought before Judge Miller followed his statement.

The Governor was quoted in Lexington Wednesday as charging the NAACP had prepared the petition for instructions filed by the School Board Tuesday. The School Board president, Wayne Upton, promptly denied the charge here.

Calls Statement Untrue

In a heated statement handed newsmen by School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, Mr. Upton emphatically branded the Governor's "purported statement" as untrue.

He said the NAACP had no more knowledge of the board's petition than did the Governor himself, "and none of them had any advance notice."

"The board's action was taken in good faith and in what we considered to be the best interest of the children of the district. The petition was prepared and filed by the attorneys of the Little Rock School District," Mr. Upton said.

Wednesday's filing by Branton raises a new question, namely, whether Federal Courts could or would attempt to order integration under a private-school plan. Both points in his filing represent an attempt to continue the integrated classes conducted under Federal order at Central High last year.

Mr. Blossom said he planned to be at the Fort Smith hearing along with attorneys for the School Board. He said the board, if given assurance they wouldn't be held in contempt of court, would turn the schools over to a private corporation formed here about a week ago as part of Governor Faubus' integration-resistance plan.

His comment came before the latest filing by Branton and the NAACP.

Little Rock Has Violence As NAACP Makes Move

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People moved Wednesday to block Little Rock's private school plan as scattered violence between Negroes and whites broke out in this racially tense city.

Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., Negro attorney for the NAACP filed a petition in U.S. District Court asking that the Little Rock School Board be enjoined from leasing school properties to a private corporation.

The petition asked further that such private schools, if they are opened, be required to admit Negro students under the integration plan previously in effect at Central High School.

Asks Permission.

The school board has asked the court whether it may lease its facilities to a private corporation without being held in contempt.

U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller will hear pleas on both the school board and the NAACP petitions Thursday at Fort Smith, Ark.

There were three reported incidents of Negro - white violence Wednesday in the city and its environs.

A group of 15 Negro youths and six white boys battled near a white junior high school. Three of the whites suffered injuries. Witnesses said the Negros hit the white boys repeatedly with cleated athletic shoes and kicked one when he fell.

Sheriff's deputies organized a manhunt for an armed Negro youth accused of beating and choking a white woman in her residence. The youth fled to a wooded area and shortly thereafter the deputies called off their hunt because they said they knew him and would arrest him later. The incident apparently was not related to the school integration tension.

A 14-year-old white boy, Don Weir, reported he was beaten Tuesday night by a 16-year-old Negro who also threatened him with a knife. Juvenile authorities took custody of the Negro.

A flurry of exitement developed in adjoining North Little Rock when an unidentified Negro girl accused a white boy of throwing a firecracker at her near the all white high school. Officers investigated but took no action.

As tensions mounted, the city faced a new crisis three days from now when residents ballot on whether to integrate the city's schools or keep them segregated.

Absentee balloting in "unheard of" strength in the referendum pointed up citizens' concern over the racial issue.

Dep. County Clerk Vernon Noakes reported more than 200 absentee ballots cast. He called this extremely heavy and "unheard of" as compared with balloting on routine school matters.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus who closed the four high schools 10 days ago, has said he will open the high schools if voters approve integration Saturday. Otherwise, he expects the school board to lease the school properties to a private corporation for operation as segregated, private schools. The state would pay tuition to the corporation.

Already his plan is under court attack, and the U.S. Justice Department has indicated it will resist any such plan.

John E. Miller, Arkansas' only U.S. district judge at present, said he will hold a hearing Thursday at Fort Smith, Ark., on a critical question from the Little Rock School Board.

Closed 10 Days

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who closed the four high schools 10 days ago, has said he will open the high schools if a majority of registered voters approves integration Saturday. Otherwise, he expects the school board to lease the school properties to a private corporation for operation of segregated, private schools. The state would pay tuition to the corporation.

The Justice Department has indicated it will resist any such plan.

The school board yesterday asked Miller for a ruling on whether its members can lease public school property to a private corporation without facing federal contempt of court charges. The board members fear that if they follow Faubus' private school plan, they will be acting against federal court orders to integrate Central High.

Faubus charged that the school board petition to Miller originated with the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. He said it was prepared by Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief attorney.

A. F. House, a school board attorney, said he and other board lawyers "prepared and filed" the petition.

The governor said in Lexington, Ky., where he was attending the Southern Governors Conference, that he questions the motives of the school board because it did not withhold its petition until after Saturday's referendum.

"We could open the schools as private institutions and the children could be going to classes even as court litigation took place," the governor said.

"But it is evident," he added, "that the people who are screaming for schools to be opened really want them opened only as integrated schools."

L. R. Schools May Reopen Monday

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Little Rock (Ark.) high schools, closed pending a special election on integration Saturday, may reopen next week as private institutions.

Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus, confident of victory for segregationists in the referendum, told newsmen he plans to reopen the schools next Monday or as soon thereafter as possible.

He said if the Federal government blocks his plans it would be "their responsibility for keeping the schools closed longer." He made the comment at Lexington, Ky., where he is attending the Southern Governors Conference.

Under the law governing the Little Rock election, a majority of the registered voters is necessary for a decision.

But a circuit judge in Hot Springs held that a requirement calling for a majority of the registered voters was ineffective in a local option election. His ruling came in a case involving approval of a dog racing track.

Normally elections are decided by a majority of those voting. The Circuit Court ruling on the dog track election will be appealed to the Arkansas Supreme Court and its decision could affect litigation growing out of the Little Rock school election.

Negroes kept away from Van Buren, Ark., high schools two weeks ago by threats from white students, returned to classes yesterday without serious difficulty.

Eight Negroes returned to Van Buren High School and four entered the nearby junior high school. The only demonstration came from one white student who leaned from a second story window and shouted "nigger" as three students entered a side door.

U. S. District Judge John E. Miller ruled last week that Negroes could return to the Van Buren schools without a court order. He said all concerned could seek his help if further trouble arose.

In Virginia where some schools were closed after being ordered to admit Negroes, plans proceeded for setting up temporary facilities or private schools.

Two private organizations in Charlottesville began enrolling students for makeshift classes starting tomorrow.

Six Are Enrolled From Little Rock

Lausanne Draws Arkansans —None In City Schools

MORE INQUIRIES STUDIED

Six students from the high schools of Little Rock have enrolled at Lausanne School for Girls, fashionable private school at 2485 Union.

Another private school—Miss Hutchison's School at 1925 Union—reported "four or five" inquiries about admission from Little Rock students.

Some City Inquiries

E. C. Stimbert, superintendent of city schools, said no Little Rock students have been admitted in the Memphis public schools. Some inquiries, but not an unusual number, concerning admission have come from Little Rock, he said.

Spokesmen at Miss Hutchison's said that school has no boarding facilities and no Little Rock students have yet been admitted. Applications, however, are still under consideration, pending living arrangements the prospective students may work out for themselves.

Mrs. Myrtle Cobb, Lausanne's headmistress, attributed the Little Rock enrollment there directly to the segregation crisis in the Arkansas capital. First of the Little Rock applications came only two weeks ago, she said.

Besides the six from Little Rock already in classes at Lausanne, two others are being screened for admission, Mrs. Cobb said.

The six involved are Lynn Friedman, Emily Hall, Carolyn Eggleston, 12th grade; Genie Johnson, Catherine Brown, 11th grade, and Peggy Ann Reinhart, 10th grade. Four are boarding students; two are staying in private homes.

More Per Room

The influx from Arkansas has necessitated a flexibility of boarding accommodations.

"Where there were two persons to a room before, there are now three, and where there were three before, there are now four," the headmistress said.

Lausanne has 18 boarding students this year, the first year in which students have been housed at the school.

Mr. Stimbert, clarifying the city schools' situation, stressed that all Little Rock applications are considered merely non-resident applications, along with such applications from New Orleans, New York or any other non-Memphis area. He would attribute no Little Rock inquiry to the integration controversy.

He pointed out that state law rigidly limits the admission of non-resident students in Memphis city schools. In cases where non-residents are admitted, he said, a $150 tuition fee must be charged.

Col. Ross Lynn, principal of the private Memphis University School, could not be reached for confirmation of a report that some Little Rock students had been admitted there.

Greenville High School Signs Little Rock Girl

GREENVILLE, Miss., Sept. 18.—Ann Autry, former student of Hall High School in Little Rock, has been admitted as a junior at Greenville High School. Principal W. B. Thompson said she was enrolled Tuesday.

Three other applications have come from Little Rock. The principal said: "As long as we are not crowded and if the students can establish residence, we will take them."

Miss Autry is paying a non-resident fee of $22 monthly.

BLYTHEVILLE, Ark., Sept. 18.—Blytheville High School has received application for the admission of a Central High School senior from Little Rock, Supt. W. B. Nicholson said.

He added, however, the school has no room for transfer students except for a few from school districts bordering the Blytheville district.

Little Rock Citizens Group Asks Class Return

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A group of white students adopted a resolution Friday declaring they want their high school reopened even if it means admitting Negroes.

Meanwhile, a reliable source reported that the Little Rock School Board probably would resist handing over the city's four high schools to private operation.

In another development in Little Rock's turbulent integration crisis, a report circulated that Gov. Orval E. Faubus was studying the possibility of reopening Horace Mann High School for Negroes as an integrated school.

IMMEDIATE RESUMPTION

Faubus has closed all four of the city's high schools as an anti-integration measure. He acted after the U.S. Supreme Court last week decreed immediate resumption of integration at Central High at the scheduled opening of the fall term Sept. 15.

Sixty-five students enrolled at Hall High School met at a church here Friday afternoon to draw up a resolution asking that their school be reopened, "even if qualified Negro students" are admitted.

There were 731 students at Hall High, but Supt. Virgil Blossom said that 130 of them had transferred out and presumably would attend school elsewhere.

The source close to the school board said its members were concerned over the proposal to operate Little Rock's high schools on a private basis. They fear the "possibility of being in contempt of federal court" if the school system is handed over to any corporation, the source said.

Probably, the source added, the board would require a federal court order giving it authority to turn over the schools before it complied with Faubus' request Thursday night to do so.

Members of the school board could not be reached for comment.

Faubus called on the board to show its "good faith" in the current controversy by offering immediately to turn the schools over to a private corporation formed earlier this week. The board has not replied to his request.

Arnold Sikes, executive secretary to the governor, Friday night said he knew nothing about the report that Horace Mann might be reopened on an integrated basis.

The report said Faubus was considering the move in order to ease pressure on high school students and let students who didn't object to integration have a chance to resume their studies.

But Sikes said, "I know nothing about it. I have heard no discussion of that from the governor or anyone else."

GOVERNORS MEETING

Faubus was on his way to Lexington, Ky., to attend a meeting of the Southern Governors Conference.

Blossom said 80 students had transferred from Central High and none from Tech High or Horace Mann.

A spokesman for the Hall High students who met said only two of them voiced opposition to the resolution.

"We fear that our education may be impaired or unduly delayed by keeping Hall High school closed and we feel it is up to our best interest and to the best interest of the community that our school be reopened immediately as a public school even if, upon reopening, qualified Negro students of Hall High district may be assigned to classes in our school."

Young Barrier said copies will be mailed to Gov. Orval E. Faubus, Little Rock city officials and the school board.

Diane Russell, 15, a sophomore, said the feeling among students is that all want to return to school regardless of integration.

"There is no real feeling of resentment toward integration at Hall," Barrier said.

One Negro has applied for admission to Hall, and Barrier said he believed "only three live in the district."

The students met at a Presbyterian church. Barrier said there was no significance in this fact, but only that the church had offered its facilities.

Meanwhile, the battle for votes in Little Rock's impending referendum on school integration stepped up rapidly following Faubus' appeal for a smashing public ballot against admitting Negro students.

Faubus said this would clear the way for him to reopen the high schools as segregated private institutions.

A committee of 50 women, opposing the governor, was set to launch an intensive campaign. "We have grown beyond all expectations," the chairman said.

The head of the segregationist Capital Citizens Council accused the women of scheming to "hoodwink Little Rock mothers into voting for integration."

VOTE SET FRIDAY

The referendum is scheduled for Sept. 27.

On the ballot are two propositions—"for" or "against racial integration of all schools in the Little Rock school district."

In two related developments elsewhere:

Terrance Roberts, one of the Negro students who went to Central High last year under guard by paratroops, entered Los Angeles High School four days ago, his mother said.

U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller refused a petition commanding the school board of Van Buren, Ark., to restore integration at two schools.

Miller indicated he felt the order is unnecessary. The schools integrated voluntarily but Negro students have stayed away since a strike by white students.

Clarence A. Laws, regional secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negroes would return to both Van Buren schools Monday.

Faubus left for the Southern Governors' Conference in Lexington, Ky. George Douthit, of the Arkansas Democrat who is accompanying the governor, said Faubus is studying a proposal to set up private corporations and private boards for each of the four Little Rock high schools.

LSUNO Campus Quiet After Dean's Warning

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Warning

against racial outbreaks brought an atmosphere of quietness Friday on the campus of Louisiana State University in New Orleans after several days of incidents protesting Negro students.

The warning signs of "No Loitering" and "Quiet Zone" went up and Dean Homer Hitt said the situation was very quiet and L.S.U. was trying to keep it so.

As an aftermath of the flying of Ku Kluz Klan banners and the posting of signs taunting Negro students, groups of white students Friday began circulating petitions on opposing sides of the racial issue.

One petition opposed admission of Negro students—as a student spokesman for the petition put it—on the ground that racial integration "contradicts our moral ideas."

The other petition proposed that Negro students be permitted to attend classes unmolested to determine whether the system will work.

Fifty-nine Negroes are among 1,500 students attending freshman classes at the lake front college now in its first semester of operation.

Reopening Soon Seen By Faubus

By The Associated Press

Little Rock high schools, closed pending a special election on integration Saturday, may reopen next week as private institutions.

Gov. Faubus, confident of victory for segregationists, said he plans to reopen the schools next Monday or as soon thereafter as possible.

He said if the federal government blocks his plans it would be "their responsibility for keeping the schools closed longer." He made the comment at Lexington, Ky., where he is attending the Southern Governors' Conference.

SHOUTING STUDENTS

In Little Rock, an estimated 200 shouting students demonstrated on the governor's mansion lawn Monday against any integration of Central High School.

They poured out of about 40 automobiles which formed a five-block-long caravan. The cars drove down business streets and around the State Capitol building earlier.

"Two, four, six, eight, we don't want to integrate," the students chanted in pep rally style.

After the demonstration, the caravan headed back to town but broke up when one automobile struck a pedestrian, R. L. McGoodwin, 67. The victim suffered fractures of both ankles, police said.

BACKING GOVERNOR

Fred Jolly, 17, Central High senior and spokesman for the group, said, "We just wanted Gov. Faubus to know that even if some students are opposed to him, we feel that the majority of both Hall and Central students are backing him 100 per cent."

During the weekend, Don Smith, Hall High student body president, said a poll showed students in that new school would return to classes even if they are integrated.

The city's high school students viewed their first formal classes via television Monday. Initial reaction was prompt and approving.

Eight Negroes kept away from Van Buren, Ark., high schools two weeks ago by threats from white students, returned to classes Monday without serious difficulty.

The only demonstration came from one white student who leaned from a second-story window and shouted "nigger" as three students entered a side door.

In Virginia, where some schools were closed after being ordered to admit Negroes, plans proceeded for setting up temporary facilities or private schools. Two private organizations in Charlottesville began enrolling students for makeshift classes starting Wednesday.

High school children in Norfolk and Charlottesville stepped into the integration crisis Monday with pleas that their public schools be opened.

"Not as segregationists or integrationists but as students who want an education, we ask you to please keep our schools open," was the request in a petition quickly signed by 70 students at Norfolk's Northside Junior High School.

Faubus Claims Legal Plan For Segregated Schools

Private Group Would Operate Institutions

From Wire Dispatches

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 18.—Governor Orval Faubus assured the people of Little Rock Thursday night he has a "legal plan" to operate the high schools as private, segregated institutions. He exhorted them not to accept integrated schools.

"The plan is sound and workable," he said in a televised speech. "It is all legal."

He said the United States Supreme Court order may mean "the destruction of our school system, our educational processes, and the risk of disorder and violence that could result in the loss of life—perhaps yours.

Lessons To Be Televised

"This price I could not see you pay without first offering you a legal plan whereby such a catastrophe can be avoided, and still provide the opportunity of an education for our children."

The Little Rock School Board, meanwhile, decided to televise 6 hours of lessons a day to the 3,480 high school students who cannot attend regular classes because Faubus has closed the schools. Three commercial TV stations will carry the lessons.

Outlining his plan Faubus said:

1. If the people vote against integration in the special referendum September 27, the facilities of the public schools will become surplus and not needed for public-school purposes."

2. The School Board, then, would be free to lease the buildings to a private agency. "I am sure you are aware such an agency already has been organized," he said. He referred to the Little Rock Private School Corporation, organized Wednesday.

3. He called upon the City's Board of Education to offer "to a private group these unoccupied buildings after the election."

He cited, as authority for this, an Arkansas law of 1875.

'Can Have No Objection'

He said the plan is sound, workable, and legal. "To this the advocates of the so-called law of the land can have no objection," he added.

Faubus said "complete and total integration . . . will come sooner than you think" if the city votes September 27 to reopen the schools on an integrated basis, as ordered by the Supreme Court.

He said the U. S. Government cannot require a state to operate public schools, nor tell a State government how tax revenues may be spent. Then he said regarding integration:

"In all cases involving the public schools and integration, the federal courts have said only that an agency of the state cannot maintain segregated schools.

'Ruling Does Not Apply'

"This ruling does not apply in any way to private schools. Private schools are not affected by these decisions, even though the schools receive aid from State and federal sources."

A law passed by a special session of the Legislature three weeks ago provides that grants-in-aid would be given by the State to any student transferring to another public school or a private school.

Faubus placed heavy emphasis on the September 27 balloting—although lawyers say they see no legal significance in it.

He said a vote against reopening the schools on an integrated basis would clear the way for leasing the buildings to a private agency.

Integration Effects Cited

He told the people not to be weary of the struggle for relief from defiance of the Federal Government because of its great power.

"It could well be that the rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution will be taken from us by the use of billy clubs, pistol barrels, and bayonet points," he said.

"But we do not have to be parties to such methods. We can carry on the struggle in the legal and political arenas."

In an apparent reference to some clergymen, Faubus said, "For those who condemn me because I decline to forcibly integrate the public schools may I suggest that they can best demonstrate their good faith by integrating their own social and religious activities."

He pointed to reports on the effects on integration in New York and Washington.

Raney Heads Group

The reports, he said, showed that segregation has lowered the quality of the schools and, in the case of Washington, caused an exodus of white persons.

He quoted a report by a Congressional committee that disciplinary problems in "predominantly integrated schools have been described as appalling, demoralizing, intolerable, and disgraceful."

Dr. T. J. Raney, elected president of the newly formed Little Rock Private School Corporation in its first business session Thursday, said Faubus had not suggested creation of the corporation. He said its officers had not been in contact with Faubus, adding, "The Governor did not select us."

Apology Asked

In another development, a group of 50 Little Rock women organized to urge voters to cast ballots for integration as the only way to get the schools open. They said in a statement:

"Regardless of your personal convictions in the matter of school integration, and although it may be extremely distasteful for you to mark your ballot, 'For racial integration,' this is the only choice the ballot allows if the schools are to be reopened."

Five Methodist ministers called for Faubus Thursday to apologize for his recent assertion that some Presbyterian ministers and elders "have been very effectively brainwashed by left wingers and Communists." In a letter to Faubus, the Methodist ministers said the Governor's remark "distressed us greatly."

Students on Honor

Fifty Presbyterian ministers and elders, who constitute the Washburn presbytery of the church, charged Tuesday night that Faubus insulted the whole church and demanded an apology.

In a resolution they urged Faubus to countermand his order closing Little Rock schools. That resolution was before the group when Faubus accused it of being "brainwashed."

Faubus Asks Leasing of High Schools

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus called upon the Little Rock school board Thursday to lease the city's four high schools to a group that intends to reopen them as private, segregated institutions.

The school board, meanwhile, decided to televise six hours of lessons a day to the 3,460 high school students who can't attend regular classes because Faubus has closed the high schools.

Faubus openly campaigned in a television speech Thursday night for votes in favor of segregation in a referendum which is to be held Sept. 27 on the question of reopening the schools integrated or segregated.

GOOD FAITH

"I call upon the (school) board to demonstrate their good faith by immediately offering to a private group these unoccupied school buildings after the election," Faubus said.

"I say immediately after the election, because I have no doubt that the people of this school district will never voluntarily integrate their schools.

"I am confident that the vote on Sept. 27 will be against integration. I say a private group, because others will be formed."

One corporation, the Little Rock Private Schools Corporation, has already been organized and has elected officers in a plan to take over the closed schools and operate them as private, segregated schools.

UNVEILS PLAN

Faubus unveiled his long-promised plan for reopening the schools on a segregated basis and staying within the law despite a Supreme Court decision that the schools must be opened on an integrated basis.

"This plan is within the law," Faubus said. "Even the Supreme Court, in the so-called school integration cases has not ruled to the contrary. This plan is based upon our own state constitution, written and adopted in 1874, and the Arkansas statutes enacted in 1875."

He said the plan is based upon these precepts:

—"The federal government has no authority to dictate to any state to operate public schools."

—"The federal government has no authority to tell a state government for what purpose it may levy taxes or how the tax money may be expended."

—"In all cases involving the public schools and integration the federal courts have said only that an agency of the state cannot maintain segregated schools. This ruling does not apply in any way to private schools. Private schools are not affected by these decisions, even though the schools receive aid from state and federal sources."

"A bona fide private school system appears to be the only answer to the government's order to integrate at any price," Faubus said.

STUDENT FUNDS

A law passed by a special session of the Legislature three weeks ago provides that grants-in-aid, amounting to exactly what a student receives now, will be given by the state to any student transferring to another public school or a private school.

Faubus said the state has a perfect right to give grants-in-aid to students attending private schools.

"Both state funds and federal funds have been and are now being furnished to such private institutions in the form of transportation and lunch programs," he said. "Many other forms of aid are flowing to private schools from state and federal sources."

AWAIT ELECTION

The day-old Little Rock Private Schools Corp. decided at its first meeting Thursday not to make any move until after a special election Sept. 27.

The new corporation elected Dr. T. J. Raney, a physician, president. He said he is "willing and ready" to go to jail if it takes that to test the right to operate private schools to avoid integration.

School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom said students will be on the honor system to look at the televised lessons. He has not decided yet whether they will get credit for them.

REGULAR TEACHERS

Each of the three stations — KTHV, KATV and KARK-TV — gave the school board two hours of time a day.

Regular high school teachers, using film for illustration, will teach classes 30 minutes long in Engnish, mathematics, history and science.

Dr. Raney said he thinks the private schools corporation can give the students a normal year of schooling.

Furthermore, he said, he thinks the schools will be accredited, so graduates won't have any trouble getting into out-of-state colleges.

Faubus said early Thursday in a television interview (NBC) that the only way to keep the Little Rock school crisis from turning into racial conflict is to fight it out in the courts.

He said he will call out the National Guard, if necessary, to protect life and property if racial fighting starts.

"But I am not going to send troops to the high school (Central) to enforce integration and that's that," he said. "That's up to the federal courts and the federal marshals."

MARSHALS TRAIN

A hundred and fifty U.S. deputy marshals, imported for integration duty, are still training in the federal building. There is nothing for them to do until the schools open.

Faubus said that unless he changes his mind, he wouldn't send the Guard to enforce integration, even if a majority of the voters ask for it Sept. 27.

Appeals Court Slaps Down Faubus

Inquirer

ST. LOUIS, April 28 (AP).—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas today lost in the Federal Court of Appeals his fight in the Little Rock integration dispute but planned an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Philadelphia

The court censured the Governor for calling out National Guard troops to keep nine Negro children out of Central High School there last fall.

If permitted to stand, the court said, such a course could lead only to "a complete breakdown of government."

June 1-29-58

UNANIMOUS REJECTION

Faubus' appeal from a Federal District Court injunction against interference with integration at the high school was rejected unanimously by the three-judge court.

The appellate court also rejected appeals in two parallel cases in which the Federal Government's use of troops to enforce integration was challenged. Federal troops still are on duty at Little Rock.

Faubus had no comment on the decision, but his attorney, Tom Harper, of Fort Smith, Ark., said the Governor would appeal.

'TO THE VERY END'

Harper added; "From the very first we had intended to take the thing to the very end, and that's what we'll do."

In rejecting Faubus' argument that he acted only to suppress mob violence which he feared should the Negro children be admitted to the school, the Court of Appeals said:

"A rule which would permit an official whose duty it was to enforce the law to disregard the very law which it was his duty to enforce, in order to pacify a mob or suppress an insurrection, would deprive all citizens of any security in the enjoyment of their life, liberty or property."

The court held that under such a rule:

"The banks could be closed and emptied of their cash to prevent robberies, the post office locked to prevent the mails from being robbed, the citizens kept off the streets to prevent holdups . . ."

In each of the three cases, the court upheld the decisions of Federal District Judge Ronald E. Davies of North Dakota, then sitting in Little Rock.

The other appeals were brought by Mrs. Margaret Jackson and Mrs. Clyde Thomason, members of the segregationist League of Central High Mothers.

Faubus Repeats View On Troops

Says Removal Marks End Of Unwise, Illegal Invasion

DUBIOUS OF WITHDRAWAL

Appeal P. 35

From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, May 8. —Gov. Orval Faubus saw nothing to applaud Thursday in announcement by President Eisenhower in Washington that troops will be removed from Central High on May 29.

That is one day after classes end here in Central High and other public schools for the summer.

The Governor, issuing a prepared statement, departed at one point to question whether the troops actually will be withdrawn. He conceded they "probably" will be, but added that he wouldn't want "to bet any money on it."

Memphis Tenn.

Illegal Invasion

He had predicted in previous press conferences that the troops would be kept here entire school year.

The Governor charged that "students, teachers and visitors have been subject to the orders of these armed troops at all times" during the school year which will end on May 28. He described the troops being sent here as an "illegal invasion of the powers of state and local governments."

Jun. 5-9-58

President Eisenhower ordered Federal troops to Central High last September. Arriving here Sept. 25, either regular Army soldiers or Federalized National Guardsmen have been on patrol duty at the school ever since.

Camp To Be Cleared

At present, 400 Federalized Guardsmen on duty at Camp Robinson near here are used in patrol work at Central High. Questions had been raised recently as to whether they would be out in time to allow use of the camp by Arkansas Boys and Girls State in their annual sessions.

Apparently, the President's announcement cleared up that controversy, along with the question of when or if troops would be removed at all.

Boys State is scheduled to start at Camp Robinson on May 31, which would give the Federalized Guardsmen two days to be "demobilized" and clear the camp. Girls State starts June 8.

Daisy Bates Comments

Mrs. Daisy Bates, Negro head of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP, declined comment Thursday on the President's announcement. She said that for her to comment might provoke further incidents against her personally.

Governor Faubus said "The withdrawal of Federal troops from Central High School if carried out will mark the end of a tragic occurrence in the history of Arkansas and the republic of which it is a part.

Interference Deplored

"Federal troops should never have been assigned to a mission such as they have performed in Little Rock. It is hoped that never again will any national Administration embark on such an unwise and illegal invasion of the powers of state and local governments.

"I wish to point out that state and local authorities are charged with the enforcement of state laws and local ordinances. They have never been and are not now charged with enforcement of Federal laws or orders," he said.

Integration Delay Till 1961 Proposed

Little Rock School Board Amends The Petition To Court — NAACP Expected To Protest

Appeal P. 35

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, May 8.—The Little Rock School Board believes that a two-and-a-half-year "cooling off" period on the Central High integration plan is "reasonable and advisable."

The board suggested that in an amended petition filed in Federal District Court as a follow-up on orders of Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley that its "postponement" petition be clarified.

Difficult To Predict

The board is suggesting that the present integration schedule be "suspended" until January, 1961.

Memphis Tenn.

"Petitioners cannot with certainty determine how long operations under the plan should be postponed, but in the light of existing conditions mentioned and in the light of conditions as they will probably exist in the foreseeable future, they are of the opinion that a suspension of operations under the plan until January, 1961, is reasonable and advisable," the board said.

The petition is certain to be opposed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, whose attorneys are acting as counsel for the Negro children and parents involved at Central High. The NAACP already has entered a general objection to any postponement, and has 10 days to file an answer to the school board's latest pleadings.

Submitted In February

The school board in February asked for a reconsideration of the "gradual" integration plan ordered into effect by Federal Court last fall. Judge Lemley on April 28 ordered the board to amend and "clarify" its petition. He set hearings to begin on June 2.

Jun. 5-9-58

One objection the judge raised was that the board in its original pleadings had failed to specify how long it thought integration should be postponed, in the light of opposition which has occurred this school year. The board has contended unceasing segregationist opposition has made it impossible to conduct normal educational programs at the school.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom declined comment when asked Thursday why the board had asked for a suspension under which a resumption, if ordered, would fall during a mid-term. January is the mid-term period for the school term.

Other Portions Amended

The board also amended other portions of its original petition dealing with alleged failure of Federal authorities to "support" the school board in trying to carry out the integration decree.

It also again pointed out that the integration plan has created "deep-rooted and violent emotional disturbances," and again suggested that "the concept of 'all deliberate speed' as applied to the school district, should be re-examined."

DESEGREGATION— New York Times

Integration in the South "will slow to a crawl" if the decision to suspend the process in Little Rock schools is upheld by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, Dr. David G. Salten, Superintendent of Schools in Long Beach, N. Y., asserted last week. Dr. Salten, who was a witness for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in the Little Rock integration court case in June, spoke at the Yeshiva University Graduate School of Education.

Little Rock Integration Upheld in Appeals Court

Herald Tribune

ST. LOUIS, Apr. 28 (U.P.)—The United States Court of Appeals today upheld the ruling of the Federal District Court decision in favor of integration of public schools in Little Rock, Ark.

There were three cases involved in the court test and in each instance the opinion written by Appeals Judge John B. Sanborn upheld the lower court's ruling.

The court dismissed suits by Gov. Orval Faubus and others against government action to enforce integration at Central High School.

Gov. Faubus' appeal from an injunction against his use of Arkansas National Guard troops to bar Negro students from the school was rejected, as were similar actions apealed by Mrs. Clyde Thomason and Mrs. Margaret Jackson. The women are members of the pro-segregation League of Central High School Mothers.

Rulings Are Upheld

In each case, the rulings of Federal Judge Ronald Davies were upheld by the three-judge Appeals Court.

In the case brought by the Arkansas Governor, the court held the state could not lawfully use its forces to suppress a right which it is the duty of the state to defend." It continued:

"The use of troops or police for such purposes would breed violence. It would constitute an assurance to those who resort to violence to obtain their ends, that if they gathered in sufficient numbers to constitute a menace to life, the forces of law would not only not oppose them, but would actually assist them in accomplishing their objective."

Mrs. Thomason had obtained an injunction against the president of the Little Rock Board of Education preventing him from enrolling the Negro students. She had appealed from Judge Davies' decision setting the injunction aside.

Protects Judgment

Concerning conflicting decisions by state courts and Judge Davies, the court said:

"A federal court should not, when prompt action is required, be compelled to indulge in useless formalities in protecting its judgment from being emasculated by state court proceedings."

Regarding the Faubus case itself, the court's opinion stated:

"A rule which would permit an official whose duty it was to enforce the law to disregard the very law which it was his duty to enforce, in order to pacify a mob, or suppress an insurrection, would deprive all citizens of any security in the enjoyment of their life, liberty and property."

A token force of Federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen still remains on duty outside Central High School. One day last week without advance notice no Guardsmen were on duty. There were no incidents. However, there have been rumors that segregationists are bidding their time and will act against the eight Negroes when and if the Guardsmen are finally withdrawn.

ASKS STUDENT SPY SYSTEM

Little Rock NAACP Witness Warns Against Mixing Delay

Editorial

P. 8 A

Montgomery Ala 6-4-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A delay in integration here might spread like wildfire across the border states and encourage segregationists, a Syracuse University educator said Thursday in federal court.

Virgil M. Rogers, dean of the university's school of education, was the first witness for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which opposes a school board request that integration be postponed here for 2½ years.

With tighter discipline, Rogers said, Central High School "could open next fall and it would operate more orderly next fall than it would two years hence . . . to do otherwise would make the situation worse."

U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley asked Rogers whether he though the problem could be more nearly solved without federal troops.

"I don't think it would be necessary to send troops," Rogers said. "It would be necessary to have a strong police force."

Rogers, who said he is a native of South Carolina but has not lived there for 35 years, said stronger discipline, including "a student spy system," would have successfully combatted student trouble-makers at Central High the past school year.

He described the reinstatement of one segregationist student, Sammie Dean Parker, as capitulation by school officials. The Parker girl was reinstated, he said, after she aired her grievances on television and filed a lawsuit.

Under cross examination, however, he said he did not know whether the board made a mistake in reinstating the girl.

"I don't know the details," he said.

The school board rested its case Thursday with the testimony of Supt. Virgil Blossom who said he once asked a federal judge for aid of U.S. Marshals in the racial crisis here last fall and was turned down.

Blossom referred to U.S. District Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D., who formerly had jurisdiction of the case here.

Work Of Outsiders

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Trouble inside Central High School last year was instigated by "outside adult groups," a vice principal of the school declared last week.

Baltimore Md

J. O. Powell, one of nine Little Rock school officials testifying, said he believed the school year would have been "much smoother" if "the ringleaders had been removed by juvenile authorities or police action of some kind."

Sat. 6-14-58

The testimony was made at a Federal District Court hearing on a request by the Little Rock School Board to delay integration for two and one-half years.

Judge Harry J. Lemley presided.

THE REASON for seeking the delay is that Governor Faubus may be out of office by that time, Wayne Upton, board president, testified.

Faubus has said he may call out troops at the school again this year.

Mrs. G. T. Huckaby, vice principal for girls at Central High, said she had recommended suspension for the ringleaders.

In reply to a question from Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP counsel, Mrs. Huckaby said the students who caused trouble in the school "seemed to be under direction."

"I think the problem is one that will be solved only by identification and control by the courts of those people, those groups directing the trouble," she added.

* * *

ASKED BY Marshall how many times she had had reports of trouble caused by Sammie Dean Parker, a white girl who was suspended and later reinstated, Mrs. Huckaby said she didn't recall offhand.

When Marshall asked to name the ring leaders, Mrs. Huckaby replied:

"Sammie Dean Parker was the leader, I'd say."

Afro-American

IN FIGHTING the request for the delay, the NAACP maintains that school authorities have failed to take firm action against trouble makers at this school and that this has encouraged further incidents.

P. 1

Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, one of three NAACP attorneys at the hearing, asked Vice Principal Powell if the teachers had ever lost control of the situation.

6-14-58

"That has never happened," Powell said, and he added that he wished he and other administrators had done as well as the teachers in maintaining discipline.

Baltimore

Powell referred to five or ten ringleaders he described as the "tools of outside leadership."

Md.

Branton asked if the suspension of these troublemakers for the rest of the school year would have alleviated the situation.

Said Powell:

"I have a very affirmative view on that. I am convinced that if the ringleaders had been removed . . . we would have had a much smoother school year."

The NAACP contended that the Little Rock board could have obtained relief by getting an injunction restraining those causing trouble, as was done by the Hoxie School Board in the Hoxie integration crisis.

Judge Lemley said he will give the testimony thorough study before making a decision on the Little Rock School Board's request for a delay in integration.

Also at the hearing, but not participating was U. Simpson Tate, NAACP attorney.

Little Rock Heroes Cited At Abbott Award Dinner

Turn Down Coveted Citation

Defender Chicago Ill.

The parents of the nine youngsters who broke the racial barrier at Little Rock's Central high school have turned down the Spingarn award because it does not include Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP. Sat. 6-7-58

The award is presented annually by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for achievements in the field of race relations. P. 1

The disclosure of the refusal was made in Chicago Sunday as the children prepared to leave after receiving the Robert S. Abbott memorial award Thursday night.

The Abbott award, presented by the Defender on behalf of its late founder, included Mrs. Bates and A. Alex Wilson, editor of the Tri-State Defender who was assaulted by mobs in his efforts to cover the story of the integration last September.

The Abbott award was made at a brilliant dinner in the Constitution Room of the Morrison hotel attended by city leaders of all races.

Although the association has made no public announcement, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, informed Mrs. Bates by phone last week that the youngsters had been selected to receive the Spingarn award. He said the association would make the announcement this week.

However, the youngsters said they wouldn't accept the citation unless Mrs. Bates was included.

Last Tuesday after Ernest Green, the first of the pupils to graduate from the previously all-white school, received his diploma, the parents drafted a letter to Wilkins in New York stating the position of the youngsters and their concurrence in their views.

The letter signed by Ellis Thomas, chairman of the parents committee declared in part:

"We understand that the Little Rock Nine have been selected as joint recipients of the Spingarn Medal. As their parents, we are deeply appreciative of the great honor this represents and we know that the young people themselves are thrilled at the high value this places on their contribution toward the achievement of freedom.

"Yet, we and they feel that any award based on Little Rock must include Mrs. Daisy Bates. We hesitate to think what might have happened here had it not been for her. We know that her courageous and able leadership, exercised day by day, has made of her a target.

"Failure to include her with the Little Rock Nine in the Spingarn medal would be more than a personal injustice. This is particularly true since this award is given by the NAACP, the organization leading the fight in Little Rock.

"Perhaps her omission was through some oversight. In this case, it should be corrected before any damage is done. The children have told us that they will not accept the award unless Mrs. Bate is included. In this they have our full support.

"We feel that further reflection will lead them (the awards committee) to amend the award by including Mrs. Bates and we are convinced that the whole world joins us in expecting that her leadership should be recognized in this way."

L. ALEX WILSON — Editor of the Tri-State Defender, receives citation from Louis E. Martin, editor-in chief of the Chicago Defender. Wilson was cited for his heroic on-the-spot reporting of the Little Rock Central high school crisis is at great risk to persona safety and welfare. Defender staff photos by Rhoden.

WINNERS OF 12th annual Robert S. Abbott Memorial Award gather at presentation ceremonies in the Constitution room of the Morrison hotel. Recipients are the nine Negro students who led integration at Little Rock Central high school, Little Rock, Ark. Cited also was Mrs. Daisy Bates, president Arkansas chapter, NAACP. Making the presentation is John H. Sengstacke, editor and publisher, Chicago Defender and nephew of Robert S. Abbott, who founded the paper. Group includes (seated) Melba Pattillo, Minnie Jean Brown and Elizabeth Eckford. Arkansas Set to Pass Anti-Integration Bills

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 28 (AP).—The Arkansas Legislature set itself for quick final passage today of Gov. Orval Faubus' last-ditch anti-integration program.

It did so while glancing warily at the United States Supreme Court meeting at the exact time as the lawmakers.

The high court is considering the Little Rock integration case.

One Voice Protests

Only one voice rose to protest against parts of the key school-closing bill yesterday. And the dissenter, Representative Ray S. Smith, jr., a Hot Springs attorney, said he favored the bill's objectives, but did not want to give some future Governor the sweeping power in the measure.

This keystone bill called for closing any public school threatened with integration either by physical power or court orders.

Most other bills in the Faubus package aimed at supporting this measure.

The effect would be to close a public school facing forcible integration and lease it to an individual or group for operation as a private school.

The Legislature also stamped approval of a series of bills by Arkansas Attorney General Bruce Bennett, most of which aimed at curbing activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mere Formality

Final procedure for the legislation called for each house to pass the other's measures and then send them to the Governor for his signature. Passage was a mere formality since the bills were identical in both House and Senate.

Still a major topic in Little Rock was President Eisenhower's statement of yesterday in which he expressed a personal opinion that school integration should be approached more slowly.

He also said the consequences would be terrible if some States closed their schools.

The Faubus legal package actually would permit a student displaced by a closing to attend any school of his choice, including church schools.

The practical effect, should Central High be closed by the Governor, would be that the students would have no other place to go. All public and private schools in the county are overflowing. This would leave the Governor no choice except to lease Central High to a group or individual as a private school. The State would pay funds to meet the school's expenses.

10 Other Bills

In addition to the Faubus bills, the Legislature passed the following 10 bills which would:

1. Require a loyalty oath of school teachers and officials which would have them spell out the organizations to which they belong.

2. Provide certain changes in the school taxes which would give some assistance to school districts.

3. Allow recall of school board members if 15 per cent of a district's voters petition for a recall election.

4. Withdraw the power of certain types of organizations to act as attorneys for individuals (aimed at the NAACP).

5. Prevent a so-called public sitdown in public schools by Negroes to avert the kind of campaign carried out in Oklahoma City during the past few days. It would prohibit unauthorized persons from entering school premises.

6. Require organizations aiming to interfere with State control of public schools to submit a list of members and other information to country clerks (aimed at the NAACP).

Easier Legal Processes

7. Make easier the legal processes required for search of the records of organizations by the attorney general's office (aimed at the NAACP).

8. Strengthen the State's anti-barratry laws—making it illegal to solicit lawsuits or to cause acts of violence directed specifically toward causing a lawsuit (aimed at the NAACP).

9. Appropriate $19,200 for the attorney general's office for additional financial aid in integration suits.

10. Prevent any organization other than legal aid societies from representing a client in a lawsuit without cost to the individual (aimed at the NAACP).

Meanwhile, five of the seven Negro students expected to seek entry to Central High this fall returned by plane from Washington. They had been entertained for a week in Washington and New York and each was presented with a scholarship by a Negro fraternal group.

School Supt. Virgil Blossom said earlier he will tell the Negroes that their records have been sent to all-Negro Horace Mann High School. Earlier this week he refused to enter three other Negroes in white high schools.

The tenn-agers were accompanied by Mrs. L. C. Bates, State president of the NAACP. She declined comment on recent integration developments.

Little Rock Will Televise Lessons To 3,480 Students

By PRESTON McGRAW

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — The school board decided Thursday to televise six hours of lessons a day to 3,480 Little Rock High School students who can't attend regular classes because Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed their schools in the integration crisis.

Three commercial television stations, which will donate the time, may get some classes started by Saturday. The full television instruction program will begin Monday.

Faubus scheduled a television speech Thursday night 9 p. m. e. d. t. to discuss his plan for reopening the city's four high schools and try to head off "open-the-schools" movements.

The day-old Little Rock private schools corporation, which proposes to lease the four high schools and reopen them as private, segregated institutions decided at its first meeting not to make any move until after a special election Sept. 27.

The new corporation elected Dr. T. J. Raney, a physician, president. He said he is "willing and ready" to go to jail if it takes that to test the right to operate private schools to avoid integration.

VIEW ON HONOR SYSTEM

School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom said students will be on the honor system to look at the televised lessons. He has not decided yet whether they will get credit for them.

Each of the three stations — KTHV, KATV and KARK-TV — gave the school board two hours of time a day.

Regular high school teachers, using film for illustration, will teach classes 30 minutes long in english, mathematics, history and science.

Dr. Raney said he things the private schools corporation can give the students a normal year of schooling.

Furthermore, he said, he thinks the schools will be accredited, so graduatees won't have any trouble getting into out-of-state colleges "We assume that if the schools were to open with the same facilities, the same teachers and the same curriculum, the question of accreditation would be automatic," Raney said.

TURNS ASIDE QUESTION

He turned aside a direct question as to whether the corporation intends to reopen the schools as segregated institutions.

"Our basis is segregation," he said. "We would be dependent upon the election."

He meant the special election which Faubus has called for Sept. 27 so the voters of the Little Rock school district can decide whether they wanted the schools reopened segregated or integrated.

If they were opened integrated, there would be no need of a corporation to turn them into private schools, since all the Supreme Court has ordered them to do as public schools is accept Negroes.

Faubus said early Thursday in a television interview NBC that the only way to keep the Little Rock school crisis from turning into racial conflict is to fight it out in the courts.

He said he will call out the National Guard, if necessary, to protect life and property if racial fighting starts.

NO TROOPS FOR CENTRAL

"But I am not going to send troops to the high school Central to enforce integration and that's that," he said. "That's up to the federal courts and the federal marshals."

A hundred and fifty U. S. deputy marshals, imported for integration duty, are still training in the federal building. There is nothing for them to do until the schools open.

Faubus said that unless he changes his mind, he wouldn't send the Guard to enforce integration, even if a majority of the voters ask for it Sept. 27.

He refused to say whether the private schools corporation was his idea, but members of it said he had nothing to do with it. Dr. Raney said the corporation can go to Faubus for counsel whenever it wants.

Faubus said he is leaving Friday for the Southern governors' conference in Lexington, Ky.

He said that if any of the other Southern governors ask him he will say that in closing schools to avoid integration, Arkansas and Virginia are not in conflict with the Supreme Court.

TV Classes Ready at Little Rock

High school students in Little Rock, Ark., begin a full week of classes via television Monday while their parents debate how they will vote in a special referendum on whether schools should be integrated.

The Little Rock School Board is going ahead with a makeshift program of education by television after a trial run Saturday. The three commercial stations are donating two hours each day to the programs.

In Virginia, six schools in the Norfolk area moved nearer the position of having their doors locked by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., as he has already done to three schools in other sections.

A student leader at Hall High—one of four closed because of court-ordered integration at Little Rock—said a telephone poll revealed that more than 500 students want the schools opened with or without integration.

The segregationist Mothers League of Central High School at Little Rock is circulating petitions during the weekend aimed at removing four members of the city school board.

The six Norfolk schools appear headed for closure under Virginia's law to close schools automatically where integration is ordered.

The school board there has appealed to Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals to stay an integration order at the schools. He has turned down two similar requests.

6 Virginia Schools Ready For Closing To Avoid Integration

High school students in Little Rock, Ark., begin a full week of classes via television Monday while their parents debate how they will vote in a special referendum on whether schools should be integrated.

The Little Rock School Board is going ahead with a makeshift program of education by television after a trial run Saturday. The three commercial stations are donating two hours each day to the programs.

In Virginia, six schools in the Norfolk area moved nearer the position of having their doors locked by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., as he has already done to three schools in other sections.

A group of 61 Little Rock lawyers are advertising in Monday morning papers that they believe public schools cannot be legally operated as private, segregated institutions.

TELEPHONE POLL

A student leader at Hall High—one of four closed by court-ordered integration at Little Rock—said a telephone poll revealed that more than 500 students want the schools opened with or without integration.

Federal authorities, meanwhile, appeared to be taking a wait-and-see attitude toward the explosive situation. A government spokesman commented in Washington that "we are under no pressures in this connection...Local school closures have aroused parents who want to see their children in school."

Gov. Orval E. Faubus has called a special referendum for next Saturday to permit voters of the Little Rock school district to ballot on whether they want integrated schools.

PETITIONS CIRCLATED

The segregationist Mothers League of Central High School at Little Rock is circulating petitions during the weekend aimed at removing four members of the city school board. Mrs. Margaret Jackson, league president, said many people feel the four "are not doing the will of the majority of the people."

The six Norfolk schools appear headed for closure under Virginia's law to close schools automatically where integration is ordered.

The school board there has appealed to Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals to stay an integration order at the schools. He has turned down two similar requests.

Norfolk's secondary schools were scheduled to open Monday along with the elementary schools. But the school board postponed the opening of six white and three Negro high schools pending the higher court's ruling.

61 LAWYERS LABEL FAUBUS BID ILLEGAL

61 Lawyers Label Faubus Bid Illegal

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20 (UPI)—Sixty-one lawyers signed a statement today saying that Gov. Orval E. Faubus' plan to reopen Little Rock's closed high schools is not constitutional. They urged the people to vote for integrated schools in a special election next Saturday.

The lawyers' statement was made public as Little Rock's high schools opened a classes-by-TV project and the segregationist Central High Mothers League circulated a petition for an election to recall four members of the school board.

The lawyers made these points in their statement:

"It is our opinion that existing public school facilities of the district cannot be legally operated with any public funds for segregated pupils in school and, consequently, that the real issue before the voters of this district on Sept. 27 will be whether we shall open our schools under the (Supreme) Court-approved plan of limited integration or close them altogether.

Harsh Alternatives"

"A limited integrated school system pursuant to court orders is distasteful to many in our group, but the alternative of no public school system is even more distasteful.

"We do not believe that the existing circumstances justify destroying one of the finest public school systems in the nation.

"We regret that the alternatives are harsh, but, nevertheless, as attorneys and citizens, we feel compelled to take our stand for public education.

"We urge our fellow citizens in the Little Rock School District to face frankly the hard alternatives and to join with us in an effort to preserve free public education in our city."

It was denied that the Pulaski County (Little Rock) Bar Assn. is behind the statement, which is being circulated for more signatures.

"It started in one of the law offices and was passed around over town," a lawyer said. One of the lawyers said it is a statement of opinion, not a petition, and will not be sent to Faubus.

TV Classes

Today's television classes were all filmed. They lasted one hour. When the program gets going in earnest Monday, students will get a total of six hours' live and filmed instruction, beginning with senior trigonometry at 7 a.m.

The mothers' league claimed it has about 50 women out getting signatures on the recall election petition. The league takes the stand that four members of the school board are "dedicated integrationists," and can't be trusted by anti-integrationists to fight for segregated schools in face of the U.S. Supreme Court integration decision.

GOVERNOR FAUBUS
MAY OPEN SCHOOLS

INTEGRATION PUT ON AGENDA

Faubus Says Schools To Reopen Next Week

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus said Monday he expects to reopen high schools in Little Rock next Monday, possibly on the basis of a vote on the question of admitting Negroes.

The Arkansas governor made the statement at the Southern Governors Conference.

He has proposed a plan for operating the schools as private institutions.

"We don't anticipate any legal difficulty," said Faubus, but there could be litigation brought by the federal government if they want to tie everything up and keep the schools closed further, that will be their responsibility."

FIRST ORDER

Florida's Gov. LeRoy Collins brought the integration controversy squarely before the governors in a speech suggesting that it become "the first order of business" of Congress next January.

As things are going, Collins said, the dispute could lead to a "national catastrophe." He did not elaborate on the nature of such a calamity.

Faubus closed four Little Rock schools when the U.S. Supreme Court refused to grant a 30-month delay for integrating them.

The referendum, required under state law, will be held Saturday to determine whether Little Rock citizens prefer to reopen the schools on a private, segregated basis.

Faubus said the question of who will operate the schools will depend on how the vote comes out.

"Tragically I see little hope for pulling out of this crisis—short of national catastrophe—if we continue to follow the present pattern of events," Collins said at the opening business session.

"Too much time already has elapsed to warrant any further delay in extricating the nation from the desegregation dilemma," he said.

VARYING ACTION

His speech, focusing attention on integration although it was not on the agenda, drew varying reactions from other governors.

Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland said "It is realistic to place the primary dependence for obedience to the law on local school boards.

"We do not need an act of Congress to spell out for us what the decision of the Supreme Court has made so clear—that a citizen is a citizen," McKeldin said.

Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia said he has prepared a resolution that will counter one McKeldin said he would place before the conference. McKeldin has said his resolution would call for support of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, or in effect, integration.

At a press conference earlier Griffin said his proposal would put the conference on record to protect the government "of the several states against all federal encroachment."

"The people of Georgia are resolute in this matter," Griffin added.

ON LOCAL LEVEL

Gov. Price Daniel of Texas said integration should be carried out at the local level. He said more than 100 school districts in Texas have integrated without incident because "local boards thought it should be done . . ."

The host governor, A. B. Chandler of Kentucky, said integration is a national issue that should be dealt with now, without delay.

"It's just like any other sickness," said Chandler, "the longer you let it run, it becomes chronic and the patient may die before he gets the proper medicine."

Collins said he could not, as chairman of the conference, conscientiously bypass the "overriding issue before the South and the nation."

He said the nation "is facing the most severe constitutional and social crisis since the dark days of Reconstruction following the Civil War.

"Racial hatred is exploding in public school classrooms and and outside school buildings."

An estimated 200 shouting students demonstrated on the lawn of the governor's mansion against integrating Central High. They poured out of a five-block long caravan of about 40 cars and chanted: "Two, four, six, eight. We don't want to integrate."

Then they headed back to town but broke up when one of the automobiles struck a pedestrian and broke both his ankles.

In Virginia where some schools were closed after being ordered to admit Negroes, plans proceeded for setting up temporary facilities or private schools. Two private organizations in Charlottesville began enrolling students for makeshift classes starting Wednesday. A Norfolk group, planning private education for 10,000 white children if schools are closed there, conferred Monday with Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr.

Segregationist leaders called a strategy conference Monday after eight Negroes re-entered Van Buren High School amid only minor demonstrations by white students.

NO INDICATION

Officers of the Van Buren Citizens Council would give no indication of what would be considered at the meeting except to say that integration matters would be discussed.

Last Friday U.S. Dist. Judge John E. Miller refused to issue a court order in connection with the earlier disturbances, but indicated he might reconsider in event of further disorders.

No incidents were reported last term, the first for Van Burean as an integrated school.

Under the law governing the Little Rock election, a majority of the registered voters is necessary for a decision. But a circuit judge in Hot Springs held that a requirement calling for a majority of the registered voters was ineffective in a local option election. His ruling came in a case involving approval of a dog racing track.

Normally elections are decided by a majority of those voting. The circuit court ruling on the dog track election will be appealed to the Arkansas Supreme Court and its decision could affect litigation growing out of the Little Rock school election.

Little Rock mothers seek board ouster

News & Birmingham
Sun. 9-21-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20 (AP)—A group of mothers Saturday circulated petitions aimed at throwing four of the five Little Rock School Board members out of office.

Meanwhile, the school system started television classes for the 3700 students of the city's four high schools which closed last Monday.

The Central High Mothers' League, headed by Mrs. Margaret Jackson, circulated 100 identical petitions.

Mrs. Jackson said the league aims at 10,000 signatures by Monday. No one is certain of the voting strength of the school district, but best estimates of the necessary signatures are less than 6500.

TV rentals boom in Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20 — (AP) — Television set rentals boomed here Saturday as the school board substituted TV classes for school sessions. Sales of sets were disappointing, however.

Against majority

MRS. JACKSON SAID, "A great many people feel that these four members (named in the petition) are not doing the will of the majority of the people and they should be replaced."

The board and Gov. Orval E. Faubus often have clashed.

Only board member not a target of the petition is Dr. Dale Alford. A sixth board member, Henry Rath, resigned last week when the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that Central High could not delay integration.

A reliable source Saturday night said the board would resist turning over the four high schools to private corporations for operation, as provided in the state's segregation plan.

Ammunition

THUS THE MOTHERS League obviously is preparing ammunition to use should the school board balk.

If the board members are ousted, the county board of education will name successors.

The administration in Washington, meanwhile, has settled down to a waiting policy in the Southern school crisis, confident that the resisting areas sooner or later must choose between making a start on integrating Negroes or doing without public schools entirely.

This view is firmly held. Official Washington believes the federal government, backed by a unanimous Supreme Court, occupies an impregnable legal position.

Sun. 9-21-58

Untested ground

ON THE OTHER hand, the highest legal authorities here feel that those who continue to seek means for circumventing the court's orders are treading on new and untested ground which could give way under them at any time, and which will give way eventually.

That is why the government, as has now become apparent, plans no immediate move in either Arkansas or Virginia, where Govs. Orval Faubus and J. Lindsay Almond have closed schools which were under direct federal court orders to make a start on taking in Negro children.

Though it is "school days as usual" for most Virginia children, about 2700 are locked out of the three schools.

Six to close

THIS NUMBER will balloon to 12,700 within a week, almost certainly. Six big Norfolk high and junior high schools will be ordered closed if Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals refuses a stay of the Norfolk school desegregation order. He has turned down two similar requests.

Already 300 white high school students in Norfolk have asked for transfers to schools outside the city, or have indicated they will transfer. Principals at the three white senior highs said attempts to escape the effect of school closing reflected a growing restiveness among parents.

Some Norfolk students plan to attend nearby high schools, either on a tuition basis or as residents. Others expect to live with relatives in distant places, within or outside of Virginia.

Seniors worried

PARTICULARLY concerned are seniors who must pass college board exams this year and meet other college entrance requirements.

Twenty-one Norfolk secondary school students have enrolled at Hampton schools since Thursday. Two have enrolled in Newport News and six more are expected to sign up Monday. More than 65 children are attending schools in adjoining South Norfolk

About 60 students at the closed down Lane High in Charlottesville have registerd at high schools in nearby localities.

UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY

USIS Worried By Little Rock

Post & Times Herald

By William McGaffin
Chicago Daily

"One of the toughest jobs we have is explaining the trouble we're having in this country over integration."

The man who said this is a spokesman for the United States Information Agency. As he spoke, he rifled through a series of sample comments sparked by the Little Rock crisis last year.

The worst impact of the case was felt in the Far East, peopled by colored races who retain bitter memories of white colonialism.

Ban 8-24-58

If the segregationists in Arkansas and Virginia need any reminder of the effect they have to the United States position abroad, they should read some of these comments.

And they should take a look, too, at some of the lies and distortions Moscow is pouring out in the never-ending cold war against the United States

Moscow Broadcast

"Racial discrimination is an integral part of U. S. policy," said Moscow Radio in a recent Persian language broadcast.

In June, when a court decision postponed integration in Little Rock for 2½ years, Moscow broadcast this to Indonesia.

Washington

"Faubus now has in the United States thousands of friends and supporters who make all-out efforts to prevent Negroes and other colored races from having equal rights with white people."

A couple of days ago, in a broadcast beamed to South Asia, Moscow charged that "uncurbed racism is openly protected by the authorities."

When the Little Rock episode broke a year ago, it provoked a uniform reaction throughout the Far East.

"Unless the American spokesmen in Asia can rise equal to the task of explaining the acts of their few but violent countrymen, their continued stay in this part of the world is useless," said a Manila Chron[illegible]

Tokyo Comment

"It is inevitable that the case will become a difficult political problem, and the colored nations may no longer respect and trust the United States," said the Tokyo Shimbun.

A warning that race violence and injustices weaken the United States voice in defense of freedom and democracy was sounded by the Rangoon Nation.

"Constant entanglement with the segregation problem has become the main cause of suspicion and antagonism of colored people all over the world toward American democracy and the American way of life," said the Seoul Han-Kook Ilbo.

"Asians and Africans suffering from traumatic scars left by colonial memories react violently to such incidents, and suddenly all patient good will garnered by the American foreign service, ICA and USIS, is dissipated in a matter of minutes," observed the Indonesian Times.

New Crises

Now the United States is on the verge of fresh integration crises, and if they come they are bound to cause more adverse reaction among the colored nations of the world who are being so ardently wooed by the Russian and Chinese Communists.

What can the USIA do about it?

"Well, for one thing we don't just wait for crises to develop," said the USIA spokesman.

Then he told how the agency is constantly sending out information material aimed at building up in the world's press a better understanding of the United States.

And in anticipation of another Little Rock, the USIA is now sending to its offices all over the world material to be released when the crisis breaks.

Broader Problem

This, said the spokesman, will emphasize the broader scope of the problem and the "steady progress of the American Negro toward equality."

High Court Delays Ruling; Sept. 11 Session Is Called

Hagerty Says Ike Approved U.S. Argument

By FRED S. HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The highly charged Little Rock school integration issue hung suspended today after a Supreme Court decision to delay a showdowns for at least two weeks.

After hearing more than three hours of arguments in extraordinary session yesterday, the nine justices went behind closed doors and decided to hold another hearing Sept. 11.

At that time, the high court will consider the basic question of whether there should be a 2½-year delay in resuming racial mixing of pupils at Little Rock's Central High School.

Ranged on one side of the dispute were Thurgood Marshall, Negro counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and J. Lee Rankin, mild-mannered solicitor general of the United States.

On the other side was Richard C. Butler, gray-haired lawyer for the Little Rock school board who made his points in a slow Arkansas drawl.

Marshall, opposing any delay in readmitting seven Negro pupils to the school, said the courts must not give ground before that kind of violence.

DON'T CLOSE BANKS

"You don't close the banks," he told the justices. "You put the robbers in jail."

But Butler warned "there would be troops back in Little Rock to maintain law and order unless public school desegregation is delayed."

Butler said an immediate start on integration would ruin the public schools in Arkansas as surely "as if you planted bombs under each school building and lighted the fuses one by one."

At another point, Butler brought up Eisenhower's new conference statement Wednesday about favoring a slower pace in integration efforts.

"That is exactly the position the Little Rock school board is taking," Butler said.

However, the Justice Department's Rankin fought the idea of delay, saying the Little Rock school board had failed to seek either court action or the help of local law enforcement agencies to thwart troublemakers at Central High.

CONFLICT SEEN

"It seems to me we are now at the crossroads," Rankin said.

"The American people are entitled to a definitive statement by the Supreme Court as to whether force and violence are grounds for going backward a step."

Rankin's flat opposition to delay at Little Rock appeared to conflict with Eisenhower's general remark about a slower approach to integration. But White House press secretary James C. Hagerty said there was no divergence of views. Hagerty said Eisenhower specifically approved the Justice Department argument in advance.

Marshall and Butler differed sharply on whether the Negro pupils would suffer if they were not allowed into Central High.

Butler said they "would not be deprived of anything tangible" because they could return to a Negro school.

But Marshall contended that denial of immediate integration would destroy the constitutional rights of Negro children and be even "more destructive of democratic government."

After Butler appealed for patience and forbearance, Chief Justice Warren said he believes every member of the high court recognizes "the very great problems" presented by the Little Rock case.

Faubus has said he will not call the Legislature into session until he calls for them. He said he hadn't decided when this would be.

First, the governor said, he must decide whether to sign a joint legislative resolution extending the special session until Jan. 10—two days before the start of the regular biennial term of the Legislature.

Faubus said he would make this decision today.

The legislators agreed to go home at noon today but, with Faubus' consent they will be on a standby basis. Technically the special session will be in recess and subject to recall at a moment's notice.

If the Legislature delivered the anti-integration bills to Faubus, he would have to sign them in five days or they would die. However, as Faubus pointed out, the bills could retained by the secretaries of the House and Senate until Jan. 10—the actual end of the special session if it is extended. That would give him until Jan. 15 to act.

Among other things the anti-integration mesaures call for closing a school faced with federally ordered integration. Such a school could be leased as a private corporation and students' tuition would be paid for them.

At a news conference, Faubus declined comment on developments in the Little Rock case during yesterday's Supreme Court session.

He indicated that he would be in no hurry to sign the anti-integration measures until he thought he needed them.

"It's a matter of strategy," he said.

At the opening of the special legislative session Tuesday there was a concerted effort to speed action on the bills in both houses so Faubus would have them on his desk in time for an expected Supreme Court ruling yesterday on the Little Rock case.

Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and the Little Rock school board appeared before the Supreme Court.

The NAACP seeks to have a stay of a federal court integration order set aside while the school board wants a postponement of integration.

Little Rock Seen As GOP Handicap

McKeldin, Griffin Agree During Radio Debate

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—Republican Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland and Democratic Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia predicted Wednesday night that the Little Rock school integration issue will hurt the Republican Party in the elections this year and in 1960.

The two Governors debated the school integration question on a national radio network.

Governor McKeldin, who nominated President Eisenhower at the GOP Convention in 1952, said the Little Rock situation "alienated lots of whites in the South and did not gain Negro votes in the North." He said, "It will have a bad effect for the Republicans" in the elections.

"I agree with Governor McKeldin," Governor Griffin said. "It will have some repercussions . . . it seems to me that the Democrats in the North and East are going to lick the Republicans so badly, they won't have much left to do, and they will meddle in our business and pressure for minority groups to control the Government."

Asked if he believed the Little Rock situation would be repeated in other states, Governor McKeldin said: "No, I do not think so. A great many people in the South are faithful and loyal and recognize . . . it can't be done all at once. We must begin slowly . . . in every state in the South."

Governor Griffin said the Little Rock situation would not be repeated in his state and added that if forced integration could be brought to Georgia, "the children of Georgia would go to private schools."

"If the elite guard of paratroopers comes to Georgia," he said, "it can hitch up its fancy trousers and walk up and down in front of empty schools."

Ike's 'go slow' remark adds to GOP woes

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30—(AP)—President Eisenhower apparently has added to the burden of Republican congressional candidates in 10 critical states with his go-slower views on racial integration.

Northern Democrats already have begun to picture Eisenhower as reluctant to cooperate in the fight on segregation because of his news conference remark Wednesday that he might have told friends privately he felt there ought to be slower integration in the schools.

These Democrats can be expected to give wide circulation in critical campaign areas such as New York, Michigan and California to the assertion of Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that Eisenhower's statement was "incredible."

IN THESE AND other states where the Negro vote is regarded as important, if not actually critical, Eisenhower's statement is likely to be cited as indicating the Republican top command is only going through the motions on the integration issue.

In meeting this charge, Republican candidates thus far have only what many of them regard as an unsatisfactory explanation by White House Press Sec. James C. Hagerty. Hagerty insisted there is no divergence between the president's opinion and the Justice Department's action in the Little Rock case in the Supreme Court.

SOME REPUBLICANS obviously had hoped that Hagerty would explain the timing and circumstances of what they believed might have been only an offhand remark by the president.

In the absence of any such explanation, however, they lacked fresh ammunition to counter Democrat charges that the head of their party—with whom they are presumed to agree at least in principle—is dragging his feet on the integration issue.

THE REPUBLICANS, of course, could cite Eisenhower's action in sending federal troops into Little Rock last year. But the president has insisted he acted then to uphold a court order and he has declined to commit himself on the Supreme Court's original school integration opinion.

Unless there are further developments this situation could make all - out support of the president by GOP candidates something of a liability in California, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Missouri.

'Go-Slow' Statement By Ike Adds To GOP Political Woes

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Eisenhower apparently has added to the burden of Republican congressional candidates in 10 critical states with his go-slower views on racial integration.

Unless there are further developments this situation could make all-out support of the President by GOP candidates something of a liability in California, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Missouri. In New York, for instance, Rep. Kenneth B. Keating, the GOP senatorial nominee, is being billed as an all-out integrationist.

In these states, where the potential Negro vote is heavy, 11 Senate and 193 House seats will be filled in the November election. Ten of the Senate seats and a majority of the House posts now are held by Republicans.

There have been reports Eisenhower may campaign personally in some of these states. Unless his position on the integration issue is clarified, some Republicans believe his effectiveness for their ticket may be diminished.

Paul M. Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, issued a statement accusing the President of seriously undermining efforts at peaceful integration by what Butler called an unwise news conference remark.

"By acknowledging publicly that he favored a slower pace toward school integration," Butler said, "President Eisenhower has clearly indicated he will exert no moral leadership on this important national problem, thus undermining respect for the Supreme Court decision.

"Such lack of leadership from the highest office in the land can only serve to encourage lawless forces to defy the law at the same time that it seriously undermines those who are trying to peacefully carry it out."

Statement By Eisenhower On His Integration Stand

Q. Mr. President, can you say whether the Justice Department will accept the Supreme Court's invitation, and participate in the school integration arguments before the court tomorrow; and, secondly, will any Justice Department brief reflect your personal views on this issue?

The President: I think it is a little bit more of an invitation when such an incident occurs. The attorney general is an officer of the court, as well as the attorney general for the United States: and when he is invited to file a brief, it is really a command, and I think there are no exceptions to that custom.

Now, my own convictions were expressed succinctly, I think, last week when I gave you a written one, and I am sure of this: That in the general case there is no chance that there will be great divergences in between what the attorney general expresses and what I believe. That couldn't over the long run, of course, occur.

Q. Mr. President, could you tell us what you think of the various state bills to close the schools . . . in the integration situation?

The President: Well, I would say this . . .

This, of course, would be a very terrible outcome, but I would think this: There would be a very great deal of litigation that would follow any such action.

I believe if schools were closed, there would be great pressure to open them under whatever conditions the inhabitants believed would be best, and I think there would be a whole basketful of litigation that would take place.

So, I don't want to make more than that, that one generalization, because no school yet that I know of has been closed.

Q.—Mr. President, Arlington, Va., looks like it will have to close its schools in the integration crisis and, at any rate, the state money is going to be cut off. They may let the counties run the schools on their own.

The Federal Government contributes money to the support of the schools there because of the great number of Federal workers in the area.

I was wondering if you would favor increasing, in case they do, the counties are left to run the schools, increasing the Federal contribution to bring it up to its current budget level?

Rock case before the Supreme Court, to support the district judge's original order?

The President: No, I don't think that I would instruct them to argue one way or the other. I think the fact is that, as lawyers, as an officer of the court, they have to voice their honest convictions.

What I do say is this: If there becomes manifest, and this is just a generality in governmental procedure and organization, if there becomes and develop great differences between the President and any branch of Government, why, there is only—the President has only one recourse, and that is very obvious.

So I would assume that any decision would certainly—I mean any brief would try to reflect the views that all of us, so far as I know, have held from the beginning.

Ike Prefers Slower Integration, He Says On Eve of Showdown

N.A.A.C.P. Labels Remarks Incredible; He Denies Saying He Wishes Ruling Not Given

By ROBERT L. RIGGS

Washington, Aug. 27.—With another showdown on school segregation due before the Supreme Court in 24 hours, President Eisenhower Wednesday let himself be put in a position of expressing opposition to efforts to speed up integration.

Associated Press Wirephoto

RAY S. SMITH, JR.
Lone voter against Faubus

He conceded to his press conference that he may have said, in private conversations, that the change should be made more slowly. But he denied published reports that he had said he wished the Supreme Court had not rendered its integration decision.

In spite of his denial, his concession about expressing a desire for a slower pace toward integration and his continued refusal to make a public statement of his personal views on the 1954 decision brought praise from the strongest supporters of continued segregation.

'Seven Haven't Moved'

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, called the President's remarks incredible.

"It seems incredible that the President, with all the channels of information available to him, should have concluded 4½ years after the (Supreme Court's original) decision that the pace should be slower," Wilkins said.

"There are seven states which have not made a single move toward integration."

The President's apparently unintentional and even unwilling interposition into the conflict came at a time when the issue was being joined on three fronts.

Arkansas Taking Action

As the President was speaking to reporters, the Arkansas Legislature was approving the program of Governor Orval E. Faubus to close any Arkansas public school to which a Negro pupil is admitted.

At the moment of his conference, the Justice Department was preparing a brief it will present to the Supreme Court Thursday when that body meets in extraordinary session to decide whether Negroes must again be admitted to Central High School in Little Rock.

Also at the time of his utterance apparently aligning himself with segregationists, federal judges in three Virginia cities were on the verge of ordering a showdown next week with that State's "massive-resistance" laws against school integration.

Under Steady Criticism

In Los Angeles, Attorney General Rogers said each state has a solemn duty not to impede the desegregation decrees of federal courts. He addressed the American Bar Association.

Rogers also said, "There is no state, granting the will, which cannot maintain law and order and at the same time permit a final decree of a court to be carried out."

During the week since his last press conference the President had been under steady criticism for his view that, although it is his duty to uphold the court's decision, it would be wrong for him to say whether he personally approves or disapproves it.

In spite of that criticism, the President steadfastly rejected a half a dozen efforts at Wednesday's news session to get from him his own views about the integration decision.

He had already rejected four opportunities to say how he feels about the question when a reporter read him an excerpt from the current issue of the magazine, Newsweek, which said:

"Here is what Ike wouldn't say at his news conference about his personal views on school integration. He wishes the Supreme Court had never handed down its decision. He also thinks integration should proceed more slowly. That is what he has told friends in private."

The reporter then asked the President if the story was correct.

Eisenhower's reply was:

"No, that story is not correct. But the story is this:

"I have said here I think that I would never give an opinion about my conviction about the Supreme Court decisions because such a statement would have to indicate either approval or disapproval, and that I was never going to do it about any of their decisions.

Shunts Aside Question

"Now, with respect to the other one, it might have been that I said something about 'slower,' but I do believe that we should—because I do say, as I did yesterday or last week, we have got to have reason and education and a lot of other developments that go hand in hand in this process—if this process is going to have any real acceptance in the United States."

So determined had the President been not to reveal his own views about integration that he had, earlier in the conference, avoided an effort to get him to say whether the Justice Department brief will reflect his personal views.

He shunted aside a question seeking his views on State laws, such as Virginia has and Arkansas is enacting, to close public schools threatened by integration. So far, he said, no schools are closed.

Another Futile Effort

"This, of course, would be a very terrible outcome," the President said, "but I would think this: there would a very great deal of litigation that would follow any such action. I believe if the schools were closed there would be great pressure to open them under whatever conditions the inhabitants believed would be best, and I think there would be a whole basketful of litigation that would take place.

"So, I don't want to make more than that, that one generalization, because no school yet that I know of has been closed."

In another futile effort to wring an opinion from the President, a reporter brought up the question of federal funds that go to schools in the Washington suburbs of Arlington, Va. The question was whether such federal contribution might be increased if Richmond cut off State funds because of integration.

Another Vain Attempt

The President said it would be unfair treatment to other parts of the country to increase the contribution to one area just because of unusual "political" situations.

In a final and vain attempt to get a specific opinion about integration, a reporter, following up the President's concession that he might have said something to friends favoring a slower pace, asked if he would advise the Justice Department to argue before the court for a delay in the Little Rock case and ask the court to support the district judge in his decision that Little Rock should have a breathing spell of more than two years.

Criticized by Columnist

The President replied he would not instruct the Department to argue one way or the other.

"I think that as lawyers, as an officer of the court, they have to voice their honest convictions," he said.

The President's determined aloofness from the strife over the court and its integration decision has caused several critics to compare him to President Buchanan, who kept hands off the secession struggle while the South moved out of the Union.

Although Eisenhower is reported not to read columnists, the men around him are especially sensitive to the judgments uttered by Walter Lippmann, who wrote:

"The integration of the public schools of the Deep South poses the most difficult internal problem which has appeared in this century, and the President's conception of his role in dealing with this problem is so abstract, so generalized, and so unrealistic that he will not even say whether he believes in the principle which he has used federal troops to enforce.

'Weird View of Office'

"Mr. Eisenhower's reason for refusing to say what he thinks of the law he is sworn to enforce is that he 'could disagree very violently with a decision', but that if he so expressed himself his duty to enforce the decision 'would be much more difficult to carry out.'

"This is a weird view of his own office. If, in fact, he disagrees with the decision of the court, his duty is not only to enforce that decision, but also to propose a constitutional amendment which will correct the decision he disagrees with.

"The notion that the President has no duty to deal with the substance of a great national problem would have horrified all of his predecessors, all at least since Buchanan."

Church Council Urges Leadership by Ike

New York, Aug. 27 (AP)—The National Council of Churches disclosed Wednesday that it has sent a telegram to President Eisenhower urging him to exert "moral and spiritual leadership" in the Little Rock school-integration conflict.

The message asked him to authorize the United States Attorney General to participate in arguments before the U. S. Supreme Court Thursday, in the interest of getting a stay of integration at Little Rock's Central High School "vacated promptly."

Arkansas Vote Is 94-1 For School-Closing Bill

Segregation Measures May Be Ready For Faubus To Sign Into Law by Noon

By CLAUDE SITTON
© New York Times News Service

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 27.—The Arkansas Legislature Wednesday shouted its approval of measures proposed by Governor Orval E. Faubus to close any school forcibly integrated by a federal court.

Only one dissenting vote was cast against the key bill of the antidesegregation package introduced only Tuesday in both houses by Administration leaders.

It appeared likely that legislators would complete action on the program Thursday in time for the Governor to sign it into law by noon.

This would confront the Supreme Court with an overwhelming expression of opposition to racial desegregation when the court is deciding whether to order Little Rock education officials to readmit seven Negroes to Central High.

Sails Through Senate

The key bill in the Governor's program, one giving him sweeping powers to close any integrated school where violence had occurred or was threatened, passed the House, 94 to 1. It sailed through the Senate, 33 to 0.

The State Senate approved the package of bills, 33 to 0.

In the House, Representative Ray Smith of Hot Springs, an area with no serious Negro problem, was the only man to oppose the school-closing measure. The vote was 94 to 1.

The emergency session's action came after an urgent plea from the Governor Tuesday. He said he feared a repetition of last year's violence at Central High if integration were continued.

Faubus, in a press conference, expressed gratification over the legislators' action. He said that, coupled with his overwhelming victory in the July 29 Democratic primary, "The vote of the Legislature should give some indication to everyone here and elsewhere how the people feel."

Asked whether he agreed with President Eisenhower's statement to a news conference that the speed of school desegregation possibly should be reduced, he replied:

"If the President believes that the pace of integration should be slowed down until means can be worked out to accomplish it peacefully, then I am in agreement with that."

In reference to Eisenhower's remark that it would be terrible if schools were closed as a result of the integration dispute, Faubus said he hoped that this would not be necessary.

The Governor then cited his speech of Tuesday to a joint legislative session in which he said, "If the courts regard integration as paramount to all other considerations, regardless of disorder or bloodshed that may occur, I cannot subscribe to those extreme views."

Besides empowering a governor to shut down an integrated school because of violence or the use of federal force, the bill

Signals Were Mixed On School Question

SOMETIMES, HOWEVER, the signals get crossed.

At last Wednesday's press conference, the President said he wouldn't express an opinion as to whether the Supreme Court's integration decision was right or wrong.

But, at the same time, the President's Attorney General was urging the American Bar Association in Los Angeles to support it as law and as moral right.

The President believes that integration should proceed more slowly because, as he said: "We have got to

Dwight D. Eisenhower
... relies on advisers

have reason and sense and education and a lot of other developments that go hand in hand . . . if this process is going to have any real acceptance in the United States."

The attorney general's opinion is that the desegregation decision is the law of the land "for today and tomorrow, and for the future."

But even here the conflict may be more apparent than real. The administration, as Attorney General Rogers knows, is committed to support the Supreme Court's position on integration.

Mr. Eisenhower was expressing his personal philosophy that, whether it be prohibition or integration, laws do not get enforced just because they are laws.

Legally, Mr. Rogers' position is unassailable. Realistically, the President knows that integration will not flourish in the South until the people are ready for it.

Ike Refuses To Say Whether He Favors Integration But Appeals For Obedience Of All

By MARVIN L. ARROWSMITH

WASHINGTON (AP)— President Eisenhower said today all Americans have a solemn obligation to comply with federal court orders in the school integration controversy.

In a prepared statement at a news conference the President also said every state has a responsibility to support and obey such orders.

"Every American must understand," Eisenhower said, "that if an individual community or state is going successfully and continuously to defy the courts, then there is anarchy."

Without referring specifically to the explosive situation in Little Rock, Ark., or to other potential trouble areas, Eisenhower left no doubt his appeal was directed to those regions.

His comment came against the background of a federal appellate court's decision earlier this week that integration must be resumed in Little Rock. That decision set aside a federal court ruling in favor of a 2½ year delay.

In response to questions, Eisenhower refused to say whether he favors school integration.

He told newsmen that any expression on that issue would be wrong and would make his job more difficult with respect to his sworn duty to enfroce the law.

After declining to express a view on the merits of the integration controversy, Eisenhower said in his statement:

"This case, however, or any person's agreement or disagreement with its outcome, must not be confused with the solemn duty that all Americans have to comply with the final orders of the court."

Eisenhower then spoke of the responsibility and obligation of the individual states to suppress unlawful forces.

Speaking further regarding a state's obligation, Eisenhower said:

"It cannot by action or deliberate failure to act permit violence to frustrate the preservation of individual rights as determined by a court decree."

Without specifically saying so Eisenhower indicated that under new but similar circumstances he would take the same course he followed in sending troops to Little Rock last September.

"There can be no equivocation," Eisenhower said, "as to the responsibility of the federal government in such an event. My feelings are exactly as they were a year ago."

Eisenhower recalled he had said at that time:

"The very basis of our individual freedoms rests upon the certainty that the President and the executive branch of government will support and insure the carrying out of the decisions of thefederal courts."

Judge stalls integration—

NAACP starts quick appeal in L. R. delay

Birmingham News

Birmingham, Ala.

BY CLIFTON WELLS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 21—(AP)—U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley Saturday granted Central High School a breathing spell from racial integration "in the public interest, including the interest of both Negro and white students."

The veteran Arkansas jurist granted a school board request for a 2½-year suspension of its gradual plan for public school dessegregation.

Under Lemley's ruling, the seven Negro students still enrolled at Central at the end of the past school year would be barred from the 2000-pupil high school this September.

In New York, spokesmen for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said an appeal would be filed promptly.

NAACP files notice

WILEY BRANTON of Pine Bluff, attorney for the NAACP, shortly before noon Saturday filed notice of appeal here and asked in a motion Lemley grant a stay of execution of his order until the appeal is heard in higher court.

Branton said that if Lemley refused to stay the order, the motion could be taken all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The appeal would be heard in the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

Faubus' statement

GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS, whose National Guardsmen last September turned away Negroes seeking to enroll in Central commented:

"The Negro citizens of the community would do well to accept Saturday's ruling, which will do much to re-establish the normal and friendly relations which prevailed here before . . . This is not a final settlement of this problem, but it can prove a peaceful interlude."

The School Board last Feb. 28 asked Federal District Court to suspend integration at Central High School until mid-semester 1961 on grounds incidents and tensions stemming from the presence of the Negro students had adversely affected the educational process.

The board said it could see no improvement in the situation if the Negroes were permitted to return this Fall.

The 74-year-old Lemley heard the case here June 3-5.

Not yielding to force

LEMLEY SAID the granting of the board's petition did not constitute a yielding to unlawful force or violence, but was simply an exercise of equitable discretion and good judgment so as to allow a breathing spell in Little Rock and preserve educational standards.

His decision was another chapter in the Little Rock crisis which began last September when, on the eve of the first year of integration at Central High School, Gov. Faubus surrounded the school with National Guardsmen.

On his orders, the state troops turned back nine Negro students who attempted to enroll at Central under a federal court order approving a plan for gradual integration.

Although the Negro students entered the school under police proctection Sept. 23, they were withdrawn the same day because of rioting outside.

Eisenhower acts

PRESIDENT Eisenhower the following day federalized the Arkansas National Guards—removing the troops from command of the Arkansas governor—and ordered combat troops of the 101st Airborne Division at Ft. Campbell, Ky., to Little Rock to enforce the court order for integration.

Federalized National Guardsmen remained at Central to protect the Negroes throughout the school year.

Lemley found that the racial incidents plus the presence of troops was a disturbing influence and created "situation of tension and unrest among the school administration, the classroom teachers, the pupils, the latter's parents.'

Little Rock opposed

"THE SOURCE of trouble,' he said, "was the deep seated popular opposition in Little Rock to the principle of integration."

Of the Negroes who enrolled at Central last September, Minniejean Brown was expelled and Ernest Green became the school's first Negro graduate May 29.

Minnijean entered the private, interracial New Lincoln School in New York City under a scholarship. Ernest plans to continue his education at Michigan State University, also under scholarship.

Both Judges Lemley and Davies were assigned here temporarily to fill a vacancy on the bench of the Eastern District of Arkansas. Lemley's home court room is in Texarkana, Ark.

The Hope judge's opinion was received by mail in the district clerk's office here this morning.

Federal court rules permit NAACP lawyers 30 days to file notice here of appeal from Lemley's decision. The appeal would be taken to the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

Pleasure, caution

MEMBERS of the school board met Lemley's decision with pleasure, segregationists with caution.

Wayne Upton, board president, said "I feel we made a strong case and I am well pleased with the results of the hearing."

Amis Guthridge of Little Rock, attorney for the Capital Citizens Council, said "we are highly pleased, of course, but the people must not be optimistic too early and let their guard down."

"I am grateful for the two and a half year delay," said Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the pro-segregation Mother's League of Central High. "I hope that the U. S. Supreme Court may reverse its decision in that period."

School Door Not Closed, Lawyer Says

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — An attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People declared Saturday that the federal decision which granted a suspension of integration at Central High School "doesn't mean the matter is flatly settled."

He said there was a chance that Negro students would return to the school in September.

Wiley Branton, Pine Bluff, Ark. Negro attorney who filed a notice of appeal from the ruling by U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley and asked for a stay of the jurist's decision, reviewed the current legal aspects of the case.

He said that after Lemley hears his motion for a stay Monday morning, "we may learn whether the Negro students return to Central High this fall."

In addition to filing his notice of appeal, Branton filed a motion for "supersedeas," a legal term equivalent to a stay of execution.

"This motion, if granted, would stay the judge's own order pending a decision on the case on its merits by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals," Branton explained.

He said he didn't think the circuit court could take up the appeal from Lemley's suspension ruling before Fall because summer recess would intervene.

"If Judge Lemley grants my motion for supersedeas," Branton said, "everything remains the same pending action on the appeal."

What if Lemley rejects the motion for supersedeas?

"In that case," said Branton, "we could present the motion to the 8th Circuit Court whether or not it is in recess, and they could act on it separately from the appeal, even during the court vacation."

And if the appellate court at St. Louis upheld a possible overruling of the motion for supersedeas, Branton said, it could then be presented to the U. S. Supreme Court.

"So you see today's action doesn't mean the matter is finally settled," Branton told a newsman.

"If either Judge Lemley or a higher court granted the motion for supersedeas while the appeal is pending," Branton added, "the integration situation would remain unchanged until the appeal is disposed of. That means the kids could re-enter Central High until the issue was finally decided.

Mixers Appeal But Clock May Thwart Ruling

By United Press International

Leaders of integration forces moved today for a prompt appeal of the court decision suspending mixed-racial classes in Little Rock Ark., for two and a half years.

Thurgood Marshall, general counsel of the NAACP, said in New York that the ruling today by Federal Judge Harry Lemley definitely would be appealed.

But observers in Washington doubted that the case could reach the Supreme Court and be decided before classes resume in September.

In the first place, there was nothing to indicate the Supreme Court would accept a direct appeal bypassing the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Since it delegated enforcement of its integration decress to district federal courts in 1955, the Supreme Court has taken no action itself involving details of integration in individual schools.

RECESS UNTIL OCTOBER

It is believed the court hopes to adjourn around June 30 until the first Monday in October. That leaves little time for any appeal to get before the high court here.

Marshall told United Press International that a notice of appeal would be filed with the court either today or Monday. He said the legal procedure involved will be to file an application for a supersedeas, which if granted would suspend operation of Lemley's order pending appeal.

A prediction of the appeal had come earlier from Roy Wilkins, executive vice president of the NAACP, who called the Little Rock decision a "disappointment".

Segregation spokesmen had praise for the decision.

Courier Sat. 8-16-58

ST. LOUIS (ANP)—A hint that the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeal may reverse the June 21 ruling by Judge Lemley, postponing integration at Little Rock's Central High School, was indicated last week as the court heard arguments in the case on an appeal by the NAACP.

The NAACP, acting for Negro parents in the case, wants the seven-member court to reverse Judge Lemley because his ruling, if left to stand, would be seized upon by segregationists throughout the South as a means of delaying school integration indefinitely. The NAACP called the ruling "an invitation to violence."

Judge Lemley

Judge Lemley, a veteran Southern jurist who lives on a plantation at Hope, Ark., in postponing the integration for 30 months, said it was designed to "provide a peaceful interlude."

However, one of the judges questioned the wisdom of the postponement. Judge Martin C. Matthews of St. Louis, upon hearing a contention by Atty. A. F. House for the Little Rock School Board, that the Federal Government failed to support the board, asked:

"What is your answer then? Do you surrender to violence? What is there in the record to indicate the people will be different in two and a half years?"

House then made another plea. He said the board was without power to enforce integration. His argument was immediately challenged by Thurgood Marshall, special NAACP counsel.

■

MARSHALL SAID he knows the board faces difficulties but that "democracy is a tough job and integration in any community is not easy."

He contended that if Lemley's decision were allowed to stand, segregationists would feel that "if they commit overt acts like arson or bombing, they will be successful."

Atty. Wiley A. Branton, Pine Bluff, Ark., raised another question. Saying that Negroes in Arkansas have been on "a desert of constitutional rights for some time and are now thirsty for freedom," he accused the school board of failing to take disciplinary action. He said there were 10 ringleaders among the white students who caused trouble at the school "but not a single one was expelled."

Meanwhile, segregationists, no doubt convinced that intimdation is effective in the light of Judge Lemley's ruling, decided to attack the appeals court. Robert C. Tucker, clerk of the court, reported that crank letters continued to pour into the circuit court as the hearing progressed. The letters, always bitter and frequently vicious, were addressed to the court and to the individual jurists.

However, the appeals bench did not appear to be concerned about them. They were even reluctant to discuss the letters.

A decision is expected to be handed down within a few days, because the fall school term is rapidly approaching opening day.

Little Rock Plans To Ask Delay by Supreme Court

Conference With Faubus Is Sought

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The Little Rock School Board announced Tuesday night that it will ask the U.S. Supreme Court to stay an appellate court ruling which overturned a lower court's decision to delay integration here for 2½ years.

Supt. of Schools Virgil Blossom said the request probably will be made Wednesday.

Blossom also said after a closed meeting that the school board is willing to meet with Gov. Orval Faubus to discuss a number of possibilities of resisting integration at Central High School.

Blossom said he would attempt Wednesday to set up a meeting of the board and the governor.

PRESSURE ON BOARD

Earlier Faubus put pressure on the school board to tell him whether it would make a real battle against integration and hinted that his own undisclosed plans hinged on board action.

Blossom and four members of the six-man school board, plus two attorneys, held a 1½-hour meeting.

After the meeting, Blossom read this statement to newsmen:

"Until the mandate of the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals (the court which overturned the integration delay order), is handed down, the Lemley decision is still in effect."

JUNE 21 ORDER

(Blossom referred to the June 21 order of U.S. Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., which granted the school board's petition for a suspension of integration until January, 1961).

"The school board's lawyers have been instructed to request a stay of the Eighth Circuit Court's order.

"The lawyers have been instructed to request a writ of certiorari from the Supreme Court.

"The board also has expressed its willingness to meet with the governor to discuss the possibilities he mentioned in Tuesday's press conference."

Faubus also had demanded to know what the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People would do Sept. 2 when classes resume.

At the press conference referred to by Blossom, Faubus asked:

"Will Negroes be admitted to Central High School on opening day? If so, how many? If not, when will this be done? If only those previously enrolled are admitted, when will the number be raised to 90 or 900, the latter figure being the number eligible to attend Central High School under the complete integration plan?"

He said if the board intends to continue to promote integration of Little Rock schools, the people are entitled to know. "Schools belong to the people, not the school board," he said.

The renewed crisis grew out of a decision announced Monday by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis in which that court overturned a lower court's decision to let Little Rock delay integration for 2½ years.

The decision was generally disappointing to most Arkansas officials and a majority of the public. Even moderates had suggested a cooling off period would be good for the state.

The initial integration at Central High last fall was resisted by Faubus with National Guard troops until a federal court ordered him to cease interference. Nine Negroes then entered the 2,000-pupil high school and riots resulted. President Eisenhower sent federal troops to Little Rock to back up the court' integration order. Eight of the Negroes remained the entire term and one of them, Ernest Green, graduated.

Blossom said there were no new applications from Negroes for this term. When school ended last June the seven undergraduates said they expected to return.

What is the present status of the integration order?

There was no ready answer One legal source said a mandate must come from the appeals court to the U. S. Dist.ict Court in Arkansas directing it to do certain things. Until the mandate is received—it usually takes about three weeks after a decision is announced—nothing is official, the source said. That raised the question of whether school might begin with the 2½-year delay still in force.

Another possibility was raised by school board counsel: That the appellate court reversal might be stayed until the U. S. Supreme Court rules upon it.
all-white school on Sept. 2.

In Chicago, Thurgood Marshall, New York attorney for the NAACP, said "The way I look at it, it is no change at all. Things are now back where they were before. We are working on the theory that the school board and the people of Arkansas will have a decent respect for the law."

Legislative Session Answers Mix Order

Jackson News
Jackson, Mississippi
Sec. 8-19-58

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Resumption of integration at Little Rock's Central High School was ordered Monday by the 8th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus promptly moved to fight it, possibly through a special legislative session.

The court, in a 6-1 decision, set aside a ruling of U. S. Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., which would have provided a 2½-year "breathing spell" after a tense year of troop-enforced integration at the school.

At Little Rock, Faubus met behind closed doors with advisers. He had nothing to say publicly, but talk of a special legislative session mounted.

P. 1

An administration source said Faubus probably would have the state legislators in Little Rock by a week from Wednesday.

The appeals court decision came just 16 days before school is scheduled to reopen at Central High.

Litle Rock School Supt. Virgil Blossom said the school board would make an all-out fight to prevent seven Negro students from re-entering Central.

But an attorney for the school board, Richard C. Butler, said he did not know whether an appeal could be considered by the U.S. Supreme Court before the Sept. 2 opening of school. The high court is in recess until Oct. 6.

In Congress, Southerners bitterly attacked the decision.

"It is rather tragic that the Circuit Court of Appeals has wholly disregarded the welfare of both races and the will of the people. . . ." said Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark).

Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-SC) said it appeared that "judicial tyranny in this country is running rampant over local self-government."

Among supporters of civil rights, Sen. Clifford Case (R-NJ) said he hoped Little Rock citizens would actively support authorities in carrying out integration. Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif) said the decision "points up more than ever the need for the President to announce to the country what his policy is going to be on enforcing the law of the land in Little Rock and everywhere else."

The board could ask the court to stay its order pending review by the Supreme Court. If the stay is granted, Judge Lemley's order would continue in force after the start of the school term.

'MOB RULE CITED'

Writing for the majority, Judge Marion C. Matthes of St. Louis said the issue narrowed down to whether public resistance, including mob violence, was sufficient cause to nullify a federal court order directing the school board to carry out its plan for gradual integration of the Little Rock schools.

"We say the time has not yet come in these United States when an order of a federal court must be whittled away, watered down or shamefully withdrawn in the face of violent and unlawful acts . . ." Judge Matthes rote.

Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner of Huron, S. D., was the only dissenter. He said the school board had acted in good faith and that Judge Lemley's decision suspending integration had been based "on realities and conditions, rather than theories."

Judge Matthes emphasized the importance of the decision on integration of Southern schools. Allowing Lemley's order to stand, he said, would mean an open invitation for other school districts to resort to violence.

Judge Lemley suspended the integration plan last June 21. It was at the request of the school board. Blossom, a key witness, testified that it was impossible to conduct normal classes because of incidents.

Faubus called out the National Guard at the start of school to keep the nine Negro students from attending classes. They had been selected to begin what the school

GIs May Go to Arkansas Before Quitting Lebanon

Atlanta Constitution

By JAMES RESTON
(Copyright 1958 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—The administration was in the unhappy state Tuesday of having to contemplate putting the federal troops back into Little Rock before it had figured how to get them out of Lebanon.

Officials here were saying nothing publicly about Monday's Court of Appeals decision reinstating the public school integration program in the Arkansas capital, but privately they were saying that law and order would be maintained one way or another.

It was, they insisted, the duty of the authorities on the spot to maintain order so that the school integration decision of the Supreme Court could be carried out. But, they added, if the enforcement authorities in Arkansas would not maintain order, the federal government would be obliged to do so.

CLEAR IN ADVANCE

By making this clear in advance, the administration hoped to persuade all concerned in Arkansas, Virginia and elsewhere not to assume that the federal government would allow violence to obstruct the entrance of Negro students into the schools.

Washington does not want to threaten or provide the local authorities with references to the federal troops. In fact, it would prefer to use the injunction method against agitators or enlist deputy marshals of the federal courts rather than soldiers to maintain order. But it wants to make its principle clear, namely, that failure to maintain order at the local level will inevitably bring swift federal action.

In contrast with this position, the White House was extremely cautious as to saying anything about what President Eisenhower would do to deter or put down violence.

NO COMMENT

As of Wednesday, the indications were that the President would have no comment on Monday's Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals decision. To do so, officials here said, might prejudice further legal action on the case which is expected to be sent to the Supreme Court.

The President was under considerable pressure from supporters of the Supreme Court integration decision and from many moderates in the South to speak out forcefully, not only in favor of law and order, but in favor of the principle of public school integration itself.

Board Files Integration Stay Appeal

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Little Rock school board announced Wednesday night it has petitioned the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals to stay its order which would continue integration at Central High School.

Supt. Virgil Blossom made the announcement after a meeting with Gov. Orval Faubus which lasted nearly two hours.

(See Related Story, Page 4C)

Faubus said he had a "very friendly and amicable meeting" with Blossom and three school board members. He earlier challenged the board to take quick action on preventing continued integration.

Earlier, the governor clashed again with President Eisenhower. He assailed the President's integration statement and declared that if the President expected him to use military forces against Arkansas school districts, "then I must say that my position of last fall is unchanged."

DECLINES STATEMENT

At a tension-filled press conference after the meeting, Faubus declined to say whether he plans to call a special session of the Arkansas Legislature to deal with school integration or whether he has any other plans afoot.

The governor-school board conference was expected to trigger a decision on a special session.

Supt. of Schools Virgil Blossom flanked Faubus at a news conference after the meeting and announced that the board has petitioned the U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis for a stay of its integration ruling issued Monday.

Blossom said of the meeting with Faubus that "we further agreed to explore every legal angle available to the school board with reference to sustaining Judge Lemley's decision" postponing integration here for 2½ years. He referred to U.S. Dist. Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope, Ark., who issued the integration delay order June 21 on petition of the school board.

Asked if the meeting triggered a decision to call or not call a special legislative session, the governor said: "If and when I reach a decision it will be announced."

Asked his views on a telegram from the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People demanding that he use state force to continue integration, Faubus said he had not yet read the telegram and added: "I have very seldom, if ever, been in agreement with the NAACP."

A newsman asked if he and the board reached "a meeting of minds" on any points. Faubus replied: "I haven't said so and haven't said no."

Little Rock Board Maps Stay Action

School Officials Willing To Meet Faubus On Issue

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The Little Rock School Board announced Tuesday night that it will ask the U.S. Supreme Court to stay an appellate court ruling which overturned a lower court's decision to delay integration here for 2½ years.

CERTIORARI WRIT

"The lawyers have been instructed to request a writ of certiorari from the Supreme Court.

"The board also has expressed its willingness to meet with the governor to discuss the possibilities he mentioned in Tuesday's press conference."

Faubus also had demanded to know what the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People would do Sept. 2 when classes resume.

He said if the board intends to continue to promote integration of Little Rock schools, the people are entitled to know. "Schools belong to the people, not the school board," he said.

Supt. of Schools Virgil Blossom, at odds with Faubus during the Central High crisis of last fall, replied that the board would be called into special session within two days to make its plans. "I think the school board is doing everything it can do now," he said. "We made our statement and we meant it."

He referred to his statement Monday that the board would use every legal means to win a delay in integration.

Faubus threw the next move in to the board's lap with his public demand that it makes its plans known.

The renewed crisis grew out of a decision announced Monday by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis in which that court overturned a lower court's decision to let Little Rock delay integration for 2½ years.

Faubus also challenged the NAACP to say what its position will be regarding the new term of school.

LISTEN TO PLAN

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP, said "When the school board calls us we will listen to their plan; then we will decide what to do."

She declined to say whether integration of other Little Rock schools would be sought.

What is the present status of the integration order?

There was no ready answer. One legal source said a mandate must come from the appeals court to the U. S. District Court in Arkansas directing it to do certain things. Until the mandate is received—it usually take about three weeks after a decision is announced—nothing is official, the source said. That raised the question of whether school might begin with the 2½-year delay still in force.

Another possibility was raised by school board counsel: That the appellate court reversal might be stayed until the U. S. Supreme Court ruled upon it. That too presumably would leave the Negro students outside the previously all-white school on Sept. 2.

DECENT RESPECT

In Chicago, Thurgood Marshall, New York attorney for the NAACP said "The way I look at it, it is no change at all. Things are now back where they were before. We are working on the theory that the school board and the people of Arkansas will have a decent respect for the law."

Faubus did not disclose what action he or the Legislature might take if the school board failed to win a delay or if the Negroes refused to stay away voluntarily, which he suggested would be the simplest course of all.

He would not comment on the possibility of closing schools to thwart integration nor discuss possible legislation deigned to keep Negroes out of white schools. He would not speculate on whether he would again use the Guard or whether the President might again send troops.

New Attempt Likely By Negroes In Dallas

DALLAS, Tex. (AP)—Integration minded Negroes will make a fresh assault on Dallas' segregated schools this fall, an attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People indicated Tuesday.

W. J. Durham, who handled the original suits here for integration forces, said the ruling Monday by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals acted as a catalyst.

"It most probably will open new legal moves to get Negroes into the present all - white schools," he said.

Meanwhile, U. Simpson Tate, Dallas NAACP spokesman said that "My first impulse is one of extreme gratification, when asked to comment on the circuit court's 6-1 decision.

The circuit court in effect ordered Little Rock's schools integrated this fall instead of abiding by a 2½-year cooling off period ordered by a district court.

Durham said he probably would have more to say later about plans of Dallas Negroes for integration.

If Durham's predictions hold true, it would be another crisis for the Dallas board of education.

Little Rock School Body To Seek Stay

Lemley Decision Could Be Kept In Effect

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 19.—School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom said Tuesday that the Little Rock School Board would seek a last-ditch stay of an order keeping integration in effect at Central High School.

After a 2½-hour School Board meeting, Blossom outlined four steps the School Board will take to cope with the new integration crisis:

1. "Until a mandate of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals decision is received, the Lemley decision (postponing integration at the school for 2½ years) is in effect.

Action Due at Once

2. "Our lawyers have been instructed to ask a stay of the decision of the Eighth Circuit Court and a stay will be requested immediately.

3. "Our lawyers have been instructed to request from the United States Supreme Court a writ of certiorari (review), and

4. "We will express a willingness to meet with the Governor to discuss the integration situation."

Blossom would not elaborate. He did not say to what court the request for a stay of the appeals court ruling would be made.

Earlier Tuesday, Governor Faubus said he would not intervene immediately in the crisis. He said school officials, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People leaders, and Negro parents should first try to settle the issue peacefully.

He said any action he or the Legislature might take before this was attempted "might prove to be premature and unnecessary."

Lemley Is Reversed

A mandate from the appeals court decision might not arrive for as long as 20 days, and school starts here September 2.

Nine Negroes integrated Central High School last September after President Eisenhower had sent in 1,000 troops to protect them from mobs of segregationists.

But last June 21 U. S. District Judge Harry Lemley granted Central a 2½-year suspension of integration because of continued violence by white students inside the school through the 1957-58 term.

The eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis reversed Judge Lemley Monday. Faubus said Tuesday that this was "most regrettable."

"The higher court's decision indicates an indifference and disregard for the will of the people that is most alarming and dangerous," he said.

Faubus outlined three alternatives to action by himself and the Legislature:

1. The School Board can invoke the school-assignment law, under which a student is allowed to change schools if he doesn't like the school nearest him.

Conferences Proposed

2. The School Board can meet with parents of the Negroes who attended Central last year and with N.A.A.C.P. leaders. He said the board could discuss with the Negroes what an insistence on integration might bring about, and the Negroes might withdraw the students from Central.

3. "Failing in the above, the School Board could resign . . . and allow the people to select a new board which would have the courage to act in conformity with their wishes."

Faubus had been expected to call an immediate special session of the Legislature to draft anti-integration legislation, but he decided against it in a long conference with his advisers.

He read a long statement, containing his thoughts and suggestions on the situation, at a news conference and then told newsmen he hoped a special session would not be necessary.

60 Attend News Parley

Sixty reporters and photographers, many just arrived from Northern and Eastern newspapers, attended the conference. One man asked whether his statement was an appeal to modaertion.

"I think that's possible," Faubus replied.

He said he had not set an "actual date" for his stepping into the crisis if the School Board and Negro leaders do not act.

He refused to discuss whether he would call out the National Guard again, thus making himself liable to citation for contempt of Federal Court.

Faubus used the State Militia for 18 days last September to keep the Negroes out of Central. He withdrew the troops only after an injunction from a U. S. district judge. The injunction is still valid.

Has Said Might Call Guard

While Faubus was campaigning for a third term in July he promised he would call out the Guard again if he thought it necessary. He was re-elected by the biggest majority in Arkansas history.

He was asked Tuesday whether he had worked up any legislation in case he finally has to call a special session.

"Sir, I was once a Boy Scout and naturally my motto is "Be Prepared,' " he said.

He noted that the N.A.A.C.P. and the School Board have not announced how many Negroes will attend Central this year or whether other white schools will be integrated.

More Might Enroll

"Why all the secrecy surrounding these developments?" he asked. "The School Board must surely realize the dire implications of any forcible integration of the schools at this time."

Of the nine Negroes who integrated Central last year, seven are still enrolled. One was graduated and another expelled.

L. C. Bates, a publisher and husband of the state N.A.A.C.P. leader, said he expected "considerably more" Negroes than seven want to attend Central this year.

White House Silent On Ike Speech Plans

Washington, Aug. 19 (AP)—The White House today declined to say whether President Eisenhower is considering a nationwide television-radio address on the school integration issue.

"I haven't any comment on that one way or the other," Press Secretary James C. Hagerty replied to questions at a news conference. Some have been urging that Eisenhower go on the air before September school openings to urge against any violence.

ARKANSAS LITTLE ROCK

OUR OPINION

What Is Little Rock Trying to Prove?

State Press, p 4

For several months in this capital city, racial tension has been at the acme of explosion; innate prejudice of white has been stirred to the extent where the warm blood of a black seems to offer the only appeasement; the area of master-slave relationship, which did offer a minimum degree of safety for the black has been destroyed, and the city today is a shrine of disgrace in the eyes of decent people the world over. Even in Russia where Christianity is unknown, a finger of scorn can be pointed in our direction leaving us with no grounds for any refutation.

Fri 2-14-58

Turning Little Rock from a shrine of peace to a bedlam in one nite, shows clearly that the give-and-take relationship between the white and black, even though it did provide a little comfort, wasn't of much value and contained none of the American precepts.

What is Little Rock trying to prove . . . the white superior to the Negro If superiority of race is the question Then refresh your memory and recall the morning of September 23, in the year of 1957 AD, and bring into focus unposed pictures of white intelligence at work in the vicinity of Central high school. Take an unimaginary look at an American Negro teenager being turned away from a center of education by armed men dressed in the uniform of our country's protective forces. Picture in your mind, an American Negro teenager being driven down an American street by a howling mob, while representatives of United States silently watch. Picture American Negroes who had jeopardized their lives on foreign territory to protect their country from foreign enemies, being beaten, kicked and knocked around by white Americans while uniformed American police officers stand by.

Little Rock Ark.

If white Little Rock can recall these incidents which are not foreign propaganda, and lay claim to white superiority, then we can say here and now that she can have her superiority, and it will never again be questioned.

Just what Little Rock is trying to prove is not entirely known, but there is one thing that is known, that thus far, the Negro in Little Rock has done nothing to add to the disgrace that Little Rock and Arkansas find themselves in today. And it is hoped, that when and if the present confusion is resolved that the Negro will go down in history as a non-participant in the violence that has disgraced and shamed the name of America in the eyes of the people throughout the world. This will prove that he is an American, and lives by its principles.

Little Rock Cost Nearing That Of All City Schools

News & Courier Charleston, S. C.

Tues. 2-18-58

By Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17 — The cost of bayonet-enforced integration of nine Negro pupils into Little Rock's Central High School was reported today to be nearing the total amount of the public school budget in the Arkansas capital.

Military operations at Little Rock since President Eisenhower sent troops there to "supervise" integration of Central High cost $4,237,996 through Jan. 31, Army Secretary Wilbur M. Brucker reported today.

The budget for operation of all Little Rock schools for the current academic year totals $5,222,297, according to information received here from school officials there.

Meanwhile, Sen. Olin D. Johnston said that if he were quoted in the Little Rock Gazette as saying that "Little Rock is dead," he was quoted out of context.

An aide in Johnston's office said that following a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on the nomination of Attorney General William P. Rogers, he had said in a television interview, in effect, that "I believe the issue at Little Rock is dead because there'll never be another one."

The South Carolina senator was commenting on testimony by Rogers that he would not recommend the use of troops in the event another situation such as that at Little Rock should develop in the future. Rogers' predecessor, Herbert Brownell, recommended that Mr. Eisenhower use federal troops to enforce integration decrees at Little Rock.

Sunday's editions of The News and Courier referred to the Johnston remark, as reported in the Little Rock Gazette, in connection with publication of a pained letter from an indignant Little Rock resident.

the boys turned up for classes with ducktail haircuts and wearing blue jeans. He said the haircuts were freakish and the jeans low slung and beltless.

The "good grooming" code became effective today. Establishing certain standards of dress, it banned ducktail haircuts and bluesevere than has taken place durjeans for boys and prohibited girling strikes in recent years in Kohfrom wearing jeans, shorts, slacker, Wis., New Castle, Ind., and and riding breeches to school. Farmingdale, N. Y. On September 24, the day President Eisenhower ordered federal troops, Little Rock police had the situation under control. According to the Associated Press disorderly persons were quickly arrested and removed from the scene. . ."

If Adlai Stevenson, who says he would have acted sooner, had been present, the alarms of Lion-in-the-Streets-Ashmore might have done even more harm, for Mr. Ashmore, it will be recalled, was Adlai's right-hand writing man in the campaign.

Light Needed On Story Of Little Rock

Tues. 2-18-58

"A lion is in the streets. . . ."

GRANTING THAT the President made the mistake of his political life when he sent troops to Little Rock and that he was wrong as wrong could be, those who speak of him as "hating" the South hurt the cause with childishness. Since Gov. Stevenson has said he would have acted even sooner, do they think the Illinoian hates the South even more? Neither man hates the South. Both just love other things more.

SURELY CONGRESS isn't going to let Little Rock go into history without some sort of full dress inquiry — not only as to the law but equally as to the facts! The extent to which ex-Mayor Mann and Editor Ashmore, whether scared or scheming, were firebrands in their reports to Washington, whether they were a "cabal unleashing forces endangering the Republic," as the Charleston News and Courier, puts it, ought to be found out. The wild alarm of Harry Ashmore in his telephone report to the Department of Justice has already been printed. Now comes ex-Mayor Mann in The New York Herald-Tribune telling how he called for the federal troops over the head and without the knowledge of his own police chief.

"Several hundred persons out of Little Rock's population of more than 200,000 rampaged in the street in front of Central High School," says The News and Courier. "The disturbance was far less

DO OUR "LOYAL" Southern Democrats feel sustained in loyalty when they learn of that unpublicized meeting National Democratic Chairman Paul Butler had at headquarters recently with Negro leaders from 22 states, and of the agreement to have a Negro named deputy chairman? Are they more loyal than ever when told of moves from Atlanta to double the present Negro registration of 1,238,000 in the South?

The party that used to be the party of our fathers is way out front for the Negro vote and means to hold the lead. It believes most of the white South will continue to stand without hitching. It does use a hitch in Alabama — the loyalty oath. In favor of that oath one loyalist argued yesterday that being faithfully Democratic is the source of Southern "superiority in Congress" and we must not "jeopodize" it.

That superiority comes of being free, not slave, therewith holding a balance of power. If our members were as bound to the National Democratic leaders as some want our convention delegates and candidates to be, they would have no superiority. They would be just caudal appendages.

As for "jeopodizing our position" in Congress, that means committee chairmanships. But for three straight elections the South has been in revolt now without losing chairmanships. Indeed it has come to have the congressional balance of power. To undertake to punish the South, while the balance is as close as it is now, would simply cost the Democratic Party its control of Congress.

Little Rock and Brooklyn Education Issues Compared

New York N.Y. Jan 31-58

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Could Federal troops be used to police the schools in Brooklyn where incidents involving rape, juvenile crime, racial friction and violence in general have recently caused the foreman of the grand jury there to ask for police to be stationed inside the school buildings?

Lawrence

The Mayor of New York and the Governor seem reluctant to put police into the schools but, judging by the revelation of what happened at Little Rock just written by former Mayor Woodrow W. Mann in a series of copyrighted articles in the New York Herald Tribune, it isn't necessary to ask the Mayor of New York City or the Governor of the state for police help. Ordinary authority apparently can be bypassed and a direct request can be made to the White House by any official agency of a local nature. If the Little Rock precedent is upheld, this could mean the immediate dispatch of Federal troops to the scene.

Saw Need for Action

Mr. Mann discloses that he did not even consult his own chief of police in Little Rock because the Mayor didn't like the chief's political views. He also was at odds with the Governor of Arkansas.

"Police Chief Potts did not know that I was in constant touch with Washington," writes former Mayor Mann of Little Rock. He adds that he told Maxwell Rabb. Presidential assistant in charge of minority questions, on Tuesday, Sept. 24, 1957: "As far as I'm concerned, we need action as quickly as possible. We need Federal troops."

Former Mayor Mann says that on the morning of the same day Mr. Rabb told him that he should send "a telegraphed request for Federal troops" because this was necessary "to clear our files." The Mayor complied, and within a couple hours the President issued an executive order sending Federal troops to Little Rock.

Tells of Appeal

All the details of the Mayor's part in urging the use of Federal troops have never before been disclosed. They constitute an extraordinary chapter in the story of Federal intervention in Arkansas without the consent of either the Governor or the State Legislature, as required by the Federal Constitution in protecting a state "against domestic violence."

The collaboration between the White House and Mr. Mann in preparing the way for Federal troops is commented on by the former Mayor of Little Rock as follows:

"'Police Chief Potts did not know that I was in constant touch with Washington,' writes former Mayor Mann of Little Rock. He adds that he told Maxwell Rabb. Presidential assistant in charge of minority questions, 'I read Max Rabb my telegram. He suggested—and I made — a couple of minor changes.'

The text of the message sent at 9:15 a. m. by Mr. Mann was as follows:

"The immediate need for Federal troops is urgent. The mob is much larger in numbers at 8:00 a. m. than at any time yesterday. People are converging on the scene from all directions. Mob is armed and engaged in fisticuffs and other acts of violence. Situation out of control, and police cannot disperse the mob. I am pleading to you as President of the United States . . . to provide the necessary troops within several hours. Action by you will restore peace and order in compliance with your proclamation."

'Clears the Way'

Mr. Mann writes further: "By 9:48 a. m., when next I called Maxwell Rabb. I was able to report that there were still several hundred people milling around the police cordon at Central High. There were agitators, but no violence. For lack of targets, the mob had cooled.

"'Is help coming?' I asked. This, I confess, was my real purpose for calling.

"'Well,' said Rabb, 'This clears the way.'"

The foregoing episode is all the more surprising because, in an earlier article in the series, former Mayor Mann tells what he planned at one time in the way of an escort of the Negro children by the Federal government through the Arkansas National Guard cordon around the school. Mr. Mann writes:

"I had in mind the use of United States marshals. Looking back on the situation—I am still surprised that the Justice Department did not adopt this approach at the start, or even later. The extremist agitators would have hesitated to interfere with these local representatives of the Federal law, and no such outcry would have arisen as came with the use of Federal troops."

Marshals Used in 1893

Mr. Mann is right about the use of deputy marshals. There were 5,000 deputy marshals used in the strike riots in Chicago in 1893 during the administration of President Cleveland. The very law which the Department of Justice is citing now in support of the use of Federal troops at Little Rock says that they may be used only when "unlawful obstructions . . . make it impracticable to enforce the laws of the United States in any state by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings."

The "ordinary course" was not followed, and a court order was enforced instead with Federal troops, even though a Federal law known as the "posse comitatus act" specifically forbids the use of the armed forces to enforce court orders.

The responsibility for maintaining law and order within a state is left by the Federal Constitution to the state government. The assertion by the mayor of a city that he may disregard the governor of his state and directly request military intervention from the Federal government, so as to preserve order locally, is novel in the constitutional history of the United States.

Maybe the foreman of the grand jury in Brooklyn can cite the Little Rock precedent now if Mayor Wagner and Gov. Harriman disregard his request for police in the school buildings or if he doesn't happen to like their political views.

Little Rock students see 'Freedom' together

Afro-American Feb 3-1958

Baltimore Md.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Eleven hundred Little Rock students and teachers from Horace Mann High School and Central High School last week crowded into two performances of "Freedom," the prize-winning all-African, colored film produced by Moral Re-Armament.

Manasseh Moerane, leader of 10,000 African teachers from South Africa, and John Amata, former head of all the students of Nigeria and a militant fighter for the freedom of his people, the two men who wrote and star in the film, together with Mrs. Bremer Hofmyer, the daughter of a Kenya settler who was buried alive as a human sacrifice of Mau Mau, and her Dutch South African husband whose family have occupied six cabinet positions, stood together on the platform in Little Rock to introduce the film.

The Principal of Horace Mann High School had Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Villamin, advisor to the Philippine President and correspondent for 24 newspapers in Asia, together with the Africans to speak at the school assembly.

Mr. Villamin said, "The problem in the world is division. MRA is the idea which will unite East and West. It is the idea to unite the world."

Little Rock Group Seeking Removal Of School Leader

Advertiser 2-3-58

Montgomery Ala

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 3 (AP)—A Little Rock segregationist leader announced today that he will try to obtain the removal of city school board members and Supt. Virgil T. Blossom.

Amis Guthridge, attorney and charter member of the pro-segregationist Capital Citizens Council said he would give evidence to a prosecutor of malfeasance and nonfeasance on the part of the officials.

Mon. 2-3-58

Guthridge, who has been bitterly critical of the board and Blossom during the school integration crisis here, said he would take witnesses with him to the office of County Prosecutor J. Frank Holt Monday morning.

He said that if the prosecutor filed "informations" on the evidence presented by the witnesses, it would make mandatory the removal of those officials charged until their trial. A criminal court judge would have to order the removals, Guthridge said.

The attorney did not say why he would ask for filing of the informations. Nor did he identify the witnesses he said would give evidence.

School Board Tells Court Of 40 Student Incidents

Memphis Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, May 28.—The Little Rock School Board said Wednesday 87 boys and girls were involved in racial incidents during the school year just ended at integrated Central High School.

May 29-58

About 40 separate incidents were reported, the board said.

The information was contained in a response the board filed in Federal Court to questions asked by counsel for Negro students at the school. It became a part of the voluminous litigation being built up for arguments which will begin Tuesday.

At question is the board's plea that the integration plan put into effect last fall be "suspended" for a "cooling off" period, or until January, 1961.

Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley will preside at the hearings, which may take several days.

Negro attorneys opposing the board petition had asked the board to cite facts backing up its claim that "a small group" of students was primarily responsible for continued opposition to integrated classes.

The 87 names weren't listed as to race, but apparently covered all racial incidents investigated by school officials during the school year. Classes ended Tuesday.

Suspension Follows Flying Purse

Minnie Jean Brown, one of the courageous Little Rock Nine who is attending the Central hi school here under the "protection" of the Arkansas national guards has been suspended for the second time. Minnie Jean's suspension followed the throwing of a purse by a white girl that struck Minnie Jean and the spilling of hot soup by a white boy that landed on her. This turn of events proved puzzling and an explanation was sought during an interview with Superintendent Virgil Blossom, who announced the suspension of the Negro girl at a press conference Friday.

Blossom refused to state why Minnie Jean was suspended after being the victim of the purse throwing incident and catching the soup that was spilled by the white lad. Blossom stated that such information involving suspension was discussed only with the parents of the children.

But from Jess Mathews, principal of the school, it was learned from a notice written to the parents, that the Negro girl was suspended because she "talked back" to a white student. Matthews also made note that when Minnie Jean was reinstated from her suspension in January, she was not to retaliate from any incident that involved her vocally or physically. Minnie Jean ignored the in- white girl who was engaging her into a controversy.

Blossom stated during the press conference Friday, that Minnie Jean's suspension was the usually three days. But later reports charge the superintendent with saying that the suspension is expected to be permanent.

Minnie Jean has not had as much abuse at the former all-white school since the 101st Airborne Division was removed from policing the school as some of the other students, but her's has been more spectactular. Harassments and abuses from the trouble-making element of white students, have had a considerable increase, according to reports emanating from the school.

The superintendent stated that these incidents between white and Negro students stem from a resistance to integration of the school.

Blossom also admits that in spite of these incidents where the nine Negro students are harassed, spat upon, kicked, knocked down, pushed down stairs, victims of thrown objects, involving a very small number of white students, the principal is 'doing a fine job.'

The praise for the principal served to avoid an answer to a direct question asked Blossom by a representative of this paper, as to his opinion of the conduct of the students if they were called in an assembly by the principal and were given disciplinary instruction of their conduct over school integration.

Earlier during the press conference Friday, this paper made an effort to find out if any instructions on discipline had been given the children in an assembly by the faculty since integration was started in the school.

The answer to this question was also evaded, which left the impression that no such instructions on discipline had ever been given to the students which would help to smooth out things during the change in school patterns.

In an effort to clear up rumors about integration at the school directed at the school board, this paper asked if the school board members were convinced that integration was at Central to stay. This question brought evasiveness similiar to the others.

However he was specific when questioned about Moscow Radio Broadcast that related the story that Elizabeth Eckford had been murdered at the school. "We all know she isn't dead." Blossom said. But when asked if conditions were as bad as the broadcast said, he stated, "No."

This paper asked him if the report of Elizabeth's death were eliminated from the broadcast, and taking reports that had been published in both the Arkansas Gazette and Arkansas Democrat, could a denial of these other incidents mentioned in the broadcast be made. His answer was, "I haven't heard the broadcast."

About the incidents at Central school involving the Negro students, Blossom admitted that they were bad, and were many. The same Thursday that Minnie Jean was the victim, another Negro girl was kicked by a white boy.

During the press conference, Blossom admitted that some of the questions this paper sought answer to, were improper, and carried implications, but at no time was the superintendent rude as television station KTHV implied.

Negro Girl Suspended At Central

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 12 (AP)—Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students at Little Rock's Central High School, was suspended today for two weeks and Supt. Virgil Blossom recommended that she be expelled from the school for the remainder of the year.

Minnie Jean's mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, told reporters of the suspension following a closed hearing at the school board office. Blossom later confirmed it.

Mrs. Brown said she would resist any order removing her daughter.

Minnie Jean, a 16-year-old junior, has been involved in a number of incidents.

A white boy was suspended for throwing soup on Minnie Jean. The latest suspension grew out of a name-calling, purse-weilding incident. the other student withdrew from school.

Negro Girl Is Ousted At Little Rock School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 13 (AP).—Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students at Little Rock's Central High School, was suspended yesterday for two weeks, and Supt. Virgil Blossom recommended that she be expelled from the school for the rest of the year.

Supt. Blossom said the girl violated an agreement not to fight back against white students' harassment.

If the school board follows the superintendent's recommendation, and it usually does, Minnie Jean could enter the all-Negro Horace Mann High School or reapply at that time for entrance at Central, a spokesman said.

W. B. Brown, told reporters of the suspension and recommendation after a closed hearing at the school board office. Supt. Blossom later confirmed it, and said his recommendation alone "is tantamount to permanent suspension."

Suspended Once Before

Minnie Jean, a 16-year-old junior, has been involved in a number of incidents with white students. She was suspended first prior to the Christmas holidays for throwing soup at a white boy in what Supt. Blossom called "a fit of temper."

Later a white boy was suspended for throwing soup on Minnie Jean. The latest suspension grew out of a name-calling, purse-wielding incident with a white girl. The white girl withdrew from school.

Only Negro Suspended

Minnie Jean was suspended for the minimum 3-day period, pending yesterday's hearing at which the suspension was extended for two week.

Minnie Jean is the only Negro who has been suspended since Negroes entered Central High September 25 under the protection of Federal troops.

She has been the main target of white students. Several have been suspended at different times for harassing her.

Minnie Jeans' enrollment at Central High has been interrupted, by her account, because of two words: "white trash."

She said she hurled the invective at a white girl who was harassing her.

Letter Sent to Parents

School officials sent a letter to Minnie Jean's parents, which said in part:

"Minnie Jean Brown was reinstated on probation January 13 (from a previous suspension) with the agreement that she would not retaliate verbally or physically to any harasssment, but would leave the matter to school authorities.

"After provocation of the (white) girl student she called the girl "white trash" after which the girl threw her purse at Minnie Jean."

Minnie Jean showed a newsman the letter last night.

For five months, Minnie Jean said, the situation for her has been almost unbearable.

"I don't think people realize what goes on at Central," she said. "They throw rocks, they spill ink on your clothes . . . they just keep bothering you every five minutes."

Minnie Jean said she and the eight other Negroes who still attend the 1,900-pupil school were ordered to be humble to white pupils

Negro Girl, White Boy Suspended From Little Rock's Central High

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — Three more racial incidents and another bomb scare have shattered the calm at Little Rock's integrated Central high school.

A white girl has been withdrawn from classes and a Negro girl and a white boy have been suspended by Principal Jess Matthews.

Frankie Ann Gregg, 10th grade white girl, and Minnie Jean Brown, 16, a Negro girl, became embroiled in a purse striking incident Thursday. Miss Brown was suspended.

Mrs. Frank Gregg, Jr., said the two girls brushed in a hallway and Miss Brown called her daughter "white trash." She withdrew Frankie Ann from school, explaining: "I don't think she should have to put up with that sort of thing."

In a second clash, Lester Judkins, a white boy, reportedly threw soup on Minnie Jean in the school cafeteria following the first incident involving the Negro student. Judkins was suspended.

In a third incident, a Negro girl, Carlotta Wells, 14, reportedly was kicked by a white boy in a school corridor.

The bomb scare occurred when an unidentified woman called a local television station and said explosives had been planted in the school. The building was searched but no bomb was found.

There also were reports that some white students had staged a "anti-Negro" demonstration inside the school. Officials denied a serious demonstration had taken place.

A dozen federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen are posted at the school during the day.

Minnie Jean's suspension was her second. Last December she was suspended for throwing chili on two white boys.

tonight to expel Minniejean Brown from integrated Central High School for the remainder of this term.

The move was recommended by school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom.

W. B. Brown, father of the 16-year-old Negro girl, labelled the decision as "very unfair."

"It sounded to me like Mr. Blossom was expelling Minniejean for her own safety," Brown said. "He didn't say it in those words, but that's the way we took it."

Mrs. Brown said: "I am shocked at the action of the board. I shall consult my attorneys immediately and be governed by their advice."

The Negro girl claims she has been a main target of segregationist students during her five months at the school.

Blossom said the girl cannot attend any school, white or Negro, in the Little Rock district for the rest of this year.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, had no immediate comment.

But another NAACP official, who declined to be identified, indicated Minniejean's case would be carried to the courts.

The Negro girl had contended that the real reason for her suspension was because she called a white girl who was harrassing her "white trash."

School authorities have not disclosed official reason for Minniejean's recent two-week suspension which followed the incident with the white girl.

Hours before the board met in closed session, Blossom disclosed three white students had been suspended. He identified them as Howard Cooper, Billy Ferguson and Sammie Dean Parker.

The Ferguson boy reportedly was suspended for pushing a Negro girl, Gloria Ray, down a flight of stairs.

Cooper was suspended for wearing a printed card with the words: "One down, eight to go."

The reference obviously was to Minniejean Brown.

Sammie Dean Parker was suspended for passing out the bill-fold-type cards. She is one of the segregationist students who recently told newsmen she had a change of heart and would not actively try to stop integration.

All the whites drew automatic three-day suspensions. Their cases normally are decided after Blossom confers with parents during the automatic suspension period.

Negro Student Is Expelled At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 17 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board decided last night expelled Minniejean Brown, one of nine Negroes admitted to Central High School last fall.

Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, who recommeded the action against the 16-year-old girl, said Minniejean could not attend a public school, white or Negro, in the Little Rock district until next September.

The decision to expel Minniejean, who already was under a two-week suspension, came a few hours after Blossom disclosed that three white students — two boys and a girl—were suspended after racial incidents Monday at the 2,000-pupil school.

W. B. Brown, father of the Negro girl who claims she has been the main target of segregationist students during the five months the Negroes have attended Central, labelled the suspension as "very unfair."

The announcement came about two hours after Minniejean and her parets met with the board in a closed session.

Mrs. Brown said: "I shall consult my attorneys immediately and be governed by their advice."

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Assn. for the advancement of Colored People, declined comment.

Clarence Laws, NAACP field secretary at Little Rock, termed the decision "a clear abandonment of justice and fair play."

School officials have declined to give reasons for Minniejean's latest suspension. The suspension followed a corridor clash between the Negro and a white girl.

Minniejean has said the white girl struck her with a purse after "I called her white trash, because she was botheri g me." Minniejean previously was suspended for about two weeks for throwing food on two white boys in the school cafeteria.

Expelled Pupil Fights Back In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) —The motner of 16-year old Minnie Jean Brown, one of nine colored students at Little Rock's Central High School, prepared this week to fight moves to expel her daughter.

Miss Brown, who has been involved in several flareups with white students, was suspended temporarily Thursday for the second time.

School superintendent Virgil Blossom later recommended that the girl be expelled for the rest of the year.

• • •

IF THE SCHOOL board follows Blossom's recommendation, she could enter the all-Negro Horace Mann High School or reapply for entrance at Central next year.

However, the girl's mother, Mrs. W. B. Brown, said she would resist, possibly with legal action, any order calling for permanent suspension of her daughter from the previously all-white school.

• • •

MISS BROWN was first suspended temporarily prior to the Christmas holidays for throwing soup at a white boy in what Blossom called a "fit of temper."

If the board does expel the girl, it may be acting in defiance of a Federal Court order directing integration of the nine colored pupils.

President Eisenhower federalized the Arkansas National Guard and ordered paratroopers to the school grounds last September after a mob barred compliance with the court's directive.

Faubus said reason delay sought in L. R.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 4—(AP)—The Little Rock School Board has asked specifically for a 2½-year delay in integration because Orval E. Faubus may not be governor of Arkansas in 1961, the board president testified today.

Wayne Upton, the school official, made the statement in U. S. District Court here under cross - examination by Wiley Branton, an attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

TESTIMONY in the school board's request that integration at Central High School be postponed entered its second day. U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope presided.

"As you know Gov. Faubus is running for a third term this year," Upton said. ". . . In 1961 he may not be the governor."

Faubus touched off the racial crisis here last Fall by calling out National Guardsmen to block nine Negroes from entering Central. If re-elected, Faubus would serve another two years.

Upton referred to a statement Faubus reportedly made recently in which the governor indicated he might use soldiers again to block integration.

"I don't know what he'll do," Upton said.

BRANTON ASKED Upton if he was aware that Faubus and other persons were under a restraining order not to interfere with integration.

Citing cases in Hoxie, Ark., and Clinton, Tenn., Branton said that when a school board has asked for a federal injunction against "obstructionists" it has been granted the relief.

Upton said if the board here asked for an injunction against certain individuals other persons would have taken their place. He said later that a school board member is not a prosecutor.

"If you could control discipline there would be no need for federal troops, would there?" Branton asked Upton.

"Yes, that's right," the board president replied.

QUESTIONED later by Richard Butler, the board's attorney, Upton said the state's recently passed segregation laws also were a factor in the board's request for a 2½-year integration delay.

The four 1957 Arkansas segregation acts now are being contested in courts. Upton said he believed all would be settled within two years.

Upton was the ninth witness for the school board. He and the others have testified that integration caused violence at Central and impaired educational standards.

Little Rock Observes Fourth Anniversary of Supreme Court Decision

It was announced this week that the Little Rock Branch of the NAACP will join hundreds of branches of the NAACP throughout the country in observance of the fourth anniversary of the Supreme Court's ruling in outlawing segregation in public education.

The Little Rock observance will be held at the Collins Temple Baptist church on Ringo street Sunday stafting at 4 p.m.

The United States Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling was handed down May 17, 1954.

In many of the cities where the observance will take place, some will have special events, and some will have fund-raising teas. In Little Rock there will be a special program presenting some of the city's outstanding citizens.

Since 1954's decision most of the border states have made efforts toward compliance in desegregating their schools. Arkansas was making progress along that line until the ambition of an executive forced him to employ state rights to stifle federal and human rights.

The Resistance in Arkansas

Some months back The Nation expressed the view that the law-abiding element in Arkansas would, if given an opportunity, repudiate the actions of Governor Faubus. More recently, we reaffirmed this conviction ("Faubus Once Again," The Nation, March 29, 1953), albeit with some qualifications. Now, we are pleased to note, it is certain that Faubus will be vigorously opposed in his bid for a third term. The Democratic primary, tantamount to election in Arkansas, is scheduled for July 29. Governor Faubus has three opponents: Chancery Judge Lee Ward, from eastern Arkansas; Chris E. Finkbeiner, a well-to-do meat packer of Little Rock, and Robert J. Brown, a Little Rock lawyer whose candidacy is not taken seriously. Both Finkbeiner and Judge Ward are strong candidates. Three former governors, Sid McGrath, Ben Laney and Francis Cherry have come out against Faubus. On balance, Judge Ward, who appears to be the strongest of the contenders, has a good chance of forcing a runoff with Faubus and, with the field thus narrowed, of defeating him.

The stakes, for all of us, are high. Should Faubus win a smashing victory at the primary, the effect will be to strengthen the Dixiecrat element in the South and to complicate and delay the process of integration. If he is re-elected, the nation may anticipate another spectacle of the kind that occurred with the opening of Central High School last year. Judge Ward is not an integrationist, but he believes "first of all in law and order." In any event, the proper first steps have been taken and the voters will now be given a chance to repudiate the Governor who caused the words "Little Rock" to be shouted with derision around the world. The Arkansas primary of July 29 will command a top priority in the political expectations of all thoughtful citizens.

LITTLE ROCK

Little Rock School Graduates 1st Negro

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — A school year unmatched in public education closed Tuesday night when 18-year-old Ernest Green got his diploma from Central High School.

Not only did Green become the first of the Negro race ever to have graduated from the school, but for his 602 white classmates, it ended a hectic school term that included bomb threats, rioting and constant surveillance by federalized National Guardsmen and for a time, battle-seasoned paratroopers.

ONE OF NINE

The tall, lanky Green is one of nine Negroes who integrated the school last Sept. 25 under Federal Court order and with protection of paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division.

Commencement was limited to ticketholders under strict rules laid down by the school board. Newsmen were limited to a roped-off section near the top of the stadium and only two photographers —one from each of the Little Rock newspapers— were allowed to take closeups of the graduation.

120 GUARDSMEN

Approximately 120 federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen were available. The troops moved into the school Sunday.

The Capital Citizens Council declared Thursday "Liberation Day in Arkansas" and called for Arkansans to give "Thanks to Almighty God" that the remaining 432 federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen will be released from federal control.

The segregationists distributed placards printed in red, white and blue which read:

Liberation Day in Arkansas
May 29
Ike Go Home.

SUNDAY NIGHT

Sunday night's baccalaureate was marred by one incident at the athletic field and another possibly related near the campus.

A 16-year-old boy was arrested for spitting on a Negro woman as she left the arena after the ceremonies. Five other Negroes were arrested and one was charged with carrying concealed weapons. The colored men told police they were en route to the school to protect Green.

Several white students cheered when Green went through the motion of receiving his diploma in a rehearsal Monday.

"I hope you will take it on yourselves to see that everything goes all right," Principal Jess W. Matthews told the students. "I don't think there is anyone who wouldn't feel sorry if anything is done tomorrow night to interfere with the program."

Ronnie Hubbard, 17, president of the senior class, also appealed for order.

"I don't think anybody wants to do anything to ruin our commencement."

Little Rock Negro Asks Scholarship At Michigan State

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Ernest Green, first Negro graduate from Little Rock, Ark., Central High School, scene of conflict over school desegregation, has applied for a scholarship to Michigan State University.

Bob Stewart, MSU scholarship committee chairman, said he had received Green's academic records and that he was in the top 10 per cent of his class. He is particularly interested in a science course, Stewart said.

Green was referred to Michigan State by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro students.

"We would be most anxious to have this young man as a student at Michigan State," Stewart said. "From the face of his high school record, he could make a valuable contribution here."

Say School Can Handle Its Problems

Federal Judge Delays Decision For Several Days

Lemley told Little Rock School Board, petitioning for de-integration at Central High School until mid-term, 1961, he would not hand down a decision for at least a week.

• • •

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION for the Advancement of Colored People called only two witnesses against the school board's petition Thursday.

Syracuse (N. Y.) University Dean of Education Dr. Virgil M. Rogers and David G. Salten, Superintendent of schools at Long Beach, N. Y., both urged Lemley not to de-integrate Central.

• • •

THEY SAID there was no opposition to integration that stern discipline can't overcome.

"I am confident that if school authorities will assert themselves and the principal at Central will take the major responsibility, the school can open next fall with Negroes attending," Rogers said.

• • •

ROGERS SAID he could "see nothing in the record to indicate that conditions would improve in two-and-a-half years."

Salten testified records indicate "a lack of specific and explicit rules on misconduct, and I believe the punishment meted out was not strict enough.

"Repeaters were allowed to remain in school without punishments.

"I FIND IT difficult to accept that the people of this community do not accept the decision of the Supreme Court. The supremacy of the federal law is not a matter of dispute," he said. "It is a matter of fact."

Lemley asked Salten whether he, as a member of President Eisenhower's Advisory Committee on Education, thought it necessary to keep troops at Central after threatening crowds were dispersed.

SALTEN REPLIED, "I believe it was necessary for President Eisenhower to maintain troops but that was only because of failure of the school to maintain adequate control itself."

Eisenhower called out 1,000 troops of the 101st Airborne Division to protect nine colored students who integrated Central in September. One was later expelled and went to school in New York and another became the first of his race ever to be graduated from a white school in Little Rock.

Little Rock Asks U.S. Court Call Off Integration

Constitution Atlanta Ga. Fri. 2-21-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 20 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board today asked the federal courts to suspend the six-month-old racial integration at Central High School.

The requested suspension would be in effect until the "deliberate speed" in integration ordered by the U.S. Supreme Court "can be clearly defined and effective legal procedures can be obtained which will enable the school district to integrate without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

"INTOLERABLE," SAYS FAUBU

Gov. Orval Faubus said the school board's action should have been taken some time ago and added that the "situation in Central High School at present is intolerable from the standpoint of a proper educational atmosphere."

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the filing of the petition "must have been a shock to all decent-thinking people in Little Rock."

Nine Negro students have been attending the school along with nearly 2,000 whites under the protection of federal troops in compliance with a court-appointed plan for gradual desegregation in the Little Rock public schools.

GIRL EXPELLED

One of the nine, Minniejean Brown, was expelled recently as a result of one of the many racial incidents which have plagued the school and has announced she will enter a private integrated school in New York.

The board and Supt. Virgil T. Blossom filed the petition for delay with U.S. District Court a few minutes before close of business for the day, Court Clerk Grady Miller said.

This is the second tme the school board has asked that integration be postponed.

Last September. such a request was overruled by U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D., here on temporary assignment.

When Central High's fall term began Sept. 3, a contingent of the Arkansas National Guard, at the direction of Gov. Orval Faubus, was on duty at the school to prevent Negroes from entering.

Later Davies issued an order prohibiting Faubus from further interference with integration at the school.

WITHDREW GUARD

Faubus withdrew the guard and when rioting developed outside the school, the guard was federalizezd to protect the Negroes.

In today's petition the school board declared that opponents of integration "are continually implanting in the minds of residents of the district by all types of inflammatory publicity" the thought that the federal court order to integrate is a nullity and the board was betraying the interest of district residents in attempting to comply with the court order.

SUPREME COURT

The petition said that the U.S. Supreme Court envisioned in its original school desegregation opinion the "revision of local laws" to conform with its interpretation of the Constitution.

"Instead of revising local laws to bring them into conformity with the federal law, the State of Arkansas has enacted several laws which tend to defy the federal law and obstruct compliance by the district with the order of this court," the petition declared.

The board declared that, "The federal government, except for having placed troops around the school grounds, apparently is powerless to enforce compliance with this court's order of integration and suppress the interference now being encountered. . . ."

It charged that federal authorities had not penaliezd persons who defied the court's orders but "have stepped aside and placed on the district the full responsibility of compliance."

SITUATION AT SCHOOL DEPLORED BY FAUBUS

Commercial Appeal 2-19-58

Not Conducive To Education, Says Governor

Memphis Tenn.

RECENT INCIDENTS CITED

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 18.—Recent incidents at Central High School point up a "deplorable" situation, Gov. Orval Faubus said Tuesday.

"What's going on there is not conducive in any way to education," he observed when asked by newsmen for his reaction to the latest series of incidents Monday, in which three white students were suspended for passing out cards bearing the notation, "One down . . . eight to go."

Would Have Been Worse

However, the Governor added, the situation would have been even worse if he—as some of his critics have contended he should have done—had ordered the Arkansas National Guard last September to enforce integration.

"That would have resulted in an even more intolerable situation than we have now," the Governor declared.

Governor Faubus sent National Guardsmen to the school shortly before the fall term opened, with orders to keep Negroes out of the high school. He later was enjoined from further interfering with the integration decree, and Federal troops were sent here by President Eisenhower.

The Governor declined comment on any of the "specific" incidents which have occured lately.

There were no reports of further incidents at the school Tuesday, but the Arkansas Military District confirmed that there has been changes made in "disposition" of troops at the school.

Brief Checks

One report said the once constant patroling inside the school corridors had been replaced by brief checks from time to time in the corridors.

A Military District spokesman said there had been no change in the number of troops still being maintained at the school daily, but that they had been "more effectively disposed." He wouldn't comment beyond that.

At last report, several weeks ago, about two dozen Federalized Guardsmen were on duty at the school or the immediate vicinity every day.

Minnie Jean Brown To New York School

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—(AP)—The New York Post said Tuesday Minnie Jean Brown, the Negro girl expelled from Little Rock Central High School, will complete her year's education here.

The newspaper said it learned the 16-year-old girl will accept a full scholarship from the new Lincoln school, a private interracial institution with 432 students.

Little Rock Integration Cost—Now Tops 4 Million Dollars

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The Army reported Tuesday that "Operation Little Rock" had cost $4,237,996 through Jan. 31.

Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker said Army costs at integrated Central High School had amounted to $3,802,284 through Jan. 31, and he said "information received informally from the United States Air Force" showed that Air Force costs have amounted to an additional $435,712.

Total school budget for the 1957-58 session at Little Rock is $5,222,297. That figure includes Central High School as well as all the other schools in the city.

Secretary Brucker supplied the latest compilation of costs at the request of Representative Tom Abernethy (D., Miss.).

Costs Broken Down

He reported that federalization of the Arkansas National Guard's ground forces had cost $3,624,461, including $3,197,364 for pay and allowances, $186,678 for operation, maintenance and other expenses, $132,833 for clothing, and $107,586 for subsistence.

Additional expenses incurred by the Regular Army, mostly the 101st Paratroopers, amounted to $177,823. This did not include pay, clothing, subsistence or other expenses normally incurred by Army units regardless of whether they are on active duty.

The $435,712 incurred by the Air Force was mostly pay and allowances for members of the federalized Arkansas Air National Guard, but also apparently included the cost of the "air lift" that brought the paratroopers to Little Rock.

Mr. Abernethy commented that "the cost of integrated education a la Eisenhower is going to put a severe strain on the gold at Fort Knox.

'High-Priced Politics'

"It is an extraordinarily high price for the taxpayers to have to pay for the effort by those in charge of the executive branch of the Government to gain minority votes for their candidates—briefly, it is pretty high-priced politics.

"It is particularly noted that the secretary of the Army expressed no opinion whatever as to when the taxpayers might be relieved of this expense. So, we must assume that the secretary contemplates a most extended, if not permanent, occupation of Little Rock.

RACE INCIDENTS AT LITTLE ROCK HIGH REPORTED

Daily Tribune Chicago Ill.

New Bomb Warning Also Received

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 6 (AP)—A series of racial incidents was reported from integrated Central High school today. There also was another anonymous report of a bomb in the school.

Supt. Virgil Blossom confirmed that he was investigating a report that a girl student struck another girl with a purse. He said one girl was white and the second Negro, but declined to say which one did the striking.

Blossom refused to identify the students, but unofficial sources said the Negro girl was Minnie Jean Brown, who has been involved in previous incidents. The same sources gave the white girl's name as Frankie Gregg.

Other Incidents Reported

Reports from the school said that a white boy later spilled soup on Minnie Jean in the school cafeteria, and that another Negro girl was involved in a kicking incident in a corridor.

Blossom and other school authorities were not available when these reports were received, and there was no official confirmation.

A woman telephoned a Little Rock television station and said "There's a bomb in Central High and it's ready to go off." Then the caller hung up.

This wa sthe latest in a series of such calls, whivh have proved groundless except for the finding once of a stick of uncapped and unfused dynamite in a locker.

Discuss Proposed Bill

In another development related to the controversy over court-ordered integration at Central high, Rep. Brooks Hays [D., Ark.] conferred with Gov. Orval Faubus for 90 minutes today on a bill Hays says he will introduce for a congressional study of school desegregation.

Afterward Faubus said he thought that such a study would be a good thing.

"It might convince the government of the impropriety of entering the field of education," he said. He declined further comment.

LITTLE ROCK ASKS STAY

Integration Harms Education, School Board Tells Court

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 20 (UP) — The Little Rock School Board asked the United States District Court tonight for a stay of compliance with its plan for gradual school integration.

The board said the quality of education at Central High School had been "impaired" by integration.

A twenty-four-member committee of Little Rock business men and civic leaders suggested to the school board yesterday that it ask such a delay, citing racial incidents since nine Negroes enrolled at the school Sept. 25 while United States troops kept order.

A similar request by the board for such a stay Oct. 3 plea was rejected by Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N. D., sitting on the Arkansas bench temporarily.

The petition was signed by School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom and the school board.

Harvard Prof. Examines Local Attitudes In Little Rock

Fear Withdrawal Of Federal Troops

Boston, Mass., Feb. 11 — Using his soft Virginia accent as an unobtrusive password, Prof. Thomas F. Pettigrew of Harvard recently spent three weeks examining local attitudes in post-crisis Little Rock.

His report on what he found inside the shop doors and on the back porches of the still uneasy Arkansas capital is a study in boycott and counterboycott, and of delicately balanced political interests pinning federal troops to Central High School for opposite reasons.

Professor Pettigrew, a teacher of social psychology at Harvard reported a sample of his findings —and made some broader assessments of coming chess moves by both black and white forces in the South—during a radio-TV interview Jan. 29. with WGBH news analyst Louis M. Lyons.

Two-way Boycotts

Economic boycott, the professor said, is being employed by both integration and segregation forces, James T. Karam, a confidant of Arkansas Gov. Orvil Faubus and a man implicated as an instigator of prosegregation riots in September, has suffered, according to Dr. Pettigrew a notable drop in his dry goods business.

White Citizens Council leaders, on the other hand, are using boycott methods in an attempt to harass the moderation-counciling, anti - Faubus Arkansas Gazette. Professor Pettigrew reports they are distributing auto stickers inscribed "Gazette Ad, Too Bad" as a warning to local advertisers.

Bread sales dropped off for one Little Rock bakery after the owner's daughter had been quoted in national interviews as favoring integration. Dr. Pettigrew states wrily that local Negroes say they are trying to eat as much of the bread as possible to counteract the segregationist boycott but that the bread just isn't that good.

Governor Faubus, the Harvard professor feels, still is riding the crest of popularity won by some shrewd political moves. "If he ran tomorrow for reelection, he would win maybe 10 to 1," the professor declared.

"But if the troops should pull out and there were no further violence," Professor Pettigrew added, "Faubus would lose a good deal of his support."

Asked by Mr. Lyons why there had been no moves to withdraw the troops, despite President Eisenhower's implied readiness to do so, Dr. Pettigrew said local political authorities were the ones holding back. For various reasons, he said, the three major forces in the Little Rock picture all want the troops to remain, distasteful as their presence is to the general populace.

The Arkansas National Association for the Advancement of Colored People group and other integrationists feel, he said, that the troops' continued presence helps establish more firmly the right of Negro children to attend integrated schools.

Segregationists see political advantage in the troops' presence, according to Professor Pettigrew, because it confirms their dire predictions of "bayonet rule."

Little Rock's businessmen and moderate civic groups do not want the troops removed at present because they fear a return of violence, according to the professor.

He'll Return Her to Central High

Suspended Girl's Dad Irked

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(UP) —The father of a white girl suspended from integrated Central High School because of a racial incident says he will take his daughter back to school Monday.

"I hope she will be afforded the same federal protection . . . extensively provided the nine Negroes," Jay Parker, the father said.

Superintendent of Schools Virgil Blossom said 16-year-old Sammie Dean Parker, who allegedly distributed cards reading "One down—eight to go," had been suspended for the rest of the school year.

Parker called it "expulsion" and said he plans to accompany her to Central High Monday in an attempt to have her re-enter the school.

The girl was suspended two weeks ago supposedly for distributing cards with the slogan referring to the expulsion of Minniejean Brown, one of the nine Negro students, earlier this month.

Minniejean was barred from the school after she had been involved in several quarrels with white students.

Parker charged, "My daughter is being persecuted and is being used to intimidate every white child at Central High School."

Calm Is Broken At Little Rock School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — The calm at Little Rock's integrated Central High School was shattered Friday by at least two racial incidents and a bomb scare.

Little Rock school superintendent Virgil Blossom confirmed two incidents involving white and Negro students but refused comment on a reported third clash.

Blossom said one student struck another with a purse in the school halls and, during the noon lunch period, a white boy and a Negro girl were involved in a "soup-throwing incident."

Other sources indicated the purse argument involved a 10th grade white girl, Miss Frankie Ann Gregg, and a Negro girl student, Miss Minnie Jean Brown, 16.

Mrs. Frank Gregg, Jr., Frankie Ann's mother, said the two girls brushed in a hallway and Miss Brown called her daughter "white trash." The mother said:

"I don't think she (Frankie) should have to put up with that sort of thing," and announced she was withdrawing her daughter from school.

The bomb scare, rapidly becoming a routine matter at the school, occurred when an unidentified woman telephone the switchboard of a local television station and said explosives were planted in the school.

Authorities searched but found no bomb. The building was not evacuated.

The alleged third incident involved a Negro girl reportedly kicked by a white boy in a school corridor.

Ashmore Says Little Rock Stand's 'Pat'

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP)—Harry Ashmore, editor of the Arkansas Gazette of Little Rock, has made no change in his position with regard to sending federal troops into Little Rock last fall.

An abbreviated report of his comments at a news conference here last Friday led some persons to believe he had changed his stand. He was quoted as saying the sending of troops to the city was a "tragic event" and one for which the Eisenhower administration "should be indicted."

"I said it is a tragedy that federal troops should have to be used to maintain order and uphold the federal courts," Ashmore said Monday.

"I further said that after Gov. Faubus had employed the National Guard to defy the federal courts, the Eisenhower administration had no option but to meet force with force. I do feel that the Eisenhower administration is to be indicted for its inaction after the Supreme Court decision of [illegible] judgment, allowed this tragic condition to develop."

Return of Little Rock 7 forecast

Baltimore P. I

WASHINGTON — "We have no doubt that the Court of Appeals will recognize the vital importance of the time element in this litigation and that it will act upon the application for a stay or the appeal in time for arrangements to be made for the next school year."

The above section of the Supreme Court's denial of the NAACP petition for bypassing of the Court of Appeals in its effort to secure reversal of Judge Harry J. Lemley's Central High School integration postponement order was widely intepreted in in legal circles this week as "a virtual mandate" for a speedy Court of Appeals ruling on the lower court decision.

* * *

HIGHLY informed sources, who asked that their names be withheld from publication, freely predicted that the Eighth United States Court of Appeals at St. Louis would grant a stay to bar enforcement of Judge Lemley's order and that the seven colored pupils would go back to Central High School in September.

In support of their contention, they claimed that Judge Lemley had, in effect, taken it upon himself to reverse the U.S. Court of Appeals, acting upon alleged conditions in the community and at Central High School which were not issues at [illegible]

AND when the order is stayed, permitting the seven colored children to continue their schooling at Central High, these sources believe it will make no difference how long it takes the Court of Appeals to hold a hearing on the NAACP appeal from the ruling of Judge Lemley.

The background of the case, which has now become a cause celebre, follows:

In 1955 the NAACP filed on behalf of the minor plaintiffs between the ages of 6 and 21 years a complaint in the Federal District Court at Little Rock. Named as defendants in the suit were the president and secretary of the Board of Directors of the Little Rock School District, the superintendent of the Little Rock School District, and the Little Rock School Board.

Superintendent Virgil Blossom and the school board submitted to the court a plan for the gradual desegregation of Little Rock schools, which was approved.

The plan consisted of a three-phase desegregation program: The high schools were to be desegregated first, next the junior high schools, and lastly the elementary schools, covering a period of about eight years.

The NAACP, being dissatisfied with the order of the District Court approving the plan, appealed. The Court of Appeals affirmed the action of the District Court.

* * *

IN AUGUST, 1957, Mrs. Clyde Thomason, a white woman, filed a suit against the Little Rock school board in the Pulaski County (Ark.) Chancery Court to enjoin them from putting their plan into operation. A temporary injunction was issued Aug. 29, 1957.

Upon application of the school board, the Federal District Court on Aug. 30, 1957, enjoined Mrs. Thomason from further proceeding in the state court. The United States Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment of the District Court.

Desegregation under the plan was to start at the high-school level with the 1957-58 school year, which began Sept. 3, 1957.

After an elaborate "screening process," Supt. Blossom arranged to enroll nine colored students in the formerly lily-white Central High School.

On the night of Sept. 2, however, Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, stationed units of the Arkansas National Guard at the Central High School to keep the nine colored children from entering the school.

The Little Rock school board, upon learning of Faubus' action, asked the Federal District Court on the morning of Sept. 3, 1957, for instructions.

The District Court on the same date ordered the school board to put its plan for integration into operation "forthwith."

* * *

ON SEPT. 4, the nine colored children — Gloria Ray, Jefferson Thomas, Carlotta Walls, Thelma Mothershed, Terrance Roberts, Minnie Brown, Melba Patillo, Elizabeth Ann Eckford, Jane Hill and Ernest Green — were forcibly prevented by the Arkansas National Guard from entering and attending classes at Central High.

On Sept. 5, the school board filed a petition for a temporary suspension of the operation of its plan of integration. The District Court denied this application on Sept. 5.

On Sept. 9, the District Court entered an order inviting the United States to enter the case as a friend of the court and to institute injunction proceedings against Gov. Faubus, General Sherman T. Clinger, Adjustant General of Arkansas, and Lieut. Col. Marion E. Johnson, unit commander of the Arkansas National Guard, to prohibit obstruction of the District Court orders directing the school board to carry out its integration plan.

Former Attorney General Herbert Brownell and United States Attorney Osro Cobb intervened and, after a hearing on Sept. 20, a preliminary injunction was issued against Faubus, Clinger and Johnson, forbidding them from interfering with the orders of the District Court.

Faubus obeyed the order but appealed. The Court of Appeals affirmed the action of the District Court.

ON SEPT. 23, the colored students entered Central High School under the protection of the Little Rock Police Department. But they were removed by Supt. Blossom after a large crowd gathered around Central High.

From the United States Naval Base at Newport, R.I., where he was vacationing, President Eisenhower on Sept. 23 issued a proclamation commanding all persons engaged in obstructing the enforcement of the District Court orders to desegregation of Central High School to cease and desist and disperse "forthwith."

The mob again gathered in front of Central High on Sept. 24 to prevent the carrying out of the court's order for the admission of the colored children, and President Eisenhower issued an executive order directing the use of troops under Federal authority to aid in the execution of Federal law at Little Rock.

In an address delivered from his office at the White House on the night of Sept. 24, President Eisenhower declared that "Mob rule cannot be allowed to override the decisions of the courts."

The colored students were returned to Central High under the protection of units of the 101st Airborne Division (paratroopers) and the Federalized Arkansas National Guard.

Federal troops remained in Little Rock until school closed last May 28. After Federal troops were stationed at Central High, the crowds dispersed and remained dispersed until the end of the school year.

During the school year, one colored student was expelled and one colored student, Ernest Green, was graduated.

* * *

ON FEB. 20 the school board filed a petition in the District Court. The school board asked that the plan of integration be realistically reconsidered in the light of existing conditions and that in the interest of all pupils the beginning date of integration be postponed until such time as the concept of 'all deliberate speed' can be clearly defined and effective legal procedures can be obtained which will enable the (school) District to integrate without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

Feb. 26 the NAACP filed a motion to dismiss the petition upon the ground that it failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner of the Court of Appeals designated Judge Lemley to hear the petition since there was no other judge regularly assigned to the Eastern District of Arkansas and since there was great public interest in the school board's petition.

* * *

APRIL 28, Judge Lemley held a preliminary hearing. He directed that the original petition be amended to disclose whether the school board desired time to reconsider the plan or whether it simply desired a "moratorium" or a "cooling off" period and to indicate a definite time during which the postponement was desired.

The board filed a substitute petition asking for a suspension until January, 1961.

The NAACP again moved to dismiss on the ground that the school board was not entitled to the relief sought and on the ground that the colored students had a vested interest to remain in Central High.

June 3, Judge Lemley began the hearing on the school board's petition which was then amended.

In the amended petition the school board alleged that because of the repeated daily incidents within the school, the educational program at Central High had been so impaired that colored and white pupils had both suffered and would continue to suffer unless the requested delay was granted.

Testimony introduced at the hearing by the school board was designed to show that during the school year the following occurred:

1. There were a large number of disciplinary problems involving pupils in the school. Although there were no incidents in the classrooms, there were a number of incidents in the halls and cafeteria.

These incidents consisted mainly of "slugging, pushing, tripping, catcalls, abusive language, destruction of lockers," all directed against the colored pupils.

2. Tension among pupils and teachers resulted from the presence of the nine colored children.

3. Bomb threats, 43 in number, necessitated numerous searches of the school building to determine whether any bombs were in the school. Such threats, most of which were broadcast on the local radio and television stations, brought calls from parents and the withdrawal of pupils for the day.

4. Destruction of school property by acts of vadalism and mischief necessitating the expenditure of funds which might otherwise have been used for painting and to repair damages.

5. Misconduct on the part of some students, resulting in about 200 suspensions for short periods of time and two permanent expulsions.

6. In some classes the amount of work generally covered in previous years was not covered, and in one instance the teacher requested that the achievement examination be not given this year.

7. The administrative staff was required to spend a great deal of time making reports of alleged incidents arising out of the presence of the colored pupils and removing photographers and other unauthorized persons from the school premises.

8. Social clubs, some of the in-service training programs, and some of the extra curricular school activities received less attention than in the preceding years.

* * *

WITH THE exception of the vice principal for boys, the other teachers and administrative staff, who testified for the school board, believed that the presence of the colored children in Central High next year would result in a continuance of these incidents, preventing white children from receiving "quality education."

The NAACP moved to strike the testimony of all of the school board witnesses on the ground that it was irrelevant and immaterial to the issues. None of the testimony was stricken.

The NAACP offered the testimony of two witnesses, both of whom are experts in school administration. These witnesses testified that if stronger disciplinary measures had been instituted by the school authorities, the incidents occurring within the school would have been minimal and if such stronger disciplinary measures are used in September, the colored pupils could continue in Central High without impairment of its teaching program.

The school board claimed that its determination that its integration plan should be suspended for two and a half years was based upon the facts that (1) Faubus probably would not be governor in 1961, (2) the constitutionality of the anti-integration laws passed by the Arkansas legislature in 1957 probably would be determined by the courts and the attitude of state officials, which is now one of total opposition, may have changed, and (3) educational standards have been lowered.

• • •

JUNE 21, Judge Lemley entered an order suspending the plan of gradual integration until the mid-semester of the 1960-61 school year, without the school board being considered, either collectively or individually, in contempt of court.

On the same day the NAACP filed a notice of appeal in the Court of Appeals and asked Judge Lemley for a stay of his order.

June 23, the application for a stay was denied.

June 24, the NAACP applied to the Court of Appeals for a stay of Lemley's order pending appeal and on the same day the appeal was docketed in the Court of Appeals.

June 26, the NAACP asked the Supreme Court to review the case before the Court of Appeals passed upon it.

June 30, the Supreme Court denied the NAACP's request.

Return To Central High Seen For Little Rock, Ark. Students

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, — (NNPA) — The seven colored students who attended Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., last school year will be back in that school at the beginning of the next school year informed sources here believe.

These sources, who asked that their names be withheld from publication, predicted that the Eighth United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis will grant a stay of the order of Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley postponing integration at Central High for two and a half years.

If and when the order is stayed permitting the seven colored children to continue their schooling at Central High, these sources believe it will make no difference how long it takes the Court of Appeals to hold a hearing on the NAACP appeal from the ruling of Judge Lemley.

New Little Rock Ruling Disgusts Negroes

Editor's Note:

The circumstances surrounding the recent Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley decision halting integration in Little Rock's Central High School came like a bolt of lightening to America's largest minority race — the American Negro People. World-wide attention was also gained in that while America is trying to win friendship abroad — such an un-Democratic decision as handed down by Judge Lemley, a pro- southerner can only make a "MOCKERY" of our American way of life, at home and abroad.

BY BISHOP H. J. McFALL

Little Rock, Arkansas — During the weekend, America faced one of its greatest shocks of more than a decade when a Southern loyalist judge rendered a decision staying the order of integration in Little Rock's Central High School.

Mob violence caused President Eisenhower to send in federal troops to protect Negro children when ignorant white mobsters launched a campaign of terror against Negro students enrolled in Central High. Their action was in direct violation of our United States Supreme Court edic ordering integration in the public schools of Little Rock.

We, of the North and elsewhere in the nation who believe in law and order and the principles of the Constitution of the United States of America and the provisions of the Bill of Rights are shocked at the lack of judicial prowess displayed by Judge Lemley.

In rendering his decision Judge Lemley said, "this does not mean a surrender to unlawful force or violence." We, as Negro Americans fail to interpret this statement. What is ment by "surrender to unlawful force or violence?"

Each day that an American Negro child is denied entrance into any public school maintained by public funds and taxes paid by the American Negro people — because of mob violence or threats "it is a SURRENDER TO UNLAWFUL FORCE AND VIOLENCE."

Under Lemley's ruling, the seven American Negro children enrolled at Central High School will be barred from entering the school come the September semester.

NAACP Files Appeal

Wiley Branton, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed a notice of an appeal. In his motion he asked that Lemley grant a stay of execution until the appeal is heard in a higher court.

The appeal would be heard in the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, Mo.

The NAACP was the first group to present the integration to the United States Supreme Court which resulted in a ruling in favor of integration in Litle Rock's Central High School.

Dixiecrates Hail "Injustice"

Southerners hailed Lemley's decision which gave impetus to continued segregation and second-class citizenship for all American Negro children in public schools thru-out the south. It was revealed that Lemley said, "he loved the South so much, until it was a religion with him."

William P. Rogers the present Attorney General of the United States who suceeded Attorney Gen. Brownell who was in office when the integration issue started, declined to comment on Lemley's decision.

Senator Mike Mansfield (D) Montana said the lawful responsibility is now in the hands of the executive (President Eisenhower.)

At press time four American Negro leaders were meeting with "Ike" presumably to discuss the seriousness of the Little Rock issue. They were: Lester Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League; A. Philip Randolph, vice-president AFL-CIO pullman porters' union; Dr. Martin Luther King, famous Negro clergyman who led the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott and Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP.

ICW Seeks "Ike's" Aid

Officials of International Wings Church Corporation with headquarters in Chicago sent a communication to President Eisenhower following Judge Lemley's decision asking him to use the influence of his office to protect the rights of American Negro children in Little Rock as well as elsewhere in the nation.

Victory and Defeat

The refusal of the United States Supreme Court to intervene extraordinarily in the crisis caused by Judge Lemley's decision before the Eighth District Court of Appeals has acted, is unquestionably a setback, if not a defeat.

Unless the Court of Appeals acts before the beginning of the 1958 school term, the Negro children who finished their first term at Little Rock's Central High School will be unable to return to their classes, and the White Citizens Councils and Governor Faubus will have won a victory.

It will be much more difficult to attain the goal of public school integration in Little Rock after school opens minus Negro students.

On the other hand, a great victory has been won in California where a state court has decreed that there can be no racial discrimination in the sale of housing involving Federal Housing Administration or Veterans Administration financing; meaning that a large proportion of the new housing can no longer be marketed on a tacit white-only basis.

The victory, of course, was won by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the victory means that Negroes can now buy homes anywhere that they can persuade the owner to sell; but because of the barriers erected by the FHA, and VA-backed, they have been forced into private financing with exorbitant interest rates.

With this explicit sanction against racial discrimination, a whole new area is opened to colored people in housing.

Court's Staying of Desegregation Seen Slowing Process Elsewhere

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 28—Since the 1954 and 1955 decisions declaring school segregation unconstitutional and ordering its end "with all deliberate speed," the Supreme Court has deliberately steered clear of the school controversy. It has left the complex problems of implementing the decisions to be worked out by the lower courts.

This week, in a sudden and unexpected development, the most critical question to arise in the segregation area since 1955 was put to the Supreme Court. The question, stated broadly, is this:

Does local resistance to integration, culminating in acts of violence and unrest inside the schools, justify suspending a desegregation program already in effect so that the schools and community may have a breathing spell?

The question was posed a week ago today, when Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley handed down his decision suspending the school integration program of Little Rock, Ark., for two and one-half years. Once again Little Rock was a national and world symbol of the racial problem.

Judge Lemley based his order on "intolerable" conditions that he found had developed inside Little Rock's Central High School. Nine Negro children had attended the school under Federal military protection in the past school year after the courts stopped Gov. Orval Faubus' use of the National Guard to block integration.

The decision underscored the grave difficulties facing attempts to mix even a handful of Negro children into white schools in the Deep South. And, in particular, it exposed the terrible burdens put on two institutions as the unwilling levers of social change—the Federal courts and the schools.

Legal Situation

So far as Little Rock itself is concerned, the legal situation centers on a question of time: Can appellate review of Judge Lemley's order be obtained by the start of the next school term in September?

A reversal of the order after that date would put the Negro children back in school in midterm after withdrawing. And that would add still another unsettling element to a turbulent situation.

Attorneys of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed a prompt notice of appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. Then, invoking a procedure used only in extraordinary circumstances, they asked the Supreme Court to by-pass the Eighth Circuit and review the case immediately.

Should the Supreme Court agree to take the case at this time, it would have to call a special term or work past its expected adjournment Monday. In either case it would be expected to hand down its decision before September.

If the Supreme Court refuses to review Judge Lemley's order under emergency procedures the N.A.A.C.P. will have to ask the Eighth Circuit to sit in special session this summer.

If the N.A.A.C.P. cannot get a review on the merits in either of the appelate courts before September, its only way of keeping the Negro children at Central High School will be to obtain a stay of Judge Lemley's order pending appeal. He has refused a stay himself, and the N.A.A.C.P. has appealed that refusal to the Court of Appeals. It can go, finally, to Supreme Court Justice Charles Evans Whittaker, sitting as Circuit Justice for that circuit.

Judge Lemley's decision was based on the desirability of a "peaceful interlude" in Little Rock. And there seems no reason to doubt that, leaving other questions aside, majority sentiment in Little Rock shares the desire for such a breathing spell.

'Breathing Spell'

The school board, which originally proposed the plan for gradual desegregation, had asked Judge Lemley to suspend it. Harry S. Ashmore, the Little Rock editor who was Governor Faubus' most telling critic last fall, said the "breathing spell" was "welcome." There was no disputing the judge's statement that troops cannot "create a climate that is conducive to education."

But Judge Lemley's order involves more, much more, than the climate in Little Rock Central High School. It involves no less than the course of school integration throughout the entire South.

In his editorial on Judge Lemley's order, Mr. Ashmore wrote that if the higher courts uphold it, they would be saying in effect: "Wherever pressure against desegregation is physical rather than merely verbal the Supreme Court decision can be, and indeed must be, suspended."

If the order is eventually upheld, then, it must surely have consequences outside Little Rock. In other cities, too, a determined group opposed to integration could create disorder. State officials and school authorities, either by desire or under the pressure of public opinion, might not restore discipline. Federal courts, under the rule laid down by Judge Lemley, would then be bound to suspend whatever steps had been taken to bring Negro children into white schools.

The result would almost certainly be to slow down acceptance of the Supreme Court decision. It could be to stop further school integration in the Deep South and even to undo programs already under way.

Opposition Argument

That is why the argument is made by those favoring the end of segregated schools that the proper resolution of Central High School's problems was not to give way to disorder, but to put the burden on school officials to meet it as best they could. It is noted, for example, that the school board did not follow the example of the board in Hoxie, Ark., and seek Federal injunctions against troublemakers.

The N.A.A.C.P.'s petition in the Supreme Court thus characterized Judge Lemley's reasoning:

"Such a rule of law could be interpreted only as a concession that * * * violence and its concommitant consequences are grounds for denying basic freedoms. Such a position is but an invitation to violence and to substituting a government of mob for one of laws."

Judiciary's Burden

One truth hammered home by this week's crisis is that the Federal judiciary is carrying the burden of the school segregation problem virtually alone.

President Eisenhower has been extremely reluctant to take any affirmative role in the whole transition of Southern race relations. He has said repeatedly that the job is for the courts, with help from the Executive only at their request. The Justice Department, following his philosophy, showed no inclination this week to enter the Little Rock case as a friend of the court.

This means that the course of compliance with the Supreme Court's decision has been determined by a scattering of private lawsuits. The courts, traditionally limited to knowledge of the facts presented by the litigants in the particular case, cannot lay down broad plans.

Planning the solution of national problems is traditionally, in the American system, the role of the Executive Branch. It is fair to say that the Executive Branch has played no part whatsoever, since 1954, in suggesting appropriate means to make the Supreme Court decision effective or in resolving the tensions it has caused.

Bid to Congress

The Little Rock school superintendent, Virgil Blossom, called almost plaintively this week for action by Congress.

But the realistic truth is that Congress is disabled by Southern power in the Senate from taking any action to implement school integration. It struck from the Administration's civil rights bill last year the one section aimed at the school situation—a provision to let the Attorney General bring civil suits on behalf of private persons' rights, including the right to unsegregated schooling.

Whether the Executive Branch could or should have done more than it has in the last four years without Congressional authorization is a matter of debate. Proposals run from moral leadership and personal persuasion by the President to a more active legal role for the Justice Department.

Whatever the reasons, the fact is that the Executive and Legislative Branches of the United States Government are taking almost no part in the solution of this country's most pressing domestic issue—racial segregation in the public schools.

HIGH COURT BARS LITTLE ROCK PLEA

Suggests Appeals Bench Set Integration Stay Review Before School Term

Text of the opinion will be found on Page 20.

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 30—The Supreme Court refused today to review on an emergency basis the order suspending school integration in Little Rock until January, 1961.

But the high court strongly suggested that the case be reviewed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit before the next school term begins in September. That court has recessed for the summer.

"We have no doubt," the Supreme Court said in a short unsigned order, "that the Court of Appeals will recognize the vital importance of the time element in this litigation, and that it will act upon the application for a stay or the appeal in ample time to permit arrangements to be made for the next school year."

Lawyers of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had asked the Supreme Court to by-pass the Eighth Circuit and hear the case this summer to assure early and final review.

Notice of Appeal Filed

A notice of appeal from District Judge Harry J. Lemley's suspension decision has been filed with the Eighth Circuit. So has an application for a stay of the decision pending its appeal. Judge Lemley denied a stay.

If the Eighth Circuit were to grant the stay, the need for speed would be gone, from the N. A. A. C. P.'s viewpoint. Little Rock Central High School would open with a handful of Negro children among the whites, as this past year, while the appeal was argued.

Chief Justice Earl Warren read the order to a packed courtroom at the end of a busy and dramatic day—the last in the high court's 1957-58 term.

Twenty-one cases that had been argued earlier in the term were decided today—with forty opinions. The Chief Justice announced that the court had disposed of all its pending business before recessing. It meets next on Oct. 6.

The way the court disposed of the Little Rock case was unusual in a number of respects.

Ordinarily petitions for certiorari — asking the court to hear a case — are granted or denied without comment. Today there were explanatory words, and the court took the further unusual step of having Chief Justice Warren read the order in full in the courtroom.

The Chief Justice reviewed the legal history of the Little Rock case succinctly, without reference to the facts—the use of the National Guard by Arkansas Governor Orval E. Faubus to exclude nine Negro children, the dispatch of Federal troops to put down rioting, the remaining disorder that Judge Lemley found made conditions in the school "intolerable."

Then the court's unsigned order noted the request of the N. A. A. C. P. attorneys "to bring the case here before the Court of Appeals has had an opportunity to act upon the petition for a stay or to hear the appeal."

Power Exercised Rarely

The Supreme Court has statutory power to decide cases before judgment in the Court of Appeals. But the order said that power "has been exercised but rarely, and the issues and circumstances relevant to the present petition do not warrant its exercise now."

The Eighth Circuit has passed on the Little Rock case three times already, the Supreme Court order said, and "is the regular court for reviewing orders of the District Court here concerned." The conclusion was that the request for a stay and appeal "are matters properly to be adjudicated by it [the Court of Appeals] in the first instance."

Thurgood Marshall of the N. A. A. C. P. legal staff had said in his petition that there was "urgent need for final review" of Judge Lemley's order by the Supreme Court "at the earliest possible time."

He argued that the decision would encourage "lawless elements opposing compliance" with court orders directing admission of Negro children to hitherto all-white schools. And he said that, at a time when school boards in many areas were considering the segregation problem, the decision would cause "confusion throughout the nation."

Mr. Marshall's petition was filed last Thursday. The Little Rock School Board, which had requested the suspension of its own integration plan, did not file a reply. It had thirty days to do so under the rules and was not asked by the Supreme Court to speed up its answer.

What They're Saying Of Little Rock

Excerpts From Editorial Comment On The Decision To Delay Integration At Central High Until 1961

Rochester Times-Union

CERTAINLY the Little Rock plan which sought the easiest possible way went sour. The blame can be placed on Gov. Orval Faubus who called out the National Guard to keep the nine selected Negroes out of the high school. But when the command of the Guard was taken out of his hands by federalizing it there was still no gain for the authority of the federal courts.

Desegregation has been set back less by the district court's new opinion than by the necessity for troops to enforce a court order throughout the school year. Again it is shown that force has its limits in changing the opinions of men.

◆

The Washington Post

HOWEVER one looks at it, United States District Judge Harry J. Lemley has struck a severe blow at the cause of integration in the public schools. If it should stand, his decision granting the request of the Little Rock School Board for resegregation of the Central High School would be an unmistakable step backward.

The Little Rock School Board appears to have based its appeal for two and a half years more of segregation on the belief that by that time Gov. Faubus would no longer be in office. But what kind of reasoning is this? Are rights to be suspended because an unenlightened and unreasonable state executive is willing to wreck the school system and defy the federal courts in his efforts to thwart enforcement of the Constitution?

◆

The Arkansas Gazette

AS WE observed here when Gov. Faubus first called out his state militia to block the admission of nine Negro children under court order, the use of force could not in itself bring about any resolution of the problem, and would only worsen it. Armed men can keep Negro children out of school, as Mr. Faubus' did, and armed men can keep them in, as President Eisenhower's did—but the great issue drawn here can only be settled by law.

Judge Lemley's order, then, is not in that sense any sort of settlement —only, as he himself characterized it, a "tactical delay."

If the higher courts sustain Judge Lemley this beleaguered community has gained a breathing spell, and it is welcome.

◆

The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK'S difficult experiment in the integration of students of the white and Negro races in the public schools will be interrupted for at least two and a half years if an order issued by United States District Judge Harry J. Lemley on Saturday is sustained.

Judge Lemley based his decision on "the unfortunate racial strife and tension which existed in Little Rock during the past year and still exists there." Even that sturdy battler for decency, Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, has conceded that conditions in the Central High School of Little Rock are "intolerable."

But shall mob actions in the streets outside a school, or continued harassments inside a school, be allowed, unrepressed and unrebuked, to cancel out a decision of our highest court? Is this what the people of the state of Arkansas or any other state, North or South, really want? Do they desire a minority to rule? We don't believe so. For, if this were possible in the present instance, what would be left, in any debatable field, of the whole fabric of our constitutional law?

◆

Memphis Commercial Appeal

IN HIS original opinion of last Saturday, Judge Lemley said that "it is important to realize that to grant the stay [or suspension] requested by the board [Little Rock School] will not deprive any Negro student of a good high school education. In 1957 the completely new and up-to-date Horace Mann High School for Negroes was put into operation, and in that school, apart from any question of integration, the Negro students can receive an education equal to that provided in Central High School."

It will be to "the larger interests of both races" and to the benefit of education and public peace if Judge Lemley's order is upheld.

◆

The Charlotte Observer

JUDGE LEMLEY'S order may quiet the furies for a while at a single school in a single city. It may, in the process, stir them at a dozen other points.

We doubt that a circuit court of appeals, looking closer at the broad effects, will allow the order to stand.

◆

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

FROM the standpoint of justice, the order [to delay] appears to punish the wrong persons. For the Negro students are being denied their just rights, while the instigators and perpetrators of violence against them go untouched.

From the standpoint of practicality, which is the seeming basis for Judge Lemley's order, the question is not entirely whether integration and education were breaking down, for both were proceeding if in distressing fashion. The fundamental question is what will be gained by two and a half years of delay?

◆

The Dallas Morning News

IN ALL probability Judge Lemley's decision considered, as NAACP has not, and doubtless others have not, that the chief interests to be served are those of the school population itself, white and black. It is the youngsters who have been made the victims of the difficult situation. Surely anything that can contribute to relieving the pressure on these hapless sacrifices to adult discord is sound. The Lemley "postponement" so contributes.

◆

Richmond Times-Dispatch

JUDGE LEMLEY'S decision is encouraging to Virginia, since it shows that some of the courts, at least, will listen to reason, and grant extension of time, when situations threaten to get out of hand. It shows the value of postponing dangerous showdowns by as many legal delays, as possible, as Virginia is now doing.

Little Rock Board Says Negro Facilities Are Equal

Tue 6-13-58
P. 1

NAACP PLAN SPURNED

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, June 12.—The Little Rock School Board Thursday argued there will be "no damaging effect" on Negro education here if an interruption in the integration schedule is allowed by Federal Courts.

The board, in a final brief filed on its petition to suspend integrated classes for two and a half years, argued that although Negro plaintiffs would be "disappointed," they would have Negro school facilities equal to those at Central High School.

Follows Court Suggestion

The brief was filed by Richard C. Butler and Archie F. House, school board attorneys, in accordance with final briefs suggested by Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley last week when he concluded oral arguments on the board's petition.

The board has asked that integration, because of turmoil and tension last year at Central High, be suspended until January, 1961. Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People oppose the request.

The school board noted that officials here were aware courts no longer recognize the "separate-but-equal" facilities doctrine prevailing before the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation ruling. But it added that if a delay or "cooling off" period is granted, Negro students would have a high school whose plant, equipment and faculty rating "are equal to those of Central High School."

New Negro School

The reference was to Negro Horace Mann High School, built about two years ago.

The school board also took sharp issue with NAACP arguments that it should seek injunctions to ferret out troublemakers at Central High, similar to what was done in Tennessee against segregationist John Kasper, and at Hoxie about two years ago.

Unlike those two cases, the board argued, Little Rock faced far more numerous and widespread opposition to the integration order.

"The officials of the district are not in the least hesitant in stating now that in their opinion it is no function of the district to convert itself into a law enforcing agency," the brief stated.

Burden Too Great

"The burden of punishing many residents of the community for their actions in obstructing integration in accordance with the order of this court is too great to place on petitioners. Besides, they are supposed to devote their time to operating a school and preserving educational standards."

As to two out-of-state witnesses brought here last week by NAACP counsel to argue against the delay, the board's attorneys said their attempts to "diagnose and suggest a cure borders on the preposterous."

That was a reference to testimony offered by two New York educators described as "experts" in the field of school administration. The school board noted that both lived more than 1,000 miles from Little Rock, had never tried to operate a school under conditions which the local district faced and "knew nothing of the temper of the mobs which formed or the tension which thereafter developed."

High Bench Calls For Action Before Schools Reopen

Tue 6-17-58
P. 1

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

The Supreme Court refused to enter the controversial Little Rock integration case yesterday and told the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis to consider it before September.

In contention is a June 21 order by Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley which suspended integration in Little Rock until 1961 at the request of the city's School Board.

Attorneys for Negroes in Little Rock asked the Supreme Court to permit a direct appeal of the suspension order which, they said, was "an invitation to violence and to substituting a government of mob rule for one of laws."

Court Recesses

A direct appeal would have bypassed the Eighth Circuit Court and would have necessitated a special session of the Supreme Court which wound up its docket and recessed for the summer yesterday.

But, as its last order of business, the Supreme Court rejected a direct appeal in a brief, unsigned order read by Chief Justice Earl Warren.

The Court noted that the Negroes had filed an appeal in the Eighth Circuit Court before they attempted to bypass it. Such a direct appeal is exercised rarely, the Supreme Court said, adding: "The issues and circumstances relevant to the present petition do not warrant its exercise now."

Post

Then the Supreme Court, with this language, told the Eighth Circuit Court to take action soon:

"We have no doubt that the Court of Appeals will recognize the vital importance of the time element in this litigation, and that it will act upon the application for a stay or the appeal in ample time to permit arrangements to be made for the next school year."

The "hint' to the Circuit Court apparently wasn't necessary. A spokesman for that court said the judges, in summer recess since May 13 and not scheduled to meet again until Sept. 10, were waiting for the Little Rock School Boards reply before dealing with the case.

The Circuit Court then will take action either by mail or by holding a special session this summer, he said.

The Supreme Court order noted the Little Rock case had been before the Eighth Circuit Court three times already. Once was in April, 1957, when the appellate court upheld the School Board's gradual desegregation plan over the objections of the Negroes who said it was too slow.

After Gov. Orval E. Faubus called out his Arkansas National Guard troops to keep nine Negroes out of Central High School last September and President Eisenhower sent Army paratroopers to enforce the court desegregation order, the case came before the Eighth Circuit Court again last April 28.

At that time, the Circuit Court censured Faubus for his use of troops, stating such a course could lead onty to "a complete breakdown of government." The court also rejected appeals claiming the use of Federal troops was illegal.

Early this month, the School Board asked Judge Lemley to suspend the integration program, citing continuous trouble within the school as injurious to educational standards. Lemley, in his decision, acknowledged existence of an "intolerable" situation and suspended integration "in the public interest."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People claimed Lemley's decision created "instability" and "confusion" in areas considering or facing desegregation, and asked that it be reversed before school begins in September.

Says Superintendent Blossom Could Have Controlled Situation

By PHIL NEWMAN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI)—Little Rock's torrid three-day integration hearing ended with two New York educators telling U. S. District Judge Harry Lemley school authorities weren't tough enough with student segregationists who piloted riots, terrorism and tense incidents.

Lemley told Little Rock school board, petitioning for de-integration at Central High school until mid-term, 1961, he would not hand down a decision for at least a week.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People called only two witnesses against the board's petition.

Syracuse (N.Y.) university Dean of Education Dr. Virgil M. Rogers and David G. Salten, superintendent of schools at Long Beach, N. Y., both urged Lemley not to de-integrate Central.

They said there was no opposition to integration that stern discipline can't overcome.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — Superintendent of Schools Virgil Blossom charged in Federal court Wednesday that Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia and Roy Harris, Augusta, Ga., editor, spoiled the school board's plans for gradual integration of Little Rock's schools.

The opposition to integration of Central High broke out in an open riot last September and President Eisenhower sent in 1,000 troops of the 101st Airborne Division to protect nine Negroes who integrated Central.

Now the school board has asked U. S. District Judge Harry Lemley to de-integrate Central until mid-term, 1961, because eight months of integration proved that students can't be instructed properly in a continual uproar.

Address Segregated Rallies

Blossom, testifying on a hearing before Judge Lemley on the school board's request, explained that Griffin and Harris, editor of the weekly Augusta, Ga. Chronicle, spoke before segregation rallies in Little Rock last Summer.

"I felt up to that time we had a chance of getting people to accept the gradual integration plan)," he said. "I felt very apprehensive after the appearance of Governor Griffin and Harris."

He said "considerable opposition" arose after the appearance of Griffin; "plans for gradual integration seemed to have been driven out of their minds."

Blossom said people told him that Griffin advised them it was not necessary to integrate and "they could not understand why the board was going ahead with its plan to desegregate the school."

The school board, in a plan approved by Federal courts, agreed to let nine Negroes start at Central High last September. These were the Negroes the President subsequently had to call out troops to protect.

As Little As Possible

Blossom said the plan was to "accomplish as little desegregation over as long a time as possible."

Judge Lemley said he will take the case under advisement, meaning he will not hand down a decision immediately after he stops taking testimony.

The President of the school board testified that he fea[ed] a continual uproar at Central as long as Orval F. Faubus is governor of Arkansas.

Wyle Branton, an NAACP lawyer, asked School Board President Wayne Upton why the school board has hit upon mid-term for a resumption of integration if Lemley allows de-integration.

"We tried once at the beginning of the term," Upton replied.

"That takes care of the mid-term date," Branton said. "Now, what about the 1961 date "

"You know full well that the governor called the troops out last September when we tried to integrate the school and I'm sure you know he is a candidate for a third term. In 1961 he may not be governor," Branton said.

Why Are You Afraid

"What are you afraid of?" Branton asked.

"I'll say only this — Governor Faubus made a statement quoted in the newspapers about two weeks ago that if the plan stays in effect he would do the same thing next September," Upton said.

"Would you need troops to control integration if the school enforced discipline?" Branton asked.

"No, I believe not," Upton said.

Upton was the ninth witness before the court. Before he testified, Mrs. Govie Griffin, a chemistry teacher, said she had seen only one inter-racial incident, "and thought it was not serious, it ended up in the FBI files."

She said Minnie Jean Brown, a husky Negro who was expelled before the term ended, accused a boy of kicking her. She said the boy apologized but Minnie Jean went around asking what the boy's name was.

"The next thing I knew, the boy was in trouble," Mrs. Griffin said. "I and several of the girls agreed the kicking was not intentional."

Police Chief E. G. Smith testified that on Sept. 23, 1957, more than 1,000 persons gathered in front of Central. He said they were "abusive, used profanity against my police officers on duty and talked of 'going in and getting the niggers.'"

Agitators Barred

He said "agitators" tried to break down police barriers and succeeded but were arrested. At noon, he started to fear that he could not hold back the crowd and suggested that the nine Negroes, who were in school, be spirited out.

Smith said that his men arrested 50 or 60 persons on September 23, a Monday, and that until noon the next day none had even paid a fine. Looking at local newspapers, he identified the pictures of several persons as "agitators."

Mrs. Sybil Hefley, an English teacher, testified that she had suffered a nervous breakdown because of the turmoil. She said her physician had warned her not to testify because she is not fully recovered.

For this reason, her testimony, which had ben taken earlier, was read by School Board Lawyer Richard C. Butler.

Mrs. Hefley said that two students refused all year to take the pledge of alliegiance to the flag, and "this had a very distracting and upsettling influence on other students."

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom testified yesterday that a federal judge turned down his plea for help in settling strife at integrated Central High school last fall.

Blossom testified at a Federal court hearing in which the Little Rock school board is trying to desegregate Central High school.

Blossom said he made his plea to Federal District Judge Ronald Davies.

"Under actual instructions of the board and after a conference I went to Judge Davies and asked for his help — for U.S. Marshals and we were turned down," Blossom said.

Blossom's testimony was the final presentation by the school board in the hearing before Judge Harry Lemley.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said Wednesday they would follow the school board's case by examining two northern educators — Virgil Rogers of Syracuse (N.Y.) university and David Salten, school superintendent at Long Beach, N.Y.

Blossom, who Wednesday accused Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin of coming to Little Rock and ruining the school's plans for gradual integration, yesterday described the process in which nine Negroes were integrated into the school last September.

He said approximately 60 to 70 Negro students were screened for admission to Central. Of those, 17 were considered able to attend the previously all-white school and of that number eight withdrew voluntarily on advice of the school board.

The school superintendent said the general types of incidents that resulted from integration were slugging, pushing, tripping, cat calls, abusive language and destruction of property.

He testified that one white girl, Sammy Dean Parker, who was suspended and later re-instated changed her attitude after re-instatement.

"Her record from that time on was in great contrast to her earlier record," Blossom said. "She made a satisfactory adjustment for the rest of the term."

Blossom said he himself had received numerous personal threats during the school term from anonymous sources.

LITTLE ROCK IS ISSUE IN ARKANSAS PRIMARY

Victory for Faubus Is Expected to Intensify Segregation Fight

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 10—President Eisenhower's directive this week that federalized troops be withdrawn from racially integrated Central High School at Little Rock, Ark., on May 29 could as Gov. Orval E. Faubus was urging the Arkansas electorate to endorse his dramatic use of executive powers last fall to thwart Federal court-ordered desegregation.

Implicit in the President's message accompanying the withdrawal order was an avowal that troops would be re-posted in September when classes resume if local officials then fail to prevent any obstruction of the court's mandate. This, of course, gave sharper outlines to what is the present disposition of the community leadership in Little Rock.

But in that emotion-torn capital city the dictum of "first things first" gave priority to the Democratic Gubernatorial primary election on July 29 in which Governor Faubus and three others are contestants.

The prevailing opinion is that a Faubus victory would constitute a regional rallying point for Southern segregationists and insure the Governor's adherence to the course he chose last September of calling out National Guardsmen to deny Negro students admission to Central High School.

Troops Recalled

This role by Little Rock as a regional segregationist symbol was underscored a few hours after President Eisenhower announced the troop withdrawal plans. Senators Richard B. Russell of Georgia and John L. McClellan of Arkansas issued statements that could be read as implying that the President had learned his lesson and was backing off from a fundamentally grave misstep.

In recent months some of the Deep South's foremost segregationist spokesmen have visited a score of key cities in the region to hammer home the theme that the national Administration regretted its decision to send troops into Little Rock and could be bluffed from taking any such action in the future.

It is in this climate that Governor Faubus at this early stage of the primary campaign is regarded as a strong favorite to win election to a third term in this one-party state. However, some observers say that because of traditional local conflicts over increased taxes, fiscal policies and patronage largesse he is not necessarily an odds-on favorite but may have to "run scared" to hold to his present lead.

Opponent's Ideas

The state's moderates on the desegregation issue, who have never effectively re-grouped from the shattering effect of Governor Faubus' action last fall, are expected to be attracted to his opponent, Chancery Judge Lee Ward of Paragould.

Judge Ward, for obvious political strategy, has taken a somewhat complicated stand on integration. He says that he is for "law and order," that he wants to "restore peace between Arkansas and the Federal Government" and that it is "the problems accompanying integration" that are the real issue.

He has described Governor Faubus as "the only practicing integrationist I know of in this race," a reference to the fact that the Governor's son attends an integrated college in Arkansas.

Judge Ward some months ago urged that the South grudgingly accept the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation statutes as "the law" until it could be changed. He proposed that the United States Constitution be amended to permit local school districts that have maintained segregated schools for fifty years or more to decide by popular local vote whether to desegregate.

Other Candidates

Also entered in this complex are two other candidates, Chris E. Finkbeiner, a Little Rock business man, who has said he "feels like everybody else" on the desegregation issue, and Robert J. Brown, a Little Rock lawyer, whose candidacy at this stage is rated as only nominal.

Little Rock community leaders, aware of the challenge in the President's withdrawal message that they get some spine into their cause by next September, know that the first real objective is to get Governor Faubus into a run-off second primary, which means another tricky oratorical go-round about thirty days after July 29.

Moreover, there are other local factors that blur the picture of what Little Rock community leaders can expect to accomplish before school opens in September.

For instance, the Little Rock school board has petitioned the Federal District Court to delay until January, 1961, any further implementation of the school desegregation program until the local climate is "more favorable." It is expected that any decision will go into the appellate process, which might extend beyond September.

'Voluntary' Proposal

There is also the proposal made by Herbert L. Thomas, a local insurance executive that the state Board of Education adopt a plan for an interracial commission to carry out a program of "voluntary progress" toward school desegregation. Essentially it would allow for a "cooling-off" period. It has had considerable endorsement from moderates.

There is also the role of the Negro students who have completed the first year of classroom integration with properly certified grades.

One of the Negro pupils, Ernest Green, 17 years old, is scheduled to receive his diploma at graduation exercises on May 27. School officials report that badgering of the Negro students by a small body of white students, generally believed to be the children of segregationist extremists, has been almost absent in recent days.

Little Rock is still a city marked by bafflement and inconsistency. The search for resolute answers to the President's counter this week is unlikely to get a higher priority until school re-opening is right around the corner.

Ike Leaves Door Open For Fed Troops In Little Rock

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA) — President Eisenhower, in his order for the withdrawal of troops enforcing the Federal District Court order for desegregation of Central High School in Little Rock on May 29, left the door open for the return of Federal troops if the order is obstructed.

The question of whether the troops will be returned next September was threshed out at a second press conference held Thursday morning by James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary.

At a special 10 o'clock press conference, Hagerty gave out the text of the President's statement concerning his order for the release of troops which have been patrolling the Central High School area in Little Rock since last Sept 24.

At his regular morning press conference at 10:35 a.m., Hagerty was questioned a second time about the order.

He corrected a question of whether the committee, headed by Governor Luther H. Hodges of North Carolina, was working on the Little Rock situation at the request of the President. Hagerty said they were working at the request of the Governors Conference.

"I do not know whether they are in existence or not," said Hagerty.

Q. Is the Civil Rights Commission likely to step into the Little Rock situation between now and the opening of school like the President asked them to?

"I don't know," replied Hagerty.

Asked whether any conversation with Faubus preceded the issuance of the order, Hagerty replied "No."

At his earlier conference he had said there had been no conversation with Faubus that he knew of. "The answer is 'No,' flatly?" a reporter asked.

preserve the integrity of our judicial processes."

Q. This will be open to interpretation that some sort of pledge of responsibility would

"No," replied Hagerty.

He added that he did not know how Faubus learned about the issuance of the order.

"No Federal touch with him at all? Is that what your 'No' means?" a reporter asked.

"Yes," replied Hagerty.

Q. I take it then the troops do not go back in September when school opens unless necessary—

A. I suggest you read the statement.

Q. Yes.

A. That is not what the statement says. The statement says "I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the Federal Court are not obstructed. The faithful execution of this responsibility will make it unnecessary for the Federal Government to act further to be expected?

A. I think you just have to wait and see.

Q. It certainly means that when the day school opens they won't be there until you see what happens, doesn't it?

A. Now, I am not going to project or answer any questions. The President's statement is quite clear. It is also quite clear from his statement where the responsibility lies.

Q. When you say "I think you just have to wait and see," is that the attitude the President is taking also that he is going to wait and see what happens?

Uncle Sam Stepping In Again

Negro Kids Earn A's, B's In L. R.'s Central High

Courier Pittsburgh Pa. Sat 2-1-58

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Uncle Samuel has evidently decided to take the kid gloves off and start acting "tough" once more about the situation here which revolves around troubled Central High School

• FBI agents have been called in to investigate the repeated "incidents" between Negro and white pupils at the school. They are also looking into the frequent "bomb" scares which have disrupted schedule at Central High and are seeking to find out who put an empty stick of TNT in a locker of the building.

In the meantime, eight of the nine Negro children have returned to their classes for the second semester. The lone absentee, Minnie Jean Brown, who figured in a food-spilling incident in the school cafeteria was absent because of a cold.

■

IN THE MEANTIME, Kenneth Vandiver, 18, one of the white segregationist leaders among the student body, was accused of striking Ernest Green, 17, a Negro student in the face.

• Mrs. Daisy Bates of the local NAACP revealed that with one exception, the Negro students are maintaining "A" or "B" averages. The "exception" has a "C" average.

In the meantime, segregationists are voicing threats to get rid of school board members.

Soup Baths and Kickings

'Trouble Pot' Brewing At Central High; Nine Kids Tired of Threats

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—"She just put her hand to her face and cried like the baby she is," declared Richard Boehler, 17-year-old white youth as he described how he kicked 16-year-old Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Little Rock Negro pupils in attendance at strife-torn Central High Sch

• Young Boehler pointedly stated that the girl did not fight back after he kicked her.

The Boehler - Brown incident was but one of many that have kept the trouble pot brewing at Central High.

■

NOT ONLY was Minnie Jean kicked, but another Negro girl, Carlotta Walls, was also kicked. Miss Walls accused another white pupil, Herbert Blount, along with "several other troublemakers" of having kicked her in the school corridor.

Miss Eckford

• In the midst of the disputes, the reported withdrawal of Elizabeth Eckford from the school was denied by School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom after he held a conference with the girl and her father.

Minnie Jean, who seems to be the prime target for the racists, was also involved in another incident when a white girl hit her with a purse. In addition, she has had soup and chili poured over her head as she sat in the school cafeteria while white students cheered, clapped and yelled "Down with the n——rs!"

Miss Brown, it seems, has been accused of calling some of her white fellow - classmates "poor white trash."

MINNIE JEAN BROWN
. . . she cried like a baby

■

BOEHLER SAID that although he had been "dared" to kick Minnie Jean, he didn't kick her because of the taunt. He claimed that Minnie Jean had called him "white trash" and had also had an argument with him in a French class.

Mrs. W. B. Brown, Minnie's mother, sought a warrant for Boehler's arrest but was refused by Pulaski Prosecutor J. Frank Holt. In the meantime, Boehler's family claimed that they have been threatened with death via anonymous telephone calls in the wake of his having kicked the girl.

Mrs. Frank Gregg, mother of

the white girl who hit Minnie Jean with a purse, withdrew her daughter from Central High School, stating that the Negro girl had called her daughter "poor white trash." She then added, "I don't think she should have to put up with that sort of thing."

Little Rock School Board Asks Court To Withdraw Orders For Integration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 20 (AP)—The Little Rock School Board today asked the federal courts to suspend the six-months-old racial integration at Central High School.

The requested suspension would be in effect until the "deliberate speed" in integration ordered by the U.S. Supreme Court "can be clearly defined and effective legal procedures can be obtained which will enable the—school—district to integrate without impairment of the quality of education it is capable of providing under normal conditions."

Gov. Orval Faubus said the school board's action should have been taken some time ago and added that the "situation in Central High School at present is intolerable from the standpoint of a proper educational atmosphere."

SHOCK TO PEOPLE

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the filing of the petition "must have been a shock to all decent-thinking people in Little Rock."

Nine Negro students have been attending the school along with nearly 2,000 whites under the protection of federal troops in compliance with a court-appointed plan for gradual desegregation in the Little Rock public schools.

One of the nine, Minniejean Brown was expelled recently as a result of one of the many racial incidents which have plagued the school and has announced she will enter a private integrated school in New York.

The board and Supt. Virgil T. Blossom filed the petition for delay with U.S. District Court a few minutes before close of business for the day, Court Clerk Grady Miller said.

This is the second time the school board has asked that integration be postponed.,

Last September, such a request was overruled by U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies of Fargo, N.D., here on temporary assignment.

GUARD ON DUTY

When Central High's fall term began Sept. 3, a contingent of the Arkansas National Guard, at the direction of Gov. Orval Faubus, was on duty at the school to prevent Negroes from entering.

Later Davies issued an order prohibiting Faubus from further interference with integration at the school.

Faubus withdrew the guard and when rioting developed outside the school, the guard was federalized to protect the Negroes.

Tonight the Governor was at Lepanto, Ark., to deliver a speech at a civic club meeting.

When newsmen told him of the filing of the petition, Faubus said: "This action of the school authorities should have been taken some time ago. I have suggested this a number of times in the past. The situation in Central High School is intolerable from the standpoint of a proper educational atmosphere. I sincerely hope the federal courts will give the matter proper consideration."

In today's petition the school board declared that opponents of integration "are continually implanting in the minds of residents of the district by all types of inflammatory publicity" the thought that the federal court order is illegal and the board was betraying the interest of district residents in attempting to comply with the court order.

WALLACE VICTOR ON STRAW BALLOT

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Feb. 20 (AP)—Circuit Judge George Wallace received 72 of the 123 votes cast in the traditional election year straw ballot for governor by University of Alabama law school students.

Results were announced today by Erskine Smith of Birmingham, president of the law school student body.

The vote: Wallace 72; Atty. Gen. John Patterson 14; former Congressman Laurie Battle 12; state Rep. George Hawkins 9; Jimmy Faulkner 8; state Rep. Karl Harrison, Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd and Adm. John Crommelin, 2 each; Ralph (Shorty) Price and Shearen Elebash, 1 each.

"Little Rock Nine" Has It Rough But Still in Central High School

In spite of physical abuses and vitriolic epithets at the hands of their schoolmates, the nine Negro children continue in the integrated high school here.

The nine Negroes were escorted into the school September 25 by members of the 101st Airborne division of Fort Campbell, Kentucky that were sent into the Arkansas city to quell disturbance and implement an order of the federal court that approved integration outlined by the Little Rock school board. The disturbance followed the action of Governor Orval E. Faubus, who called out the Arkansas national guards to prevent the Negroes from entering the school when it opened September 3 for the fall term.

For several weeks the children were carried to and from the school by members of the Airborne division, and then their parents were allowed to take them, with armed guards patroling outside and inside the school.

Now after several months of integration, the presence of hostility is as much in evidence today at the school as it was the day the nine entered.

ACTION IS REQUESTED

Blossom Seeks Expulsion of Minnie Jean Brown —Board To Decide

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 12.—School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom recommended to the Little Rock School Board Wednesday that one of the nine Negro students attending integrated Central High School be expelled.

Object of his recommendation was Minnie Jean Brown, 16, who has been involved in several incidents with white students at the school since integrated classes started in late September.

The girl is under suspension for the second time this year, following a dispute last week with a white girl student.

Mr. Blossom said he ordered a two-week suspension against the student as a follow-up from last week, and in addition he would urge that she be expelled. The girl and her parents conferred with the superintendent in a closed meeting. He wouldn't disclose what was discussed or give reasons for his recommendation.

Board To Meet

The superintendent's disciplinary powers are limited to meting out suspensions. Expulsions are up to the school board. The board reportedly is planning a Friday meeting, at which time the question may come up.

Daisy Bates, Negro NAACP leader here who has been serving as spokesman for the Negro students, said Minnie Jean Brown and her parents were "shocked." She said she didn't know what action they planned, although an earlier report indicated the girl would contest the expulsion.

The girl recommended for expulsion is the only one of the nine Negro students who has drawn disciplinary action since the school term started. Half a dozen or more white students have been given suspensions as a result of racial incidents inside the school.

Called 'Troublemaker'

Some white students have referred to Minnie Jean as a "troublemaker." Negro spokesmen have privately said they feel some of the white students have deliberately set out to "make an issue of her" in the integration dispute.

Mr. Blossom said he knew of no incidents inside the school Wednesday, but the mother of a white student—who asked that her name be withheld—said her daughter had received a letter threatening her life. Her daughter had been involved in an incident with one of the Negroes, she said.

The letter was turned over to the local office of the FBI, but FBI officials had no comment.

Plan Of Voluntary Compliance Offered To Little Rock Board

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — A Little Rock insurance executive offered a plan of voluntary compliance with the Supreme Court's controversial integration decision in a move to end the Little School stalmate.

Herbert L. Thomas submitted the plan to the Arkansas State Board of Education. He proposed that a state commission be established to advise school districts on just what constitutes desegregation at "all deliberate speed."

The plan, known as a State Plan of Voluntary Progress, suggested that the eight Negroes now enrolled at the Little Rock Central High School be dismissed at the end of the present school term.

Under Thomas' proposal, the federalized troops still guarding the school would be withdrawn and placed on a standby basis.

NEGRO REPRESENTATION

The insurance executive declared that his proposed state commission should contain Negro representatives. In cases where circumstances warranted complete or partial desegregation, the group could help the school district to resolve difficulties, secure community support and make compliance with the Supreme Court decision workable.

Thomas said in cases where desegregation "is not immediately" practical, the commission could promote improvement of educational facilities for Negroes.

The Little Rock insurance man said Negroes would not be asked to halt integration suits but he suggested "that once sincerity of effort is made plain, Negroes would refrain" from what he called "undue aggressiveness."

"PARTIAL SUBSTITUTE

If the plan is approved, Thomas said he will offer it to the Federal District Court as a "partial substitute" for the Little Rock plan of "gradual integration."

The plan has been thoroughly discussed, Thomas said, "with both white and Negro leaders."

Gov. Orval Faubus said the "matter is of prime importance" but he said he felt "it depends upon what the people think and not what just a few individuals including myself, think about it."

Faubus Refutes Collins' Article

Claims Full Crisis Story Is Unknown To Floridan

KEEPS DETAILS SECRET

BY KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, May 12.—Gov. Orval Faubus took sharp issue Monday with a fellow Southern governor—Leroy Collins of Florida—over the Little Rock integration issue.

Asked for comment on an article quoting Governor Collins in Look Magazine, Mr. Faubus said in effect the Florida chief executive should know first what he's talking about before he starts drawing conclusions.

Tone Calm But Sharp

Speaking calmly but with a sharp edge to his words, Governor Faubus referred to Governor Collins' statement in the current Look issue that both Governor Faubus and President Eisenhower should "share the blame" for the Little Rock crisis.

Governor Collins was quoted as saying Governor Faubus was to blame for having called out National Guard troops, and President Eisenhower was at fault for not having acted in advance to avert conditions which resulted in the President sending in Federal troops.

Governor Faubus hinted there was a "great deal" which neither Governor Collins nor the public knew about the controversy.

"Governor Collins has no way of knowing the details or the situation here, or of what was done or may have been done to prevent the crisis. He probably knows a lot about the situation generally, but not in particular. For him to make an unequivocal statement, as he is quoted, is going too far," said Governor Faubus.

Details Are Declined

Newsmen pressed for elaboration on what "may have been done to prevent the crisis," but Governor Faubus refused further comment. Later he said "there's a great deal which none of the public knows."

Refusing to concede he had precipitated the Central High School controversy, Governor Faubus said he agreed with two points which Governor Collins made.

At one point Governor Collins criticized the United States Supreme Court for setting itself up as "a government instrument to develop integration procedures." At another point he criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The Florida Governor was quoted as saying the NAACP decides "when and where to desegregate."

Governor Faubus added a charge against the NAACP. He said a Justice Department official, whom he didn't name, had told him in effect the NAACP was the "motivator" of integration court suits. He said the official told him that before the Central High crisis arose.

To Fight Deactivation

Mr. Faubus will be in Miami next week for a meeting of the National Governors Conference. He said he will oppose deactivation of the 39th National Guard Division—made up of Arkansas and Louisiana units.

A discussion of the Army's proposal to disband about six National Guard divisions, including the 39th is scheduled at the governors conference. Mr. Faubus said he didn't know whether the Little Rock affair had prompted inclusion of the Arkansas National Guard in deactivation plans — as charged over the week end by a Louisiana official.

The Governor said he had received no official word of the scheduled May 29 release of Federalized National Guardsmen at Central High. However, Adjt. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger said orders had been received by Col. Alton Balkman, commander of the Guard troops.

General Clinger said that would assure that Camp Robinson, now being used by Guardsmen, will be ready for Arkansas Boys State when it opens May 31.

9 Little Rock Pupils Still Hanging On; Ignore Hard Licks!

Courier, Pittsburgh Pa. Sat 2-8-58

P.5 Sat. 2-8-58

Firm Hand Needed at Central Hi

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Negro pupils are remaining steadfast in their determination to stick to their guns at Central High School despite a campaign of mental torture and physical violence directed against them by a "hard core" of arch-racists.

• Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP, asserted that the nine Central High School "pioneers" have no intention of withdrawing from the high school despite the continuing harassment to which they have been subjected.

Basically, the situation at the local school boils down to these essential facts.

1. A white boy kicked Minnie Jean Brown and got away with it. The boy in question had already been suspended from the school for poor scholarship.

2. The nine Negro pupils are being annoyed daily by approximately 40 of the school's 2,000 students. However, little or nothing is being done to stop the racists from their activities.

3. The campaign against the Negro pupils consists of their being spit on, having trays of food dumed on them in the school cafeteria; and, having ink squirted on girls' dresses by white pupils carrying water pistols. Some of the whites threatened to put acid in the pistols.

Commented Thurgood Marshall, "They can't take much more of the passive harassment their fellow students are giving them . . . it goes on day after day. They deserve great credit for staying on."

■

MRS. BATES asserted, "I don't see how the situation could get much worse. The troublemakers are definite repeaters. Their tactics change from day to day.

• "The troublemakers generally have the idea they can do anything they want and nothing will be done to them. The school officials need to take a firm hand."

Mrs. Bates pointed out that the racists were also intimidating those whites who tried to become friendly with their fellow-Negro pupils. One white told a Negro pupil, "I have nothing against you, but I don't want to be beaten up."

Little Rock Negro Guilty Of Assault

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 23 (AP)—A circuit court jury today found Sims Walter, 16-year-old Negro, guilty of aggravated assault in the stoning of a white man at the height of the integratio.. crisis here last September.

Walter, who went to trial on a charge of assault with intent to kill, was sentenced to pay a $25 fine and serve six months at a county penal farm on the lesser charge. The jury included 11 white persons and one Negro.

The youth was accused of seriously injuring Dan Dinkins, 47, of Little Rock, a brakeman employed by Rock Island Lines, during a scuffle near Central High School Sept. 23.

That was the day a crowd rioted outside the school after nine Negroes entered under police protection. The Negro students were taken out of classes a few hours later and went back Sept. 25 under the guard of Federal troops. Walter was not one of the nine.

Dinkins was struck in the head by a chunk of concrete and suffered a skull fracture.

Little Rock Girl "Holds On To God"

The mother, Mrs. Lois Patillo and her daughter, Marlene, returned from Hot Springs, Ark., where they were the guest at a convention of directors of the National Baptist Convention of the U. S. A., Inc.

In discussing how she advised her daughter to conduct herself at the integrated school, Mrs. Patillo said she told the Convention: "I tell her to take God with her, and he will walk the halls with her."

Mrs. Patillo said of her daughter the Convention: "through all the turmoil of the day, the only thing one has to hold on to is God."

FAUBUS ENDORSES WILLIAMS REMARKS

Mississippian Cites Integration Woes In Brooklyn

'WHERE ARE TROOPS?'

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 31.—Gov. Orval Faubus Friday heartily endorsed the remarks of Representative John Bell Williams (D., Miss.) on the integration question.

Representative Williams in Washington Thursday called attention to racial troubles in the John Marshall Junior High School in Brooklyn and inquired as to why no federal troops had been sent there—as they were in Little Rock.

"Where are the paratroopers?" the Mississippi representative asked.

Sentiments Expressed

Questioned for reaction to Mr. Williams speech, Governor Faubus replied:

"I would have to say that he certainly expressed my sentiments.

"If the same thing that has been happening in the Brooklyn school had been happening here in Little Rock, I hate to think of how it would have been treated in the metropolitan press."

Comparing wide publicity Little Rock had received to a comparatively "mild" treatment of the Brooklyn situation. Governor Faubus declared that people "are not being told one-tenth of the trouble about racial problems going on outside the South."

The Governor described the Brooklyn school incidents as "tragic."

The Brooklyn school has been the scene of several acts of violence recently, including attacks on two teenage girls.

Representative Williams implied Thursday that there was even more reason to send troops to the Brooklyn school than there had been to send them to Little Rock.

No Comparison

"There is no comparison between Little Rock and Brooklyn," Mr. Williams was quoted as saying. "No students have been raped in Little Rock, no students have been stabbed in Little Rock, no students have beaten up teachers, and there are no organized gangs roaming the streets of Little Rock.

"Why is it that the President has not Federalized the New York National Guard? Are our armed forces to be used solely in the South to make sure that the President's private definition of peace and order is achieved?" he asked.

The Mississippian added that in the final analysis he hoped troops would not be sent to Brooklyn, "at least not until he has been requested to do so by the Legislature or the Governor as the Constitution requires."

Trouble Continues at Central High School

State Press p. 3 Fri 1-24-58

Littlebet Art

Not only do the segregationists keep up confusion inside Central hi school with harassment and abuse of the nine Negro students, but they have the city officials busy and the Arkansas Military division on the run. On two occasions the police and federalized national guards have been sent on a dynamite hunting expidition in and around the school. The anonymous calls warned the officials that the school was about to be bombed. Those anonymous tips came twice within one week. On the second tip, the officers were notified where to look, and did discover a piece of a stick of dynamite.

These dynamite incidents have been taken lightly by the school board officials, as a method of the segregationists to bluff the school board into closing the school.

On the other hand, as the second semester begins, new trouble begins by a certain group of students against the nine Negro students.

Week before last one of the Negro girls was pushed down the stairway by a white girl who is on suspension, and makes this explanation: "I was in a hurry, and this little old nigger was in front of me. . . " The white girl was Darlene Holloway, daughter of Mrs. Fred Gist, who has asked the school board for a hearing on her daughter's suspension.

This week one of the Negro boys was struck by one of the white boy students, who it is said admitted the attack.

The segregationists at a meeting Monday nite, demanded the ouster of the school board superintendent and several members of the faculty of the hi school.

Rev. Wesley Pruden was the principal speaker. Pruden is the president of the Capital Citizens council, and declares that he is out to get everybody who is on the other side of the council. He declared that the days of Virgil Blossom, superintenent of the school board, were numbered. He also declared that Mrs. L. C. Bates' days were numbered. Mrs. Bates is president of the Arkansas Conference of Branches NAACP.

THE "LITTLE ROCK NINE"— The Negro students who are attending Central hi school under the protection of the federalized Arkansas national Guards will receive the Americanism Award Sunday at the Bethel AME church, Ninth and Broadway. The Award will be given by the American Veterans Committee. See story on page three.

Little Rock Girl's Flight Delayed by Bomb Scare

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 22 (AP)—A New York-bound plane, carrying a Negro girl expelled from integrated Central High School, was checked for a bomb here today.

A spokesman for American Airlines said the airline had received a report that a bomb had been placed aboard the craft on which Minniejean Brown was listed as a passenger.

The plane was delayed 40 minutes while it and all luggage of passengers were searched. No bomb was found.

The search turned up several packages of firecrackers in the luggage of a passenger. He explained that they were souvenirs of a recent convention. He was allowed to keep the firecrackers.

Minniejean, expelled from Central High after being involved in a series of racial incidents, has received a full scholarship from the New Lincoln School, a private interracial institution in New York City. She plans to begin classes there Monday.

About 50 Negroes were at the airport here to see the girl [illegible] he was greeted when she arrived at La Guardia Field in New York by several Negroes about her age. They pinned pink orchids on her coat. Minniejean was accompanied by her mother, Imogene Brown.

The Little Rock School Board yesterday suspended Samme Dean Parker and Howard Cooper, 16-year-old white pupils, from Central High for two weeks for carrying printed cards that said "One Down and Eight to Go" in obvious reference to expulsion of Minniejean.

PHONE TIP REVEALS 'WHITE FIRECRACKER'

Object Found At Little Rock May Be Dynamite

FBI OFFICE IS SILENT

From the Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 14.—A stick of what "looked like dynamite" was found here Friday morning at the home of Lee Lorch, white professor at Philander Smith College, a Negro institution.

Mr. Lorch and his wife, who have been publicly aligned on the side of integration in the Central High School controversy, said they had no idea of how the object got there.

"It looked like a big white firecracker wrapped in a piece of cellophane," said Mrs. Lorch.

Just Inside Door

It was found stuck just inside the door of the garage at the Lorch home. The door was ajar slightly.

Mrs. Lorch said she and her husband didn't know about it until after an anonymous telephone call to a wire service office were "tipped" the information. She said the FBI had found the object.

The local office of the FBI wouldn't comment, not even to confirm that its agents had made a search of the premises.

Mrs. Lorch figured in hearings at Memphis several months ago conducted by a Senate Investigating Committee probing possible spread of communism into the South. Mrs. Lorch angrily challenged the right of the committee, headed by Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.), to question her. She was threatened with contempt action, but no charges have been filed against her.

Meanwhile, as to the school itself, suspended Negro student Minnie Jean Brown asked the school board to review an expulsion recommendation placed against her Wednesday by Virgil T. Blossom, school superintendent.

Will Hear Girl

Wayne Upton, president of the Little Rock school board, said the board probably will hear the Negro girl and her parents some time next week. Minnie Jean is now under suspension for the second time this school year, and Mr. Blossom has recommended that it be made "permanent."

Some Central High students frolicked in the snow that fell practically all day in Little Rock Friday. Favorite snowball targets were Federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen who are still on duty to enforce the integration decree.

Raps GOP 'Apathy'

Little Rock Board Placed In 'Middle'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Responsibility for the whole mess at Central High School here was placed in the lap of the Eisenhower administration last week.

The revelation came when the Little Rock School Board filed in U.S. District Court a petition saying it is caught in the middle—between the apathy of the Federal Government and the "extraordinary opposition on the part of the state government."

The petition, which asks that the "plan of integration heretofore ordered by this court be realistically considered in the light of existing conditions and that in the interests of all pupils the beginning date of integration be postponed," follows, in part:

"A SMALL group, with the encouragement of certain adults has absorbed the prevailing spirit of defiance and has almost daily created incidents which make it exceedingly difficult for teachers to teach and for pupils to learn . . .

"Implicit in the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court is the assumption that states would bow to the ruling and repeal state laws which are in conflict with the new interpretation of the 14th Amendment to the constitution of the United states.

"Instead of revising local laws to bring them into conformity with the Federal law, the State of Arkansas has enacted several laws which tend to defy the Federal law and obstruct compliance by the (school) district with the order of this court.

"THE DISTRICT now finds itself in the difficult position of having the responsibility of operating under the phase plan of integration as directed by this court and yet it has no power to enforce the provisions of this plan."

The petition then goes on to place the blame for this state of affairs by saying:

"The Federal Government, except for having placed troops around the school grounds, apparently is powerless to enforce compliance with the court's integration order and suppress the interference now being encountered by the officials of the district.

"Federal officials have not applied penal sanctions to any of the persons who formed into groups near the school grounds, defied the court's order and interfered with the plan of integration therein specified.

"THEY HAVE stepped aside and placed on the school district the full responsibility of compliance.

"The judicial branch of the Federal Government has not aided the district by preventing or attemtping to prevent interference with the plan which the officials of the district, in a sense of duty, are endeavoring to apply in the operation of the schools within the district.

"There has been no effort on the part of the Congress of the United States to strengthen old, or provide new, judicial procedures which will guarantee enforcement of the civil rights of the colored minority.

Integration Plan Is Not Accepted

Negro Leaders Oppose "Voluntary Proposition

OFFERED IN ARKANSAS

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 16.—Arkansas Negro leaders Wednesday opposed a "voluntary" integration plan offered by Herbert Thomas Sr., but said they were willing to continue discussions with a view to possible compromise.

About 100 Negro leaders from throughout the state assembled to hear an explanation of the plan from Mr. Thomas, a Little Rock insurance executive. He wants a bi-racial commission established to handle integration problems. A dozen or more white persons were present at the meeting.

Mr. Thomas' plan also envisions abandonment of all litigation now before state courts on the integration question, and handling of racial problems largely on the local district level. Approval of the plan by Federal District Court would be a prerequisite.

Minister Leads Opposition

Negro objections centered largely on a proposal to scrap the Central High integration program at the end of this school term, which would mean the school would return to an all-white basis next fall.

Rev. Roland Smith, Little Rock Baptist minister, led the most outspoken opposition and ended up in a near-dispute with other Negro leaders.

Reverend Smith, claiming to speak for all Negro leaders present, jumped to his feet after Mr. Thomas ha dexplained his plan, and denounced it as unacceptable on at least four points. One of the objections was that Negroes couldn't agree to a plan under which Negro students would withdraw from Central High after this term.

Rev. Walter White, Arkadelphia Negro minister, immediately objected. He said he for one hadn't been in on the meeting where the "statement of position" read by Rev. Smith had been prepared, and that he thought the plan should be discussed first before Negroes took any stand on it.

That in turn touched off about an hour of tension-packed debate. Finally, Dr. Lawrence Davis, Negro president of AM&N College at Pine Bluff, appealed for "a more constructive approach."

Revealing that he was one of the Negroes to whom Mr. Thomas had talked in preparing the plan, Dr. Davis said he thought the plan—even if not perfect—was "challenging" to members of both races.

Referring to bitterness which had crept into the meeting, Dr. Davis said he "would be awfully grieved if we left this meeting returning again to the cold war and without a constructive approach to the problem."

Door Left Open

The meeting ended with the door apparently left open for further discussions. Mr. Thomas himself said his plan was subject to revision.

Earlier, in reading a 15-page prepared explanation of his plan, Mr. Thomas warned Negro leaders against an "uncompromising" approach to the problem. He noted that although the Supreme Court was on the side of the Negro, any gains the Negro race made under it would be "a hollow victory" if they proceeded only under court authority.

"Nowhere have I seen any evidence that the courts have placed the entire burden upon the members of the white race," he observed.

One proposal advanced was that Negro and white attorneys be allowed to work out a plan, on grounds that any plan submitted first would require Federal District Court approval. There were indications that might receive further study.

Southern Politicians Battling On Resentment Over Little Rock

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 25—The Southern political scene is beset with renewed agitation over Little Rock public school desegregation.

The resentment is against President Eisenhower's decision last September to use Federal troops to enforce court-ordered integration in Little Rock's Central High School. It has become a ralying point in several State Legislatures recently convened.

It has also been made a chief issue among candidates preparing for state-wide primaries this summer.

The Southern protests interpret the events in Little Rock as an example of Federal encroachment on state sovereignty. But the Administration's point of view lacks a spokesman in the area at this time.

A Southerer active among the moderates in race relations remarked that "right after the Federal troops entered Little Rock there was a brief period when it could have been their argument or ours, but now the argument belongs entirely to the extreme segregationist."

He noted that there were still "pockets" of people who felt that the Little Rock developments "might have been valuable in posing some measure of inevitability about coming to terms on intergration adjustment programs." Mainly, he said, these were clergymen and members of human relations organizations. He added:

"But little goodwill groups like this can't compete in myth-making with well-known regional and national figures. They can't begin to command the forum that is open to leading politicians and legislators."

The Georgia House of Representatives unanimously has adopted a resolution censuring President Eisenhower for dispatching Federal troops to Little Rock.

The resolution noted that the President's action was declared "unconstitutional" by Georgia's Attorney General, Eugene Cook.

The resolution now goes to the State Senate for consideration.

In Virginia, the State Legislature has been requested by its new Governor, J. Lindsay Almond Jr., to consider writing a new law empowering the Governor to close any school patrolled by Federal troops.

In South Carolina, the Legislature was asked by Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., to enact a law "closing any school whenever and for so long as any Federal force or group attempts to police its operations."

Jack Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, recently opened his candidacy for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination by declaring, "If I'm elected your Governor, no National Guard troops will ever be called out to force integration like they were at Little Rock."

Some measure of the intensity of the feeling among Alabama politicians can be seen by the fact that Mr. Owen reminded his audience that the commission heads recently ordered railroads and bus lines to restore signs designating separate waiting rooms for whites and Negroes.

"Today our train and bus waiting rooms and schools are still segregated," he said. "That's the way you want it, that's the way I want it and that's the way it's going to stay."

Meanwhile, in Arkansas, the integrated high school was still being guarded by Federalized National Guardsmen and tension had mounted with the discovery a few days ago of a stick of dynamite in a school locker.

Segregationist spokesmen from the rest of the South were stirring resistance from time to time in Little Rock. A week ago, Roy Harris, a political kingpin in Georgia, told a Little Rock rally:

"We have Ike over a barrel and he is becoming the laughing stock of the nation."

INTEGRATION URGED ON VOLUNTARY BASIS

'Gradual' Arkansas Program Would Be Scrapped

THOMAS EXPLAINS PLANS

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 7. — A "voluntary" plan of desegregation, under which "gradual" program at Central High School would be abandoned before the state of another school year, was offered Monday.

Herbert L. Thomas, Little Rock insurance executive and former president of the University of Arkansas Board of Trustees, disclosed the plan to the State Board of Education.

Board Support Urged

He asked the board to support the plan and as its first move to intervene in a Federal Court case pending on the Central High dispute, in which the school board has asked reversal of the school integration order.

The plan would seek Federal Court approval of a statewide voluntary integration plan, under which local districts would handle the question, and the official backing of the state in trying to restore "harmony" in race and integration problems.

Mr. Thomas said he was presenting his plan "as an individual, and not as a spokesman for any group." He said he had talk to "a number of people" on both sides of the question — including Negro leaders. He said he believed Negroes were ready for a voluntary plan that would end integration tensions.

The Board of Education deferred a decision on his plan, and Gov. Orval Faubus acted cautiously. The Governor conferred with several member of the board after the meeting, but said he was withholding judgment until further study.

Negros To Finish Term

Under the plan, the eight Negro students at Central High would finish this school term without opposition. After that, the Little Rock integration plan would be discarded as "unworkable."

Meanwhile, a statewide commission would be set up to aid school districts with integration.

In districts where integration appeared to be "a practical and logical step," the proposed commission would aid the districts in the transition.

But in districts where integration would be unworkable or unacceptable, the commission would concentrate on trying to improve Negro educational facilities.

A vital link in the process Mr. Thomas outlined would be getting co-operation from Federal Court, which has ordered integration "forthwith" at Central High. The Little Rock School Board has asked a court review of that order, but no hearing date has been set.

Offer Plan To Court

Mr. Thomas asked the State Board of Education to intervene in the suit and offer the voluntary plan as an argument for the court to rescind its integration order. He said he had been assured by certain legal spokesmen that such a plea "could be given judicial recognition."

The insurance official conceded hat success of the plan would depend on co-operation and compromises from opposing forces in the integration conflict, including the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and White Citizens Councils.

He argued that a return tc voluntary integration would be in the best interest of the Arkansas Negro and do much to restore racial harmony.

The Negro students at Central High would beallowed to complete theterm there without being transferred to a Negro school, he said. After that, the state, by consent of both sides, would return to the prior status and leave integration disputes up to the proposed commission.

Reaction Is Varied

Reaction to the plan ranged from caution to criticism.

Governor Faubus, who had disclosed Mr. Thomas had conferred with him briefly on the plan, said the important thing will be "what the people think about it."

The board noted noted that the request was asking it to take a step which it "has carefully avoided uu to this time." The reference was to the board's policy of leaving integration questions to local school districts.

Board Chairman Marvin Bird of Earle and board members promised to give "most thoughtful and careful consideration" to the proposal.

Jim Johnson, Crossett segregationist leader who attended the meeting, later said flatly the plan would be unworkable. He predicted neither segregationist groups nor the NAACP would accept it.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, Little Rock Negro head of the Arkansas Chapter of the NAACP, said she would have to give the plan more study before passing final judgment.

Negro Asks Bomb Shelter At School

FORT SMITH, Ark., April 29 (AP)—A Negro mother wants a bomb proof shelter built at the Lincoln (Negro) High School here, the city board revealed today.

In a letter to the board, Mrs. Adeline Whitfield of the Lincoln Parents Teachers Assn., asked that a bomb proof basement be constructed along with a new junior high school and gymnasium at the high school location.

The board gave no further details about the letter. It was under advisement at a board meeting last night.

Integration on a long-range basis started at Fort Smith last Fall. A single Negro boy enrolled in the first grade of a previously all-white school. The integration plan calls for gradual integration through upper grades.

Little Rock, singer on Africans' lip

DR. A. CHESTER CLARK

NEW YORK — Following an intensive three-weeks' survey in South Africa, Dr. A. Chester Clark, executive secretary of the AME Missionary Department, reported that Little Rock, Ark, and Paul Robeson were the most frequently discussed topics among South African non-whites.

Dr. Clarke left New York for Johannesburg, South Africa, on March 23 with a nine-member deputation of AME Church officials to attend the Diamond Jubilee celebration.

In an initial report to the Bishops' Council, the AME Missionary head declared that the moral, political and educational treatment of South Africa's nine million natives was one of the most "critical" issues facing the civilized world.

He referred to the white supremacy doctrine of apartheid as the "cruelest of human crimes on record."

COMMENTING on the twin questions of Little Rock and Paul Robeson, Dr. Clark stated that he had been confronted with queries concerning them "almost without exception" by everyone with whom he conferred.

"The Little Rock school crisis was a blow to America's prestige that might well rank with Pearl Harbor.

"Our failure to give proper interpretation to the use of troops at Central High School gave both aid and comfort to Africa segregationists, and I dare say it will be a full decade before we can recover from its effect," he said.

* * *

SPEAKING of singer Paul Robeson, whose denial of passport rights has triggered anti-Americanism throughout the non-white world, Dr. Clark expressed the hope that every attention would be given to a re-evaluation of Robeson's right to travel freely.

In addition to Johannesburg, Capetown and other cities in the Union of South Africa, Dr. Clark visited in Orange Free State, North and South Rhodesia, Basutoland and Swaziland.

In the latter two he participated in laying of cornerstone for new AME Church edifices.

No Quick Ruling In School Case

Little Rock Integration Hearings Resume Tomorow

NEW JUDGE NOT HASTY

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 26.—Federal Judge Harry S. Lemley, who will preside here Monday at the reopening of the Central High School integration dispute, is expected to review "all phases" of the controversial case.

Judge Lemley was given jurisdiction of the case a week ago by Chief Judge Archibald Gardner of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. He takes over from Federal Judge Arnold N. Davies of Fargo, N. D.

Federal Court spokesmen here point out that Judge Lemley has a reputation of thoroughly acquainting himself with a case before he rules. He's the state's "roving" Federal judge. His home is at Hope.

No Quick Decisions

Those who are familiar with operations of his court doubt if there will be any "on the spot" decisions which marked the brief and highly controversial tenure here last fall of Judge Davies, who after only brief arguments ordered integration at Central High to "proceed forthwith."

Judge Davies' ruling came after segregationist leaders, as well as the School Board itself, petitioned the court for a delay. Judge Davies' allegedly "arbitrary" actions eventually drew the ire of Gov. Orval Faubus, himself involved in the litigation, who asked that the North Dakota judge excuse himself altogether from the case.

Judge Lemley, a Virginian, has spent more than a week studying court records in the case which arose last fall when integration started at Central High.

Some of the events, such as tension and disorder inside the school, have formed the basis for the School Board's latest petition, asking the court to reconsider the integration decree and allow it to "postpone" racially mixed classes.

Faces NAACP Petition

One of the earliest motions which Judge Lemley may take up is one filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, asking that the School Board's petition be denied. NAACP counsel is representing the Negro schoolchildren and parents involved at Central High.

Judge Lemley has indicated the Monday hearing will be merely one in which he will outline a procedure to follow in reaching a decision. That points to future hearings.

Little Rock Plea Rejected By Judge

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — An Arkansas federal judge told the Little Rock School Board Monday that it must prove that a suspension of integration at Central High School is necessary before he grants such a delay.

U. S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley also declared at a preliminary hearing on a petition for postponement of integration that the school board must spell out how long a delay it wants.

Lemley emphasized several times at the hearing that proof would be required before the board's petition could be granted.

SETS TRIAL JUNE 2

He set June 2 as the tentative trial date. The school year ends before then.

The board submitted its petition Feb. 20, asking the federal court to take another look at a gradual integration plan that exploded into rioting last fall. The court was asked to "realistically reconsider in the light of existing conditions" its order last fall for the program to be implemented without delay.

8 NEGROES ATTENDING

Eight Negroes now attend the 2,000-pupil Central High School. Racial clashes, bomb scares and suspensions of some white and Negro pupils have occurred in recent months.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People opposes the school board's petition.

Lemley said that before the petition could be granted, the school board must prove these allegations:

LISTS 'PROOFS'

1. That a small group of white pupils has often caused incidents which make teaching conditions at Central High difficult and unpleasant.
2. That unrest about integrated classes exists among pupils, teachers and parents.
3. That educational standards at the school are being destroyed by the controversy over integration.
4. That the quality of education now provided is sub-standard because of these adverse conditions.

Court Says Board Must Prove Necessity

Faubus to Appeal to Supreme Court

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The decision of the Eighth United States circuit court of appeals in upholding dismissal of a suit filed by Gov. Orval Faubus will be appealed to the US supreme court, an attorney for the governor said Monday.

The appellate court turned down Faubus' appeal from a district court injunction against his use of Arkansas National Guardsmen to prevent integration at Central High school.

Other appeals filed by Mrs. Clyde Thomason and Mrs. Margaret Jackson, members of he segregationist League of Central High Mothers, also were rejected by the St. Louis court.

Faubus himself declined comment.

Segregation Plan Author Warns Against Passiveness

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Segregationists must consider authority of courts or "we can only wait . . . for the next blow to strike," the author of a plan to restore racial harmony in Arkansas said Wednesday.

Herbert Thomas Sr., a Little Rock insurance executive, made the statement to business, church and civic leaders from a number of Arkansas cities.

He submitted his plan to the state Board of Education here Monday. It would create a state interracial commission to advise individual school districts on the speed of desegregation. The process would be voluntary.

PLAN SCORNED

Both segregationist and integrationist spokesmen have said the "state plan of voluntary progress" is not acceptable to them.

Monday, Thomas said:

"I was speaking to the Negro race, letting them know that the problem is no easy one, that there is no fast solution."

Today, he said, he was talking to segregationists "in terms of practical applications of the law."

"If there be a majority those who will concede no right of progress to members of the Negro race then my efforts are in vain.

"If that be the attitude we can only wait with a feeling of uneasiness for the next blow to strike — not knowing when or where it will fall."

HITS PASSIVENESS

Discussing separate but equal facilities Thomas said:

"In my opinion had the South accepted the spirit of the law of separate but equal facilities, . . . the principle of segregation could have been maintained in our public schools for an indefinite future and with an attendant spirit of good feeling between the races.

"Instead we adopted a passive resistance to that principle of law and we found that passive resistance did not pay. . . .

"But despite our sad experience in that regard we are once again inclined toward passive resistance to the Supreme Court."

Joshua K. Shepherd of Little Rock, who sat at the spaker's table with Thomas, said copies of Thomas' speech Monday had been sent to 200 ministers in Arkansas

The ministers have been asked to explain and discuss the Thomas plan with community leaders, Shepherd said.

Little Rock Injustice Cited

The manner in which President Eisenhower and persons close to his administration are trying to "get off the hook" upon which the administration dangles as the result of the military "invasion" of Little Rock was shown in the President's address before Negro leaders at the recent Washington meeting of the National Newspaper Publishers Association.

Daily News p. 4

Of course, the major theme of the President's speech was socalled civil rights. He insisted there are "no revolutionary cures" for racial discrimination. Such cures, he contended, "are evolutionary," and must come through education.

Sat-5-16-58

Then the chief executive referred to the necessity for "respect for law." On this occasion, of course, he meant specifically respect for the Supreme Court's Black Monday decision, handed down on May 17, 1954 —four years ago, come Saturday.

That the South has declined to accept the Black Monday edict as the "law of the land" is, of course, obvious. There is today, four years after the decision, more determined and strong organized resistance in seven southern states to the Supreme Court's order for racial mixology in the public schools than on the day the decision was handed down.

This is because the people know the nation's highest tribunal, in rendering the Black Monday edict, substituted philosophies of sociologists, psychologists and anthropologists for the constitution, the law and precedent.

More and more, throughout the nation thinking people are realizing that in ordering public school mixology, the high tribunal usurped prerogatives of Congress to legislate and the right of the people to amend the constitution.

The military "invasion" of Little Rock has contributed substantially to this realization, because it's obvious that if federal troops can be sent to Arkansas, without a request from the Governor, to enforce a court order that is contrary to the constitution, the law and precedent—a clear invasion of state sovereignty—then troops might be sent to any state outside the South on some other invalid pretext.

Getting back to the President's speech before the Negro press leaders in Washington, Mr. Eisenhower, commenting on "respect for law," declared "we must make sure that enforcement will not, in itself, create injustice."

This philosophy the chief executive obviously overlooked when he ordered the Little Rock "invasion." That "invasion" resulted in a number of injustices—the rankest of which were bayoneting of citizens by federal troops and the marching of little school children through Little Rock streets at bayonet point.

There are some who might well interpret the President's exhortation that care should be taken against creation of injustice through enforcement as an emphasis upon his error in ordering the Little Rock "invasion."

Little Rock Asks Three Year Delay For Integration

Daily Worker

Fri-5-16-57

LITTLE ROCK — (ANP) — The U. S. District court was petitioned last week to approve suspension of the city's gradual school integration plan until January, 1961.

The school board had originally petitioned the court on Feb. 20, for the delay, but had not specified a date. Judge Harry J. Lemley ordered it to amend the petition to specify how long a postponemnt it wanted.

Atlanta, Ga

In asking for January, 1961, the board said the plan could more easily be carried out at mid-term than at the start of school in the fall.

Judge Lemly is to hold a hearing on June 2 to determine if the delay will be granted.

HOPE THAT CITIZENS WILL OBEY LAW TOLD

WASHINGTON — (INS) — President Eisenhower Thursday ordered withdrawal of Federalized national guardsmen from integration enforcement duty at Little Rock, Ark., Central High School, effective May 29, a day after the summer vacation begins.

The Chief Executive accompanied the order with a statement in which he expressed hope that military enforcement of Federal Court decrees against racial segregation in public schools will never again be necessary.

NO NOTIFICATION

White House News Secretary James C. Hagerty said no official notification of the withdrawal was sent to Gov. Orval Faubus, whose anti-integration stand was a factor in Mr. Eisenhower's dramatic decision to intervene in Little Rock with armed force last September.

A Pentagon spokesman said the Arkansas National Guard troops will be "defederalized" and returned to state jurisdiction. The President's order was relayed by Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker to Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, commander of the Arkansas Military District.

432 GUARDSMEN

Directly affected by the Presidential action are 432 Guardsmen. Previously, some 10,000 other members of the Arkansas National Guard were released from federal service, into which they were ordered by the President last Sept. 24 when violence erupted at the school.

The outbreak of racial tensions at that time also resulted in dispatch of 1,000 paratroopers of the Regular Army's famed 101st Airborne Division to Little Rock.

The paratrooper detachment was cut to 500 on Oct. 14, to 225 on Nov. 6, and on Nov. 27 all Regular Army soldiers were withdrawn from the school.

8,700 RELEASED

Meanwhile, on Oct. 21, the President directed release of 8,700 National Guardsmen and on Dec. 13 the force was reduced to the 432 men still on duty.

Mr. Eisenhower federalized the Guard and ordered armed intervention after Faubus, as commander of the state troops, defied a Federal Court integration decree and sent Guardsmen to the school to prevent attempts by Negro pupils to enroll.

This occurred subsequent to a drama-charged conference between the President and Faubus at the Chief Executive's Newport, R. I., vacation headquarters, where they sought in vain for an amicable solution to the integration dispute.

Mr. Eisenhower said in his statement:

"Since last September, the federal government has stationed soldiers at the Little Rock High School to prevent obstruction of the orders of the United States District Court.

SUMMER RECESS

"Since the summer recess starts at the Central High School on May 28, and since there will be no further present need for Guardsmen, I have directed that they be released on May 29.

"Following that date I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the Federal Court are not obstructed.

"The faithful execution of this responsibility will make it unnecessary for the federal government to preserve the integrity of our judicial processes.

Faubus is appealing the Federal District Court order requiring Central High School, previously an all-white institution, to open its doors to Negro students, in compliance with the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling.

Wed 5-14-58

The governor is slated to win an unprecedented third term. His resistance to the integration order was a key issue in his renomination campaign.

Since the advent of the troops, there have been comparatively few instances of violence at the high school, none of major proportions. Ten Negroes enrolled. One later was expelled for unruly conduct.

President Cool to Using Troops to Enforce Law

Star Staff Writer

President Eisenhower yesterday deplored the use of Federal troops to enforce decisions of the courts, but he refused to indicate what course would be followed in school integration situations developing in Virginia and elsewhere.

Virginia authorities are under Federal court order to begin school integration in Charlottesville, Va., next September, and a similar ruling is in sight for Norfolk schools. Nearby Arlington also is under integration orders.

Mr. Eisenhower, commenting on the integration issue at his news conference, said he deplored the use of troops anywhere to get American citizens to obey court orders. But he emphasized that no one in the room would be secure in his basic rights if there should be successful defiance of court orders.

No Gestapo Desired

Mr. Eisenhower was asked what the administration was doing in advance to prevent a recurrence of the "Little Rock" situation in Virginia and elsewhere.

He said he didn't think the people wanted a Gestapo "going around trying to worm out what their evil intentions may be."

He added that "you do what you can."

A reporter noted that Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida had said segregation in that State would continue. He wanted to know if "the Little Rock pattern" would be followed in other States.

Asked by the President what pattern he referred to, the reporter said, "sending troops."

"For what?" the President asked. When the reply was to enforce the court orders, the President emphasized that was the point of the use of troops and not to enforce desegregation. He said the troops were ordered because there had been mob interference with the execution of the court order and Gov. Orval E. Faubus would not intervene to uphold the court.

While the President was in a sober mood, there was no outward display of irritation, which has marked some recent meetings with the press. He even maintained a solemn good humor when a reporter inquired if he would go to Gettysburg, Pa., his legal residence, to vote in Pennsylvania's Republican primary next Tuesday, and for whom he would vote as the nominee for Governor.

The reporter asked the latter part of the question, the President suggested, just to get a laugh.

He said he hoped to be able to go to Gettysburg to cast his vote. But then he underscored the many situations with which he is confronted by saying:

"We are on a day-by-day basis here."

On other subjects:

TAXES—The President said a decision would have to be reached soon on a tax cut in view of the expiration June 30 of several taxes.

PUBLIC WORKS—He is still opposed to new public works programs to combat the recession because it would be two years before the effects in more jobs would result.

ARKANSAS

LITTLE ROCK
MRS. LOIS PATILLO-DISMISSED

Board fires teacher in Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Because she refused to withdraw her daughter from Central High School, Mrs. Lois Pattillo, a teacher at the all colored Scipio A. Jones High School in North Little Rock, said she was told Tuesday:

"You had better look for another job. I can't go along with you on this integration business."

The mother of 16-year-old Melba Patillo, one of eight colored pupils at Central High, said she was told this by North Little Rock School Superintendent F. B. Wright as he refused to renew her seventh grade teaching contract.

THE ACTION by Wright is tantamount to firing Mrs. Patillo, whose daughter was the first colored pupil to be physically attacked by white pupils at Central last September.

In an interview with Wright, Mrs. Patillo said the conversation went as follows:

Wright: "How long are you going to keep your daughter in Central High School?"

Mrs. Patillo: "If the other colored children are going to continue going to school there, Melba will also."

WRIGHT: "I WILL give you a contract for one more year if you will promise to look for another job somewhere else.

"You can sign this now if you want to, but don't expect to be kept here, for we don't want you here for another year."

Mrs. Patillo said new contracts were sent to all the teachers at the school, except her. She added:

"Integration was the only reason given for my dismissal." An English and French instructor for seven years at Jones High, Mrs. Patillo said Wright told her she should have consulted him before allowing Melba to attend Central.

She said the superintendent offered her a new contract Monday to avoid "bad publicity" with the provision that she look for another job for 1959.

"Mr. Wright and Jones High Principal E. H. Hunter told me five times altogether that I should look for another job because of my part in the integration dispute," Mrs. Patillo said.

She added, "I told Mr. Wright I would not accept a new contract on his terms because it was the same as being fired and I had done nothing to deserve being fired."

She said Wright told her Monday that she had received too much publicity. She emphasized that Hunter had also tried to get her to resign her position.

* * *

IRATE COLORED citizens calling to protest the action were told that the contract had been withheld by the North Little Rock School Board.

Several board members, however, said that the action had been taken by Wright himself.

Wright said Mrs. Patillo's contract was one of about a dozen others that were not renewed, pending personal conferences with the teachers.

He said he would talk with Mrs. Patillo "in the near future" and that he thought "it would turn out all right."

"There are no insurmountable problems in the Patillo case," Wright said, but one school board member, Dr. W. E. Phipps Jr., hinted that the quality of her teaching may have been reason for Wright's action.

Dr. Phipps said Mrs. Patillo had once been changed from a librarian to an English teacher and "perhaps she had trouble teaching English too."

Mrs. Patillo immediately countered that no school official had ever questioned the quality of her teaching as a reason for holding up her contract. She added:

"As for the library, school officials tried to turn me into a librarian several years ago against my wishes and despite my training in another field."

* * *

MRS. PATILLO, who holds a master's degree from the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville, has taught at Shorter College in North Little Rock and Arkansas Baptist College at Little Rock.

She said she has considered filing suit against the North Little Rock School Board.

In addition to Melba, Mrs. Patillo is the mother of one other child, Conrad, 13, who attends Dunbar Junior High School in North Little Rock.

Teacher Denied Contract Renewal

Mother Of Negro Student At Central High

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, May 6.—The teaching contract of the mother of one of the Negro students attending Central High School hasn't been renewed, school officials disclosed Tuesday.

However, a conference later this week on the subject is scheduled between Mrs. Lois Pattillo, mother of Melba Pattillo, and North Little Rock school officials. The Negro woman has been teaching at Scipio Jones Negro High School in North Little Rock.

School Supt. F. B. Wright of North Little Rock declined to state whether the Central High connection had anything to do with the non-renewal of the contract. Mrs. Daisy Bates, Negro head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People here, inferred that it had.

The North Little Rock School Board last year delayed indefinitely a school integration plan of its own after the Central High controversy erupted.

Mr. Wright called the contract "a personal matter," and said he expected some "satisfactory arrangement" to be worked out with the teacher. Several other teacher contracts also weren't renewed, he noted, although most of the 31-member faculty of the Negro school have been rehired for next year's teaching.

Meanwhile, Little Rock school officials reported that things continued quiet at Central High School itself. Central High and other schools end the present school year on May 28.

Fire Mother Of Little Rock Pupil

LITTLE ROCK — (INS) — The mother of one of eight Negro students attending integrated Little Rock Central High school learned last night that her teaching contract at a North Little Rock Negro elementary school will not be renewed.

Mrs. Lois Patillo, mother of 15-year-old Melba Pattillo, has taught at the Jones Elementary school for seven years.

North Little Rock school superintendent F. B. Wright said Mrs. Pattillo is one of several teachers whose contracts were not renewed because of what he called "problems."

Wright refused to discuss "the problems," but he referred to them as "strictly personal matters."

Jones Junior High School in North Little Rock before she was informed that she was no longer among the employed. Reason for her being fired has been traced to the fact that her daughter, Melba, happens to be a student at Central High School in Little Rock.

Therefore, Mrs. Patillo's firing was because of her "participation in the integration issue." In fact, the ex-teacher said that Supt. F. B. Wright informed her that she should have spoken to him before she enrolled her daughter in Central.

Aftermath

Board Fires Patillo

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Mrs. Lois Patillo can attest to the validity of the latest equation in integration here in mixed-up Arkansas.

Melba

The formula goes like this: One high school plus nine Negro pupils equals one Negro teacher out of her job in one all-Negro junior high school.

Mrs. Patillo doesn't teach arithmetic, but she was teaching English at the Scipio A.

LITTLE ROCK FIGURED IN NEW SCHOOL PLAN

Factor In Stressing Science Rather Than Building

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31. — (AP) — Administration sources said Tuesday the Little Rock school integration crisis was a factor but not a big one in the decision to give priority to science and mathematics training, rather than school construction, in the Federal education program.

These sources said the Little Rock situation obviously was considered as a development which would make it more difficult to get Congress to pass a construction bill.

Building bills have been sunk by amendments barring aid for segregated schools.

Other factors which were cited were:

Failure last summer to get three House members to switch position so a construction bill could be passed and failure to get such a bill reported out of Senate committee.

Disappointment at the amount of support Southern House members gave the building bill, even though their states stood to benefit most.

Continued opposition in areas which engendered most of the opposition strength this year.

Secretary of Welfare Marion B. Folsom declined at two news conferences Monday to discuss the status of the school construction program, but also refused to agree with a reporter that it had "gone down the drain."

Negro Pupils Back After Holidays

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., (UP) — Eight of the nine Negro students who integrated Central High School last fall with the help of federal troops returned to classes without incident Thursday as the Christmas-New Year's holiday ended.

The ninth student, Minnie Brown, still has two days of suspension to serve for dumping a lunch tray on two white boys. She can return to classes Monday if she discusses her case with Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom.

Blossom said the girl so far had not requested an interview. He said her case must be reviewed with her before she is allowed to return to classes.

Four pairs of federalized National Guardsmen patrolled outside the school grounds and two were stationed inside the building. One jeep with three soldiers drove aruond the school campus.

LITTLE ROCK CHECKS DALLAS SCHOOL CASE

Wants To Know If Federal Stand Has Changed

LITTLE ROCK, Dec. 31.—(AP) —The Little Rock School Board Tuesday ordered its attorneys to investigate the Dallas court ruling against immediate school integration and determine how it affects the situation here.

The board said it wanted the study made to see if the ruling offers any prospects of "temporary or permanent change" in the Federal Court order which approved Little Rock's gradual integration plan.

The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans last Friday ruled that Dallas public schools did not have to be integrated at the start of the school term next February.

Te Little Rock School Board said that since the appellate court's ruling, "there has been much speculation as to whether it has any bearing on the court-ordered plan of integration under which the Little Rock School District is now operating."

New Incident Reported At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 10 (AP) —The mother of a 17-year-old white girl student at Central High School said her daughter was suspended today after a pushing incident involving one of the six Negro girls attending the forcibly integrated school.

Mrs. Fred Gist said her daughter, Darlene Holloway, reported that Principal Jess Matthews suspended her immediately after the incident but did not suspend the Negro girl.

Neither Matthews nor other school officials could be reached for comment.

The mother quoted her daughter as saying the Negro girl got in her way and she shoved her. Mrs. Gist did not identify the Negro girl.

Only hours before the reported suspension, School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom reinstated a Negro girl, Minniejean Brown. She was suspended late in December for dumping food on two white boys in the school cafeteria.

The Brown girl was the only Negro suspended since she and eight others entered Central High last Sept. 25 under the protection of federal troops ordered here by President Eisenhower.

At least two white students have been suspended since that time for participation in racial incidents.

Mrs. Gist, a member of the segregationist League of Central High Mothers told newsmen she thought the Negro girl involved in the incident with her daughter also should have been suspended. She said she would confer with Matthews and Blossom Monday.

Violence Flares In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — Two white girl students have been suspended from Little Rock's Central high school as a result of alleged incidents involving Negro students.

School officials refused comment on the suspensions, which occurred Friday.

One of the girls suspended reportedly pushed a Negro girl sprawling as she stooped over to pick up some books in a school corridor.

The other white girl was reported to have shoved a Negro girl down a flight of stairs in the school. The Negro girl was not injured.

The Negro girls were two of nine Negro students whose admission to the previously all-white high school at the beginning of the school year led to race rioting at Little Rock and supervision by troops under government orders.

Negro's Status At Little Rock Still Uncertain

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 3.—Supt. of Schools Virgil T. Blossom conferred Friday with a Negro girl student suspended from classes at Central High School, but said later a decision wasn't reached on her reinstatement.

Mr. Blossom had a conference with Minnie Jean Brown and her parents, and said he might talk with them further Monday. He declined to say why there was no immediate decision.

The student, one of nine Negroes attending Central High under soldier-enforced integration, was suspended shortly before classes recessed for the Christmas holidays. School officials said she dumped a tray of food on two white boys in the cafeteria.

A suspension is for three days with a conference with the superintendent before the student involved can return to classes.

Mr. Blossom said he received no reports of incidents or disorders Friday. Federalized National Guardsmen still are patrolling the campus.

The school superintendent said he hoped to confer soon with an attorney for the school board who went to New Orleans earlier this week to study the Circuit Court of Appeals ruling on the Dallas integration order. The Court of Appeals overthrew a previous order directing Dallas to integrate its schools at midterm.

The attorney, Archie House, hadn't returned to Little Rock late Friday. He made the trip after the school board voted to review the Dallas decision to see if further legal steps might be taken in Little Rock.

JOHNSON IS SEEKING TO AMEND CHARTER

Would Strengthen State Laws On Segregation

OUT OF GOVERNOR'S RACE

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 8. — A former gubernatorial candidate announced Tuesday he will try to amend the Arkansas Constitution this year to add to and strengthen state laws on segregation.

Jim Johnson, Crossett attorney and former state senator who ran for Governor in 1956, made his plans public when he brought copies of a lengthy proposed initiated act to Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett's office for approval of the ballot title.

Surprise Announcement

He also made the surprise announcement that he doesn't plan to be a candidate for Governor in this year's elections. He said he wasn't withdrawing from politics, but that his activities this year will be concentrated on getting his proposed constitutional changes adopted.

"I don't expect to run in a primary again until some legislation similar to this amendment becomes law," he said. Barring a special session which might adopt such legislation, that apparently ruled him out of this year's race.

Prior to his announcement, Mr. Johnson had been rumored as a "repeat" contender for Governor this summer. He campaigned heavily on the segregation issue in 1956 against Gov. Orval Faubus, but was defeated along with several other candidates.

The proposal would require districts to close schools where integration decrees had been issued and to call a popular vote of the district voters on whether to abide by the ruling.

If the vote was in the negative, Federal orders would be defied and schools would be operated under a "private school" system.

State Funds Withheld

State funds would be withheld from districts where integrated classes were in effect, and school board officials could be recalled under a system of special elections called by 10 per cent of the electorate.

The proposal would give constitutional status to the state Sovereignty Commission, voted into effect by the 1957 Legislature, and would require the commission to hold monthly meetings.

In addition, attorneys representing any person or organization whose activities "forment social unrest" would be deemed guilty of barratry under state laws and "forever prohibited from the practice of law in the State of Arkansas."

The barratry provision apparently is aimed at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which already is under fire from the attorney general's office for its legal activities in the state in promoting integration.

The proposal, however, isn't confined to integration issues alone.

Limit On Appointments

It also would prohibit any one governor from naming more than two members to the five-member state Highway Commission, provide for "automatic referral" of legislative tax increases to popular vote of the people, and set up a system of voter registration in the state.

Governor Faubus has named two members to the Highway Commission, and if elected to a third term would have a shot under present appointive procedures at naming a third. The Governor also sponsored tax increases in the 1957 General Assembly.

Mr. Johnson said his first job was to obtain about 30,000 signatures to place his proposal on the November general election ballot.

If that succeeds, he plans an active campaign to try to persuade the voters to adopt it, he said.

"This is definitely needed legislation," he said. He added that an organization known as "Arkansas for Constitutional Action" was being formed in connection with the measure.

Asked if he planned to endorse any gubernatorial candidate, Mr. Johnson said he didn't yet know who would be in this year's race.

Interposition Act Adopted

"However, I would be happy if all would run in accordance with this," he said.

The former state senator sponsored one constitutional change, an interposition act, in 1956 which was adopted by the people. His latest proposal is far more inclusive and covers legislation which has been suggested in various sources following the Little Rock integration dispute.

A "preamble" statement to the proposal hits at communism as being the root of the state's present integration problems.

FAUBUS SEES CHANGE IN PUBLIC OPINION

Says Tide Turning In Favor Of Little Rock

SHERIFFS HEAR SPEECH

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 10.—Gov. Orval Faubus expressed the belief Friday that public opinion is "changing in favor of Little Rock" on the integration issue.

And he likened the Federal Government's role in the controversy as having become similar to the case of a legendary Irishman "who grabbed a wildcat but then found he couldn't turn it loose."

"I'm in no mood to help the Federal Government turn it loose," the Governor declared.

Remarks Bring Applause

He made the remarks amid laughter and applause during a speech he gave before the Arkansas Sheriffs Association. Referring briefly to the integration controversy, the Governor said he would have felt "more secure" if he could have had the sheriffs surrounding him "several months ago."

"It's not my problem now—it's theirs," the Governor declared in reference to Federal officials, which apparently included President Eisenhower. "I'm just not going to worry about it," he added.

President Eisenhower sent Federal troops here in late September, and Governor Faubus has been highly critical of the President's orders ever since. The Governor had said before that the problem now was largely one facing the Federal Government, but Friday's remarks were perhaps his most outspoken in that regard.

Governor Faubus sent National Guard troops to Central High School in early September with orders to keep classes segregated, but the Federal Government slapped an injunction against him and Federal troops—either regular Army or federalized National Guardsmen—have been at the school ever since.

The Governor said he had begun to note that "outside" press treatment of the Little Rock controversy wasn't as "one-sided" as it had been at the start.

Sentiment Changing

"I think, public sentiment is changing perceptibly in favor of Arkansas. I've always had faith that if you're right, the facts eventually will come out. The American people basically are a fair-minded people, and will make the right conclusions if they have all the facts," the Governor observed.

The Governor mentioned no figures in his speech about the cost of federalizing the Arkansas National Guard for Little Rock integration duty, but Col. William C. Page of the Arkansas National Guard said the total cost up to Nov. 30 was about $3,835,000.

Most of the guard had been released from Federal duty by November, but 432 still were under federalized status as classes ended Friday at Central High School.

The Arkansas Military District said the cost of maintaining the 432 still under Federal orders was running about $100,000 a month.

LITTLE ROCK BOARD TO DISCUSS RULING

May Plan More Court Action On Integration

ATTORNEY TO REPORT

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 7.—The Little Rock school board will discuss "within the week" the possibility of taking additional court action on Central High integration as a result of a recent Dallas integration ruling.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said Tuesday he was trying to set up a meeting of all board members for the discussion. He met with a few members Tuesday, but said it wasn't a full-fledged meeting, and that integration problems weren't discussed.

To Arrange Meeting

He said he was trying to arrange a convenient meeting time when all members could be present to hear a report from Archie House, school board attorney, on the ruling by the Court of Appeals at New Orleans, which overruled a district court ruling that Dallas schools must integrate by mid-term.

Mr. Blossom also said there still had been no decision on whether to reinstate Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine Negro students attending Central High, who was suspended from classes when she dumped a tray of food on some white students in the school cafeteria.

Meanwhile, the Arkansas Military District said National Guardsmen on federalized guard duty at Central High would start patrolling the school only during school days.

No Orders Received

Guardsmen no longer will be stationed at the school at nighttime, week ends or on holidays, a spokesman for the district announced.

The decision was reached, he said, following discussions with Army authorities in Washington and Little Rock school board officials.

Apparently plans called for Little Rock policemen to guard the school during hours when Guardsmen aren't present.

The district said it had received no orders affecting the status of the 432 National Guardsmen still being held under Federal orders to enforce the integration decree at Central High.

Clinger h[illegible] in federal service sinc[illegible] when troops b[illegible] enfo[illegible] rdered integration o[illegible]gro students at Central High School.

The paratroopers have returned to their base and all but 432 guardsmen have been released from federal service.

Clinger was the only person released today. Army officials here announced that Col. Alton F. Balkman, a state guard officer still on federal status, replaces Clinger as commander of troops at Central High.

The Army now places only about a dozen guardsmen at the school during class hours and withdraws them at night and on weekends.

General Is Relieved of Duty at Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 9 (AP). Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger was relieved of federal duty in the Little Rock integration controversy today, and Gov. Orval Faubus immediately returned him to his regular post as state adjutant general.

Faubus wants schools given back to people

BY KEITH FULLER

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 18—(AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus said Saturday the presence of federal troops enforcing integration at Little Rock Central High School is contrary to law.

"But the big question that remains is: Who is it that can arrest Gen. Walker or the president?"

The governor departed from his prepared text to pose the "big question." Gen. Edwin Walker commands the Arkansas military district.

Faubus' own new thought on solving the integration-segregation question was to have the federal govenment leave the decision to each local area for a vote on the controversy.

IF THIS SYSTEM of what he called the "time honored democratic process" were used the problem of integration-segregation "as we know it today would cease to exist."

The governor, speaking before a convention of publishers representatives and magazine wholesalers, many of them from other sections of the nation, quoted long passages from Thomas Jefferson's writings.

"It is clear that Jefferson meant for school affairs to be delegated to local communities, now known as school districts. And that is the way it has been for lo, these many years. . . .

"It is equally clear that the founding fathers meant to forbid the use of federal force within a state unless there was invasion or conflict between the states. And even then troops were never to be quartered in a state as they are now in Little Rock, without the consent" of the state.

The governor, whose out-of-state audience did not interrupt his 30-minute locally televised address with applause, quoted The Dallas Morning News as saying the law now makes it illegal to willfully use "any part of the Army or Air Force as a 'posse comitatus' or otherwise to execute the laws . . ." and that to do so could result in fines and imprisonment.

This law, Faubus said, made it clear that "the illegal usurpation of power by the federal government in the use of troops in Little Rock, is contrary to the recent expression of Congress." The newspaper identified the law as Title 18, Sec. 1385, United States Code, as amended in 1956.

Aside from suggesting a local vote to end the integration-segregation controversy, the Arkansas governor offered no hope for a quick solution.

He said that question was a part of the larger struggle as to federal power vs. states rights.

"Taking, then, into consideration the magnitude and complexity of the problem of which segregation-integration is only a part, it would appear that only the uninformed, the unenlightened, or the partly enlightened, could expect or call for an easy, quick solution of the Little Rock affair under the present conditions."

Negroes Offered Fare To New York

HELENA, Ark., Feb. 25. — (AP) — Plantation owner J. R. Bush of Helena said Tuesday he has offered to pay transportation for any of the eight Negroes now attending Little Rock Central High School who want to leave for New York City.

Mr. Bush said he sent a telegram to the principal of New Lincoln School in New York.

"All taxpayers of Arkansas are greatly indebted to you for giving a scholarship to Minnijean Brown," the telegram said. "I will gladly pay (airline) fares to New York for the remaining eight (Negro) students and Daisy Bates as chaperone. Advise acceptance by wire."

Daisy Bates is Arkansas president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Minnijean is a Negro student who recently was expelled from the Little Rock public school system.

Catholic magazine cites Judge Davies

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — For his ruling which made integration a fact rather than a theory and his personal conduct, Judge Davies is View's choice as the man of the year for 1957."

Thus spoke View Magazine, national Catholic periodical, as it placed its accolade of "Catholic Man of the Year" upon Federal District Court Judge Ronald N. Davies, whose decisions spanked the Little Rock integration crisis.

The Fargo, N.D., jurist came to Little Rck in late August to help clear up a backlog of cases created by the retirement of Judge Thomas C. Trimble of Lonoke several months earlier. He landed in the middle of the integration controversy.

* * *

MAJOR DECISIONS handed down by Davies included:

Aug. 30 — An order nullifying a Pulaski Chancery Court temporary injunction which would have prevented integration of Central High School to proceed as ordered previously by a District Court and the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis.

Sept. 3 — An order requiring that school officials begin integrating on the following day in spite of the fact that National Guard troops called out by Gov. Orval Faubus had prevented integration the day before.

* * *

Sept. 7 — An order refusing the request of the Little Rock School Board to temporarily suspend the integration plan, declaring: "That we, each of us, has a duty to conform to the law of the land and the decrees of its duly constituted tribunals is too elementary to require elaboration."

Sept. 20 — An order to Governor Faubus, calling on him to withdraw the National Guard troops from the school so that integration could begin.

The governor withdrew the troops and nine colored pupils subsequently began attending classes at Central High.

LITTLE ROCK ACTION TO ECHO IN CONGRESS

Mississippian Readies Bills To Curb Troop Use

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—President Eisenhower's use of troops to enforce school integration in Little Rock is expected to echo again and again in the new session of Congress.

As Congress prepared to convene for the new session Tuesday, several Southerners were reported to be preparing speeches on the subject.

Representative Arthur Winstead (D., Miss.), a ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee, may be the first to act.

The Mississippian announced he plans to take the House floor Tuesday to denounce the President's action and to introduce two bills aimed at prohibiting the use of troops for such purposes in the future.

His first bill would prohibit the President from calling the National Guard into Federal service except in time of war, when there is a threat of invasion, or when so requested by the governor or state legislature.

The Mississippian's second measure would bar the President or any other Federal official from using Federal troops to enforce Federal court orders or state laws.

The two bills, ni effect, would repeal the old Reconstruction era "force laws" which President Eisenhower's legal advisers unearthed for him during the Little Rock crisis and under which he acted.

It was learned that Senator Herman Talmadge (D., Ga.) also is preparing a speech denouncing the President's intervention in Little Rock for delivery later in the session. Other denunciations are expected as the session proceeds.

Questions troop use—

Huddleston to request inquiry into Little Rock

WASHINGTON. Jan. 7—Rep. George Huddleston Jr. said he will seek an inquiry into President Eisenhower's authority to send troops to Little Rock.

He said the probe should be conducted by Congress through its House armed service committee of which he is a member and of which Rep. Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) is chairman.

Huddleston said he will make the move to clarify the president's power in dispatching troops.

According to Huddleston, Congress thought last year it repealed any presidential power to use federal troops in civil rights or other disturbances which do not constitute insurrection.

He said if the law is clear that the president can use troops, it should be repealed. However, if the law is open to interpretation, it should be clarified to prevent the president from sending troops into communities in future situations in which there is not insurrection.

The armed services committee plans to begin hearings Friday on America's defense position.

HUDDLESTON explained that defense is so important that it should come first, but after it is completed, he is going to urge immediated action in the Little Rock matter.

Meanwhile, Rep. Winstead (D., Miss.) criticized the president's troop action in Little Rock. He called on Congress to put "legislative handcuffs" on the executive to prevent similar action in the future.

Winstead said he plans to introduce two bills aimed at limiting use of federal troops.

One bill would prohibit the president from calling the National Guard into federal service except in time of war, threat of invasion, or when requested by a state governor or Legislature.

The other bill would prohibit use of federal troops to enforce court orders and state laws.

INTEGRATED CLASSES REOPEN AT CENTRAL

Mothers League On Hand To Check On Suspension

EIGHT NEGROES RETURN

From The Commercial Appeal, Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 2.—Integrated classes were resumed at Central High Thursday after a two-week Christmas recess under "token" protest from about a dozen members of the Mothers League of Central High School.

Members of that strongly pro-segregationist group assembled in a group near the school shortly before classes opened Thursday morning.

To Check Suspension

A spokesman said they went to the school to see if one of the Negro students, who had been suspended from classes, had been allowed to return.

Eight of the nine Negro students returned to classes under the eyes of federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen who again had taken up the posts they were filling when classes let out before Christmas.

Minnie Jean Brown, one of the nine who entered previously all-white classes last fall, was still under suspension and was absent Thursday. She was suspended shortly before classes recessed for the holidays, and after she had dumped a bowl of chili on a couple of white boy students inside the school cafeteria.

Virgil Blossom, city schools superintendent, said the girl hadn't applied for reinstatement but that her three-day suspension didn't end until Friday. One source said she probably would seek re-entry to the school Monday.

Social Functions Issue

Mr. Blossom had only a terse "no comment" to claims made by some of the Negro students last week in Dallas where they were guests at a Negro-sponsored function. Some of them said they were being barred from social activities at the school.

A white student inside the school said Thursday that if there were any orders to keep the Negroes from attending school social functions, he did not know of them. However, he added that none of the Negro students had appeared at school dances or other activities which he had attended.

Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League and one of those present Thursday, said the group was there "to see if Minnie Jean Brown was back in school." She said her organization had planned to protest if she were allowed back, since her suspension time still wasn't up.

Half a dozen Guardsmen, walking in pairs in freezing weather, took up patrol duty outside the school and about half a dozen more were stationed inside, spokesmen said.

'Lot of Army Brass'

One white student interviewed after classes Thursday commented that he "saw a lot of Army brass inside" before classes started for the day. He said he didn't know why the officers were present, adding that there were no incidents inside the school so far as he knew.

There had been reports during the Christmas and New Year's recess that Federal marshals would take over guard duty at the school when classes resumed.

However, Army spokesmen here said they had received no change in the status of the 432 National Guardsmen who were still being held under Federal orders to carry out the integration decree.

LITTLE ROCK VIGIL RESUMES QUIETLY

Guardsmen on Patrol Again as Students Return to Central High School

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 2—Integrated classroom sessions were resumed at Central High School today. Federalized National Guard troops continued to patrol the grounds.

Eight Negro students and about 1,900 white students returned to school for the first day since the Christmas-holiday recess started on Dec. 19. The Negroes arrived in four automobiles and entered the building without incident.

A spokesman for the Negro students said tonight that the school day "apparently went very smoothly and several of the children said they had one of their nicest days."

A ninth Negro student, Minnie Jean Brown, is still under a suspension imposed after a school-cafeterial incident involving her and two white boys. School officials reported that she had dumped a plat of food on the boys after they had blocked her path.

12 Guardsmen at School

The minimum suspension is three days. Holidays are not counted and Miss Brown's third day of suspension will be completed at the end of tomorrow's session. Readmission is based on study of a written report of the incident and a talk between the school officials and the suspended student.

Nine guardsmen were posted as sidewalk sentries near the school entrances and three guardsmen circled the building in a radio patrol jeep as students arrived this morning.

A group of ten women and four men, warmly dressed against the cold, clustered on a sidewalk corner across the street from the school building. They were orderly and talked quietly among themselves.

Leave After Opening Bell

Several of the group said they were present "just to see how things are now that school has opened." They indicated they had no pans to appear on the scene with any regularity. The group left shortly after the opening bell rang.

Capt. James E. Smith, public information officer of the Arkansas Military District, said that the guardsmen had resumed a platoon rotation system at 5 P. M. yesterday. Under this system, some twenty-five to thirty guardsmen are assigned to a twenty-four-hour detail at the school grounds.

During the holiday period regular watchmen and off-duty city patrolmen hired by the school board guarded the premises.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas

chairman of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said today that nine Negro students had received Christmas gifts "from all parts of the world."

Negroes Back In Little Rock Central High

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 2 (AP)—Federalized state Guardsmen, who returned to Central High School yesterday after an absence of nearly two weeks, walked familiar posts today as students came back from their Christmas holidays.

Eight of the Negroes enrolled at the school arrived in four separate cars and entered the building without incident as about a dozen Guardsmen patroled outside on foot and in a jeep.

The Negro absent was Minnie Jean Brown who apparently still was serving a suspension imposed on her in a preholiday incident. School authorities said she dumped a bowl of chili on a white boy in the school cafeteria.

About a dozen women who identified themselves as members of the pro-segregationists Mothers League of Central High gathered on a corner across from the school as classes began.

A few of the women talked to some white students briefly outside the school, and left shortly afterwards.

Waiting For Troops To Depart

Expects Negroes To Quit Central In Little Rock

By SHELBY SCATES

DALLAS, Tex. — (INS) — Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus said Saturday troops would be needed at Little Rock's integrated Central high school until there is "significant change in the attitudes of the people."

Faubus, enroute to a Phoenix, Ariz., vacation told newsmen in Dallas "most of the people don't expect to see the Negroes stay in school if the troops (federalized Arkansas national guard) are removed."

He reiterated his stand that under present conditions the only solution to the Little Rock situation is the withdrawal of the nine Negro students from Central high school.

The Arkansas chief executive, key figure in an historic conflict between a Federal court order and state's rights, said the use of Federal troops in Little Rock was an instance of "law imposed against the will of a majority for the will of a minority."

He added that other "Little Rocks" would ensue in the South if integration were pursued by the same methods that were used in the troubled Arkansas city.

"Little Rock integrationists failed to promote their own cause," Faubus said. "It was their responsibility to create an attitude of acceptance in the community through democratic processes.

"But instead they wanted to get their way through the use of Federal troops."

Faubus said the integration issue will be a central issue in the 1960 national elections but that he had not discussed the issue with national political leaders who he says are "afraid to face the issue realistically."

He added that he has had no indication of the formation of a third, presumably, state's rights party but said this would be "determined by the actions of democratic national leadership."

He warned, however, that the "people of the South are not going to be dictated to by this self-styled liberal leadership which has made an effort to play to the will of the minorities.

"The danger in this is yielding too far to the minority so that you lose the majority."

The governor, looking hail and chipper after a recent illness, said he had not yet decided whether or not to run for a third, unprecedented term, but added laughingly:

"After I get out of politics I'll probably end up like you (the newsmen) — in the newspaper business."

National Guard Back On Duty At Little Rock High School

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 1.—Troops returned to Little Rock Central High School Wednesday as the holiday recess drew to a close.

Classes dismissed since Dec. 18, will resume Thursday morning.

The Army removed federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen from the school the day after students left for the holidays. For the past 13 days watchmen and off-duty patrolmen hired by the school board have guarded Central High.

An Army bus brought a small force of soldiers to the school at 5 p.m. Wednesday. The Guardsmen went inside the building, apparently for briefing.

Return Uneventful

The return was uneventful.

The Army has been using only about a dozen Guardsmen at any one time to enforce a Federal Court order for integration of nine Negro students at the 2,000-pupil schools.

Capt. James E. Smith, public information officer of the Arkansas Military District, said he understood there would be no increase in the number of troops stationed at Central High.

Soldiers being used at the school are part of the last 432 Guardsmen still on Federal service in connection with the integration crisis here.

At the height of the dispute last September, President Eisenhower federalized the entire 10,500-man Arkansas Guard and sent in 1,000 paratroopers to enforce integration.

Study Is Ordered

Tuesday, the Little Rock School Board ordered its attorneys to make a study of last week's court ruling which allowed a delay in integration of Dallas schools.

The ruling was issued by the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans.

The Little Rock School Board said it wants to find out whether the Dallas decision offers any prospects of temporary or permanent change in the Federal Court order which approved integration here.

Gov. Orval Faubus has suggested the school board "go back to court and appeal the ruling they got." He made the comment after the Dallas ruling, and apparently referred to the integration order issued at Little Rock by United States District Judge Ronald N. Davies.

Gov. Faubus Gets Back in the News

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (ANP) — Controversial Gov. Faubus of Arkansas got into the news picture again last week with an announcement that he plans to reveal a "new thought" on the school integration problem, and admission that he might have made a few mistakes during the Central High controversy.

Interviewed at a news conference here, Faubus tried to minimize his own possible mistakes in comparison to what he termed the government's major blunder in calling out federal troops to enforce integration at the school. The government made the biggest mistake by using the troops, he said.

Back from a vacation trip in North Arkansas, the governor appeared to be acting the part of a prima donna, as he kept reporters guessing on what his "new thought" will be. He said, however, that he might reveal it in an address before the Independent Magazine Wholesalers convention here Jan. 18.

He refused also to say whether he would run for a third term as governor. He would say only that he thought the integration issue would be a major issue in the 1958 campaign.

Asked if he thought the National Democratic Party would support him in the campaign, Faubus said: "I think that I am not in any sort of disfavor with the Party. I may be with some Party officials but these are only a few. National Democratic chieftain Paul Butler, who usually speaks for the party, has criticized Faubus on his stand in the Little Rock controversy.

Little Rock Gets Airing At Afro-Asian Conference

CAIRO, Egypt — (ANP) — The Little Rock crisis which erupted over school integration at Central High school last year got an airing by delegates attending the African-Asian conference here last week.

It was mentioned in one of two proposed legislations criticizing the United States during the closing sessions of the conference. Some 400 delegates from 40 countries attended the conference, aimed at obtaining solidarity among the Afro-Asian countries.

The resolution touching upon the Little Rock situation was introduced by representatives from Jordan and French Sudan. They demanded that the United States be censured in a resolution on racial discrimination, saying that Little Rock was sufficient justification.

However, the resolution was dropped when Dr. Anup Singh of India spoke against singling out the United States for criticism.

In the closing sesions, the conference, held in the spacious Cairo university auditorium, passed a flurry of resolutions, several of which were critical of foreign exploitation. It also endorsed the 10 basic principles of the Bandung conference of 1955. Among those attending the conference as official representatives from nature, were representatives from the new Negro nation of Ghana, formerly the Gold Coast, and Nigeria. Delegates from these two countries were given front seats at the conference.

HARRY S. ASHMORE ----

Ashmore Says There's More To Little Rock

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Feb. 21 (AP)—A prominent Arkansas journalist said tonight the press did a "reasonably accurate" job of reporting the Little Rock integration crisis, but "they have failed to tell why it happened."

Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, said in a prepared speech marking the 20th anniversary of Nieman Journalism Fellowships at Harvard University that "all the traditional shortcomings of journalism were on display there on my doorstep (Little Rock)."

Ashmore said journalism's unfulfilled responsibility is "to somehow provide perspective and continuity—to add the why to the what."

To the press, the Little Rock story had an arbitrary beginning and end, the editor said.

A BIGGER STORY

". . . Little Rock was simply the temporary focus of a great continuing and unresolved American dilemma which touches upon fundamental concepts of social change and of law," he added.

"Journalism has concentrated on only the exposed portion of the iceberg," Ashmore said. "The great, submerged mass remains uncharted."

The editor charged that it was "the failure of leadership in Washington which matched the default of Southern leadership, and made the ultimate showdown between state and federal force inevitable."

He said the Eisenhower administration made "token efforts to pass stringent civil rights legislation" but "at no time did Mr. Eisenhower attempt to use the great moral force of his office to persuade Southerners of the justice of the course the Supreme Court required of them . . ."

The "drift in Washington," an essential part of the Little Rock story, "went largely unnoticed except by a few peripheral critics who address a limited audience," Ashmore said.

BURDEN ON BOARD

He criticized Washington's "decision to leave to the Little Rock School Board the entire burden of carrying out the court order against impossible odds."

Ashmore said the White Citizens' Council campaign "this week bore its first tangible fruit in the expulsion of one of the nine Negro children who had responded in kind to calculated mistreatment . . ."

"Just as the Little Rock story did not begin in Little Rock," he said, "it will not end there—whatever the ultimate fate of the eight Negro children remaining in the beleaguered high school.

"Perhaps what we (the press) need most of all is simply the courage of our convictions."

2 white girls- SUSPENDED
OTHER WHITE STUDENTS

Suspend 2 Coeds At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — Two white girl students have been suspended from Little Rock's Central High school as a result of alleged incidents involving Negro students.

School officials refused comment on the suspensions, which occurred Friday.

One of the girls suspended reportedly pushed a Negro girl sprawling as she stooped over to pick up some books in a school corridor.

The other white girl was reported to have shoved a Negro girl down a flight of stairs in the school. The Negro girl was not injured.

The Negro girls were two of nine Negro students whose admission to the previously all-white high school at the beginning of the school year led to race rioting at Little Rock and supervision by troops under government orders.

Two week ago, one of the Negro girls, Minnie Jean Brown, was suspended because she spilled a bowl of chili upon a white youth who reportedly had attempted to trip her.

(The nine little Rock students, their parents and Mrs. Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas NAACP, were named recently on the Chicago Defender's 1957 Honor Roll for making outstanding contributions to the advancement of race relations in the United States.)

Girls Suspended In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — Two white girl students of Little Rock's Central High School were suspended Friday as a result of alleged incidents involving Negro girl students of the school.

School officials declined to comment on the suspensions but it was learned that in the first case the white girl had pushed the Negro girl sprawling as she stooped over to pick up some books in a school corridor.

In the other case, the white girl was reported to have shoved a Negro girl down a flight of stairs in the school. The Negro girl was not injured.

The girls are two of nine Negro students whose admission to the previous all-white high school at the beginning of the school year led to rioting in Little Rock and resulted in President Eisenhower ordering Paratroopers and National Guardsmen to the scene.

GIRL BACK AT SCHOOL

Was Suspended for Shoving Little Rock Negro Student

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 22 (UP) — Dr. William G. Cooper, Little Rock school board president said Wednesday that a 17-year-old girl suspended from integrated Central High School after a "shoving" incident with a Negro girl would return to classes Monday.

The board met tonight for about an hour at the request of the girl's mother, Mrs. Fred Gist. Mrs. Gist had threatened a lawsuit if she were not granted the hearing.

Mrs. Gist's daughter, Darlene Holloway, was involved in an incident with Elizabeth Eckford at the school. Darlene denied the shoving was deliberate.

Amis Guthridge, Mrs. Gist's attorney, told newsmen, who were barred from the hearing, that no eyewitnesses were present to testify about the shoving incident. He had asked that the Negro girl be ordered to the hearing but school officials did not call her.

WHITE GIRL REMAINS ON SUSPENDED LIST

Early School Reinstatement Refused At Little Rock

BOARD HEARS FATHER

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau.

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 21.—The Little Rock School Board refused Friday to grant an early reinstatement to a white girl student at Central High School who was suspended Monday for circulating cards bearing the writing, "One down . . . eight to go."

Suspended for two weeks was Sammie Dean Parker, 16-year-old daughter of Jay D. Parker.

Mr. Parker told newsmen the board said his daughter could return to classes March 3 "if her attitude is changed." She must have another hearing before school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, he added.

Was Suspended Monday

Mr. Parker met with the board on his daughter's case. She has been out all of this week.

The girl, who figured in earlier incidents at the school last September during integration unrest, was suspended Monday by Mr. Blossom along with Howard Cooper, a white student, who also had passed out the cards.

The board met early Friday night with young Cooper and his parents.

Amis Guthridge, Capital Citizens Council official and Little Rock attorney representing both the students, earlier had threatened court action against the board if it didn't reinstate the two at an early date.

Mr. Guthridge said he had been toold "a number" of students had been expelled earlier in the schcool year for integration reasons "without it ever having been made public."

Gave Cards To Friends

"Thta will be investigated," he promised. "We think that information should be made public."

At a press conference about two weeks ago, Mr. Blossom confirmed there had been some expulsions of white students, but the number had been small.

Miss Parker told newsmen she hadn't distributed the cards but that she had three in her purse which she gave to some of her friends "when they asked me for them."

Judge To Hear Petition Is Not Yet Known

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 21. — Whether Federal Judge Donald N. Davies of North Dakota will hear the latest petition by the Little Rock School Board on integration problems was in doubt Friday.

Judge Davies told court officials here in a telephone conversation Friday morning that he would confer first with Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner of the Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, before making a decision.

And in Huron, S. D., Judge Gardner said he hadn't decided who would handle the case. He will decide March 5.

The Little Rock board went back into court Thursday asking that Judge Davies' order of last September be rescinded and that integration—although in effect at Central High School about six months—be "postponed" to an indefinitte date.

Dist. Atty. Osro Cobb, who handled the earlier litigation, apparently won't participate in the latest petition.

In Washington, the Justice Department declared hands off. A department spokesman said:

"The subject matter of the petition does not fall within our area of responsibility and no authority exists for us to step in. The United States is not a party to the proceedings and will no participate."

Little Rock Constitution Suspends 2 White Pupils

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 21 (AP) The Little Rock school board today suspended a white boy and a white girl for two weeks in connection with the appearance of printed cards saying "one down and eight to go" at integrated Central High School.

Suspended were Howard Cooper and Sammie Dean Parker, both 16.

Meanwhile a U.S. District Court hearing was pending on a school board petition for a delay of integration at Central High. Court-ordered integration began last September under protection of federal troops.

U.S. District Clerk Grady Miller said no date for hearing the petition, filed yesterday, will be set until a federal judge is named to hear the matter.

At Washington, the Justice Department said it had no authority to step into the issue of the petition.

Miss Parker was suspended after a hearing this morning. Cooper's suspension was ordered after another hearing late today.

Both were told they could return to classes March 3. Cooper will be on probation after his return, newsmen were told.

Minnie Jean Brown, 16, Negro, was expelled Monday for the rest of the term after a suspension that stemmed from a scuffle with a white girl. Minnie Jean is scheduled to leave Little Rock tomorrow for New York to attend an interracial private school.

Swift legal move made by NAACP in Arkansas case

LITTLE ROCK—"We are going to move with all deliberate speed. We are going to drop all other cases and the full legal staff will concentrate on the Little Rock case.

"The pupils will be back in school in September."

So declared NAACP chief legal counsel Thurgood Marshall Saturday as the association massed its formidable legal talents for an effort to secure reversal of a ruling by U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley which would turn back the clock of Central High School integration for two-and-one-half years.

JUDGE LEMLEY'S decision, which stunned the Little Rock community on Saturday morning, granted a Little Rock School Board petition to suspend integration at Central High School until February, 1961.

The postponement, requested by school officials on grounds that disorders and tension at Central interfered with teaching at the 2,000-pupil school, would mean that the remaining seven of the nine colored pupils who attended the school during the past year would be forced to return to the all-colored Horace Mann High School.

Acting in their behalf, Mr. Marshall filed notice of appeal on Monday morning.

He also filed a motion for a writ of supersedeus, which would stay the enforcement of Judge Lemley's order pending outcome of the appeal.

In the event of Judge Lemley's refusal to grant the writ, the motion may be taken directly to the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis.

* * *

JUDGE LEMLEY'S ruling, the result of a three-day hearing, June 3-5, was received in the mail by the clerk of the court on Saturday morning.

It granted the school officials permission to suspend integration without being "collectively or individually in contempt of this court" for non-adherence to the court-ordered plan of desegregation of the city schools on a step-by-step basis beginning with the high school in September of last year.

The Arkansas branch of the NAACP termed the ruling "a disappointment to us, as it must be to all fair-minded Americans who feel that desegregation can and should proceed in an orderly fashion."

* * *

THE REV. J. B. CRENSHAW, president of the Little Rock Branch NAACP, expressed shock at the ruling on Saturday, declaring:

"We have not been officially notified. The news is just now coming over the radio, so it is too early to say what the reaction will be, but decent people felt during the hearing that it would be an injustice to agree to the school board's request.

"There is nothing to be gained by pushing back desegregation for the next two-and-one-half years. The situation then will be even worse than it is now. The other side will be given ample time to organize and work up even greater opposition to desegregation."

* * *

ALTHOUGH the colored Central High pupils and their parents denied individual comment, a spokesman for the group declared:

IN A NUTSHELL

- Judge orders Central High integration suspended until February, 1961.
- Appeal filed by NAACP, along with plea for a writ to halt execution of order.
- Ruling would mean that seven pupils would be barred from Central in September.
- Thurgood Marshall says, "They will go back."

"We do not see how the Supreme Court can go along with Judge Lemley's position. I think that when school opens, the students will be right in there pitching.

"I don't believe that they would be willing to re-enter Horace Mann, the colored High School, there is too much difference between it and Central, despite the hardships which they have been forced to undergo. They have found out what our tax money is paying for and what they are entitled to."

The spokesman added, that although possible efforts to get more colored pupils into Central High were still in the discussion stage, that there are many colored pupils who would, if possible, enter Central.

"Many," was the conclusion, "who would not try to enter at first are now anxious to do so."

* * *

AMONG THE opposition, Wayne Upton, president of the Little Rock School Board, voiced pleasure at the decision, declaring:

"I feel we made a strong case, and I am quite well pleased with the results of the hearing."

During the two days of the hearing Upton and other members of the school board said that at least 40 fires had been set in lockers at Central during the past year and violence in the halls and cafeterias despite the presence of paratroopers or National Guardsmen in the halls of the school.

School Superintendent Virgil Blossom testified that tension at the school made it impossible for pupils to obtain a decent education.

* * *

JUDGE LEMLEY, the 74-year-old Hope, Ark., jurist who assumed jurisdiction in the Little Rock School integration case following the withdrawal of Judge Ronald N. Davies, said that he had based his stop-integration order upon this tension at the school.

At the time of Judge Lemley's assignment to the case School Board President Upton declared:

"An Arkansas judge will be more highly appreciative of our problems down here than someone who has not lived with us and does not know the situation."

BEFORE THE Supreme Court's outlawing of the "separate-but-equal" doctrine in its 1954 decision, Judge Lemley had ruled in two cases involving school inequality in Arkansas and had found for the colored plaintiffs each time, although he said in one of his rulings that it was "not necessary" for white and colored pupils to attend the same schools to preserve their constitutional rights and this "would not be for the best interests of children of either race."

The Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which will hear the appeal from Judge Lemley's ruling and possibly the motion for writ of supersedeus, is composed of Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner, Huron, S. Dak.; and Judges John B. Sanborn, St. Paul, Minn.; Joseph W. Woodrough, Omaha, Neb.; Harvey M. Johnson, Omaha; Charles J. Vogel, Fargo, N. Dak.; and Martin Donal Van Oosterhout, Sioux City, Iowa.

* * *

LITTLE ROCK'S Central High was ordered to begin desegregation by Judge Davies last September, and nine colored pupils were admitted under escort by 101st Airborne Division paratroops after they had first been turned away by National Guardsmen ordered out to prevent integration by Gov. Faubus.

The nine were Ernest Green, Minnijean Brown, Carlotta Wall, Elizabeth Eckford, Thelma Mothershed, Melba Patillo, Gloria Ray, Terrence Roberts, and Jefferson Thomas.

Green became the first colored pupil to graduate from Central, receiving his diploma at the May 27 commencement. Minnijean Brown was expelled from the school after five incidents involving white pupils. The remaining seven are lowerclassmen.

All nine of the pupils and Mrs. Daisy Bates, Arkansas NAACP president, will be awarded the Spingarn Medal at the NAACP national convention in Cleveland July 8-13.

Green, it was announced this week, has been accepted as a scholarship student at Michigan State University. He is the recipient of a full tuition scholarship, worth $550 a year.

NAACP Seeks Reversal Of Court Order

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, "knocked for a loop" by a court order de-integrating Central High School, goes back into court today with a plea for a new ruling.

The NAACP is scheduled to present a motion today asking federal Judge Harry J. Lemley to set aside his order to suspend integration at Central for two and a half years.

Daisy Bates, Arkansas president of the NAACP, said she was "knocked for a loop" by Lemley's decision.

Wiley Branton, an attorney for Negro students, said if Lemley denies the motion to set aside the order, the NAACP will appeal the case to the 8th circuit court of appeals at St. Louis and then to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Judge Refuses Stay on Delay For Integration

NAACP Plans Appeal in Effort To Upset School Ruling

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 23 (AP)—A federal judge today refused to stay his own order delaying school integration here for 2½ years. He indirectly advised the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to try for the stay in a higher court.

Wiley Branton, a Negro attorney for the NAACP, said he would take the cue.

U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley denied Branton's motion this morning after hearing six minutes of oral argument and recessing court for an hour to write the opinion.

Practical Standpoint

"From a practical standpoint to grant this motion and stay the enforcement of our judgment would to a large extent nullify our order," Lemley said.

He said it would probably take three months to carry the case to the Supreme Court "and in the meantime the situation at Central High School which we have found to be intolerable... would continue..."

The 74-year-old jurist said he had handled the school board's petition for an integration delay as quickly as possible in order to reach a decision before Sept. 1.

"In the meantime, the plaintiffs can apply at least to the court of appeals of this circuit for a stay of the enforcement of our judgment," he said.

Education Interrupted

The school board had asked that integration be delayed at Central on grounds that racial tension, violence and the presence of troops was interrupting education there. Lemley's ruling Saturday granted the board the delay.

Today, board attorney A. F. House opposed Branton's motion. He said that since the court granted a postponement "in the public interest" a stay would be only in the interest of the seven Negro students now on the Central High rolls.

Branton said that since no Negroes are attending summer school at Central, the school board is not faced with any racial problems.

After Lemley's denial of the motion to stay, Branton telephoned clerk Robert C. Tucker of the U. S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis to ask for instructions on obtaining a stay from the appellate court.

Motion To Be Mailed

Tucker said he told Branton to mail the motion to the court and he would forward it to Chief Judge Archibald Gardner at his home in Huron, S.D.

Tucker quoted Branton as saying he might prepare the motion today.

"If it's necessary I'll go to the judge's home to ask for the stay," Branton said.

Branton said that if the appellate court should deny a stay he would present his motion to a justice of the Supreme Court.

"I have no particular judge in mind," Branton said.

Ruby Bates, president of the Arkansas branch of the NAACP, said Lemley's denial of a stay "was not more than we had expected."

Melba Pattillo, one of the nine Negro students who attended Central High the past school year under protection of federal troops, said today: "We want to go back."

"We still feel something will happen—something to get us back to Central High," Melba said.

The six other Negroes remained silent. The NAACP president said she had instructed them not to comment, but was unable to reach Melba in time.

Nine Negroes who tried to enter Central High last fall under a federal court order were turned away by troops summoned by Gov. Orval Faubus. Later, Faubus withdrew the soldiers after a federal judge ordered him not to interfere with integration.

When the Negroes entered the school, rioting erupted outside and President Eisenhower dispatched federal soldiers to handle the situation. A paratrooper segment left the city after a few months and federalized National Guardsmen assumed the role of protecting the Negroes.

Of the nine, Minnijean Brown was expelled after a series of racial incidents and Ernest Green became the first Negro in history to be graduated from the previously all-white school.

Plea For Integration At Little Rock Denied; Negroes Ask Ike To Act

NAACP Takes Advice To Appeal To Higher Court

By Sy Ramsey

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 23 (AP)—A Federal judge today refused to stay his own order delaying school integration here for two and one-half years. He indirectly advised the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to try for the stay in a higher court.

Wiley Branton, attorney for the NAACP, said he would take the cue.

U.S. District Judge Harry J. Lemley denied Branton's motion this morning after hearing six minutes of oral argument and recessing court for an hour to write the opinion.

"From a practical standpoint, to grant this motion and stay the enforcement of our judgment would to a large extent nullify our order," Lemley said.

Might Take 3 Months

He said it would probably take three months to carry the case to the Supreme Court, "and in the meantime the situation at Central High School which we have found to be intolerable . . . would continue . . ."

The 74-year-old jurist said he had handled the School Board's petition for an integration delay as quickly as possible in order to reach a decision before Sept. 1.

"In the meantime, the plaintiffs can apply at least to the Court of Appeals of this circuit for a stay of the enforcement of our judgment," he said.

The School Board had asked that integration be delayed at Central on the ground that racial tension, violence and the presence of troops was interrupting education there. Lemley's ruling Saturday granted the board the delay.

Little Rock Action Applauded by Byrd

RICHMOND, Va., June 23 (AP)—Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) today said a decision by a Federal Judge suspending integration in Little Rock "is most encouraging to those of us striving to preserve the public school system."

Byrd termed of "great significance" the decision of Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley to allow Little Rock school authorities to delay school integration another 2½ years.

"Judge Lemley emphasized and based his decision on the practical factors heretofore ignored by the Supreme Court and other Federal courts," Byrd told the Richmond News Leader.

Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D-Va.) said the ruling was a proper one and he was sorry "that the same Judge was not presiding when the first ruling was made for immediate integration."

Four Virginia localities—Arlington County, Charlottesville, Norfolk and Newport News—have been ordered to desegregate public schools next fall. State law calls for the immediate closing of a public school that is integrated.

NAACP Asks High Court For Integration Session

WASHINGTON (AP)—Attorneys associated with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Thursday urged the Supreme Court to hold a special session for quick overturning of a 2½-year delay ordered for school integration in Little Rock, Ark.

A petition filed by the attorneys said the delay ruling by U.S. Dist Judge Harry J. Lemley of Hope Ark., was clearly wrong.

It described the legal position taken by Lemley as amounting t "an invitation to violence and t substituting a government of mol for one of laws."

DIRECT CONFLICT

It said his ruling conflicted di rectly with the Supreme Court's 1954 call for ending compulsory segregation with all deliberate speed.

The Supreme Court had planned to adjourn for summer vacations after its next public session on Monday.

Action to be taken on the special session plea will be considered at the court's closed conference on Friday, but its decision probably will not be made known until Monday.

BYPASS CIRCUIT

A request for a stay of Lemley's order, and an appeal asking that his ruling be reviewed on its merits and reversed, are pending before the U.S. Circuit Court in St. Louis.

Thursday's petition asked the Supreme Court to permit bypass ing of the circuit court, so that prompt and final ruling may be given by the highest tribunal be fore schools reopen in September.

JUDGE BARS STAY ON SEGREGATION FOR LITTLE ROCK

N.A.A.C.P. Will Take Cas on Central High Pupils to Appeals Court

NEGROES STILL BARRED

Appellants Asked for Delay Because Circuit Bench Is Nearing a Recess

LITTLE ROCK, June 23—Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley today denied a motion that he suspend his order postponing integration at Little Rock's Central High School while his decision is appealed.

Wiley Branton, who represented the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he would seek an immediate review of the denial by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

Unless Judge Lemley is overruled, his decision will bar Negro pupils from Central High this Fall.

In a ruling Saturday, the judge granted a plea by the Little Rock School Board for a two and a half year postponment of its plan for gradua integration of the city's schools

Found School Disrupted

He held that the board had shown that the educational process at Central High had been seriously disrupted by violence, intimidation and tensior growing out of the Negro students' presence in the last schoo year.

Judge Lemley's decision today came after a fifty-five-minute recess following less than ten minutes of oral arguments on the organization's motion by Mr. Branton and A. F. House, a Little Rock lawyer representing the school board.

In a brief memorandum the judge said that his primary reason for the denial was that a stay would in effect nullify his suspension order.

He explained that this was because "it will, in all probability, take months to carry the case through the Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court."

Cites Speedy Action

"And in the meantime the situation at Central High School, which we have found to be intolerable from an educational standpoint, would continue from the beginning of the approaching session to the final ruling by the Supreme Court," the judge said.

"And for the reasons stated in our opinion in said cause," he went on, "we do not think that such is in the public interest, "including the interest of both the white and Negro students in the Little Rock district."

Judge Lemley pointed out that the association would not be deprived of the opportunity to obtain a ruling by a higher court on his denial of a stay, "since it will be more than two months before Central High School convenes this Fall."

He also contended that proceedings in the case had been "speeded up as first as we felt such could be done and at the same time give proper consideration to the cause."

In asking the court to delay the suspension order, Mr. Branton said that the Court of Appeals was about to recess and would not reconvene until the second week in September.

He noted that three to four weeks would be required for the court to act and added that unless extraordinary measures were taken no decision could be expected before October.

Mr. House, arguing for the school board, contended that a stay such as the one requested was usually granted only under extreme circumstances and was not warranted in this case.

"Inherent in the findings in your opinion," he tlod the judge, "is that the order for delay is in the public interest as opposed to the interest of individual Negro students."

"If the public interest is to prevail, then the request for the stay must be overruled," he said.

Mr. Branton replied that the public interest would be better protected if the Negro students already in the school were allowed to stay there.

Judge Lemley then recessed the court and retired to his chambers, where he prepared a memorandum on his order denying the motion.

'Have Motion—Will Travel'

After the opinion had been given, Mr. Branton commented: "The best thing that I can say is 'Have motion—will travel.'"

He said that the court had outlined the course of action that the organization would take, adding, "certainly we intend to seek relief through that method."

Many leaders in this state capital expressed the opinion that Judge Lemley's action had strengthened the hand of forces opposed to the school board's plan for integration.

These persons voiced the hope that the Circuit Court would not act on the request for a stay of the suspension but would instead take up the appeal of the case on its merits. They said that if the court granted the stay without going into the case as a whole it would tend to harden sentiment against integration here and would seriously hamper any future attempt to work out a peaceful solution to the problem.

Superintendent Present

Present at the hearing today was Virgil T. Blossom, Little Rock Superintendent of Schools. He was one of the school board's chief witnesses in the hearings on its request to return Central High to its previously all-white status.

In a comment on the problem, Mr. Blossom said:

"The Congress of the United States has a moral obligation to the people of this nation to strengthen by legislative enactment the civil procedures for court-ordered integration or by legislative enactment to delay the effectiveness of the Supreme Court's decision on school desegregation.

"The people of America deserve an answer from their Congress on this most crucial issue. The time for action by Congress should not be one of political convenience but at a time when it is needed. In my opinion the time for Congressional action is at hand."

Plea to High Court In Little Rock Case Is Expected Today

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 25—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is expected to move tomorrow for emergency Supreme Court action on the school integration case in Little Rock, Ark.

The court will apparently be asked to bypass the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and to grant an immediate review of United States District Judge Harry J. Lemley's decision blocking integration in Little Rock for two-and-one-half years. The N. A. A. C. P. has already taken an appeal to the Eighth Circuit.

The statutes allow the Supreme Court to take cases before they are decided by the Courts of Appeals, but the procedure is used only in extraordinary circumstances.

The Supreme Court's rules say:

"A writ of certiorari to review a case pending in a Court of Appeals, before judgment is given in such court, will be granted only upon a showing that the case is of such imperative public importance as to justify the deviation from normal appellate processes and to require immediate settlement in this court."

Certiorari is a technical device to bring a case up for review.

The petition by N. A. A. C. P. lawyers will force grave and difficult decisions upon both the Supreme Court and the Administration. Procedural problems will be intermingled with the underlying question whether school integration may be delayed because of local resistance and trouble within the schools.

The court has indicated that it plans to adjourn next Monday until October. It would have to sit in a special term in order to hear oral argument on the Little Rock case.

Could Ask Quick Reply

Ordinarily, the other side in a suit—the Little Rock school board in this case—would have thirty days to answer a petition for certiorari. The justices would be on vacation by then. But they could, presumably, request the school board to file a reply within a few days.

As for the Administration, it has been wrestling with the possibility of entering the case as a friend of the court in the Eighth Circuit. Bringing the matter to the Supreme Court will increase the pressures on the Gevornment to intervene.

The court might be expected to ask the views of the Government before deciding so critical a question in the delicate area of racial segregation. It did so before its 1954 decision that held school segrégation unconstitutional.

But this time there is the preliminary question of hearing the case on a speeded-up basis. Whether the court will seek the Government's advice on this—whether it can, in fact, in view of the shortage of time—remains to be seen.

Phrasing A Problem

If the court should decide against bypassing the Eighth Circuit, there will be another tough question—how to phrase this decision.

When the court refuses review in an ordinary case, it implies no decision on the merits. Its order says simply: "Denied." But to reject this petition without comment might leave some of the public with the impression that the Supreme Court had approved Judge Lemley's decision.

A rejection would, in fact, leave the way open for the N. A. A. C. P. to press its appeal in the Eighth Circuit. The Supreme Court could presumably make this clear by saying specifically that it sees no obstacle to a prompt regular review in the Court of Appeals.

The Supreme Court has not agreed to hear oral argument in any racial segregation case since the 1954 decision. It has summarily reversed and affirmed a number of lower court rulings, without argument, but that course appears unlikely on an issue of such gravity.

'52 Steel Case Recalled

There are two outstanding examples in recent years of the Supreme Court's taking cases for review before judgment in the Courts of Appeals. The first is the steel seizure case of 1952, in which the court held unconstitutional President Harry S. Truman's seizure of the nation's steel plants to forestall a strike.

The second was the case of Specialist 3/c William S. Girard last year. The court there reversed a district judge's decision that the Government could not turn Girard over to the Japanese courts for trial on a manslaughter charge.

The other party in the Girard Court. Whether the Little Rock school board will do so is, of course, uncertain.

The school board asked Judge Lemley to cancel integration plans temporarily. It cited the many incidents inside integrated Central High School following last fall's riots and the posting of Federal troops to maintain order.

Judge Lemley said the situation in Central High was "intolerable." He said education would suffer unless he allowed a breathing spell for amelioration of "racial strife and tension."

N.A.A.C.P. APPEALS LITTLE ROCK ORDER

ST. LOUIS, June 24 (AP)—A motion to stay a United States District Court order suspending integration at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., was received today by the Federal Court of Appeals.

The motion and a notice of appeal concerned the ruling by Judge Harry J. Lemley at Little Rock putting off integration for two and one-half years. It was filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Community psychological unreadiness for racial integration is no basis to continue noncompliance with the constitutional law of the United States," attorneys for the association said.

If Judge Lemley's order remains in effect Negro children already attending the Little Rock school will not be permitted to continue in the school next fall. The appellate court is expected to rule on the stay motion before that time.

Robert Tucker, clerk of the court here, said he would send the motion for a stay and a memorandum supporting it to Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner at his home in Huron, S. D. The court is in recess for the summer.

Plea on Little Rock Before High Court

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 26—The Supreme Court was told today that suspension of school integration in Little Rock, Ark., would encourage "lawless elements opposing compliance with integration orders" and would cause "confusion through the nation."

Lawyers of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People made these arguments in a petition seeking immediate Supreme Court review of the Little Rock case. They urged the court to extend its present term for that purpose or call a special session.

The petition attacked the suspension order of Judge Harry J. Lemley as "an invitation to violence and to substituting a government of mob for one of laws."

Judge Lemley suspended integration in Little Rock for two and one-half years because of "intolerable" conditions in the integrated Central High School.

Many suits to end segregation are pending in the South, the petition said. It argued that Judge Lemley's order "will certainly create instability in these areas as well as others now considering desegregation with or without a court case."

"At a time when many school boards are re-examining their plans for integration," the petition said, "there is certainly an urgent need for final review of this order by this court at the earliest possible time."

The Supreme Court itself gave no hint during the day of its reaction to the extraordinary N. A. A. C. P. move. If the court is going to take almost any action, timing is of the greatest significance.

The court has indicated that it hopes to adjourn Monday. Ordinarily, the other party in any case has thirty days to respond to a petition for Supreme Court review. If the court wants an emergency reply from the Little Rock school board by Monday, it will have to let the school board know at once—probably tomorrow at the latest.

The regular conference of the justices is held at 11 A. M. on Fridays. Thus it appears likely that they will talk over the Little Rock situation tomorrow—and possibly take some action.

Court Action Possible

If no word comes from the court before Monday and the court does adjourn on that day, it could dispose of the N. A. A. C. P. petition then in any of the following ways:

¶Grant the petition and set an early date for oral argument of the case.

¶Deny the petition without comment.

¶Deny it with some comment, for example indicating why it was refusing to review the decision at this time.

¶Adjourn without taking any action at all.

The last course would have the effect of rejecting the plea for a nextended or special Supreme Court Term. Because of the gravity o the issues, observers thought it unlikely that the court would simply thus ignore the case.

If the court decided against any special consideration, these observers felt, some brief explanation was likely.

A refusal of Supreme Court review now would put the case back in the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. The N. A. A. C. P. took an appeal there from Judge Lemley's decision and then—as technically required—asked the Supreme Court to consider the case before the court of appeals decision.

The Eighth Circuit has begun a summer schedule and is not scheduled to hear cases again until after the opening of the Little Rock School term in September.

But the Court of Appeals might well be willing to review Judge Lemley's decision promptly because of the importance of the case. And the Supreme Court could probably suggest early consideration by the Court of Appeals.

The petition today was signed by Thurgood Marshall of New York and Wiley A. Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark. It posed the "question presented" for the court as follows:

"Whether an order of a district court, affirmed by a Court of Appeals, approving a plan for gradual desegregation of public schools, which plan has been in operation for a year, can be suspended and Negro children already in desegregated schools forced to withdraw to segregated

Van Buren Students Split Over Returning To School

VAN BUREN, Ark. — After being pushed and shoved around for two days at Van Buren High school, some of the Negro students do not intend to re-enter the school.

Their educational plans for the future are indefinite.

"I'm not going back to the school," said Carolyn Abernathy, 16, who was scheduled to begin her junior year this year.

"Since we stopped going there last week white students have called our house and told us that we had better not show up there again," she said.

"I would rather stop school altogether than go back up there," Miss Abernathy told this reporter. Her 18-year-old brother, James, who wants to enlist in the Air Force as soon as he finishes high school, wants to go back, but is puzzled by the sudden change in the attitude of his former classmates.

FINE LAST YEAR

"Last year they treated us just like they treated each other," he said, "after having called us a few names the first two weeks . . . and having tossed an empty milk carton at one of the boys in the cafeteria."

Another student, Nathaniel Norwood, 15, who is a junior said he is ready to re-enter the school as soon as the others go back He said that he was not subjected to any violence at the school, but kept away after the others stopped going.

The boy's mother, Mrs. Hazel Norwood, would not permit this reporter to interview her daughter, Ernestine, 14, a tenth grade student. but explained her children were going back to Van Buren High school.

"We're not going to run away," she said, "We are citizens of Van Buren and we are going to stand up for our rights."

Mrs. Norwood blamed outsiders for the disturbance at the school. "We had no high school," she said, "and we filed the integration suit they agreed to accept us. Now they want to start some stuff."

WE MUST STAY

Not all parents are as brave as Mrs. Norwood. The father of James Evans, a 16-year-old honor student, who would have been a senior this year, would not allow his son to be interviewed and would not tell what his name was.

"You fellows can come here and write about us and leave," he said, "but when these whites here read it, it will be our houses that are stoned, and our car windows broken. You guys will be a long way off and safe.

Howard Johnson, Sr. the father of Howard, Jr. a 14-year-old sophomore said that he was not going to allow his son td go back to the school until the U. S. Supreme Court handed down a decision in the Little Rock case.

"If they give Faubus a delay," he predicted, "they will be rough on us here." The Johnson a re flanked by white neighbors. Mr. Johnson said, "We are outnumbered. If something were to start we could be wiped out easily."

The only Negro student who entered the school this year for the first time is Elmer Lee Rogers, a ninth grade student, who stayed out all last year. He said that he would go back to school as soon as the disturbance is settled.

Two of the students who complained of ill treatment by whites last year were 17-year-old Zelma Roberts and her sister Mary, 15, both seniors. They live about 10 miles from Van Buren in a rural district called New Town and travel to school on the school bus.

"We were pestered all last year by the white boys," Mary said. "They threw sand and gravel in our hair, and one day they wet us up with water pistols."

The girls said that they reported the incident to their mother but she told them to keep on going to school and "water won't kill you."

They said that this year they were treated worse, and that the boys would occupy seats a n would not let them sit down o the pretense that they were holding the empty seats for someone else.

One of the other boys went up and reported it to the driver but he only glanced around and kept going, Mary said.

Neither girl wants to go back to Van Buren, but they said they probably would because t h e y have no place else to attend and their mother wants them to go back.

Freddie Bell, a 16-year-old senior who was struck with a rock, has moved into Ft. Smith and enrolled in all-Negro Lincoln high school.

He was first carried to Van Buren high school by his 70-year-old energetic grandmother, Mrs. Georgia Bell, who sprained her ankled while rescuing him from white hoodlums who surrounded him.,

STONES THROWN

During the week end huge stones were thrown into Mrs. Bell's house and the boy was threatened over the phone. His father came from Ft. Smith for him and enrolled him on Monday in the Negro high school there.

Although she was never threatened 16-year-old Annetta Dean, an eleventh grade student said that she left the high school because she became nervous.

Ozark Negroes Tell Of Attack

3 Asked Not To Return To High School

GANG CHARGES OFFICE

By The Associated Press

OZARK, Ark., Sept. 11.—A Negro student at Ozark High School said Thursday that she and two other Negro girls were told not to return to classes after 10 white boys and girls tried to attack them during the lunch hour Tuesday.

The three girls were the only Negroes in the school which has about 400 white pupils.

Ivy West, a 14-year-old freshman, said Supt. R. L. Graves gave the order after he was pushed and shoved while protecting the Negro students from the attackers. Mr. Graves refused to discuss the incident.

Ivy West, Nola Kuykendall, 17 and Joan Johnson, 13, had attended classes at Ozark High since the school opened Sept. 1.

Can't Be Protected

"Mr. Graves told us we shouldn't come back because he couldn't protect us," the girls said.

She said the superintendent called the three Negroes into his office Tuesday after a rumor circulated that the white gang was "going to get them" at the noon hour.

"They'd been threatening to get us for several days," Ivy West said, "and we were afraid.

"The white students tried to come in the office to get us, but Mr. Graves blocked the door," she said. "They pushed and shoved him trying to get by but he managed to keep them out."

She said there were six girls and four boys in the attacking group. She declined to identify them.

"Now we're waiting for the School Board to tell us what to do next," the 14-year-old said.

Ozark has no Negro high school. Negro students, until last year, were sent to schools in nearby counties. Ozark initiated a voluntary plan of integration last fall but it was suspended two days after the term opened because of resistance by white students.

Two Readmitted

Two Negroes were readmitted at the opening of the second semester in January and attended the remainder of the term without a reported incident.

Ozark is the second Arkansas high school where a voluntary plan of integration has been suspended this fall because of resistance by white students.

A boycott by about 50 youths last week resulted in withdrawal of 13 Negroes from Van Buren High School, 50 miles west of here. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has filed court action in an effort to get the Van Buren plan reinstated.

MADISONVILLE, Ky., Sept. 11.—(AP)—Three Negro students walked quietly into Pride Elementary School Thursday while a crowd of about 100 watched from across the road.

Six state troopers and two deputy sheriffs stood close by. No United States deputy marshals were seen.

The developments were quieter than Wednesday, when some 300 gathered at the school and attempted to keep four Negroes from entering.

Only three Negro youngsters showed up. The fourth, who broke away during the confusion Wednesday, did not return. The student was identified as Blance Ray Foster.

3 Quit Ozark High After Being Pushed

She said School Superintendent R. L. Graves went to the assistance of the Negro girls and the white girls turned on him."

Graves sent the white girls home. The white girls returned to school next day, but the Negroes stayed at home.

Ozark high was first integrated last fall by three Negroes. After several incidents of shoving and threats the Negroes were sent home. Two were readmitted. One was graduated last spring, but he did not take part in commencement exercises.

Until Ozark high was integrated, Negro students were taken by bus to a Negro school at Fort Smith, 40 miles away.

The mother of one of the girls said the girls were walking down the hall Tuesday when a group of white girls pushed them.

She said school Supt. R. L. Graves went to the assistance of the Negro girls and the white girls "turned on him."

Graves sent both the white girls and the Negro girls home. The white girls returned to school Wednesday, but the Negroes stayed at home.

Negro Gets Conn. Post As Teacher

Mariners Bass In New Canaan

Special to the Herald Tribune

NEW CANAAN, Conn., June 19.—Jim Lewis, whose rich bass-baritone anchored The Mariners quartet for almost a decade on television shows, has been named to teach social studies next fall at Saxe Junior High School here.

Deemed the top candidate among 115 applicants for the teaching post, he will be the first Negro to hold a regular contract in the New Canaan school system.

For James O. Lewis, who was born in Birmingham, Ala., thirty-nine years ago, the teaching job will be in line with a continuing interest in American history and sociology, though it was his voice that brought him to New York and put him before nation-wide audiences.

Clicked in "Hot Mikado"

Soon after he was graduated from Talladega College, Birmingham, in 1938 with a major in sociology, Mr. Lewis sang in burlesque and on radio, reaching the Broadway stage with the late Bill Robinson in "The Hot Mikado."

Then came World War II and service in the United States Coast Guard. While Mr. Lewis was stationed at Manhattan Beach, Brooklyn, in 1942, he joined forces with three other Coast Guardsmen who, like him, had been performing individually at camp shows.

The four—the others were Thomas Lockard and Martin Karl, who are white, and Nathaniel Dickerson, also a Negro—produced vocal sounds that inspired the late Adm. Russel Waesche, then Coast Guard Commandant, to name them as the official Coast Guard Quartet and send them on a tour of installations here and in the Pacific theater.

DELAWARE

Delaware Judge Gives Fired Negro Principal Fair Hearing

by Malcolm Poindexter

Georgetown, Del. (ANP) — A Superior Court judge has ordered the school board of Laurel to answer certain questions in connection with the firing of Alonzo H. Schookley, Jr., teaching principal of Dunbar High School.

The Judge, William E. Storey of Dover, listened to arguments presented by both attorneys at a hearing last week, then demanded that briefs filed by the school board be "clarified" and that board representatives appear at the next called session of court.

Attys. James and Robert Tunnell, legal counsel for the school district, turned red-faced from the bench after Judge Storey finished his tirade. They had just presented facts stating that Shockley's contract was cancelled at the close of the spring term because of "insubordination."

Charged With "Insubordination"

The "insubordination" charge arose from Shockley's admitted refusal to teach social studies six weeks before the close of the term, after he had been acting in the full capacity of principal since February. He told school board officials at the time that he would "gladly teach the course of study starting with the fall term, but felt it would not do anyone any good if started six weeks before the conclusion of school."

Shortly before school ended, the board held a meeting at which members of the press and the public were barred. An official of the Delaware school system was prepared to testify at the heariny that Shockley had "exercised good judgement" in the matter, when she was abruptly cut off by the school board's attorney. The decision "not to renew" the principal's contract for the coming term was then made official.

Charges Discrimination

Shockley immediately arosed and informed the school board that it was his "considered judgement" that he was being intimidated because he tried to enter his 14-year-old daughter in the Milford public high school at the beginning of the term.

He said he had an uneasy feeling that the charge of insubordination was merely a cover-up for the school board's real intent to discharge him because of that. Shockley and his family life in Milford, and, as he pointed out, "it would be necessary for my daughter to travel 40 miles by bus in order to attend the high school at Denver, when she is within walking distance of the Milford school."

Shockley, at the conclusion of the hearing, said he felt he had been received "very fair treatment" before Judge Storey. The 40-year-old principal had been teaching social studies for eight years when he was appointed head of the school. Increased enrollment led to the need for a full-time administrator.

Shockley's legal counsel is being handled by the Delaware State Education Association. The NAACP has not entered the case, but the group's support was expectured during the course of the hearing.

Shockley's lawyer asked Judge Storey to give the case preference on the hearing list, due to the fact that he has not drawn any salary since June and has been unable to find employment in the state. The principal brougt out during the hearing that he believed that "race" was the determining factor in his dismissal. His statement was called "erroneous" by school board attorneys.

Judge Storey intervened and state that the decision as to whether such evidence or remarks are "erroneous" is left to the judge and not the counsel.

Carver High's Principal Knows Student Problems

By Jean Jones
Staff Reporter

"Which is less, 15 cents or 35 cents?" the school principal asks.

"Fifteen cents," giggles the class of girls.

"All right, then, don't you think a 15-year-old's knowledge is less than a 35-year-old's knowledge?"

Now the girls see the trap and hesitate. The principal laughs, reminds them parents do know much about life, and leaves the classroom before the clamor of teen-age logic overwhelms him.

Such a brief, thought-prodding exchange during a class discussion of teen-parent social problems is typical of Silas E. Craft, principal of Carver High School in Rockville.

Integration Program

Craft says his "chief liking" is to visit the classrooms, evaluating programs and learning of problems his teachers face. However, administrative tasks demand much of his time in the four-grade, 365-pupil school.

At 36, with six children of his own, Craft is enthusiatically administering a program that could mean the elimination of his job. At present, Carver is the only all Negro high school in Montgomery County, and some of its pupils travel 30 miles each way to class, he said.

Under the county's gradual integration plan, Negro children are being sent to schools nearer their homes, and that is what Craft has been working on.

Crowded Facilities

Craft came to Carver from Howard County two years ago. His 24-member staff is crowded into what was an eight-classroom school, with science laboratory, library, cafeteria, gym, and vocational facilities. Improvisation supplies a basement band-room, a cosmetology lab, an art room, and a second science room.

Although many of his students come from the rural up-county areas, few now are farm families, so the agricultural vocational program has been dropped. Craft says his students come chiefly from homes of consturction workers, laborers, mechanics and some professionals.

Commercial courses are most popular with Carver students. They have little trouble finding and holding good jobs after graduation, Craft says. Others study vocational auto mechanics, cosmetology, woodworking and dry-cleaning, the only such course in county schools.

Acedemic Classes Small

In the top three grades, Craft has only 27 students in an academic program. As a result, many language, math and advanced courses rival private schools with small classes and individual instruction. Some teachers are practically tutors, Craft says.

An intensive effort is made at Carver to improve reading skills, and the four classes offered give to many a chance to improve at least two grade-levels in a three-month program. The Science Research Associates reading course is used.

The rambling, red brick brick building is situated on a 20-acre site, which borders eight acres used for Rock Terrace Elementary School. It was built also to serve as a Negro Junior College, but integration with the main branch in Takoma Park left Carver with only three college-level classes last year, Craft said.

The man who manages the dwindling school is of medium height, well-built, with a pencil-line mustache. He likes colored shirts and socks. His good humor is as well-known as his quick discipline.

Reared in West Virginia

Craft grew up in the West Virginia coal-mining town of Kimball. His father, a Virginia farmer-teacher, died when the boy was 4, leaving his family in the care of an uncle and a grandfather who was a blacksmith, born a free man before the Civil War.

The Principal went to school with his future wife, Dorothy P. McKnight, at Bluefield State Teachers College in Bluefield, W. Va. He finished college work in 1944 while an Air Corps Aviation Cadet. Injuries in training led to his discharge.

He went to Howard County as teaching principal in the Cooksville School, an 11-grade program scattered over two miles in three buildings. In nearby Guilford, Craft built his own home for his rapidly growing family. He now commutes the 26 miles to Rockville, often leaving for work before the appearance of his children, Rebecca 13, Silas Jr. 12, Virginia 10, Dwight 8, Kay 7, and Sharon Dorothy 3.

Active in educational and community organzations, Craft is t member of three Parent-Teacher Associations — Carver's and two others in Howard County. He is a trustee of the First Baptist Church at Hillford and member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

He holds a master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania and has studied for his doctorate at Harvard, Pennsylvania and the University of Maryland. However much he enjoys the field of education, as a purse-conscious family man he admits he would not turn down a good business proposition.

Benson Talks to Class As Daughter Graduates

Young people must offer their first allegiance to God, Secretary of Agriculture Benson advised the graduating class of Roosevelt High School yesterday.

After duty to God, Mr. Benson said, "we have a duty to our country . . . a duty to serve others . . . (and) a duty to ourselves."

The Secretary commented that "young people aren't so bad," then admitted:

"Sometimes they have more critics than models."

He had a special interest in the class. Among the 3,254 area high school students who were graduated yesterday was the Secretary's daughter, Bonnie, 18.

Voted the most friendly girl in her class, she also received the Kober Award for excellence in home economics, the school music award and the Daughters of the American Revolution Good Citizenship Award.

The most friendly boy, according to a class vote, was Harry Johnson, a Negro.

In ceremonies today, 25 senior high and 30 junior high school students will be graduated from the Woodward School for Boys in commencement exercises at 5 p.m. in the Interior Department auditorium.

Dr. James H. Fox, dean of the George Washington University School of Education, will give the principal address. Class valedictorian is Robert K. Stevens, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Stevens of Route 1, Alexandria.

Problem Pupils In Junior High Now Total 230

Defiant Ones in Special Classes Highlighted by Arm Breaking

By Erwin Knoll
Staff Reporter

One District junior high pupil in a hundred is so "insolent, defiant and rebellious" that he can't be taught in regular classrooms.

These are the youngsters—about 230 in number—who make up the enrollment of "social adjustment classes" in 19 of the city's 23 junior high schools.

Too young to be out of school but old enough to be seriously disruptive, they constitute a major problem for the school system.

The social adjustment classes made headlines last week when a 15-year-old pupil at Hart Junior High, Mississippi ave. and 6th st. se., suffered a broken arm in a scuffle with his teacher, John R. Ward.

Ward said he was trying to restrain the boy after being kicked and struck in the mouth. At the same time a 16-year-old pupil was threatening to strike the teacher with a chair.

No Changes to Be Made

After a hearing yesterday in the United States Attorney's office in Municipal Court, Assistant United States Attorney Edmond T. Daly said no charges would be placed against Ward.

Daly said the teacher acted in self-defense and called the fracture of the boy's arm an accident. The scuffle grew out of Ward's efforts to stop the boys' smoking and general disbehavior. Juvenile authorities charged the 15-year-old with disorderly conduct and assault and the 16-year-old with making threats. Both were released in the custody of their parents pending Juvenile Court action.

Police reported that the 15-year-old boy is one of 14 children in a family where the father is unemployed. Such homes account for many of the youngsters in social adjustment classes—but not for all. School officials find that problem children come from all social and economic levels.

Violence has erupted before in the social adjustment classes, and is likely to occur again.

Their Records Meaningful

"These kids have to have a pretty consistently bad record before they are put in a social adjustment classes," said Leo M. Allman, supervising director of junior and senior higr schools.

"They've shown repeated inlion. Occasionally a youngster will flare up, lose his temper and make a threatening gesture."

In addition to the junior high program, social adjustment classes are maintained for about 110 pupils in 9 elementary schools. But the main problem is at the junior high level, where youngsters are in the "difficult" early teens.

All but 3 of the 19 junior high classes are for boys. Girls who don't get along in school "will sulk and pout rather than express outright defiance," Allman explains.

Older Ones Leave

Until this week, the schools have made no real effort to provide classes for socially maladjusted children at the senior high level. They have counted on high drop-out rates among students past the age of 16 — and have suspended those who wouldn't drop out and couldn't be taught in regular classes.

On Wednesday, however, the new Boys' Junior-Senior High School will begin operations in a wing of the Randall Junior High building at 1st and I sts. sw. Designed as a treatment and education center for the most seriously disturbed boys, it will accommodate up to 60 pupils.

In addition to senior high students who would otherwise be excluded from school, the new school will also get some of the most difficult youngsters from the junior highs.

Allman stresses that social adjustment classes are "not a place to send kids to be punished or to get them out of the way." He adds:

"We want to remove the child from a situation with which he cannot cope, and help him learn to cope with it."

Classes Limited

The classes are limited to about a dozen students each, and "this in itself is a form of therapy," according to School Superintendent Carl F. Hansen.

They study regular classroom subjects and receive as much guidance and close personal supervision as the teaching staff can provide. The schools also attempt to arrange with other community agencies for psychiatric and psychological help.

Youngsters who do well are returned to regular classes.

Not the least of the school system's problems is finding qualified teachers for the social adjustment classes.

Physical education teachers often are successful in working with the pupils in social adjustment classes.

But Allman notes that the ideal teacher for such classes —"the person who has sympathetic understanding and at the same time is able and willing to work in a difficult situation"—is hard to come by. Most teachers lack the training or the experience required to teach disturbed children.

That is one of the problems school officials will have to solve before social adjustment classes can start producing as many rehabilitated students as drop-outs.

South May Remember 1958 As Year Of School Crisis

Faubus, Almond Forced To Shut Down 13 Schools In Mixing War

BY JOHN HERBERS
United Press International

The South may remember 1958 as the year politicians began having to decide between closure of public schools or a little integration.

A number of elected officials in 1958 faced that unhappy dilemma, which could shape the course of politics in Dixie for years to come. It appeared offhand that closing schools would be the most popular choice. Govs. Orval Faubus of Arkansas and J. Lindsay Almond of Virginia between them had 13 schools closed and won the support of voters.

Faubus won an unprecedented third term by a landslide, apparently because of his open defiance of the federal government in the Little Rock school crisis. In that city "moderate" Rep. Brooks Hays was defeated by a segregationist write - in candidate in the general election.

Almond, operating with Sen. Harry Byrd's political machine, seemed to have the majority of voting Virginians behind his "close - the - schools" campaign. In Norfolk, where 10,000 students are locked out of schools, the vote was three to two against asking Almond to return the schools to local control for integrated operation.

MODERATES SUPPORTED

On the other hand some "moderate" governors also were riding a wave of popularity for keeping schools open. In North Carolina, which has permitted token integration, Gov. Luther Hodges had popular support of his so - called voluntary segregation and local option pupil assignment.

In totally segregated Mississippi where integration is a bad word among politicians, a high state officials said privately that officials who close public schools are in for a bad time in the future.

"Faubus can't win in the long run," he said. "His private school corporation is doing all right now but it can't keep going indefinitely on public subscription. Private schools won't stand up."

Most southern governors apparently are seeking a middle ground. They by - passed Faubus and named Mississippi Gov. J.P. Coleman — whom one governor called "a segregationist but not a wild man" — as chairman of the Southern Governors Conference.

Faubus, however, was mentioned throughout the South as a possible third party candidate for president if the South should bolt the Democratic Party.

NO GOP GAINS

Segregationists were elected in every governor's race during the year, including Tennessee where the winner, Buford Ellington, promised to close public schools if necessary to avoid violence. At the same time, however, Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore, who did not sign the Southern Manifesto, was re - elected over a segregationist opponent.

Republicans, who have been trying to gain a foothold in the South, lost rather than gained in most areas during the year. They managed to hold their six southern seats in Congress but two of them, in Virginia, had tough fights.

In Arkansas, Republicans held their first primary in years but got none of their nominees elected. The Legislature, which usually includes one or two Republicans, was solid Democratic.

In Florida, where the G O P was gaining strength before this year, only one county, Pinellas, sent a Republican delegation to the Legislature. Democrats beat incumbent Republican legislators in two counties, Sarasota and Brevard.

Principals Back National High School Tests

Last of a Series

By GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N.J. — High school principals of the country are solidly behind a proposal which in the opinion of many experts would do more to raise the standards of education in the U.S. than any single measure yet suggested.

This proposal calls for a standard nationwide test which would be given to all students when they complete their elementary schooling and again when they graduate from high school.

These tests would provide parents and citizens of every community a chance to see how their school system compares with others in the same state and in the nation.

If parents found, for example, that local students entering high school were far below norms for the country, or if they found graduating seniors failing to meet national standards, pressures would almost inevitably build up to correct the situation.

This is the kind of pressure which many principals, interestingly, would welcome — even though such tests would put them on the spot.

But the public, as this series has shown, and as many principals admit, has yet to be moved by the controversy over what should or should not be taught.

A nationwide poll of more than 1,100 high school principals — about one in every 25 across the country—asked the question:

"Would you favor or oppose a nationwide test to be given to all high school students when they enter and when they graduate to enable parents to know more about their children and their educational achievement?"

What Lies Ahead?

In line with public demand, principals envision these changes coming in education.

★ ★ ★

RETURN to fundamentals with emphasis on science and math.

★ ★ ★

TWO TRACK system with academic schools for college prospects, vocational schools for others.

★ ★ ★

ELIMINATION of "automatic promotion" for all regardless of ability.

Principals vote as follows:

Yes, would favor such tests	59%
No, would not	34
No opinion	7

Virtually all of the opposition to the proposal stems from the fact that principals feel such tests would be too hard to administer, that it would be unfair to states with lower standards, and that it would, in effect, place too much control in the hands of the federal government.

When principals were asked what they thought was the greatest change that would come in the schools in the next 10 years, here are some of the things they envision.

1—A return to the fundamentals as far as the curriculum is concerned. Elimination of "frill courses," more emphasis on science and mathematics.

An Illinois principal with 575 students states:

"'I think we will see curricular changes to meet changing world conditions which means more essentials. There will be less of the 'It's-nice-to-know' type of material."

2—A "two-track" system where the "intellectually elite" who wish to go on to college would attend an academic high school with high standards; those who do not wish to go on to college would go to vocational schools with lower standards.

"There will be dual standards in the secondary schools," said a Tennessee principal with 210 students, "one for those who will attend college and another for those not planning for college."

3—A grouping of the more intelligent students — which many schools have already done — in most high schools and letting them travel through school together.

4—The elimination of the "Automatic promotion" system which now tries to "graduate everyone" at the expense of both the very poor and very good student.

Displaced Students Invited To Chicago

CHICAGO (UPI) — An insurance executive today launched a program to open Chicago-area homes to senior students of Southern high schools closed by the integration controversy so their education can "continue uninterrupted."

W. Clement Stone, president of the Combined Insurance Company of America, said there is an "urgent and immediate need to insure that those senior students who want to enter college in February will be able to do so."

He said he is setting up a clearinghouse through which students who expected to be graduated from high school in January can be put in touch with Chicago-area families willing to give them a home where they can continue their studies.

A number of families already have volunteered to help, he said.

Stone said the families "should be prepared to feed and house the students and pay the tuition which school systems of the area would charge for their educations."

Stone suggested that churches, corporations and civic organizations might help defray tuition costs. He promised to set up a fund if such offers are made.

He said students should be able to pay their own transportation to Chicago but that some system might be developed to help needy youths with transportation costs.

Mile Of Forgotten Dusty Trail

Pitts, Archer Students Still Walking On Dirt

By EDDIE WILLIAMS

Hundreds of Pitts Elementary and Archer High School students are still traveling the dusty trail that takes them to and from school.

When will the rest of Perry Boulevard be paved? they must wonder as they walk along nearly a mile stretch of seemingly forgotten ruggedness.

The stretch of Perry Boulevard in question lies generally between Clarissa Drive and Hollywood Road. The unpaved road has been the subject of bitter haggles between residents and the city for some time. It has heaped shame on school officials on more than one occasion.

However, it has had a more pronounced affect on the hundreds of students who walk to and from school along the road every day in the school term. They have come to know the unpaved road as the "Perry trail."

NO PAVING SEEN

There is little chance the trail which blazes past two new schools —Pitts and Archer—will be paved this school year. At least, that is the opinion of a spokesman for the Road Construction Department. Before paving can begin, utilities must be installed and the road graded, he said.

Shortly before Pitts and Archer opened for their second school term, an ordinance was passed calling for the paving of Perry Boulevard over the protests of unsatisfied citizens.

The citizens are not really against progress and the paving of the road, but against a $71,704 assessment which will be levied against their property to pay for the paving. That figure does not include installation of utilities, grading and curbing.

The dispute over the paving, which is several years old, may be at an end now that the city has taken a firm stand in ordering the road to be paved and insisting taxpayers bear the financial load.

The last official protest of the tax assessment came August 28, a few hours before the Public Works Committee met in executive session to map out the ordinance. A delegation of Negro citizens, led by Otelius Shellman, of 1818 Hollywood Road, N.W., president of the Scott's Crossing Civic League, told the committee they were unable to pay for the paving.

MISUNDERSTANDING

They claimed there has been "a great deal of misunderstanding" concerning the paving of the trail. In the first place, they said, before the northwest area in question was included in the city limits, the county made an agreement with them whereby it would pave free of charge a road passing by their property, when and if such a road was to be cut.

The committee, headed by Alderman Jesse Draper, advised the delegation that the city is not allowed to pave any streets "without assessing the property owners, and that when a petition is received with signatures for more than 50 per cent of the property frontage, the city has not alternative but to go ahead with the paving."

Mr. Shellman said later that "we're not against progress, but we feel there are some issues that should be cleared up." He said he was referring to the county's promise to maintain the road and the fact that another section of Perry Boulevard was paved without assessment.

So, with the citizen-city strife cooling off, the students are still sloshing through the mud when it rains and stumbling over the small boulders along the trail as they go to and from school. They look forward to the day when the Perry trail will be suitable material for their history books.

School Hit By Fire In Hogansville, Ga.

HOGANVILLE — The West End Negro High School suffered considerable damage following a fire believed to have started in the boiler room.

An alarm was received at 6:44 A. M., and firemen arriving found the boiler room of the school enveloped in flames.

Unable to get the blaze under control, a call for help was sent to Chief Rufus Dorman of the La-Grange fire department who dispatched a pumper to Hogansville at [illegible].

According to Hoganville Police Chief Russell Smith the fire was brought under control at 8:30 A. M.

The school, a one-story brick building, was about five years old, was reported to have between 15 and 20 rooms.

Turner High Gets First Charter For Future Teachers

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University and a member of the Atlanta Board of Education, stressed the importance of prospective teachers developing the seven qualities of a good teacher as expressed in their pledge during an address Tuesday at Henry McNeal Turner High School.

The distinguished educator was principal speaker at an assembly program held in observance of Charter Day by the Daniel Franklin Davis Chapter of the Future Teachers of America, named in honor of the principal.

Dr. Clement enumerated the seven qualities of a good teacher as follows: physical vitality, mental vigor, moral discrimination, helpfulness, spiritual strength, leadership and knowledge.

He also emphasized the importance of schools encouraging the top quality students to go into the teaching profession, and noted that the country needs well-trained persons to prepare our youth for good citizenship.

KNOWS, CARES, DOES

"A good teacher is committed to his task," Dr. Clement stated. "He knows, cares and does. He has respect for his community as well as his pupils."

Rev. L. H. Pitts, executive secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association, presented the charter on behalf of the GTEA and the National Education Association.

Other participants on the program included: Mattie Jo Arnold, Henrietta Pope, Carolyn Long, Joy Reed, Barbara R. Hatton, Dosh Jackson, Dorothy Russell, Bertha Bohles, and President Tressie Wright, who presided.

Music was furnished by the Turner High Band and Mixed Ensemble.

The officers of the chapter are as follows: Tressie Wright, president; Mattie Jo Arnold, vice president; Henrietta Pope, secretary; Dorothy Russell, assistant secretary; Dosh Jackson, treasurer; Beverly Malcolm, assistant treasurer; Carolyn Long, librarian; and Barbara Hatton, historian.

The sponsor is Miss G. W. Arnold.

FUTURE BUSINESS LEADERS—These South Fulton High students contributed their talents to the annual business education program recently, at which John Gloster, local bank cashier delivered the address. The group's panel adopted "Meaning of Future Business Leaders of America" as its theme. The above group of students include: Shirley Bennett, Mattie Berry, Sallie Boddie, Marion Cantrell, Linda Cofield, James Doanes, Sylvia Hill, Willie Mae Jackson, Barbara Kirksey, Alfred Jones, Robert Jones, Dorothy McBride, Gloria McMichael, Alvin Milner, Kenneth Neal, Vonda Oliver, Joan Roberts, Blondell Shockley, Ella Tripp, Claudette Varnell, Darlene White and William White.

New Negro School

SPARTA—The Hancock County Board of Education is making plans for the building of a large consolidated Negro high school on a 10-acre lot they have purchased just off Hunt's Hill, a Negro section of the city.

The cost of construction will take at least half of the nearly one million dollars allocated to Hancock County by the State School Building Authority.

High Schools Face Moment of Truth

When Georgia high schools reopen next September they will require of each student a minimum amount of mathematics and science subjects.

That is proper. And certainly the overwhelming majority of parents will approve. The old complaint that such subjects "are never used by many students" is an empty one. The discipline of education is a trained mind. A well-educated person in any field of endeavor, scientist, farmer, businessman, nurse and so on, is merely a person with a trained mind.

The state board has said it will insist on the modest upgrading of the secondary curriculum. It cannot, in fact, fail to do anything else if it wishes to serve the children of Georgia, as we believe it does.

But this brings many counties in Georgia to what might be called "the moment of truth."

Of Georgia's 159 counties, 121 are losing population.

In many of these with a net loss, the county seats show an increase in population, further testifying to the fact that farmland needs fewer hands.

But in these counties there are high schools with as few as 15 and 20 students. There are more with as few as 40 and 50. Each local community quite understandably has a great and possessive pride in these schools. But the fact is they cannot now do the job.

The communities fight consolidation and say we want to retain "our school." That, too, is understandable.

But they are not "our schools." They are not the possession of the adults. They have but one purpose—to educate the children of Georgia as well as can be done.

Consolidation is not a cure-all. It is by no means a panacea. There are headaches connected with it. But it offers the rural county which can't or won't pay taxes to support several schools a chance to have one that meets the standards.

The drift to cities and county seats will continue. Augusta, Atlanta, Savannah, Columbus, Macon, Rome . . . all the larger cities will become larger, as will the county courthouse cities. Atlanta's "urban area" of four counties is already near the million mark. These are people from all over Georgia—and the story is the same in other cities, large and small.

We must quit allowing state politicians—for their own gain—to set country against city. We are all citizens of one state. And the school board must have help and cooperation in enforcing its requirements even if it does mean the closing of many well-loved high schools which no longer can do the job for which they were created.

South Shore High Called 'a City School in a Small Town'

Plans Outgrown by Progress of Community

(This is the fourth in a series of articles about high school education in Chicago and the suburban area. The stories disclose what some schools are doing for "gifted" students, and the problems faced by schools.)

BY CLAY GOWRAN

On Chicago's far south side stands an educational paradox —a strictly big city public high school which, somehow, has a small town feeling about it.

This happy anomaly is South Shore High, and the paradox can be attributed in large measure to two factors—accident and geography.

First, South Shore never started out to be a full-fledged high school. As conceived on the drafting boards and in the first stages of construction, it was purely a junior high school, with a proposed capacity of not more than 1,500.

But plans and needs change, and so South Shore was a full four year school when it first opened its doors on Sept. 3, 1940. But it was a small one.

Keen Parent Interest

Geographically, the school draws its students from a substantial residential neighborhood in which most parents are keenly interested in the educational doings of their youngsters, thus making it easy for South Shore's staff to establish a warm school-home-community relationship.

Working together, accident and geography have created the physical setting for the small town atmosphere, and the setting in turn has attracted the final necessary component, the teaching staff. Teachers like to work here, they like the teen-agers who are their charges, and to a large extent reside in the community themselves.

Sadly, this paradox cannot exist indefinitely. South Shore is overcrowded. It has 1,972 students, and something will have to be done about that beyond the present remedy of having 10 class periods a day instead of the nine usual to city high schools.

Also, someday, the residential permanency of the neighborhood will probably change. So, someday, South Shore will cease to be a big city school with a little town atmosphere.

Proud of Students

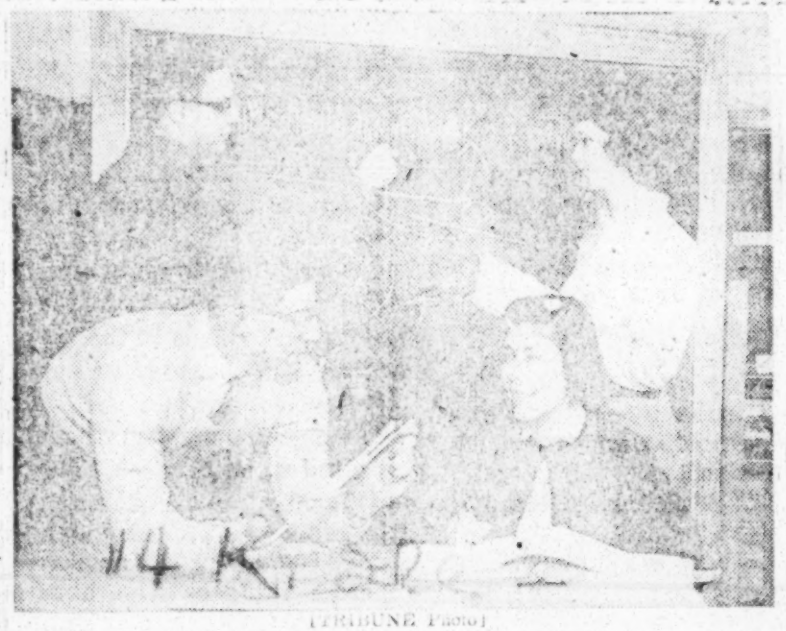
But it has it now, and this writer saw it everywhere during two days spent at South Shore to find out what in general it is doing for its students, and what they are doing for themselves.

Answers were supplied by Miss Mary D. Mulroy, South Shore's principal since 1956; Albert Kosloff, her assistant principal, and Glenn C. Worst, district superintendent over South Shore High. But answers also were supplied by experts qualified to discuss the "receiving" end of the educational system—students themselves.

Miss Mulroy and Kosloff were obviously proud of South Shore's youngsters. Ninety per cent of all incoming freshmen go on thru four years of school to graduate, they said, and this is a high figure in Chicago. Further, they asserted, 85 per cent of the graduates go on to colleges.

52 Per Cent Study Language

Ten South Shore students—more than any other Chicago public high school could boast — were among semi-finalists announced a few weeks ago in the National Merit Scholarship competitions. Fifty-two per cent of the entire student body is enrolled in foreign language courses, not required for graduation by the school board, altho most colleges specify them for entrance.



(TRIBUNE Photo)

Stephen Schoolman and Nina Gershon (seated) and David Bennett and Marcia Tillotson, students at South Shore High school, team up to solve a complicated problem in mathematics.

Worst gave statistics on mathematics and science for South Shore. One year of general science has been required by the school board, but 85 per cent of South Shore's sophomore students are enrolled in optional biology courses, 30 per cent of the junior students are taking an elective in physics, and 38 per cent of the seniors a chemistry elective.

Altho mathematics has not been required in the past—beginning this semester, one year of the subject is compulsory—403 of South Shore's students last semester were in beginning algebra, 149 took second semester algebra, 335 beginning geometry, 101 second semester geometry, 140 third year algebra, 23 solid geometry, 81 trigonometry, and 24 a special college algebra class.

Has High I. Q. Level

Kosloff got out charts to show that the median I. Q.s of 412 incoming freshmen last September was 111, which is high; that the median reading ability was at the 10.4 grade level, or more than two grades above average. The median in arithmetic was 9th grade, also high.

What does South Shore do for its exceptionally gifted youngsters? Not as much as some other schools in far less likely locations. Of a total of 182 classes now being conducted in all subjects, nine are special classes for gifted children. They are hand picked, with an intelligence quotient of 135 or higher, plus a record of achievement in elementary school.

"Starred Classes"

Altho the school has tried for years to give special treatment to the gifted, according to its officials, the establishment of segregated classes for such exceptional students began formally about two years ago. They are called "starred classes" rather than being named — so other students can get the point immediately — "honors classes."

They now are offered almost entirely for freshman and sophomore students, and consist of starred groups in English, general science, and biology, beginning algebra and geometry, and civics.

In mathematics, the starred courses are of the accelerated or "speedup" type, in which students can finish three years of high school math in two. In the other starred groups, the theme is enrichment, which means the classes cover the same subject bracket as regular classes, but go more deeply and further afield within the limits of the bracket.

Hope for Other Classes

Kosloff and Miss Mulroy explained that they hope, if enough gifted students are available to make it worth while, to establish starred physics and chemistry courses soon. They also pointed out, properly, that in mathematics the advanced junior and senior course become, because of their built-in rigor, considerably self-selective as far as students are concerned. In other words, dullards don't volunteer for advanced algebra or trigonometry.

But, the two officials pointed out, South Shore is short on space now. It could use at least 10 more classrooms. It now has only 28, plus six laboratories, two home economics rooms, and one shop.

What do those experts on the reception end of South Shore education — the students — think about their schooling? Several of them, all exceptional youngsters, and all seniors, were interviewed in Kosloff's office by the writer.

Can't Carry Extra Load

Marcia Tillotson, 17, of 7417 Paxton av., a National Merit Scholarship semi-finalist who wants to enter teaching or medicine, said her 15 year old brother now is in the starred classes, "and he's getting more out of those special classes than I did in my regular courses."

"We could go much faster, I think, if we were separated from other kids," she said. "Also, I wanted to take five major courses this year, but it's impossible. We were told that, if four kids each take five majors, it is equivalent to having another student in the school, which already is crowded."

David Bennett, 16, of 7243 Jeffery av., who wants to go either to Harvard or Oberlin and then "teach history to people who definitely want to learn," said his present English instructor is trying to do her best for students in the class who are able. They are given extra work on great books.

Want Faster Pace

Stephen Schoolman, 16, of 3001 Chappel av., who wants to be a nuclear physicist, said he had transferred to South Shore from Hyde Park High school, where he had taken honors classes in math, science, and English. Like the others, he did not think it quite fair that South Shore offered no starred or honors classes for advanced students.

Mary Morony, 17, of 7420 Clyde av., who has her heart set on writing a newspaper column or perhaps working for a national magazine, and Oakey Dowling, 18, of 7543 Constance av., captain of the football team and president of the senior class, agreed that the starred classes should have been extended somehow to their senior levels.

Mary said, "We have been deprived of moving at the speed we could make in such classes."

Urges National Test

Oakey thought there should be some national education test in this country, similar to that employed in England, only not so rigid. On the basis of test results, he thought, teachers could try to persuade those who were not adaptable to higher learning to go into technical schools, thus clearing the field for the able.

One fact stands out clearly from these student interviews. This gifted handful of youngsters at South Shore — and thousands like them thruout the city are doing the same are thinking for themselves.

They want something better, and that's the first step n the road to obtaining it.

School District 14 Is City's Largest — White Calumet High Parents Hit Integration

The Chicago Board of Education put its stamp of approval or a redistricting plan, Thursday that will make Hyde Park High School a virtually jim crow school and keep the blue-nosed South Shore High School lily-white.

The new districts changed boundaries affecting schools and creates a District 14 with 27,557 pupils and only one high school.

All others of the 18 new districts will have about 25,000 pupils and will contain more than one high school. District 14 will be the largest district in the city.

Feeding pupils into it will be the Forestville, Feller and Willard schools, whose students are predominently N gro children. The net result will be that Hyde Park will have an almost totally Negro student body.

Many protests of the plan have been voiced in the past and several were h ard at the meeting this week when the Board ignored the will of the people and set up its JIM CROW plan anyhow.

It was argued that the boundaries of District 14 should have been extended farther south to include South Shore High School. Some of the area at the northern part of the district could have been cut off.

But pressures to keep any large number of Negro children from attending South Shore High, where the rich, snobbish kids of many white supremists go to school, obviously blocked the plan.

It was openly stated that the School Board's action will serve to "disrupt the community's efforts to build an integrated neighborhood."

Irate white parents, shouting and threatening, invaded the offices of Calumet High School at 8200 S. May Wednesday to protest the transfer of their children to the new $3.3 million Harlan High School at 9652 S. Michigan which will enroll equal numbers of Negro and white pupils.

They adamantly refuse to permit their children to be integrated in the new Board of Education setup.

One mother shouted "we want our children to go to school where it is safe."

Another leader of the objectors to the transfers from predominantly white Calumet, Michael Dwyer, 827 S. Perry, who is executive director of the Auburn Highland Community Conservation Council, declared that the parents object because their children will have to travel through a "tough" neighborhood to get to Harlan.

By that Dwyer meant the all-Negro West Chesterfield area embracing the district that takes in South Parkway, Calumet, Prairie, Indiana, Michigan and Wabash Aves. from 90th to 95th Streets. On the other side of State going West is the slum-shocked Lilydale Negro district.

Dwyer said the Calumet group may join one from Fenger High School in seeking an injunction against transferring white children to Harlan under the new integration program. Fenger and Calumet have but a token number of Negro pupils.

Don't Want Segregated Junior Colleges in Florida

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla.—Negro groups here are protesting a move by the state of Florida to set up an all-Negro junior college in this city. A similar protest was registered last year when state officials opened an all-Negro junior college in St. Petersburg.

Washington Junior College for Negroes has been operating for several years in Pensacola and another is being planned for Daytona Beach.

The Vanguard Club, Inc., here, has gone on record as opposing the proposed junior college for West Palm Beach. The club president, Edward J. White, and the secretary, [illegible], said the Vanguards are acting in cooperation with the Inter-Civic League and the Ministerial Alliance.

At their last regular meeting, Vanguard members went on record "rejecting the proposed segregated junior college." The Vanguards also "condemned actions of Negro segregationists who volunteered to serve on the Negro advisory board of the segregated college."

The Vanguards, in a prepared statement, said: "The Negro members of the advisory board are being used as pawns by those who are attempting to maintain segregation. They do not represent the better thinking Negroes of West Palm Beach."

Club members pointed out that the proposed junior college for Negroes would be inadequate and would not offer equal facilities. They point out that there already is a $4,000,000 junior college in the county and that Negroes should be allowed to enroll there. "If they (the state) must persist in the separate, but equal doctrine, give us a $4,000,000 junior college without a stigma attached," said Vanguard members.

Under Pupil Assignment Law

Negro's Request to Attend Lauderdale High Is Rejected

By ART ROBINSON
Herald Staff Writer

FORT LAUDERDALE—The Broward Board of Public Instruction has rejected an application from a Negro girl for admission to Fort Lauderdale High School.

It was submitted in behalf of Myrtis Mizell, 16, by her father, the Rev. Ivory V. Mizell, 1107 NW Fourth St., associate minister of the First Baptist (Piney Grove) Church and a professional photographer.

The Rev. Mizell said he did not make the application as part of a move to integrate the high school or Broward County schools, and apparently there will not be a court test of the rejection.

For the last three years his daughter has been attending a church school, the Boylan Haven School for girls, at Jacksonville, and would "not feel right" about returning to Dillard where she was a seventh grade student four years ago, he said.

Raymond Maxwell, school superintendent, said the application was handled like any other from a pupil seeking to attend a school outside the boundary of the school which he would normally attend.

The school administration takes the position, he said, that to permit one student to go outside such a boundary would mean other requests would have to be granted. This, he said, might cause the overloading of one school at the expense of another.

The application was reviewed by the pupil assignment committee, made up of administrative officers. The committee recommended rejecting it.

The School Board turned down the application Thursday along with several others. However, it was the only application from a Negro to attend a white school.

The Rev. Mizell said he acted on his own to save his daughter from embarrassment that he feels will result if she returns to Dillard after three years in a private school.

He said no organization such as the National Association of the Advancement of Colored People was aware of the application and that he did not plan to make a legal test of the action.

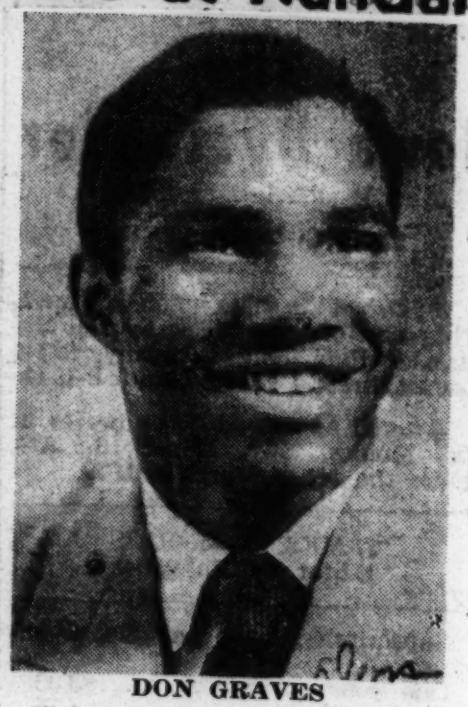
Don Graves Becomes First Negro Prep Coach in Iowa With $4,000-Job at Randall

Randall, Iowa.—When Don Graves, former Des Moines Tech athlete assumed his teaching and coaching duties at this small north central town of 200, he became the first known Negro to shoulder the full-time coaching duties in an Iowa High school.

A December graduate of Iowa State College, Graves applied for the coaching position Dec. 3 and after discussions by the Randall school board of education and a personal interview, he was offered the job which pays $4,100 a year.



DON GRAVES

Welcome!

Mr. and Mrs. Graves report that everything has gone well in their short stay in Randall. They were invited to a parent-teacher meeting last week at the school.

"They had a big cake and on top it said: 'Welcome Mr. and Mrs. Graves", his pretty wife said in an interview to the local daily.

Groundwork

Much of the credit for the ready welcoming acceptance goes to the Superintendent of Schools, Gerald A. Knight, who initiated and carried out much of the groundwork preparatory to receiving Randall's new teacher-coach. Knight also secured living quarters for the Graves in nearby [illegible]ey City. There are no apart[illegible]ts in Randall.

HARRODSBURG

HARRODSBURG IS MODEL, PROGRESSIVE COMMUNITY

Integration Accomplished In Town's ~~High School~~

By Clarence L. Matthews

Harrodsburg, a model city of near 6,000 residents, has progressed from it's illustrious and trying beginning as the oldest settlement in the commonwealth to a prosperous, progressive minded community in a predominately farm area.

It's religious influenced populous in dependent upon a farm based economy. They are also concerned with community welfare and civic pride. Approximately 700 of the residents of this central Kentucky city are persons of Negro ancestry who's presence here pre dates the Revolutionary War as is the case in other parts of the state.

The city of Harrodsburg is the county seat of Mercer county which was formed as the sixth in order of organization of the Kentucky counties in 1785. The county was one of the eight counties formed before Kentucky entered the Union. Mercer County was named in honor of General Hugh Mercer, a Revolutionary War Officer.

Rich-Land

The land in Mercer County which surrounds Harrodsburg is generally level, undulating, rich and considered conducive for excellent agricultural products and the raising of prime stock. The principal crops of this region are corn and wheat. Tobacco and rye are harvested along with the raising of horses, mules, cattle. sheep and hogs.

Harrodsburg is the oldest town and oldest county seat in Kentucky. The city was formerly the seat of Lincoln County before the forming of Mercer. It was orginally laid out as a town by Captain James Harrod in June of 1774. The community was first known as Harrodstown and Oldtown before the present name was arrived at.

As in the case of most predominately agricultural communities, manufacturing is at a minimum in Harrodsburg. Industry is therefore relegated to the light manufacturing class. There is a glass and garment factory located in the Harrodsburg vicinity.

Negroes of Harrodsburg are employed in maintenance and custodial positions at the garment factory. They are also in positions at the glass factory.

The city of Harrodsburg also employs many Negroes as laborers and street cleaners. No Negroes are on the police force or in any official capacity with the city government. Two Negroes were on the city Board of Commissioners.

Professionals

With the exception of school teachers, Negro professionals in Harrodsburg are nearly non-existent. Nathan Wilson is the owner and operate of a funeral home on E. Broadway street. There are three ministers pastoring 2 Baptist churches and one Methodist church. No Negroes doctors, dentists are practicing in the city.

Being a farm community several Negro families, as many whites do, own and operate their own farms. Products produced off these farms are mostly tobacco and stock with emphasis on cow and hogs. Negroes are also in the tenant farmer class on larger farms located in Mercer county.

Negro business in Harrodsburg consists chiefly of service and cutodial enterprises. There is one restaurant and a beauty and barber shop. There are some skilled men, as plasters and building tradesmen who contract for work and therefore considered small businessmen.

Race Reations

Race reations in Harrodsburg, according to city officials and Negro leaders, has always been excellent as exhibited by liberal public housing and hitchless progress of integration in the city and county schools.

E. Broadway street in Harrodsburg is the only section where there is any concentration of Negro residents. In most sections of the city the Negro segment of the population live in close proximity to whites. Many instances find Negroes and whites living next door to each other. There is no restriction to housing.

Public accomodations for Negroes in this community, however, follows the pattern of the majority of Kentucky cities. Negroes attend theaters and other places of amusements, which are not barred to them, on segregated basis.

Integration

Integration in Harrodsburg was begun in the 1956-58 school year. The Westside High School (Negro) was discontinued and the building is now serving as an elementary school with grades from the first through eighth. Negroes of the community of high school age now attend the integrated Harrodsburg High School in grades one through twelve.

Mercer County, also integrating in the 1956-57 school year, has desegregated its system from the 1st through the 12th grades. No major incidents have been reported in association with city or county school integration program.

Negro students in the two systems take part in all school activities and have been most proficient in athletic competition. Robert Boyd, a student at Harrodsburg High School, was a star on the school basketball team. Boyd was a member of the Kentucky high school basketball team which played the Ohio allstars at Freedom Hall in Louisville this year.

Westside School

Principal of the Westside Elementary School is Miss Clara B. Clelland who has been a instructor in the school system of this city for 44 years. She recently was the recipient of a citation from the University of Kentucky for her many years of service and dedication to her job.

The Westside school was also renovated recently. The school has all new furniture, roofing, tiled floors and a new furnance. In addition to the principal, there are three teachers at Westside to serve 110 pupils.

While the integration process has not been completed, further integration is planned. Teacher integration in Harrodsburg is not planned at this time.

Violence Closes Kentucky School Long Integrated

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Kentucky school was closed after an outbreak of violence while authorities in Arkansas and Virginia worked on new maneuvers designed to reopen schools that shut down in the face of orders to integrate.

Boone Hall, principal of Wheelwright, Ky., High School, planned to meet with parents and officials to decide what to do about the first racial incident since mixed classes began at the school three years ago.

Police broke up a demonstration by white pupils in which rocks were thrown and some windows were broken Wednesday. Hall said it was an outgrown of a fight between a white girl and a Negro girl in a restaurant the day before.

Classes were suspended indefinitely. Five Negro girls were among the 650 pupils enrolled at the school but had been sent home before the rock-throwing incident.

In Washington, President Eisenhower urged obedience of U. S. Supreme Court rulings.

"It is incumbent upon all Americans . . . to recognize their duty of complying with the rulings of the highest court in the land," he told his news conference. "Any other course . . . would be fraught with grave consequences to our nation . . ."

The Little Rock Private School Corp., however, announced plans for a segregated high school educational system using private resources in an effort to place the schools beyond the reach of federal courts.

Dr. T. J. Raney, corporation president, appealed for money and for space in buildings to get the program started.

Amis Guthridge, attorney for the prosegregation Capital Citizens Council in Little Rock, said money would be raised for private facilities "if our would-be federal masters insist on destroying our public schools . . ."

In Richmond, Vice Mayor Robert J. Heberle said in a letter to Eisenhower that he did not consider the court's "recent opinions as the law of the land, but rather as an attempt to change the law of the land . . ."

"You cannot be fundamentally honest if you ask me as a public official to aid in the conversion of our good schools into a disgraceful mess which exists in your Washington schools," he wrote. The Washington schools have been integrated for several years.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. was reported considering plans to reorganize Virginia's nine closed schools so that some of the 13,000 idle children could return to classes.

Informed sources said they believed this might be done by eliminating one or more grades that were ordered to integrate at individual schools.

At Miami, Fla., the Dade County School Board rejected the applications of 37 Negro pupils for transfer to white schools.

Fight Closes Desegregated High School

WHEELWRIGHT, Ky., Oct. 1 (AP) — Approximately 100 students, yelling and throwing rocks, broke several windows at Wheelwright High School today in the wake of a fight between a white girl and a Negro girl.

Classes were suspended indefinitely at the 650-pupil junior-senior high school, integrated three years ago.

"We had the state police and the local policeman here," said Principal Boone Hall.

He said the trouble started yesterday when a white girl, believing a Negro student had said something personal about her, accosted the other girl in a restaurant.

"At this point there was no problem," the principal added, "but bystanders began milling about and 50 students finally walked out of school."

They staged a brief parade downtown then returned to classes after an appeal by Hall.

He said seven or eight Negroes are enrolled in the senior class. Negroes in grades 1 through 11 still atend their own schools in the mining community, about 20 miles south of Prestonburg.

POLICE HALT FIGHT

Kentucky School Closes After 2 Days Of Riots

WHEELWRIGHT, Ky. (AP) — Police broke up a rock-throwing student demonstration at Wheelwright High School Wednesday and officials closed the school indefinitely.

The outburst, second in two days, sprang from a clash between two students, one a Negro, at a downtown restaurant. Both were suspended.

It was the first racial incident at Wheelwright High since its integration three years ago. There are five Negro girls among the 650 pupils.

Principal Boone Hall said a meeting of parents and officials would be held Thursday "in an attempt to iron out this situation."

Hall said the trouble began after he sent home two girls because of a study hall disturbance Tuesday.

"Instead of going home, they went to a nearby restaurant where one got into a little fight with a Negro girl during the lunch hour."

A crowd collected, the principal said, and about 100 students decided to stage a parade in downtown Wheelwright. All but 50 returned to afternoon classes.

Hall said he later advised the parents of the five Negroes' their children should stay away from Wednesday classes. They did so.

He also asked state police and local officers to be on hand when school opened.

OWENTON

Owen High Admits 8 Negroes

Integration Was Ordered In Spring

Owenton, Ky., Sept. 8 (AP) — Eight Negroes were admitted to Owen County High School Monday for the first time in history.

"Everything is running smoothly," said Principal Cyrus Green. "We've had no incidents. The other children took little notice of the Negroes as they marched into assembly hall."

Federal District Judge H. Church Ford, in a decision issued this spring, ordered the school integrated. It has about 370 white students.

Extension Granted

Ford also granted the School Board a time extension before ruling on integration of the County elementary schools.

Some 53 Negores would be affected by the lower-school order.

The School Board requested the delay on the ground it does not have facilities to integrate the elementary pupils into white schools.

The county will vote in November on a tax increase of 5 to 50 cents per $100 of assessed valuation for elementary-school construction.

2 White Families Take Children From Schools

Special to The Courier-Journal

Hopkinsville, Ky., Sept. 8. — Two white families Monday withdrew their children from two newly integrated elementary schools here.

The parents said they will keep their children out of West Side and Belmont schools "until the Negro students go back to their own schools."

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Arvin said City-school officials won't let them transfer their two children to all-white grade schools. The Arvin youngsters are in the fourth and fifth grades at Belmont. The only Negro pupil there is in the first grade.

Oscar Wells, a civilian cook at Fort Campbell Army Hospital, said he would provide a private tutor for his third-grade daughter before he would send her back to integrated classes at West Side. Two Negro students attend the second and third grades at West Side.

Integration began last week at the two Hopkinsville grade schools.

Officals Disregard High School Pupils

Lexington — In answer to suit brought by the parents of nine elementary and High School students, seeking school desegregation, the Owen County school officials filed a motion in the U. S. District Court, Eastern Division, that the suit be dismissed and that segregation be continued in the county.

In reference to the elementary schools, the attorneys for the school officials contend that obstacles to desegregation consist of inadequate buildings, worn obsolete equipment, teacher shortage, and scant school revenue.

Negro Comfortable

The motion says the white elementary schools are congested, have inadequate classrooms and toilet facilities, and are in a bad state of repair while conditions in the Negro schools in Owenton and New Liberty are comfortable, commodious, and adequate.

However, Attorney James A. Crumlin, president of the Kentucky State Councils of NAACP, pointed out in the original suit that the conditions at he Negro schools were deplorable. One factor he mentioned was that the well that furnishes drinking water is less than 15 yards from the toilet.

The Owen County Superintendent and School Board maintain that to integrate the schools would further aggravate the uncomfortable and congested conditions.

No Negro High School

The motion pointed out that there is no high school for Negroes in Owen County while there is a modern, adequate building for 375 white students. High school advantages are provided for eight Negro High school students at Lincoln Ridge Institute in Shelby County.

The attorneys for the defendants further contended that to discontinue this provision at this time would interrupt these students' curiculum and do them irreparable injury.

According to Attorney Crumlim, although the county does provide tuition for the eight students at Lincoln, there are other expenses involved in attending this school that must be borne by the parents and that would not be if there were a school maintained by the county.

Stifling Talent

He said there are many youngsters in Owen County whose parents are not able to bear this added expense and who must discontinue school when they reach high school.

Pointing out that many of our eminent Americans, both Negro an white, came from homes of meager circumstances, Crumlin said that by denying these youngsters the right to an education, the Owen County school officials may be stifling another Booker T. Washington, George Washington Carver or Mrs. Mary Mary McGlood Bethune at the very time when such persons are badly needed.

Integration ordered in Kentucky schools

LEXINGTON, Ky. (NNPA) — Integration of Owen County High schools by next fall has been ordered by the U. S. District Court.

The school board was ordered to start promptly on the program by Judge H. Church Ford and to report by June 16 on its progress, future plans and reasons, if any, for any additional time needed to complete integration.

The board officials said adequate facilities exist for high school integration, but buildings and teachers were short for elementary schools.

FIGHT FORCES SCHOOL CLOSING

Crowd Throws Rock in Kentucky

WHEELWRIGHT, Ky. (UPI) —A jeering, stone-throwing crowd of white students and adults Wednesday forced dismissal of classes at Wheelwright High school as the aftermath of a fight between a white girl and a Negro girl in a restaurant.

Several school windows were broken before state police and local authorities could disperse the crowd of about 100 students and other white persons.

Principal Boone Hall said he suspended the Negro girl but had not yet been able to talk to the white girl. He said it was school policy to suspend students for 10 days for fighting and expel them for a second offense.

NOT CERTAIN

Hall was not certain that the demonstration stemmed entirely from the clash between Velma Mosley, 16, and the Negro girl, Ernestine Johnson, 17. Students also were said to be angry because their lunch hours have been cut from one hour to 35 minutes.

When students learned the girls had been sent home Wednesday about 60 of them, mostly girls, left classes and demonstrated in front of the school. Some members of the crowd which gathered threw rocks and three or four windows were smashed.

Only five Negro seniors, all girls, are enrolled in the 650-pupil school, which was integrated in 1955.

PARENTS ADVISED

Hall advised Negro parents not to allow the girls to return to schools until they are notified. None did Wednesday.

Hall called a meeting of parents for 9:30 a. m. Thursday in the school auditorium to discuss the situation with county superintendent O. V. Turner.

Turner said, "We don't think it's very serious at all. It's just a dispute between students. We're trying to avoid any serious trouble."

Wheelwright is a coal-mining town of about 2000 population about 13 miles from the Kentucky-Virginia state line.

Race incident closes school in Kentucky

By The Associated Press

A Kentucky school was closed following an outbreak of violence while authorities in Virginia worked on new maneuvers designed to reopen schools that shut down in face of orders to integrate.

Boone Hall, principal of Wheelwright, Ky., High School planned to meet with parents and officials to decide what to do about the first racial incident since mixed classes began at the school three years ago.

POLICE BROKE up a demonstration by white pupils in which rocks were thrown and some windows were broken yesterday. Hall said it was an outgrowth of a fight between a white girl and a Negro girl in a restaurant the day before.

Classes were suspended indefinitely after the burst of violence. Five Negro girls were among the 650 pupils enrolled at the school but had been sent home before the rock-throwing incident.

IN RICHMOND, Vice Mayor Robert J. Heberle said in a letter to President Eisenhower he did not consider the court's "recent opinions as the law of the land, but rather as an attempt to change the law of the land . . ."

"Our segregated policies were formerly approved by that court and I do not believe the law of this land is subject to change at the whim of that court."

Heberle wrote that Richmond has a "progressive and equalized school system" infinitely superior to Washington's integrated system and added:

"You cannot be fundamentally honest if you ask me as a public official to aid in the conversion of our good schools into the disgraceful mess which exists in your Washington schools. If that condition is a fair sample of the effects of the new law of the land, then I conceive it to be your plain duty to take such vigorous and prompt action as may be needed to change the law of the land back again."

MEANWHILE Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., put off action on reorganizing two integration closed schools in Charlottesville. He congratulated the city's citizenry on its efforts to provide private schooling for the affected children.

The governor issued a statement to this effect shortly after conferring for an hour and a half with Charlottesville School Board members and top state legal and education officers.

Norfolk school officials and attorneys are scheduled to meet with the governor late today.

"Any action that could be taken by this office under existing conditions would be designed to provide instruction to the children of Charlottesville during this emergency," the governor's statement said.

"It appears that such instruction is now being afforded through the initiative, courage and determination of the citizens of Charlottesville.

"I am therefore deferring action at this time on the contemplated reopening of certain grades in the two schools involved."

THERE HAS BEEN speculation Almond would try to reorganize the closed Norfolk and Charlottesville schools by eliminating certain grades at individual schools which have been ordered integrated.

His office said yesterday he had no comment on a Norfolk City Council resolution asking him to reopen Norfolk's six closed schools under Chapter 69 of Virginia's anti-integration laws of 1956. This says whenever a local governing body declares an emergency and asks the governor to act in the name of the General Assembly, he should reopen closed schools and operate them himself on a fully segregated basis.

The best guess is, however, that Almond will act under Chapter 68 of the laws and reopen the six Norfolk schools (10,000 pupils) and the two closed schools in Charlottsville (1700 pupils) by eliminating the grades in which Negroes would be enrolled. White children enrolled in these grades would be sent to the white schools, and the Negro children ordered admitted by federal courts would be sent back to Negro schools.

Warning on Taking In Negro High Schools Given

There is some fear that the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools will destroy itself if it moves too rapidly in admitting Negro high schools to full membership, Negro educators were told here yesterday.

Some association members have already talked of forming a new group since the association last year made it possible for Negro colleges to gain membership, said Raymond O. Wilson, Atlanta.

Wilson, executive secretary of the association's commission on secondary schools, spoke before the final session of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Negro affiliate of the Southern association, at Central High School.

'More Subject to Reprisals'

"If human beings were always rational," Wilson said, "these things could be settled sensibly."

However, he continued, it is a "sobering fact" that high-school principals are more subject than college presidents to fears of "reprisals" when considering racial matters.

In another report to the Negro group, Gordon W. Sweet, Atlanta, executive secretary of the Southern association's commission on colleges and universities, said the admission of 14 Negro colleges to membership this year makes a total of 29 admitted.

Adopts Four Resolutions

(Kentucky State College, Frankfort, was one of the 14 colleges voted into full membership Thursday.)

The Negro group passed resolutions which:

1. Deplore "the weakening of our public-school system by the closing of some schools and the threat to extend this disaster across state lines, thus affecting adversely the youth of our region and the future of our country."

2. Call for Negro representation on any advistory committees established in connection with the National Defense Education Act of 1958.

3. Ask that all benefits of the act accrue to all citizens without discrimination based on race.

4. Urge the President and Congress of the United States to pass bills granting additional federal aid to education.

$5,000,000 Carver School Village Formally Dedicated

More than 2,000 braved Sunday's low temperatures here to attend the joint dedication and presentation of three public schools in the Gentilly section - Helen Sylvania Edwards Elementary School, George Washington Carver Junior High School and George Washington Carver Senior High School.

The exercises were held in the "only air-conditioned auditorium in the school system," which actually never got comfortable in spite of both the Orleans Parish School Board's and the architects', Curtis and Davis, boast of "a heating system they is the best." The weather's condition, however, should not be credited entirely for the seemingly "cold atmosphere" for many had thought to "walk out of the building when school board president, Emile A. Wagner, Jr., made his appearance on the program," according to an earlier announcement, 'in protest of his admittedly public made position on continued segregation in public schools of Orleans Parish." Negro leaders, however, advised against it as they felt such an act would discredit the Negro group more for its discourtesy than Wagner for his bigotry. They have advised taking action against him professionally as a lawyer or economically as a top official in the Hibernia Homestead Association.

Wagner, as president, presented the facilities, located on an 88-acre tract of land now known as the Carver site and purchased from the Gaudet Episcopal Home, to Alfred Thompson, a student at Carver Junior High, who received the facilities for the more than four thousand children, faculties and parents of the community to use them.

Negro Students Seek Entrance To Md. School

Baltimore, Md. (NNPA) —Two colored pupils in St. Mary's County Friday asked the Federal District Court here for the second time to end segregation at Great Mills High School.

Thomas C. Groves, 13, and his sister, Jean E. Groves, 14, asked the Federal Court to permit them to enter the all-white high school.

In July, 1956, District Judge Rozel C. Thomsen told the colored pupils they must exhaust administrative remedies before bringing their case to court. In their suit, the children said they were again denied admission to the high school when they applied last September.

County integrates teachers

BALTIMORE

Carver Junior-Senior High School located on York Rd., Towson, will have both integrated faculty and student body when the schools reopen on Sept. 8, according to Baltimore County School Board officials.

The formerly all-colored high school is now being remodeled at a cost of $1,800,000 to accommodate the integrated faculty of from 45 to 50 teachers and the integrated student body of about 1,600 students, officials state.

Miss Minnie H. Woolford is now principal of the high school.

ALSO SLATED to become integrated on faculty and student levels as well are other Baltimore County schools. Included are Sollers Point High School, Sollers Point; Kenwood Senior High, Marlyn Ave. and Stemmers Run Rd.; Essex and Sudbrook Junior High, Bedford Rd. at Alter Ave., Pikesville;

Also, Towson Senior High, Cedar Ave., Towson; Catonsville Senior High, Bloomsbury Ave., and Rolling Rd., Catonsville; and Milford Mill High in the Woodlawn, Randallstown area.

According to Edward Stapleton, superintendent, integration in Baltimore County Schools began immediately after the Supreme Court decision in 1954.

On Thursday he told the AFRO: "We were one of the first counties to integrate. We are stepping up integration.

"Faculty placement in our schools is not a matter of integration. It is a matter of employment practice.

"We speak of integration as a matter of bringing the children together.

"We do not have colored and white teachers and colored and white students. We have students and teachers."

St. Marys Plans Appeal On Negro's Admission

LEONARDTOWN, Md., Aug. 26 (AP) — St. Marys County school officials moved today to appeal a Federal Court order directing them to desegregate Great Mills High School.

Robert King, county school superintendent, said the Board of Education was expected to decide whether to appeal a court ruling that a Negro girl must be admitted to the high school when it opens Sept. 4.

"We are moving in that direction," King said when asked whether he expected the board to seek reversal of the ruling by Judge Roszel C. Thomson.

The board had adopted a policy of integrating elementary schools last year, junior high schools this year and high schools next year. No applications were received last year from Negro pupils seeking transfer to previously all-white schools.

The board had approved the enrollment of Thomas Conrad Groves, Negro, in the junior high section of the Great Mills school this year. Thomson's decision directed that the board also admit the boy's sister, Joan Elaine Groves, to the high school section.

In upholding the Federal court's decision, the Appellate court ruled that the girl would suffer "unusual hardship" under the current plan. The county's desegration plan calls for removing racial barriers from the 12th in the future.

Negro Senior Is Admitted To Maryland School

BALTIMORE, Md., (ANP) —A 16-year-old Negro girl was admitted to high school last week after the U. S. Fourth circuit of appeals upheld a lower court decision which directed that the student be admitted to the senior class level in a St Mary's county school.

Attorneys for the county argued that the presence of the Negro, Joan Elaine Groves, would interfere with the orderly process of LEONARDTOWN, Md. Aug (AP)—A St. Marys County school official said today a Negro boy will be admitted to an all-white junior high schoo this fall but the announcemen said nothing about the boy's sister, who seeks transfer to a white high school.

School Accepts Negro, Fails to Act on His Sister

The county has had integration only for grades one through six. School Supt. Robert E. King said the transfer of 14-year-old Thomas C. Groves to Great Mills Junior High School was in line with the board of education's policy for the school year 1958-59.

He said the policy provides for the acceptance of "voluntary applications for transfer" for grades one through nine.

The announcement came as a Federal Court decision was awaited in the Groves case. Judge Roszel C. Thomsen is expected to make a ruling after he returns from vacation next Thursday.

William Groves, California, Md., Negro, sought to have both his son, Thomas and his daughter Joan, 16, transferred to Great Mills schools.

Judge Thomsen heard arguments last June in U. S. District Court.

At that time, school board Vice President Robert E. Wigginton said the board plans to integrate at the high school level in 1959-60.

Last year when the county opened grades one through six for integration it got four applications for transfer from Negroes but none actually made the transfers.

Racial Integration Begins Quietly In St. Marys County High School

GREAT MILLS, Md., Sept. 4—Two Negro children quietly joined 668 white students at the high school here today in the first school racial integration in Dixie-oriented St. Marys County.

Joan Groves, 16, and her brother, Conrad, 14, attended the first day of school in Maryland's southernmost county. Only "two or three" white Only one incident marred the day, that came when "two or three" white boys called Conrad names while he was showing two other white boys how to twirl a yoyo.

"I ignored them and they went away," Conrad said later.

Conrad entered the ninth grade under the School Board's established policy of desegregating junior high school this year.

Joan entered the school under court order, because she is a senior and the graduated integration policy has not progressed beyond the junior high level. The Board is awaiting a decision by the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals on an appeal against Federal District Judge Roszel C. Thomsen's order to enroll Joan.

Joan and Conrad are children of Mr. and Mrs. William Groves, who moved to Lexington Park from New York about eight years ago. Mrs. Groves was born here. Her husband is an electrical contractor.

"I respect my neighbors and have faith in them," he said.

The Groves family had high praise for Jane Mattingly, who has been principal of Great Mills High School for more than 25 years. Mrs. Groves said, "Miss Mattingly and I had a long talk and agreed that the new situation could be met successfully.

Miss Mattingly told reporters after a school assembly that she informed the pupils there would be Negroes among them for the first time. She said she told them the Negroes were "intelligent and well-behaved" children and that she expected the students to treat the newcomers as they would like to be treated themselves.

Joan and Conrad arrived at the school as sole passengers in a school bus. The County's bus system still is segregated.

Joan said the white students she met "treated me fine and many made it a point to speak to me. Some asked me why I wanted to come to school here. When I told them I wanted to take courses not offered where I went before, they said they did not blame me."

Conrad was philosophical about his one bad experience, though his feelings were hurt. He said, "I've never been disliked before."

Kansas City Expels Negro Student

It was the first punitive action the board has taken in an outbreak of rowdyism in Kansas City's public schools.

Linwood Davis, 18, was fined $5 in Police Court Wednesday for carrying a knife into Central Junior High.

Both Young, 16, and Davis are Negroes but neither is enrolled at the school.

Young was accused of striking Richard Powers, 28. The boy was a pupil at Central High, a senior high school in a separate building near Central Junior. Powers reported Young created a disturbance during an intramural basketball game. The instructor said he asked Young to leave and Young struck him.

The hearing before the board was in secret. Joseph N. Moore, attorney for Young, said three classmates told the board Powers hit the pupil first and tore his shirt.

"The board feels it should not tolerate a student striking a teacher," said Roland B. Hewitt, president of the board.

"Certainly this kind of behavior is intolerable and demoralizing to the schools," said Dr. James A. Hazlett, superintendent.

About 60 per cent of the pupils at Central Junior high are Negro, the highest percentage in any of Kansas City's integrated schools.

Hazlett and his aides have said integration is not the basic reason for the trouble there but they acknowledge it has intensified the school's problems. They say outsiders have been responsible for most of the incidents.

Negro School Symbolizes 'Harmony Between Races'

By BOB PITTMAN

CANTON, Miss. — Madison county held up its half-million dollar Negro school yesterday as a symbol of Mississippi's hope for remaining in the public school business.

About 1,200 whites and Negroes attended dedication ceremonies at the new Rogers Junior-Senior High School in Canton.

The school, which sprawls over a 68-acre campus that was once a cow pasture, is part of the Canton Municipal Separate School District.

The structure was built under Mississippi's school equalization program which is designed to bring all schools in the state, both white and Negro, up to par.

Space is provided for about 1,500 students. The combination junior and senior high school replaces 16 sub-standard schools in the county.

White leaders have said that with recent Supreme Court decisions the state's only hope of retaining public schools is through a system of voluntary segregation. The gleaming new structure dedicated here yesterday is an example of the state's chief means of keeping Negroes in their own schools—building good schools for them.

The school was named in honor of the Negro supervising principal of all Negro schools in Canton, A. M. Rogers.

A native of Union county, Rogers has served in the public schools here for 25 years. The building includes 32 classrooms, two libraries, three science laboratories, two vocational shops, a three-room home economics department, a cafeteria, and a combinattion gymnasium-auditorium that will seat 2,000 persons.

Negroes conducted the dedication program and members of the all-white Canton school board and legislators were given seats of honor on the stage. Other white visitors sat in a segregated area in the audience.

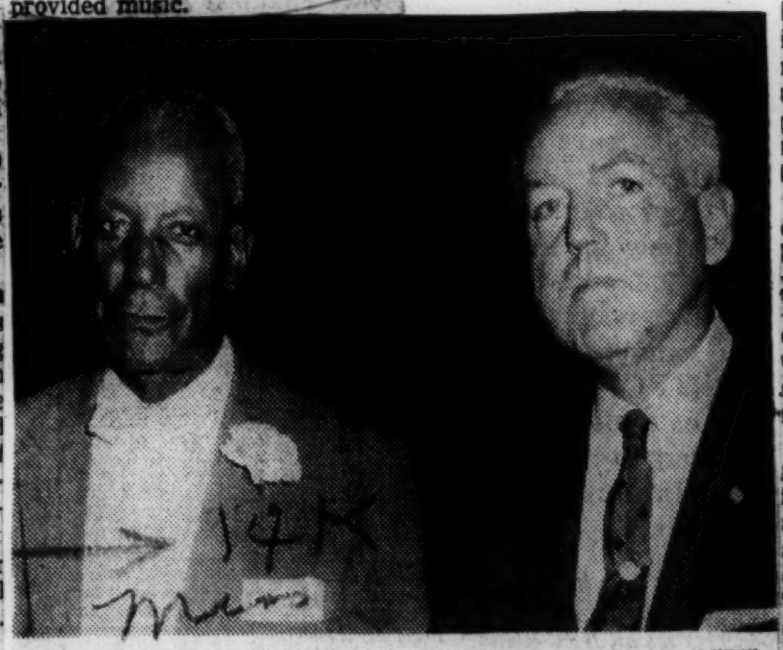
Negro minister Rev. E. A. Mays, pastor of the Central Methodist Church of Jackson, was the dedication speaker. Rev. Mays said the new school is a sign "someone has gone the extra mile in obtaining this building."

The gray-haired Rogers said "harmony between the races" was a major reason the school was constructed. "When we have a project in our schools," he said, "our white friends usually do more than our own folks."

Rogers said the county had one Negro school, 650 students and 1 teachers when he came to Canton The new school has a faculty of 75 and an enrollment of 1500.

Raymond Birchett of Jackson, architect for the building, presented a Bible to the school during the dedication program.

The school's band and glee club provided music.



Canton's new $500,000 Negro junior-senior high school, which was dedicated yesterday, was named in honor of A. M. Rogers, left, supervising principal of Canton's Negro schools for 26 years. D. M. Allen, right, is superintendent of the Canton Separate School District. About 1200 persons attended the dedication program.

NAACP Calls New Canton School 'Barn'

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The National Assn. For the Advancement of Colored People charged yesterday the new Negro junior - senior high school at Canton is ill - equipped and overtaxed.

The state conference of NAACP branches issued a statement saying the school "has the striking resemblance of an auction barn" and that it "is inadequate to provide for each child the maximum educational opportunity that this day and age demand"

The school was dedicated Sunday at ceremonies attended by Negro and white leaders. It was named in honor of A. M. Rogers, who has served as principal of the Negro high school at Canton for 25 years and has seen enrollment rise from 600 to 3,000.

The NAACP charged that "Negro citizens will not accept as satisfactory this frantic makeshift school program which is designed as an answer to the supreme court decision of May 17, 1954. Those Negroes who aid in keeping other Negroes in deplorable conditions under which we live in Mississippi should be singled out for what they really are, profiteers at the inhuman expense of his fellow man."

Break Ground For New Negro High School

Ground breaking ceremonies for the new Livingston Road Junior-Senior Negro high school were held this morning with James Gooden, director of colored schools, breaking ground.

T. M. Bute, president of the Board of Trustees, was master of ceremonies with Rev. G. W. Williams, pastor of Bratt Memorial Methodist Church, delivering the invocation and the benediction.

Distinguished guests were Mayor Allen C. Thompson, Commissioners L. L. Campbell, and D. L. Luckey; Ross P. Dodds, president Hinds County Board of Supervisors, and T. H. Naylor, executive secretary of the Educational Finance Commission.

Members of the board of trustees present were L. E. Alfred, Lester Alvis, Mrs. Brister Ware, and Luther F. Noble, Sr.

Principals in design and construction of the school are Harry Haas, Jr., R. C. Jones, W. R. Allen, Jr., associating architects; W. H. Howie, Howie Construction Company, Inc.; general contractor, Byron Speed, Davis Plumbing Company, Inc., mechanical contractor, and J. D. Drake, Drake Electric Company, Inc., electrical contractor.

NAACP Charges Carthage Negro School Inferior

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People charged today that the new Negro High school at Carthage is an example of how "Negro children are being cheated out of a decent education here in this state."

The state NAACP office here said the plant was inferior to white elementary schools and cited figures to support its claim.

It said the $437,000 Spann white elementary school at Jackson has an average classroom load of 32.9 students per room and has an auditorium, cafeteria and general office area the Robert E. Lee white elementary school at Jackson has an average of 28.8 pupils per classroom, a library, auditorium, cafeteria, administrative offices and service area, with a total cost of $331,368.

Turning to the O. E. Jordan high school at Carthage, a new Negro school, the NAACP said it is expected to average 34.8 students per room, and have a combination gym-auditorium. The total cost is listed as $308,000.

"Now, anyone who cares to make a comparison of the three schools and their cost will observe the shortcomings of the O. E. Jordan high school as compared with the elementary schools mentioned," the NAACP said in a statement.

Official Refutes NAACP Charge

Denies New Canton School Is Overcrowded

IS 'WHOLLY ERRONEOUS"

Special to The Commercial Appeal

CANTON, Miss., Oct. 29.—Supt. D. M. Allen of Canton public schools Wednesday refuted a charge by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that the new $500,000 Negro junior-senior high school is "inadequate and overcrowded."

Mr. Allen said the accusation is "thoroughly" and completely erroneous.

Evers Accusation

Medger Evers, field secretary of the NAACP in Jackson, made the accusation following Sunday's dedication of the modern facility at ceremonies attended by 1,500 persons, about 100 of them whites.

Earlier, editor Phil Mullen of the Madison County Herald had termed the NAACP charge as "utterly ridiculous and irresponsible."

The NAACP charge said the new school's 32 classrooms are inadequate because they allow for an average classroom student load "of 45.6 students which is 15.6 students above the normal load of 30."

Superintendent Allen said "this is not true."

"The official report for September which was presented to the board of trustees Oct. 13, shows a total enrollment of 1,134, but an average daily attendance of 875.

Cites Figures

"This would give a classroom load of only 28.9 students, even if all of the students were in classrooms at the same time. It should be pointed out that these 32 classrooms do not include the

School officials said average daily attendance figures are those used by all educational authorities to determine classroom loads.

Negro Educator Says Greenest Pastures Are In Mississippi

By BOB PITTMAN
Daily News Staff Writer

CARTHAGE, Miss. — The president of a Mississippi Negro college praised Gov. J. P. Coleman here yesterday for his "leadership of all the people of Mississippi."

Praise for the Governor came from Dr. J. H. White, president of Mississippi Vocational College as he made the principal address at dedication of the new Jordan Negro High School here.

The modern high school, which stands where a four-teacher frame school once stood, is another step in Mississippi's program to equalize educational facilities for both Negro and white students.

The school was named in honor of its principal, O. E. Jordan, who has served Carthage schools for 13 years.

Jordan told the group of both whites and Negroes attending the ceremony yesterday that "This school is proof that Leake county Negroes want schools." The school is the fourth Negro high school in the county.

The $308,000 structure has 24 classrooms, a cafeteria, and combination gymnasium - auditorium. The school has 803 students and 30 members on the faculty.

BUILDING 1700

Tommy Naylor, executive secretary of the State Education Finance Commission, said the state has completed 800 such classrooms and 1700 more are under construction.

Dr. White, of Itta Bena, commended Carthage citizens for their "fine" race relations and declared that "Too many Negroes are looking for greener pastures in every section of the country but the South. The greenest pasture is all around you," he said.

"I've been reading a lot about the Negro going back to Africa," he commented.

"I'm happy where I am. I'm here by choice and I intend to stay. I'm happy in Mississippi."

The college president told his audience, made up largely of Negroes, that "Freedom and respect are not for sale. You've got to work for freedom and earn respect."

Of Governor Coleman, Dr. White declared that "He stands as a leader of all the people. He is a statesman for Mississippi."

Keys to the building were presented to the principal by architect Charles McMullian. McMullian's firm also gave the school an American flag.

Negro Principal Lauds School Named For Him

CARTHAGE, Miss. — (ANP) — A principal of a new Negro high school this week called the criticism of the school "utterly ridiculous."

O. E. Jordan, principal of the new Jordan high school, said the school rapped by the NAACP, is "entirely adequate for our present needs. We are very proud of our new school."

In a statement issued at Jackson, the NAACP said, "Anyone who cares to make a comparison of the three schools (two white and one Negro) and their costs will observe the shortcomings of the Jordan school as compared with the new elementary schools."

Outraged by the statement, Jordan said, "Until the NAACP has something better to offer us, I think they should shut up. If they want us to have a better school than we now have, we welcome them to make a deposit to our account in the Carthage bank."

The new school was named in his honor.

West Tallahatchie Negro School Dedication Toda

Gov. J. P. Coleman Will Make Principal Speech At Ceremonies

Special to The Commercial Appeal

SUMNER, Miss., Jan. 14.—Educational history will be made here Wednesday when the brand new $400,000 West Tallahatchie District High School for Negroes is dedicated.

Gov. J. P. Coleman Wednesday afternoon will deliver the principal address of the dedication. Additional talks will be made by local and state school authorities.

The official opening of the Negro high school marks the culmination of an overwhelming task in Tallahatchie county for the betterment of education for Negroes.

1,355 Enrolled

Less than a year ago, 40 schools, most substandard, in West Tallahatchie attempted to serve the educational needs of the Negro.

The new 12-grade school, which has been in operation since September, has a total enrollment of 1,355 students from the West Tallahatchie District. It is served by an all Negro staff of 32 headed by R. H. Beardon as Principal.

Professor Bearden, who holds a master's degree, was born and reared in Tallahatchie County. He is assisted by Frank H. Reed, assistant principal, who is from Clarksdale.

Open House Set

The dedication ceremonies will comprise most of Wednesday morning and a portion of Wednesday afternoon.

Dedication day will begin with an open house at 9 a.m. followed by an assembly in the high school auditorium. The main speaker of the morning will be A. A. Alexander, assistant state supervisor of Negro education.

Music for both the morning and afternoon program will be provided by the Mississippi Vocational College band, the Allen Carver band, and the Coahoma Junior College band.

During the afternoon session which commences at 2, talks prior to the main address by Governor Coleman will be given by Professor Bearden and Gycell Tynes, superintendent of the West Tallahatchie District School.

DEDICATION SET FOR TODAY—R. H. Bearden (left), principal of the West District High School for Negroes at Sumner, Miss., gets some assistance from district superintendent Cycelle Tynes in raising the flag in front of the new $400,000 plus school which will be dedicated today. Principal speaker of the dedication will be Gov. J. P. Coleman.

School Fires Investigated

Reports of on the spot investigations into North Mississippi's half million dollars series of school house fires—four in eight days—were being awaited in the State Fire Marshal's office in Jackson today. A. B. McGraw, deputy fire marshal said.

First report expected is that of Deputy Lodge Hopkins, Ackerman, now completing his investigation of the $75,000 fire at McEvans High School for Negroes at Shaw a week ago Monday night. Walls of the 40-year old brick building were kept under guard during sub-freezing weather during early phases of Hopkins' investigation.

C. L. Pace, Jackson deputy, has charge of the investigation into cause of the J. Z. George High School fire at Carrollton, Saturday night, resulting in an estimated loss of $250,000 on the two-story brick building and another $8,000 damage to equipment.

He is also assisting Deputy Boyce Erwin, Ackerman, in seeking causes of the Houston Negro High School, less than 24 hours after the Vardaman High school, nine miles away, was destroyed. The Houston loss is estimated at approximately $150,000, partially covered by insurance. Students are being accommodated in churches and vacant buildings.

New Negro Facility Planned At West Point

WEST POINT, Miss., April 13. — The state Education Finance Commission has approved $340,000 for construction of a new Negro junior-senior high school for the West Point Municipal Separate School District.

Supt. B. McCallister said the board can now go ahead with building plans and selection of a site.

The new high school is the second of a three part construction program for Negroes in the West Point new school district.

Superintendent said that bids are not expected to be received until this summer. A contract for a new Negro elementary school was let a few weeks ago.

The proposed $340,000 building is to replace the present North Side High School, which will be converted into an elementary school for Negroes, Mr. McCallister said.
